

LOOK
for
The Queen's Journal
June 22nd
&
July 29th

QUEEN'S Journal

Volume 121, Number 1

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Tuesday, May 18, 1993

Controversy arises over hiring process

Job created for new dean's spouse

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

A controversy has arisen among some university staff and faculty over the process by which a job was offered to the spouse of the new dean of Arts and Science, and over the appointment of the dean himself.

The appointment of Laurene Clark, the spouse of new Arts and Science Dean David Turpin, as a consultant has sparked off a debate between members of the Queen's University Staff Association and Principal David Smith.

Mark Publicover, the president of QUSA, criticized the move in a letter to Smith which was later published in the Whig-Standard. Publicover wrote that "[QUSA's] concern addresses the propriety of decisions surrounding the offer of his position."

Publicover asked "if it is part of our policy to accommodate spouses, why are these accommodations not offered consistently in an open and up-front manner, to the entire university community?"

The letter also questions why both positions were given to people from outside the university. In an interview with The Journal, Publicover said it did not appear to him at this point that Turpin has "the credentials to justify" the package that he and his spouse were offered, but that "in five or ten years" he will have proved himself.

Turpin "doesn't have the administrative background" said Publicover, and he said he wondered if Turpin should have been appointed the dean of the biggest faculty on campus.

Smith replied to Publicover's criticism in a letter which was also published in the Whig-Standard. Smith stated that "Ms. Clark's appointment was indeed part of the arrangements leading to the appointment of her spouse."

Smith wrote that it is "not unusual to make provision for spouses when trying to attract high profile academics from outside Queen's."

Smith maintained that he "understands the association's concern" but that the university must "retain the flexibility to make arrangements" like the one in question.

The position created for Turpin's spouse is "not a case of make-work for somebody's wife... merely to get [Turpin] to come here," Smith said.

Her duties will include "real work to be done both on PATFORI [the Principal's Advisory Task Force on Resource Issues] and on the [national summer] Study Centre," said Smith.

In the letter Smith also says Clark is "superbly equipped" to take on her job, and is an "accomplished professional." Smith also defended his position in an interview with The Journal, citing Turpin's qualifications as an "outstanding teacher" as a winner of the Alumnae Award for teaching when he was at Queen's a few years ago, and his status as an "excellent researcher." The decision to hire Turpin was strongly recommended to him by a large selection committee, Smith said.

Please see SPOUSAL / p.2

Protesters calling for an end to ethnic cleansing in Bosnia listen to a speaker in front of City Hall.

Dave Coleman

Protest calls for action in Bosnia

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

"Better act fast, Bosnia won't last!"

This was the slogan shouted by approximately one hundred marchers at a rally held Saturday afternoon.

The Islamic Society of Kingston, in conjunction with the Queen's University Muslim Students' Association, held the rally to raise awareness about the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The central message of the rally, co-organized by Queen's Professor Mohamed Bayoumi, was a call for the United Nations either to adopt a "real presence" in Bosnia, or to lift the arms embargo.

After gathering at the A&P parking lot, the participants attracted a good deal of attention as they marched down Princess Street toward City Hall.

Speeches were made on the City Hall steps, a move Mayor Helen Cooper commended, citing Kingston as a "humane community" that cares "not just for itself, but for the world."

"The main focus is something needs to be done," stated Bayoumi, a member of the Mayor's Committee on Race Relations. "After 14 months of diplomacy, we see that it only prolongs the despair of the sufferers." Bayoumi said.

Bayoumi indicated that the first preference was for United Nations intervention, but "if something can't be done [by the UN], let them [the Bosnian Muslims] defend themselves... [but] with their hands tied behind their backs it is simply not fair."

One speaker stated that world leaders have a "responsibility to react" and asked for their "moral courage."

A petition was circulated which Bayoumi hopes to present to Peter Milliken, the Member of Parliament for Kingston & the Islands.

Another aim of the rally was to encourage a "link with groups in other cities to have concerted action" on Bosnia, Bayoumi said.

QUMSA Chairperson Mona Rahman said she was pleased with the turn-out, and hoped that members of the Kingston community will become better informed about the situation in Bosnia through this and other actions.

Queen's mourns dedicated prof, poet

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Queen's has lost a great professor, and Canada has lost a great poet and novelist.

English professor Tom Marshall died after a heart attack on April 28. He was 55.

Marshall was described by colleagues as "shy" and "intensely private" and very dedicated to the art of writing. He first came to Queen's in the late fifties as an undergraduate.

A one-time editor of the Queen's Journal, Marshall was "a writer from the word 'go'," recalled fellow English professor and friend of over thirty years, Colin Norman.

After attending graduate school in London, England, Marshall returned to Queen's to teach in the Department of English.

In the mid 60s, said Norman, Marshall was responsible for "hijacking" the then student-run literary publication Quarry. Quarry today is an established national quarterly based in Kingston. Under Marshall's guide in the 60s, the magazine published work by many of Canada's finest poets, including Margaret Atwood and Al Purdy.

Marshall was an accomplished poet, and published several novels, including the critically acclaimed Adele at the End of the Day, and the satirical work based on Kingston, Rosemary Goal.

On Friday, May 7, a memorial service was held at which numerous poets read selections from Marshall's poetry and prose, and some from their own. A special tribute was read on behalf of Atwood, who was not able to attend.

Marshall was known for his generosity, whether it took the form of advice and encouragement or financial aid for young writers, Norman said.

Typical of his dedication to writing, he had a work in progress when he died.

English Department Head George Logan said that Marshall "was the real thing, a writer. There was nothing fake or pretentious about Tom."

Logan said Marshall "could always be counted on," and called him "an integral part of Canadian literature."

Inside

LIT LAPSES
YESTERDAY.....4
ENTERTAINMENT
NEW ORDER.....7
LIFESTYLES
PATIO LAND.....8

Quote

"It can be hard for an administrative investigation to get a student perspective."
— AMS VP/University Affairs) Todd Minerson on the Schubert investigation

CROSS CAMPUS BRIEFS

York University

April 1993
York University Fine Art students are up in arms at the unauthorized use of their work by a national clothing chain, student newspaper Excalibur reported last month.

Cotton Ginny is featuring the art on posters displayed in around 70 of its stores across Canada.

A photographer hired by the company rented a fine arts building from the university, and photographed models wearing Cotton Ginny's spring line with the students' art work clearly visible in the background.

The students have consulted a law firm, and originally were pursuing an injunction to have the ads removed. But now their demands have changed to a cash settlement and possibly equipment for the Faculty of Fine Arts.

"The intention of the work has been spoiled," said Joe Thorton, one of the artists whose work was misappropriated. "They've turned it into an ad to sell a T-shirt."

University of Toronto

April 1993
A host on University of Toronto community radio station CIUT was suspended after she featured three white supremacist leaders on a broadcast in late March, the U of T Varsity reported last month.

Host Aparna Sanyal interviewed two leaders of the Heritage Front and the Toronto head of the Church of the Creator for a half-hour on CIUT's student affairs program Incense.

U of T has experienced several incidents involving white supremacist groups on campus in recent months, including the distribution of racist pamphlets to offices in the economics department, the plastering of St. George Street with Heritage Front and Church of the Creator flyers, and the controversial appearance by members of Heritage Front before a third-year political science class.

University of Calgary

April 1993
Lost your keys? A lock box containing master keys was ripped off an office wall at the University of Calgary during a break-in at the end of March leaving 13,000 doors vulnerable, the U of C Gazette reported last month.

Professors were asked not to leave copies of final examinations in their offices due to the security risk. Re-keying of some of the more sensitive areas began immediately, but costs at re-keying all of the doors affected would run at least $500,000.

Alternatives to a total re-keying are being looked into, and Calgary Police are continuing their investigation.

University of Waterloo

April 1993
University of Waterloo President Doug Wright was appointed a knight of France on Mar. 29 by the Consul General of France to Toronto when he visited the campus, as reported in Imprint, the UW student newspaper.

Wright is now a Chevalier dans L'Ordre du Merite de France, an award given for "distinguished services, in public service or a professional activity," the report said.

Spousal hiring questioned

Continued from page one

Smith added that the practice of attempting to accommodate spouses in hiring - or at least "to try and provide some help" for spouses - is a policy of the Faculty of Arts and Science. This was made clear in the advertising for the position of dean, Smith said.

Publicover, however, maintained that the process was flawed, even though "in five to ten years Turpin will probably have proved himself worth" the extra expense it has taken to obtain him.

Smith has agreed to meet with QUSA. Publicover added, to look into creating "a better open forum for discussion."

"These things should be settled on campus, not in The Whig," Publicover said.

Tip-toeing through the tulips in downtown Kingston.

Marika Glickman

Schubert on hold

BY JUSTIN MCKELLAR

The Queen's Journal
A report that is to decide whether mathematics professor Cedric Schubert should continue to teach at Queen's is nearly complete, and its conclusions will be announced to the Senate by Principal David Smith at an upcoming senate meeting.

Schubert was convicted last fall of having sexually assaulted his stepdaughter ten years ago, when she was 12. He was sentenced on Dec. 2 to a month in jail, which he served before returning to Queen's for the winter term.

His return was met with considerable controversy. A protest against his continued employment was staged outside Richardson Hall, graffiti which read "assaulted inside" and "C.S. get out" were scrawled on the north wall of Jeffrey Hall, and the Alma Mater Society called for his dismissal.

On Jan. 28, despite the official support of the Queen's University Faculty Association, Schubert requested and immediately obtained a six-month leave of absence. Principal Smith subsequently announced that the university would "complete its review and work toward a resolution that recognizes the concerns of the students, the rights of Professor Schubert, and the interests of the university."

Vice-Principal (Research) William McLatchie and former Vice-

Principal (Human Services) Alice Baumgart conducted the administrative review of the measures taken by the Department of Mathematics and Statistics once Dr. Schubert's conviction had come to its attention. The prime directive was, in McLatchie's words, "whether the response had been appropriate and adequate."

"It was our conclusion," stated McLatchie, "that the response had been adequate."

The people in the Department of Mathematics and Statistics had contacted the students and made sure those who were uncomfortable with Dr. Schubert had alternative means.

"They were given the option of transferring to other sections. I think there were a few who did request that they be moved to other sections and that was done."

McLatchie also noted that "the consultations with students were carried out with a high degree of sensitivity."

AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Todd Minerson emphasized the rights of the students in this issue. "It can be hard for an administrative investigation to get a student perspective. We're trying to make sure they get all aspects." Minerson was sceptical that Schubert's continued employment would contribute to a "comfortable learning environment."

Schubert is still on leave and will not teach at Queen's until the review is complete.

"It was our conclusion that the response had been adequate."

Jody Flaro and Kim Reid struggle with years of accumulated garbage in their subletted house. They say their clean-up job has been made all the more difficult due to the cancellation of large-item garbage pick-up.

Marika Glickman

Got some time on your hands?
Come write for The Journal this summer!

Solar car team revs up

BY JEFF GRAY

and JASON BUDGELL

The Queen's Journal

Queen's has received a major boost to its solar car team's chances at a large American competition.

The boost comes in the form of computing and engineering support provided by a major information technology company.

EDS is providing assistance to all the 36 teams participating in the upcoming Sunrayce 93 intercollegiate competition for solar-powered cars. The 1000 mile race from Dallas to Minneapolis takes place June 20-26.

The help is especially beneficial to the Queen's team, as many of the teams come from very large schools and carry big corporate sponsorships, and are able to afford more sophisticated techniques of design and testing.

Thanks to EDS, the Queen's team has been able to take advantage of aerodynamic analysis, and computer-simulated testing for their solar car. The team sent their design data to EDS computer team members from the engineering technology staff at the General Motors Technical Centre in Warren, Michigan. The results of tests from a computer program which simulates a wind tunnel were then sent back to the students. EDS also helped the students interpret the findings through a telephone conference.

In a written statement from EDS, Sunrayce Project Coordinator Patrick Cavanaugh explained that "by providing this service, we are creating a level playing field, thus narrowing the gap between the schools and making for a more competitive race."

In a press release, Queen's Sunrayce team member Andrew Marchant said that because of this service, "we've been able to come up with suggestions for changing some of the design and have also been able to solidify some stuff that we guessed right."

"Things are working together well," said Marchant.

The race itself will take seven days to complete, with the cars averaging 143 miles daily. The vehicles will race during daylight hours only, and the winner will be the team with the lowest cumulative elapsed time.

The race is sponsored mainly by the US Department of Energy, and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Queen's rowers Victoria bound

Crew faces tough competition

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER

The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Heavyweight Mens Eight rowing team easily defeated McGill on Saturday, defending their invitation to the Victoria Boat Race.

The Victoria Boat Race is an invitational race attended by champion regional crews from across Canada and the United States. Invitations are also sent to England and Australia.

As regional champions in Central Ontario, the Queen's crew was forced to defend their invitation after McGill wrote to challenge them with "a cheesy Latin challenge that we rolled and smoked," said crew member Bob Pardington.

The 2000 metre race, postponed five hours due to the usual Kingston rain, belonged to Queen's from the start. The early lead quickly grew to a three-boat lead which Queen's maintained for most of the race.

"We knew what we had to do and we did it. We held onto our lead and carried it through," said

Pardington. Although both crews had two rowers who were not in the boat in the fall season, Queen's had a definite advantage with experienced rowers and won the race by over two boats.

"We just had a lot of experience in our boat," said crew member Jason Fairclough.

No one else can challenge the crew now. They will be racing in a 500 metre sprint and a 2000 metre race on Elk Lake in Victoria.

"We should have a good time in the sprint," said Fairclough.

Crew members Pardington and Fairclough expressed their gratitude toward coach John Armitage.

"We'd like to thank our coach for his commitment to our excellence," said Fairclough.

Pardington added, "He's the King!"

Victoria-bound on the sixteenth, the crew will be returning to Toronto for a few days entertainment on the twenty-first. We wish them the best of luck.

The Kingston AIDS Project, Mobilization Against Aids, in conjunction with groups in more than 220 cities in 50 nations, will be holding the tenth annual International AIDS Candlelight Memorial Vigil on Sunday, May 23 at Confederation Park Basin (across from City Hall) at 7:30 p.m.

This memorial is intended to be not only a time to grieve and remember those lost to the disease, but also a call for community action and hope. They ask that those wishing to participate bring their own candles. For more information contact KAP at 545-3698.

The Liberal opposition in Ontario has proposed a youth employment program in response to the New Democratic government's JobsOntario program. At a cost of $183.2 million, the program would "immediately assist" 69,000 young people (an increase of 18,000 over the current program).

The Liberal proposal includes financially strengthening the FUTURES and Summer Jobs for Youth programs. Co-op programs and Scholarship programs would also be encouraged under the Liberal plan.

The Queen's University Engineering Society Science Camp is proposing a new program entitled Science Quest for Families. This program would encourage parents and children to work together on projects and tasks with the aim of promoting parent-child interactive learning.

The first workshop of Science Quest for Families will take place Saturday, June 19, 1993 from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. Interested parents and children (grades 4 to 8) should contact Karen Bozynski at 545-6870.

As reported in the Kingston Whig-Standard, the Queen's Challenge fund-raising program managed to overshoot their goal, raising a total of $100 million in three years.

This amount outstripped the original goal set for the program by a full $30 million. The total includes the $11.5 million Herstoncoeur Castle in England, and the $10 million gift towards the construction of the Stauffer Library.

WHY IS DAVE SO HAPPY?

- 1 The AMS Publishing & Copy Centre is OPEN all summer Mon. - Fri., 11am - 4pm!
- 2 The AMS Publishing & Copy Centre has new and improved prices.
- 3 The AMS Publishing & Copy Centre blasted Dave a set of notes for that class he has never been to.

AMS PUBLISHING & COPY CENTRE
JDUC, Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
phone: 545-6543 fax: 545-0350

POOL PUB
the SHOT
POOL PUB ? and POOL PUB

It's not going to be your average Long Weekend.

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

- Editor-in-Chief: Sarah MacWhirter
- Managing Editor: Dave Pavao
- News Editor: Jeff Gray
- Production Manager: Colin Ho
- Entertainment Editor: Rob Furse
- Features Editor: Alison Masemann
- Opinions Editor: Tara Hillis
- Sports Editor: Joel Sutherland
- Graphics Editor: Richard Dubois
- Photography Editor: Marika Gluckman
- Literary Lapses Editor: Megan Nichols
- Lifestyles Editors: Joey Devilla, Derek Walker
- Assistant News Editors: Brock Martland, Brad Elder, Lori Thorlakson
- Assistant Production Manager: Adrienne Down
- Assistant Entertainment Editors: Ian Petrie, Ryan Chen, Sian Beddoe-Stephens
- Assistant Sports Editor: Jen Flynn
- Assistant Photography Editor: Derek Yarnell
- Assistant Literary Lapses: Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

- Business Manager: Christine Geracino
- Advertising Manager: Andrew Nielson
- Creative Staff Manager: Alex Hamer
- Sales Representatives: Chris Ritchie, Fiona Macauley
- House & Systems Manager: Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800. Fax Number: 545-6728. Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST). Summer Circulation - 3,000.

Contributors

- Jason Budgett, Dave Coleman, Kirsten Cilly, James Keast, Rob Kentrede, Bonnie Mak, Justin McKellar, Daryl Whetter, John Whytock

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

Smith's hiring process leaves much to be desired

Principal Smith's actions have once again landed him in hot water. It seems that no matter what he does, he is bombarded with criticism from one direction or another. The appointment of Arts and Science Dean Turpin and the hiring of his wife Laurene Clark is no exception.

Many on campus applaud Smith for landing Turpin. A renowned research biologist and award-winning teacher, Turpin may be just the one to deliver the shot in the arm that Queen's so desperately needs.

Turpin's wife Clark is reported in the Wing-Standard as having a "reputation for being forceful, enthusiastic and determined." Hired as a consultant to work on issues that arose out of the Principal's Advisory Task Force on Resource Issues as well as on the [national summer] Study Centre, Clark's role as general manager of the Kingston Area Chamber of Commerce and the fact that she has a masters from Queen's Public Administration program ought to provide her with valuable assets for this job.

So where does the criticism arise?

Some ask where the need to look elsewhere for a Dean arose in the first place. Although Turpin is a high-profile academic and seems highly qualified for the job, the general consensus among staff seems to be that there are a number of highly qualified people on campus already. Smith stated [in the letter to QUSA] that Turpin is the best qualified person for the job - but he does not justify this claim.

We recognize that Turpin was chosen through a committee process, but the fact remains that a little openness regarding the factors surrounding the decision - to bring in an outsider in a time of financial restraint - would have been well-advised in this climate of distrust. While Smith claims to hold to the philosophy of advancement for present members of the staff, it is clear to staff members that, as far as Smith is concerned, theory and practice are quite different.

Another criticism aimed at Smith concerns the new position created for Turpin's wife Clark. Some wonder where the funding will come from for this new job in a time of dire financial straits. It seems ironic that money is being spent in the name of PATFORI before it has even figured out how to save or make more.

What's more, Smith admitted that this job would not have been offered if Clark did not come to Queen's with Turpin. The unusual circumstances surrounding the creation of the job and the appointment of Clark demand that justification be made openly and clearly. But the need for this position is not once outlined in concrete terms - except to say that "there is real work to be done."

Others are trying to figure out why Smith wouldn't open the process and allow staff and faculty members the opportunity to apply for this new position. While the answer is quite obvious, questions remain regarding the process itself.

Smith justified the hiring process in a letter sent to the president of the Queen's University Staff Association. He cited the "university's need to retain the flexibility in a very small number of cases to accommodate spouses through special arrangements of this sort..." Flexibility, it seems, can mean many things.

Does the ability to hire someone without consultation and without opening the position to other members of the Queen's staff illustrate the true meaning of flexibility? Or does flexibility mean the ability to contradict oneself within the same paragraph: "packages are put together quite frequently" and "arrangements of this sort are not made very often"?

Flexibility should imply being open throughout hiring processes; being able to make decisions after much consultation, as opposed to following what appear to be the opinions of one man.

Students are consistently frustrated by the way so many matters are handled at Queen's - either under the table or behind closed doors. It is typical of administration at Queen's to make decisions either at a time when consultation is well near impossible, or in a manner in which consultation is not even invited. The fact that a position was created, offered and filled without staff awareness or consultative input is a slap in the face to QUSA with its commitment to staff development and advancement.

We have to ask, however, if the outcome would have been any different had consultation occurred.

Would consultation mean valuable input representative of a variety of voices on campus, or would it simply mean the formation of a pseudo-shadow committee composed of administration suits? At the very least, formal processes tend to force people to behave fairly and legitimately. If a set of rules exists, you can tell when they've been broken.

Clark's hiring cannot be fairly assessed as no others were afforded the opportunity to apply for the same position. Clark might do an excellent job, but were the process open someone else might have applied who would have been even better. Process aside, Smith's decision cannot be judged in a vacuum.

Almost done his term at Queen's, Smith is in a position where he will not feel the long-term effects of his decisions. Not only will it be up to the next principal of Queen's to rebuild the trust between principal and staff, the next principal will also have to face the consequences of the precedent set in this unusual (but not unheard of) situation. Creating a position and arbitrarily handing it out is not a habit to get into. If shopping around was the policy for finding a new Dean of Arts and Science, why wouldn't the same apply where consultative positions are concerned?

It is clear that inconsistency about where Smith's philosophy toward hiring is concerned. The upsides of this issue are the appointment of a Dean who cares about teaching, and the appointment of a woman in what we hope will be a power position in determining solutions to resource issues.

The downsides of this issue are more troublesome. The vagueness that plagues the PATFORI report seems inherent in the position "consultant" itself - hopefully, Clark will not find herself lost in a quagmire of administrative ambiguity. Furthermore, although some are happy with the appointment of Turpin, the process by which the whole deal was negotiated leaves much to be desired. The trust between some staff and Principal Smith may never be rebuilt. In these troubled times, that's just what Queen's doesn't need.

Cross Campus Editorials

I used to think that a student newspaper could be a leader in shaping and directing student political opinion. But it cannot, on a campus where only 20 per cent of the students vote in Federation elections and rarely more than 100 students attend a Fed general meeting. ...What then does a student newspaper do? It is a forum for the opinions of all students, but it is shaped by the priorities of a handful of students, those who are regular contributors and staff members.

Imprint, University of Waterloo, 2 April, 1993

I firmly believe in the role that this paper plays and can play on campus as an instigator of controversy and investigator of both Federation and university policies and practices. The student press is unique in that it can (usually) print more provocative and muck racking material than other papers which must rely on stingy advertisers with covert political agendas. We are generally expected to be more inquisitive and should be celebrated for that.

Imprint, University of Waterloo, 7 May, 1993

Too often reporters - myself included - will go to an interest group for a comment on a story in the belief that the group speaks for a large number of people. ...The credibility of the media in Canada and elsewhere is being questioned. ...The media, at all levels, must become more diligent and learn to talk to the people who are actually involved with the story - not with those who want to influence it.

The Gauntlet, University of Calgary, 15 April, 1993

Canadian artists have paid for international success by ignoring their own backyard, the culture that inspired them or failed to (which is just important). And in the long run we pay as well. ...we run the risk of remaining isolated communities. Communities who know nothing about one another, but the clichés and assumptions that have been handed down to us. No amount of trophies can compensate for the damage this neglect will contribute to.

The Varsity, University of Toronto, 13 April, 1993

Opinions

Talking Heads

Who do you think should be the leader of the PC Party?

"Grimace"
Jeff Sealey
Arts '95

"Kim Campbell is too much of a token. Jean Charest"
Gillian Shearer
Arts '95

"I like Kim. I hope she'll bring a feminine perspective"
Liz Muggah
Arts '93

"We're still rooting for Joe... it's never too late, is it?"
Bruce Storms
Cherm '94
Al Jin MSC

Opinions Of The Past

November 20, 1969

"One of Queen's greatest assets is the traditional spirit which prevails through all aspects of university life. The spirit, which is renowned through all other universities is instilled in freshmen, abolishing the hazing and costumes associated with frosh week seems rather sad."

November 27, 1969

"At the moment the student is existing like an island rat chained into his hole of introverted study. The meatgrinder, pressure cooked system of education is wrong. The university must become a forum for free pursuit of learning, not a 'joe-suburbanite' social club reeking of bourgeois hypocrisy."

October 9, 1969

"Equal pay for equal work and day-care centres constitute one aspect of a much broader category of human freedom. The availability of birth control methods and abortion, and the elimination of questions related to human morality. They would effect men just as significantly as they would women."

MARCH 5, 1970

"Why do we have food services on campus anyway? Are they to serve any purpose other than to profit a caterer? Why don't we have a food committee with authority to improve our food service, which includes students who use each food service? What ever happened to the old stand of three square meals a day? Damn it all, I want to eat!"

Literary Lapses

Yesterday

Each golden grain
Stepped upon
Is a minute crushed
Wantonly
Yet millions live
Forever untouched
Time that's known as Eternity
On my beach of golden grains
With you I'll walk
Carelessly
Until tomorrow steals our Time
And then we'll share
Forever

Lynn Larson

The ravishing scents of opposites lingering
As misty forms floating in the dusk
The dying idols burning trepidation
As virgin Gods respond to fresh wills
The tombstones of mistakes haunting through life.

Lynn Larson

WRITING COMPETITION

Book City/Books in Canada are sponsoring their third student writing competition in short fiction and poetry to encourage and support future Canadian writers.

First prize: $1,000; Second prize: $500; Third prize: $250

Requirements:

You must be a full-time undergraduate student at a Canadian university or community college. Enclose your name, address, phone number, address and phone number of your school, and your student number. If you want your entry returned, enclose a self-addressed envelope as well.

Short fiction must be under 2,500 words; poetry entries may contain up to two poems with a 2,500 word total maximum. Only one entry per category is permitted.

Winning entries will be published in Books in Canada's October 1993 issue.

Entries must be postmarked no later than July 15, 1993, and should be addressed to: Student Writing Awards, Books in Canada, 130 Spadina Avenue, Suite 603, Toronto, Ontario, M5V 2M3.

For more information, contact Books in Canada at (416)-601-9880.

Entertainment

British sense and sensibility

BRITISH PAINTINGS FROM THE PERMANENT COLLECTION
Agnes Etherington Art Centre

BY BONNIE MAK
The Queen's Journal

A selection of British paintings adorns the walls of a small room in the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. Portraits by Michael Wright and Sir Godfrey Kneller are featured, whose patrons included Oliver Cromwell in the former case, and Sir Isaac Newton and John Dryden in the latter. Also on display are works by Joseph Wright of Derby, Richard Wilson, and William Etty.

Italian influences are evident in all the pieces. Michael Wright journeyed to Italy in 1648, and his Portrait of Lady Aston (c.1669) clearly exhibits characteristics of portraiture of the sixteenth-century Italian Mannerist movement. His Lady Aston embodies the Renaissance standards of femininity: elongated limbs, cold elegance, and translucent, unearthly skin tones.

The other artists, who arrived in Italy some hundred years later, seem to have been more affected by the seventeenth-century Baroque style. Richard Wilson has not received much attention as the third of the trio of artists who were at the forefront of the Classical Age of British painting; he has been overshadowed by Thomas Gainsborough and Sir Joshua Reynolds. Although Wilson began his career painting portraits in the tradition of Kneller, his devotion to the great French idyllic landscapist, Claude Lorraine, inspired the Welsh-born artist to develop and explore his own love of the romantic picturesque. Italian and British images are interwoven and blended together in Wilson's landscapes. Suggestions of the River Arno can be detected in his naturalist renderings of Welsh vistas.

The supporters of the abstract approach to art, who reject realist interpretation, insist that the works can, and have been, substituted by photography. However, paintings such as those currently on display at the Art Centre are not exact representations of reality. They are works of fiction. They are images based in reality, but at the same time, they transcend the mundane. Distorted proportions and utopian settings with Roman ruins rising in the distance do not exist. Realism in art need not be spumed as simplistic representations of the world.

British Paintings from the Permanent Collection continues throughout the summer. Admission to the gallery is free for all members of the Queen's community.

Wright's Portrait of Lady Aston personifies British artistic sensibility. Courtesy of Agnes Etherington Art Centre

Refuelling with oil

MIDNIGHT OIL
Earth and Sun and Moon
Warner Bros

BY JOHN WHITTOCK
The Queen's Journal

Midnight Oil started in the surf-punk bars of Australia's east coast, and Earth and Sun and Moon shows it. The same tension and release to all Oil albums is here, but it achieves what has been missing for a while — true grit.

The bright and brassy horn-like keyboards that, frankly, hurt otherwise great albums like Diesel and Dust have been replaced by piano and swirling sixties organs, which is exactly what the band needed. Now you can hear the experienced interplay between guitarists Jim Mognie and Martin Rotsey.

High points? There are so many. "Truganini," the first single, is infectiously catchy, as is the surprisingly faceted "My Country." The title track starts with the usual hard edge, but, dare I say it, turns out to be quite pretty. Hyperkinetic lead vocalist Peter Garrett wafts through an intentionally understated mix and the occasional rhythm hook which makes this song a nice contrast to the rest of the album.

Garrett's lyrics are typically unique. They may not be the stuff that good poetry is made of, but they still offer great lines like In-fidels are praying at the Stock Exchange/Chrome camels are crashing on the smooth terrain, from "Now Or Never Land."

The album should be overwhelming to true Oil fans. Those not in love with the band's previous albums might find the album feels a little long (the eleven tracks are deceiving). If you suspected that Midnight Oil was caving in and writing singles instead of albums, think again. This is a powerful album that offers single potential by mere coincidence. Earth and Sun and Moon is the most interesting album of the summer.

Midnight Oil will be appearing this summer at the Markham Fairgrounds on July 24.

SWAMP WISDOM

PASSION FISH
Directed by John Sayles
Princess Court Cinema
BY DARYL WHETTER
The Queen's Journal

Chantelle: Aren't you afraid we'll get lost?

Rennie: Now, I figure no matter where you are—that's where you're at.

Swamp wisdom. As charming as the myth of the passion fish—a fish to be held in the hand while imagining the one you love and then... But this charm isn't incidental Bayou charisma, it's the work of Passion Fish writer/director John Sayles. And it's well worth seeing more of.

Passion Fish tells the story of the fortunate soap opera star May-Alice's legs and their unfortunate paralysis en route to getting waxed in uptown New York. The now paraplegic May-Alice (Mary McDonnell) withdraws to her once abandoned Louisiana roots to watch TV, slurp wine, wear a peculiar fishing hat, and presumably wither up and die.

The self-proclaimed "bitch on wheels" changes care attendants as quickly as she does channels, until the arrival of Chantelle (Alfre Woodard), an out-of-place Chicagonian with a strong will and mysterious needs.

Okay, it smells like stock interpersonal drama: two unlikely companions in an intimate situation, an unlikely location, an unforeseen accident. But Sayles has peppered his film with a delicious blend of subtle aromas, and there's always something beneath the murky surface.

Passion Fish isn't confined to a wheelchair, but it also never wholly forgets where it can and cannot go. Like a slippery swamp fish, the co-dependency of May-Alice and Chantelle drifts away to reveal an intimate collusion and then darts back to deliver an abrasive clash of wills. McDonnell and Woodard's performances are delectably malleable; their characters are drawn tightly, but they maintain the broadly stroked mysteries and needs of Sayles' script.

Rennie and Sugar, the respective romantic interests of May-Alice and Chantelle, work well. Rennie, the wayward swamp guide who's reluctantly trapped into a marriage of too many kids and no fun, and Sugar, the dancing cowboy who's as charming as he claims to be, work as great characters in themselves. As a further credit to Sayles, Rennie's (David Strathairn) and Sugar's (Vondie Curtis-Hall) unravelling charms and stories also work as well-acted mirrors to May-Alice and Chantelle.

Passion Fish is a perfectly sized film—it's big when it needs to be and small enough to when you want to sneak it out of the theatre.

Passion Fish will be returning to the Princess Court Cinema on July 21 and 22, and should be snatched up from video stores everywhere.

A new (world) order?

NEW ORDER
London Records
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

The release of their sixth proper album marks a sort of a "new order" for New Order. With the bankruptcy of Factory Records—their artistic home for the past 14 years—such details as a new recording label, the use of a producer and co-writer for the first time (Stephen Hague), and even a new style of artwork all suggest an attempt at renovating one of pop's oldest institutions.

The music of Republic, however, is anything but new. Indeed, New Order sounds more like New Order than ever before. Of course, this lack of musical revision isn't necessarily bad. New Order has always had the knack of cutting catchy pop/dance tracks, and the faithful will sure to be pleased by such numbers as "World," "Spooky," and "Liar."

Surprisingly, the atmosphere of Republic is remarkably upbeat. Although "Regret" belies New Order's former melancholia, it still manages to remain somewhat positive: Maybe I've forgotten the name and the address / Of everyone I've ever met / It's nothing I regret.

Ironically, "Regret" is Republic's strongest and freshest track, for instead of returning to the monotonous techno of Technique, it re-captures the sombre bass lines and the abrasive guitar riffs which made an album like Brotherhood and a single like "Ceremony" classics of the post-punk world.

As a conscious departure from their patented style of pop, New Order's Republic must be labelled as failure. Nonetheless, dedicated fans will make the release an overwhelming best seller, and this should help to solve New Order's financial woes. But for those looking for something new in New Order, they will be truly disappointed.

Just call us anonymous

AMERICAN MUSIC CLUB
Mercury
Reprise

BY JAMES KEAST
The Queen's Journal

Just who is this band? In the last three weeks, they've been featured in Spin and also in Rolling Stone where they were named Hot Band for 1993. So who has ever heard of them? Out of curiosity, I decided to give their latest release a spin.

Wow. This is a band that is worth the hype it has been getting. A stunning musical conglomerate of punk folk, the strengths of this band can't be overstated. With beautiful musical composition and execution, their style is simple while being lush and richly layered. They enter with subtlety rather than with outstanding virtuosity.

Lyrical, their songs have the grace and bitterness that Morrissey still longs for. The Smiths have nothing on a band that describes the bitterness of Lazarus being raised from the dead—as if life didn't suck enough already, he has to wake up and live it again. And all this in a love song.

I can't do justice in words to the depth of this band's musical prowess. Take a few minutes of your time, and give them a listen. I guarantee you won't regret it.

AN UNCHEERFUL GOODBYE

BY JAMES KEAST
The Queen's Journal

On Thursday night, Cheers, one of TV's longest running shows, will be tucked away into that pantheon of popularity reserved for only the greatest of syndicated cash cows: Star Trek, MASH, WKRP, and soon, Next Generation. But as I say goodbye to some of the most familiar faces on our sets, what will I really remember?

The goodbye should not be a teary-eyed one. The scripts have become tiresome in the last few years, as plotlines have dwindled down to Sam's sexual frolicking and Norm's and Cliff's recycled jokes. Woody, after replacing Coach, is still the funniest thing about the show. One wishes the same could be said for Rebecca, who was introduced when Shelley Long departed for a Jackalustre movie career.

But perhaps the most disturbing aspect of the show, in the politically correct 90's, is its blatant sexism. Certainly most of the humour came from Sam's libido and everyone else's voyeuristic fantasies that accompanied it. One cannot help but wonder if it was this sexism that provided the show's popularity.

With Diane, TV had one of its few strong female characters. She was educated, yet innocent, sophisticated, but sexy. When Diane left, the character void that ensued was filled by Lilith, albeit less successfully. Instead of following the more difficult task of writing a character like Diane, the writers opted for the easier task of casting Lilith as the hated wife/feminist witch and have robbed her of all interesting aspects for a couple of one-liners. Incidentally, both Diane and Lilith have been the target of Rhea Perleman's Carla—arguably the only other strong character that the show has seen. Intelligent in her own way, any emphasis on her strengths has always been diminished by her persistent role as a baby machine.

The worst transformation, however, has been Rebecca, the bar's sometime manager. When it became evident that Sam needed control in "his" bar, he bought it back for a dollar, and with it Rebecca's obedience and every shred of dignity and authority that she had.

Indeed, the most recent episode had Rebecca falling in love with a beer-tap repairman. Often portrayed as the neurotic career-woman trying to get ahead, she has recently been shunned as the pathetic and lonely gold-digger. With no life other than to chase unattainable men, the script forced the once assertive Rebecca to try to get pregnant by Sam and to cry when finding herself alone. Of course, the fact that she could not get pregnant was her fault—not his.

Cheers in the final assessment, though, seems a dinosaur of comedy. It's of an older breed of situation comedy where the setting merely demanded that lots of familiar characters come and go on a regular basis, but that has little to do with real life. Thankfully newer breeds such as Roseanne and Seinfeld, more in tune with the real lives of TV viewers, have taken over.

Undoubtedly, Cheers will continue in syndication in perpetuum and if there isn't a good Three's Company episode on, I will probably tune in—just because I grew up with it. But for now, I'm glad it's the last call for Cheers.

WALKHOME

545-2662

will be open during Intersession

May 3 - June 17

Mon - Sat 9 p.m. - 2 a.m.

WALK-HOME SERVICE
545-2662

Call us or drop by to see us in the Info bank

WESTSIDE FAMILY HAIRCARE
548-8476 - 1022 Johnson Street
GRAND OPENING
June 1st
STUDENT SPECIAL -
20% OFF ALL SERVICES
WESTSIDE FAMILY HAIRCARE

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

ANNOUNCEMENTS
FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet get-away, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

FOR SALE
price that includes taxes, products, styling. Edges Salon. 77 Brock St, 541-1087.

PERSONALS
ON MAY 5, 1993 at Barrie St., near Union, approximately 1:35 a.m. an altercation occurred involving a struggle, a chase and yelling. If you heard, witnessed or have any information about this incident PLEASE contact Martin at 546-3362.

TUESDAY BLUES: If I could walk 5 hundred miles... I'd be with you. Words can't tell you how much I'm missing and thinking of you, at least none that I can think of. Love from the Capital, misha.

FOR SALE: Ten speed bike, Raleigh Gran Prix, large size man's bike, nearly new. Call 389-5483.

NO SURPRISES: Perm and cut ($67), whether soft or extra curly, for short or long hair, we charge one

LifeStyles

Non-workers Unite!

Is this what they mean by labour pains?

Unemployment is not a pretty state. I know from experience that after a few weeks of getting up at one in the afternoon, catching up on the latest protracted Y&R plotline and arranging the paper clips in your desk by size, weight and colour, the lack of activity becomes unbearable. The prospects of finding a job are worse than ever. However, there are still a few job opportunities out there. If you're one of the enterprising, chance-taking, nothing-left-to-lose types like myself, you too can reap the rewards in this limestone worker's paradise...

MUGGING BY PHONE

Here's where childhood pays off. There is very little difference between phoning someone at home in order to annoy them into buying the product you're selling and repeatedly wearing down your mom or dad with "Can we go get ice cream? I wanna go get ice cream. Ice cream, ice cream, ICE CREAM..." The most notably annoying telemarketing groups are those who peddle coupon books, hawk subscriptions to magazines and those folks who practically demand that you get their department store's credit card. These guys go after their teletype like a fed-up Weight Watcher's group after a truckload of free steak.

HAVE THINNER, WILL TRAVEL

You've probably seen the ads for student-run house painting companies. These usually have glowing testimonials written by students who were supervisors or managers. They invariably say that they made enough money to buy El Salvador (half the money needed to throw a sweet 16 party in Rosedale) and that they learned valuable business skills ("uhh...yello and blue make green"). A student who wants to be a manager purchases a franchise for the summer, hires a corps of willing patsies and then offers the company's services to unsuspecting homeowners. No one from a student-run house-painting company has ever truthfully said anything resembling "We did an amazing job on this house - on time and under budget, too!" All student painter stories I've ever heard sound more like the plotline of one of Oliver Stone's Vietnam movies: "We went in, we fucked up big time, we covered our butts as best we could, returned to base, put on some Doors and smoked these really big doobies."

TURN SPARE TIME INTO SPARE CHANGE

Busking is a time-honoured tradition for many reasons: it is connected to the instinctive need to sing. You can also meet all sorts of interesting people in the great outdoors and - most importantly - the difficulty involved ranks somewhere between making ice and preparing Kraft Dinner without the instructions. If you can learn the holy trinity of open chords E, G, and A, you can fake your way through a wide variety of tunes such as Sloan's Underwhelmed, the venerable Smoke on the Water and even Cyndi Lauper's autoerotic chef d'oeuvre, She-Bop. However, to be a true artiste, you'll need original material. Take the Melissa Etheridge approach and find something about which to whine. Try "She left me", "Life ain't fair" and "Lord, I've spilt Diet Pepsi on my new suede sportcoat" as starter lyrics.

Be sure to wear your Ecuadorean poncho and your most guileless, po-faced expression. My most successful busker pals leave their guitar cases open on the street and fill it with a crushed empty cigarette pack and about two bucks in pennies. This tends to elicit pity in passers-by, who will then feel obliged to throw in nothing smaller than a quarter. To really generate pathos, try propping up a sign that reads "Will play Stairway for food".

See you in the pokey line.
Joey Devilla is currently searching the streets for employment.

PATIO LAND

Derek and Joey reviewed the multitudes of Kingston's patios for your a fresco pleasure...

LEGEND:	View	Background	Tables	Accessibility	Comments
Good.....☺	☺	☺	☺	☺
Fair.....☹	☹	☹	☹	☹
Poor.....☹☹	☹☹	☹☹	☹☹	☹☹
AJ's	☺	☺	☺	☺	Free food-close to ghetto
Brew Pub	☺	☺	☺	☺	A hidden gem
Chinese Laundry	☺	☺	☺	☺	Cozy and hip-great coke
Cocamo	☺	☺	☺	☺	Night club and patio combo
Doc Girdy's	☺	☺	☺	☺	Stay tuned, under construction!
Dukes	☺	☺	☺	☺	Great bond spot
P.G.	☺	☺	☺	☺	Great crowd action-ton action
Queen's Inn	☺	☺	☺	☺	Great for sports fans
Robert's C. V.	☺	☺	☺	☺	K-Town's only gay patio-good food
Scrubbies	☺	☺	☺	☺	Laundry and food of the same time
Stoney's	☺	☺	☺	☺	Recommended by New York Times
Toucan	☺	☺	☺	☺	Excellent omblance-fres cool
Your Own Porch	☺	☺	☺	☺	Cheop-con go in your PJs

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Nancy Tatham Sci '86

Nancy Tatham came to Queen's in the fall of '81 as a first year science student, but only after already completing several years of University at Guelph and Western. She completed her degree in psychology six years later in the spring of '86, but never quite managed to leave Kingston and the Queen's community.

Ms. Tatham made the sometimes difficult transition from student to staff member and is currently working for Town-Gown Liaison aiding students with housing problems and smoothing relations between residents and students.

"Right now I'm working with off campus students, community, housing issues. It's a really diverse population with lots of challenges."

As an 'out' member of the Queen's community she has worked hard for queer rights with the Lesbian, Gay Bisexual Association and before that the Queen's Homophile Association and has sat on several committees. She has given hundreds of talks to high school, community college, and university classes.

Ms. Tatham had a radio show on CFRC for several years (after she graduated) and has been involved in numerous committees including the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Issues Committee and the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board.

Not going about her education in the traditional way has proven to be a very enlightening experience for Ms. Tatham.

way has proven to be a very enlightening experience for Ms. Tatham.

"I've got a lot out of University education. I took a hell of a long time not knowing what to take...it's good I never took the 'I want a job' approach, instead I took the courses I wanted to learn."

"I came to University because it would be the neatest thing - I would be challenged and have new experiences. I was disappointed with and without justification. I got these experiences outside the classroom...Education shouldn't be 'sir is this on the final?'"

Ms. Tatham doesn't feel that she has utilized her degree per se, but has found the experiences and education she obtained at Queen's to be invaluable.

"I've found that I've needed at least a B.A. or equivalent or a lot of life experience [to qualify for jobs]. At 24-25, I needed the degree...But if I relied on University training for my ability to write and communicate, I would be in sorry shape."

Ms. Tatham has now spent almost twelve years of her life in Kingston and has never lived more than a five minute walk from campus.

"There's something about this place, instead of yelling in frustration, I find myself on projects where something is not working quite right now, but I can make it better."

93-94 UPDATE

John Deutsch University Centre
COMMUNITY BUILDING!

Welcome (back)! There are plenty more where we came from, waiting to serve you in the JDUC.

REINVENTING THE UNIVERSITY CENTRE

What do students, faculty, staff and alumni want in their university centre and how can the building better accommodate their needs? Those are the basic questions being posed in two consultations about to be launched by the John Deutsch University Centre Council.

Queen's University and the Queen's community have changed markedly in size, diversity and complexity in the more than 20 years that have elapsed since Senate adopted the recommendations of its University Centre Planning Committee and laid the conceptual cornerstone for what is now the JDUC. The expectations surrounding Queen's university centre -- its community building -- have changed as well. Although the JDUC has sought to keep pace with these changes, it has done so without the benefit of a systematic, comprehensive review.

In order to test and ensure the relevance of the JDUC to the campus community and to articulate a clear, authoritative vision and blueprint for the future, JDUC Council has approved two major consultations for 1993-94: a review of the JDUC's role as a student service at Queen's and a building planning committee.

The review committee will advise JDUC Council on the present state and future direction of the John Deutsch University Centre as a student service at Queen's. Under its terms of reference, it will report and make recommendations concerning: the nature and purposes of the partnership between students, faculty, staff and alumni in the JDUC and a shared, enduring vision for a university centre at Queen's University, with particular reference to the mission statement for student services at Queen's approved by Senate in June 1993;

the roles of the JDUC's sub-centres -- Mackintosh-Corry Student Street, the Student Affairs Centre and the West Campus Social Centre -- and their administrative and functional relationships to the main centre;

the programs, services, facilities and amenities that are essential to a vital university centre at Queen's -- within the context of services available elsewhere on campus and in the broader community -- and, in particular, the need for a campus visitor and information centre, a Queen's "museum" and a reinvigorated students' memorial;

the opportunities for achieving economies and efficiencies in the management and delivery of the Centre's programs and services;

the parameters of a funding/advancement strategy and a cost-sharing arrangement that will ensure the long-term viability of the Centre; and the JDUC's constitution, with a view to ensuring that the organization and governance of the Centre is representative of and accountable to its constituencies.

The building planning committee will advise JDUC Council on a comprehensive master plan for the building that will provide a framework for decisions on the allocation, alteration and development of space. Under its terms of reference, it will report and make recommendations concerning:

an inventory and quantitative and qualitative assessment of the existing interior and exterior spaces;

municipal official plan and zoning by-law provisions or restrictions that pertain to commercial and quasi-commercial uses;

planning objectives and criteria that will guide, in the shorter-term, the allocation, reallocation and minor alteration of space and, in the longer-term, capital improvements and additions to the JDUC;

costed and prioritized options for achieving an optimal match between the building's form and its diverse functions, i.e., for ensuring that space is allocated and utilized to its maximum capacity -- as balanced against its flexibility and friendliness -- and in accordance with identified needs; and a facilities audit and a plan and budget for a facilities/capital renewal and replacement program.

Each committee will comprise 10-12 members broadly representative of the Queen's and Kingston communities and will consult widely, through invited submissions and open forums, with students, faculty, staff, alumni and local residents.

Please check campus media for formal announcements concerning these important consultations.

In the meantime, questions and comments may be addressed to Jack Sinnott, Director of JDUC, or to Roger Healey, Chair of JDUC Council, in Resources Planning.

SMALL GRANTS FUND

The JDUC Program Committee's new Small Grants Fund supports student organizations or clubs and university departments or associations in holding community events in the JDUC.

A minimum of ten grants of up to $300 will be available in each of the fall and winter terms and a minimum of five during the spring/summer session.

Guidelines and applications are available at the JDUC general office.

Sun, Clouds & Precipitate...

FREE WHOPPER

Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King restaurants.

EXPIRES MAY 31, 1993

$1 OFF POUTINE

Crispy, golden fries smothered with delicious melted cheese and gravy.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by bearer. Valid only at participating Burger King restaurants.

EXPIRES MAY 31, 1993

SERVICES DIRECTORY

Student Government

Alma Mater Society 545-2725
Queen's undergraduate student government.

Graduate Student Society 545-2924
Queen's graduate student government.

Rector (David Baar) 545-2733
Student representative to the Board of Trustees and ombudsperson.

Services

AMS Infobank 545-2737
Answers to almost any question and a lost and found service.

AMS Walkhome Service 545-2662
Escorts for students heading home or across campus.

International Centre 545-2604
International student services and work/study abroad resources.

Performing Arts Office 545-2557
World-class entertainment for the Queen's community.

Town-Gown Liaison 545-6745
A vital link between student residents and the Kingston community.

AMS Parent 545-2725
*Resource Centre
Information, resources and support for students with children.*

Shops

AMS Publishing 545-6543
*& Copy Centre
Self-serve and full-service photocopying, desktop publishing, faxing and more.*

College Book Merchant 548-3224
Magazines, greeting cards, gifts and quality Queen's clothing.

Post Office and Dry Cleaning Depot 547-4757
Full service postal franchise and Connell's drycleaning depot.

Signatures (formerly A Cut Above Alfie's) 544-9022
Hairstyling, tanning, esthetics and active wear.

The Kitchen Sink 545-2725
Student entrepreneurial emporium.

TD Green Machines
Full-service banking machines and cash dispensers.

Ye Olde Tuck Shoppe 546-2912
Munchies, groceries, personal care products and dozens of convenience items.

Vids in the Hall 545-2725
Foreign films, course-related videos, Studio Q episodes and the latest flicks.

Food and Fun

Sidewalk Cafe and Skylight Dining Room 545-2953
Everything from quick snacks to full meals and a full line of hot and cold beverages.

Alfie's Pub 545-2003
A great time six nights a week. Student acts, DJs and big-name bands.

Quiet Pub 545-2740
A small delightful pub in a class of its own.

The Q Club 545-2795
Snooker and Boston pool tables, and ladders for the avid player.

Music Listening Room 545-2795
Music to study or relax by.

Video Games Room 545-2795
Lights, sound and action with the latest electronic games and pinball machines.

DIRECT ACCESS TO CAMPUS SECURITY THROUGH MILLENNIUM PHONES

A single button on the new pay telephones in the JDUC and elsewhere on campus will permit direct access to Campus Security at no charge to callers.

Bell Ontario Public Communication Services is currently replacing the 81 pay telephones on campus -- including six in the JDUC -- with new Millennium pay telephones. In addition to the campus security access key, the Millennium sets feature visual and voice prompts to assist users in placing calls, a control button to adjust the volume and a next call button to allow further calls to be made without reinserting a calling or credit card for validation. The phones offer a variety of payment options: cash (including loonies), Bell calling cards and major credit cards.

STATIONERY STORES OPENS ON-CAMPUS EXPRESS COUNTER

Immediate office supplies needs can now be filled with just a short stroll to the JDUC.

Queen's Stationery Stores is pleased to announce the opening of its on-campus express counter in the JDUC's post office. The counter stocks the most frequently requested products from the Stationery Stores catalogue, though quantities are limited.

An interdepartmental supply requisition is required for all purchases.

(RE)DISCOVER THE JDUC!

Take yourself on a tour of the John Deutsch University Centre, check out the photos and WIN! Complete the entry form on the previous page, and bring it to the general office of the JDUC (room 147) by 4:30 p.m. on Friday, October 8.

The first five entries drawn that correctly identify all of the photos will each receive JDUC prize packages valued at approximately $100.

Contest is open to all members of the Queen's community except those who work in the JDUC, the photographer and friends of the photographer.

Good luck!

Thanks to the College Book Merchant, Queen's Food Services, Signatures, the Post Office and Drycleaning Depot, Vids in the Hall and Ye Olde Tuck Shoppe for their prize donations.

1

2

4

3

Photography by Chris Phillips

5

6

7

8

9

10

(Re)Discover the JDUC Contest Entry Form

While you have a pen in your hand and the JDUC on your mind, why not take a moment to jot down your ideas on what you'd like to see in YOUR community building?

- 1
- 2
- 3
- 4
- 5
- 6
- 7
- 8
- 9
- 10

Answers should include what the object is as well as its location.

Name:
Telephone:

Are you?:

- student faculty staff alumni

WHO'S WHO

STAFF

Director: Jack Sinnott
 Departmental Assistant: Wanda Kay
 Office Assistant: Lynda Macdonald

COUNCIL AND COMMITTEES

The Centre's advisory bodies include JDUC Council, the Food Committee and the Program Committee. The mandate and 1993-94 membership of each of these bodies is listed below. Members would welcome any comments and suggestions concerning the Centre and its operations from students, faculty, staff and alumni.

JDUC Council

JDUC Council establishes general policies for the use, occupancy, maintenance and management of the Centre.

Bob Adderley AMS rep.
 Internal Affairs Commissioner, AMS
 Karen Allen (from 93/09/01) Staff rep.
 Part-time Studies
 Bob Burge GSS rep.
 Vice-President (External), GSS
 Ned Franks Faculty rep.
 Department of Political Studies
 Jill Harris (to 93/08/31) Staff rep.
 Office of the Secretary
 Roger Healey, Chair Alumni rep.
 Resources Planning
 Jack Sinnott Ex-officio JDUC
 Stephanie Taylor AMS rep.
 Administrative Services Director, AMS
 Tim Wilson AMS rep.
 Vice-President (Operations), AMS

Food Committee

The Food Committee provides advice on all matters pertaining to retail food operations in the Centre and its sub-centres.

John Bozinovski rep.
 Vice-President (Services), GSS
 Jess Sutton AMS rep.
 Services Director, AMS
 Jim Fougere Ex-officio Marriott Foods
 Bruce Griffiths Ex-officio
 Food and Beverage Services
 Melanie Molyneux Ex-officio
 Marriott Foods
 Loma Willis Ex-officio Marriott Foods

To be named: one additional representative of the AMS and representatives of the Faculty Association, the Graduate Residence Council and the Staff Association.

Program Committee

The Program Committee provides advice on events and programs sponsored by the Centre and approves applications for funds from the programs budget.

Alison Andrukow GSS rep.
 Vice-President (Operations), GSS
 Clare Fielding AMS rep.
 Education Commissioner, AMS
 Alison Mitchell AMS rep.
 Campus Activities Commissioner, AMS
 Adair Redish Performing Arts rep.
 Department of Drama
 Jack Sinnott Ex-officio JDUC

To be named: one additional representative of the AMS and a representative of the Graduate Residence Council.

THE EDWARDS CASE

Photo courtesy of George O. Lilley.

Many a sensational Queen's moment has been celebrated in Wallace Hall, but perhaps none was more sensational than the historic open session of the University Senate held on April 3, 1970. The meeting was convened to consider the findings of a committee of enquiry into charges made by Chuck Edwards, a Ph.D. candidate and former AMS president, that he had been forced to drop his studies because of his political views and his involvement with the Free Socialist Movement. (Rowdy demonstrators had disrupted and caused the adjournment of a regular meeting of Senate in the Collins Room at which the case was to have been discussed.)

Herb Hamilton, in Queen's Queen's, captured the spirit of the times: While the disturbances were at their height... there was widespread disbelief that this could be happening at 'good old Queen's.' Among the graduates there was considerable head-shaking and expressions of opinion that 'it couldn't have happened in our day.' There was a tendency on the part of the alumni, the older ones at least, to regard the incident on a par with the break-up of the British Empire. Ultimately the unrest subsided and comparative calm was restored. Student government leaders later were quoted: 'Queen's was the last to get radicalism and the first to lose it.'

WHAT'S WHAT

Sub-centres

The Student Affairs Centre at 51 Queen's Cr. is home to the Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG) and other student clubs. Stop by for friendship, relaxation, information and advice.

Mackintosh-Corry Student Street is one of the busiest spots on campus. Book tables and banner space through the JDUC General Office.

The West Campus Social Centre houses the Q Club West, featuring three coin-operated pool tables and the latest in video games.

Programs

JDUC programs showcase Queen's talent and stimulate critical reflection and debate on campus issues. Check our monthly calendar in the Queen's Journal for details on these programs and the many other events that take place in the Centre.

Quiet Spaces

To study or simply to get away from the noise and haste, the Polson Room is always available and Wallace Hall, subject to room bookings, is usually available.

Busy Spaces

Whether it's a meeting, exhibition, reception or banquet you're planning, the JDUC has a space that's right: Ceilidh, Wallace Hall, Skylight Dining Room, Oak Room, Memorial Room, John Orr Room, McLaughlin Room, Third Floor Common Room. Reserve early to avoid disappointment. Student groups require an AMS authorization card to book space.

Poster Boards and Display Cases

To post notices in the covered boards in the JDUC and along Student Street or to book display cases, drop by the general office.

The John Deutsch University Centre, as a community centre for Queen's University, seeks:

1. to foster communication among and between students, faculty, staff and alumni;
2. to provide for the changing cultural, social, intellectual and recreational life of the University; and
3. to provide services and amenities for the convenience of its users.

We welcome your feedback and ideas. If you have any suggestions about programs, events or changes you'd like to see at the JDUC, let us know. Give us a call at 545-2794, or drop us a note at the general office in room 147. Our hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday.

The 93-94 UPDATE was produced by Elise C. Cole and printed by Performance Printing. Elise would like to thank Jack, Wanda, Lynda, the Graphic Design Unit, Queen's Archives, Warren Wagner, Chris Phillips, George O. Lilley and EVERYONE who works in the JDUC for their assistance!

NEXT

JULY 27

QUEEN'S Journal

$$$
 $$ for a Classified

Volume 120, Number #2

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Tuesday, June 22, 1993

Kingston's gay, lesbian and bisexual community marched on City Hall Saturday afternoon as part of the city's eighth consecutive Pride Celebrations.

Marika Glickman

Budget cuts to cost students

BY JANE MUNDELL
The Queen's Journal

Transfer payment cuts to universities from the Ontario government have forced the Queen's administration to make plans to recover the lost revenue — plans that could include a hike in student fees to the tune of $100.

The Alma Mater Society held an open forum with Vice-Principal Rod Fraser (Resources) on June 8 to solicit input from the Queen's community as to how to deal with the monetary shortfall.

Fraser said that the government's plan to reduce its $16.7 million deficit could result in a loss of "a minimum of $9.2 million" in funding for the university.

That amounts to eight-and-a-half per cent of the university's operating budget for 1993-94.

Fraser suggested that three to five per cent would come from wage rollbacks, three to five per cent would come from restructuring, and the final three to five per cent would come from students and their families.

Fraser explained that "students should consider as part of the contribution towards meeting this problem a tuition fee increase that would be special and in addition to

(the permitted annual 7% increase."

The special ancillary fees were originally slated as high as $50 per course, but the compromise figure now negotiated by the AMS with administration is $10 per half course, to a maximum of $100. The fees, however, would not be covered by the Ontario Student Assistance Plan and would not be tax-exemptible, said AMS President Katherine Philips.

AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed said she opposed the fees because "they are back door tuition fee increases and they can't be regulated by the government."

They are regulated by the individual institutions instead, she said.

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Senator Andrea Whiting questioned the effort to conserve jobs by making students pay a higher fee when "[those jobs] aren't going to be required if our students can't even

Please see FUNDING / p.3

On the streets with pride

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

Over 100 people took to the streets of Kingston Saturday afternoon in a parade to commemorate Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Pride Day.

The group which included men, women and children, met at McBurney Park, carrying placards with slogans such as "Out Proud and Fighting" and "Smash Homophobia."

Although not on the same proportions of the massive turn-out expected in Toronto next Saturday, rally co-organizer Julia Lipinska said she had "hoped for more people," but "there were more than last year."

Many of the participants who spoke to The Journal were reluctant to release their full names.

Alison, one of the participants, was well aware that the rally could have been much larger. "Although it's legal to be homosexual, there are lots of ways for others to make your life miserable" Alison said.

Gazing from behind her cat-eye sunglasses, whom she said were "too afraid to join in, I do it [the rally] for them."

Gil, a man who was in Kingston visiting his partner Larry, feels that "Kingston is a very conservative town. To see a group like this is very encouraging."

Larry was more reserved. "There are more gays and lesbians in Kingston than [at the rally]. But everything starts small."

Peter, a professor at Queen's, was secure enough in his being "out" to join in the rally, but he was also tentative about revealing his full name or his faculty. He said that he is careful about telling his colleagues his sexual orientation.

"Discrimination can happen at the university. I don't know if it would, but I'm scared to test it." Peter arrived on campus in the midst of the Gordon House "No Means No" incident of 1989, and was somewhat apprehensive of the attitude of the Queen's community, but feels positive that Queen's "has come a long way since then."

At the City Hall steps, Mayor Helen Cooper declared June 19, 1993 Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Pride Day in the City of Kingston.

Please see PRIDE DAY / p.3

Quote

"He basically messed up fifty people's lives..."
 — Peter Harris, former employee of Megas Corp., after charges of fraud were laid on INQ publisher John Dillman.

Inside

NEWS
 INQ sinks.....3
 OPINIONS
 Social Contract.....5
 ENTERTAINMENT
 Queen's Players.....6

Health service fee for part-timers

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER
The Queen's Journal

Part-time students will no longer be exempt from the Student Health Service student interest fee.

The fee is set at $31.15 and must be paid upon the first visit to the Health Service.

Currently, two-thirds of the enhanced services — which include everything except actual appointments — are funded by student interest fees covered by full time undergraduate and graduate students.

Most of the remaining one-third of the costs of the enhanced services are supported by the university.

Dr. Stephen McNevin, the acting director at the service when the policy was changed, said that the Health Service estimates that 2000 part-time students used the service last year.

He suggested that perhaps part-time students are in fact heavier users of the Health Service.

"My general impression is, maybe part of the reason they are part-time is for health concerns in the first place," McNevin said.

"Full-time students have been supplementing the use [of the service] by part-time students," he said.

"I think that they should be able to bear the burden for the costs of the services that they use. Right now they're getting a lot of services supplemented by full time students that are paying those fees," Minerson said.

He suggested that this type of fee increase for part-time students is not an isolated incident.

"I think it's something that's going to be happening more and more especially in times where everyone is looking for money. They'll be looking to part-time students," Minerson said.

To his knowledge, no other fee increases are being considered for part-time students, Minerson said.

New youth group formed to combat racism

Director of B'nai Brith League for Human Rights discusses anti-Semitism, hate propaganda and academic freedom news feature

BY ALISON MASEMANN
The Queen's Journal

In an attempt to cool down the racial and ethnic conflict brewing in the Toronto area and across the country this spring, at a press conference held Friday, June 18 the B'nai Brith League for Human Rights announced the creation of a Human Rights Youth League to develop "constructive, non-violent, yet activist strategies to combat racism and anti-Semitism in Metropolitan Toronto."

According to the National Director of the League for Human Rights, Dr. Karen Mock, the Youth League will be a coalition of young people who are "genuinely committed to combatting racism and anti-Semitism," including high school, university and college-aged students.

The announcement of the formation of the Youth League appears to be partly in response to the recent clashes in Toronto between members of various white supremacist organizations, including the Heritage Front, and anti-racist activists. These conflicts have escalated recently to include violent and vandalous activities by both sides.

The following is an excerpt of an interview conducted with Mock following the press conference on the issues of anti-Semitism and racism, and the role of youth and the educational system in combating them.

QJ: The Heritage Front has been getting a lot of attention lately, and this seems to have increased the visibility of race issues generally. I wanted to get your opinion on that sort of thing, using a university as a forum for hate propaganda. For example, when a University of Toronto professor invited members of the Heritage Front to speak at a University of Toronto classroom this spring.

KM: It's my understanding that particular incident occurred in a course on race and power, a political science course, and he [the professor] wanted to bring in some of the hate-mongers, so that the students could see how out to lunch they are. They had a discussion with the class, it wasn't going to be compulsory ... so he thought he'd covered all the bases. So they came, and they came across as quite reasonable, they didn't come across as a bunch of lunatics. Apparently they passed out a lot of their stuff, and they were seen on campus, and people got quite upset. You know, Wolfgang Droege [head of the Heritage Front] walking with his bunch of skinheads. The professor said he didn't know they would use it to legitimize their point of view ... well you know, give me a break! On this issue of academic freedom ... That's something we still have to tackle in the university. With reasonable, scholarly people who are prepared to say that it can't be absolute with freedom, because one person's freedom is another person's denial of freedom.

QJ: I would say that only in the past decade, really, have people at Queen's been exposed to issues of racism in the curriculum and in education. And maybe people aren't being exposed to issues of anti-Semitism in the classroom as much ...

KM: Well, for example if people are in teacher education, we want to make them sensitive to the bias ... we want to mix it all up, the anti-racist, multicultural, race and ethnocultural equity initiatives, so that they should be just as aware of the racism in their

I get very discouraged at times. At the same time that there's a recession, it's increasing the backlash and increasing the hate, but it's decreasing the amount of funds and resources that we have to fight it.

curriculum, by omission and by commission, as they would when they're planning their Christmas parties, and recognizing that there may be one or two Jewish children and Hindu children and Buddhist children. They're just absolutely unaware and become more resistant if they think somebody wants to change their customs. But what I do there is I try to focus teachers' attention and student teachers' attention on their commitment to every child's self-esteem, and the effect on learning. They all buy into that.

QJ: Do you think there's a substantive difference in the kind of discrimination that accompanies anti-Semitism versus racism?

KM: I do ... you know, there's no question that in the North American context, Jews do have the advantage of so-called "white privilege," even though the jargon in this area is starting to make really nervous, but I have to tell you that even though we've really come a long way, a lot has changed within the last 50 years with human rights legislation, there's this rising unease in the community, because as their percentage of the population is becoming less and less, and where there is an increase in anti-Semitism among some other groups, there is a real fear, it's palpable.

QJ: Are there any signs of hope for you, even with the increase in racist and anti-Semitic incidents?

KM: I think we're making strides. I get very discouraged at times. At the same time that there's a recession, it's increasing the backlash and increasing the hate, but it's decreasing the amount of funds and resources that we have to fight it. You're seeing a real retrenchment of people. This coming of political correctness as a concept, that's all it is, it's just part of the backlash. Although on the other hand, any kind of extremism undermines some legitimate efforts and the dialogue. It's the dialogue that takes tremendous time and energy, and when people become adversarial and aren't willing to mediate and compromise, the tensions will get worse before they get better.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

on the
Queen's Journal Board of Directors

The Queen's Journal shall have a Journal Board of Directors which shall be charged with the responsibility for the long term strategic planning and financial operations of the Queen's Journal and shall be accountable to the AMS Board of Directors.

The Queen's Journal seeks the following individuals to complete its Board of Directors for the 1993-94 session:

- 1 One Professor
or other qualified non-student with a knowledge of Queen's and a knowledge of the nature and functions of the Queen's Journal; this shall normally be a two year term.
- 2 One Student-at-Large
*(Individual should preferably not have any affiliation with AMS services, clubs, councils, or committees.)

Individuals interested in these positions can submit their names at the Queen's Journal office located at 272 Earl St., or call 545-2800 (Tues. - Thurs. 8:30 - 4:00)

WELCOME TO THE Amadeus Café

Enjoy authentic Austrian & German cuisine in a casual atmosphere while listening to some of your favourites from Mozart, Strauss, Liszt & many more.
Open for lunch & dinner
Business lunches starting at $4.95

170 Princess St • 546-7468

Your hosts: Inge & Peter Breiwwieser

VISA • MASTERCARD • AMEX • DINERS CLUB • ENROUTE

Convocation sends graduates on their way

BY JASON BUDGE and THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL STAFF
The Queen's Journal

1500 Queen's graduates officially commemorated the conclusion of their undergraduate days in convocation ceremonies held for the Faculty of Arts and Science and Education in Jock Hartly Arena on June 4 and 5.

At the Arts and Science convocation on Saturday, honorary degree recipient Dr. Amartya Kumar Sen, a world-renowned Harvard economist, encouraged the grads to "work, work, work, see, see, see, remember, remember, remember."

According to graduate Lynn Nicholson, many graduating students will be choosing to see rather than work, as they opt to travel abroad rather than enter a work force that has little room for them.

Nicholson, a biochemistry grad who has planned a trip to southeast Asia and Africa in November, said that travelling is "better than sitting around and being depressed and doing nothing." Students will also elect to attend graduate school rather than stand in unemployment lines, said Nicholson, who also plans to continue her education.

"I'm going to go on in school if I can," she said. "I don't think I've learned enough in undergraduate studies."

For those grads that are entering the work force, Nicholson added, "a lot are accepting jobs that are not in their field of study... work that is temporary and certainly not a life ambition."

In his address, Sen also focused on the problem of unemployment in our society. Social ills continue to persist because people forget about them, he explained. Sen encouraged the students to join the many concerned about social injustices and asked them to ponder social problems.

Principal Smith, in his parting words to the graduates, emphasized the generosity of this graduating class to the university, and said that fiscal restrictions will mean that more energy and money will be required from alumni in the future.

The convocation ceremony itself received mixed reviews from students. Many appreciated the sense of dignity and tradition of the ceremony.

"I enjoyed the bagpipes and the formal aura of the ceremony," said Jamie Purvis, a graduating politics student.

Other students, however, thought that the ceremony was out of date. "It had a very religious tone. This probably does not reflect the beliefs of the majority of the graduating students," said Kyla Drever, a graduating history and philosophy student.

At the ceremonies, honorary degrees were also presented to Rudolph Marcus, a Canadian-born California Institute of Technology chemist and Nobel Prize winner, Carl Bereiter, a professor at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and a leading researcher in educational psychology, and Judith Sayers, a native-rights lawyer, scholar and international human rights activist.

Graduates won't forget the queues at Queen's.

Photo courtesy of Queen's Public Relations

INQ sinks

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Fifty-seven Queen's students found themselves out of work earlier this month when INQ, or the Independent News of Queen's, stopped its presses.

The fledgling newspaper, which had been in operation since January, was forced to dissolve when it was discovered that its publisher, the Megas corporation, was not financially viable. The president of the Megas corporation, John Thomas Dillman, was arrested in early June and charged with defrauding the Canadian Cancer Society of more than $45,000.

As reported in The Whig-Standard, Dillman, 29, was the volunteer treasurer for the Kingston and district unit of the Cancer Society. Dillman is now being remanded in custody, facing 27 charges of fraud. As reported in The Whig-Standard, he is accused of knowingly causing the Canadian Imperial Bank of Canada to act upon forged Canadian Cancer Society cheques as if they were genuine.

Meanwhile, a number of businesses such as Budget Rent-A-Car and Performance Printing of Smith Falls are owed money by the Megas corporation. The companies have hired a New Orleans-based debt collection agency to recover the outstanding debts.

Peter Harris, a third-year politics student at Queen's who was hired by the Megas corporation to market the Explorer, a tourist newspaper, said that many of the employed Queen's students were not paid for their work in the month of May, and must now face the grim task of looking for summer employment. "He basically messed up fifty people's lives," said Harris.

INQ editor Adrian Ash told the Whig-Standard that he had been in the paper for two weeks before Dillman's arrest, citing concerns over the paper's financial status as the reason for his departure.

Harris stated that Dillman had "huge plans" that included enterprises such as Megas Mail Pack (direct mail advertising), About Town (a publication akin to the Queen's Welcome Back guidebook) and INQ Daze (a day planner), besides the INQ and the Explorer.

From the beginning, however, the Megas corporation's funding source was an enigma to its employees, said Harris. "Everything was ambiguous...there were too many secrets. Everybody knew that something was amiss."

By the third week of May, he explained, it was evident that Megas was in a financial quandary when Dillman fired "75-80 per cent of the people. At that point it seemed like [Dillman] was in over his head," said Harris.

The severity of the problem was not realized, however, until May 28, when Associate Editor Lloyd Rang and salesperson Dwight Biggs checked up on Dillman, and found that he did not possess the capital he claimed to have, said Harris.

According to Harris, Dillman had led employees to believe that the delay in the paying of their salaries was due to the fact that his financial holdings were still secured at a trust company in New York City, and simply had to be transferred to Canada.

Harris said that all of the short-changed students have filed with the Labour Board, and hope to recuperate 70 per cent of their May earnings.

Continued from page one

She said she sees the fees as limiting the accessibility of university for many students.

Dera Nevin, AMS communications commissioner, expressed concern that the ancillary fees will force students to take four courses rather than five each year, thereby extending the length of time they have to attend school.

"What we will see is an increasing number of part-time students who will not have the same representation as full-time students and will have different needs and demands" that may not be provided for, she said.

Fraser suggested that the government's legislation "could be of two parts. The one part is the withdrawal of monies from our expected operating grant."

"The other one is with regard to individual employees, whether they write legislation that actually opens up signed agreements...and says by law we're going to take 5% out of every person's annual pay cheque, for they could pass wage freeze laws," he said.

In an interview with The Journal, both Phillips and Pirmohamed were adamant that any new money collected from the students should be kept separate from the wage cuts prescribed in the government's social contract negotiations.

"Students shouldn't have to bear the burden of maintaining present salaries," Pirmohamed said.

In order to off-set the blow to accessibility imposed by the new fee, some of the levy's expected gross intake will be targeted for summer jobs for students with the university, and slated for a bursary assistance program, Phillips said. Also, the AMS is pushing for a bring in, Phillips said.

Funding uncertain

Negotiations are still on-going, and the uncertainty surrounding the social contract talks forced a special Board of Trustees meeting called for June 15 to be postponed until late July or early August.

In the mean time, Fraser explained that a "loosely-knit ad hoc group of stakeholder presidents," including the presidents of the three Canadian Union of Public Employees locals, of the faculty association and of the AMS, has been holding informal discussions to assess the situation.

He suggested that they "were trying to follow a community response."

"We're trying to preserve as best we can the quality of the learning environment. We're trying to share the burden of this as fairly reasonably as we can, and we are trying to preserve the jobs of people who have continuing positions," he explained.

The largest uncertainty is "whether this is a 1993-94 challenge or whether this is a challenge that we're going to have to keep on meeting," said Fraser.

Proposed restructuring, Fraser said, would include "cutting out waste and inefficiency" as well as "doing less with less," he said.

decide... when are meetings which are least valuable to you in preserving the quality of the learning environment," Fraser said.

Pirmohamed asked whether this restructuring could include course cuts. Fraser suggested that it might be considered by individual faculties and departments.

Todd Minerson, AMS vice-president (university affairs), sought "assurance from the administration that students will continue to be effectively involved in the process, and not just there as token members."

Minerson expressed concern that "when the pressure is on ... [students] would just get squeezed out by other groups."

Fraser replied by insisting that "for Queen's to remain one of the best universities in Canada in terms of the quality of the learning environment... we would have to continue with this broad partnership in the way we move forward."

Both Fraser and Phillips encouraged students to access the information regarding underfunding that is available on INFOQ on the university mainframe, and said they welcomed all feedback and comments on these issues.

Pride Day proclaimed

Continued from page one reading an official proclamation to the cheering crowd.

There were no speeches, which was an indication of the purpose of the rally. "Self-consciousness is a concern for many," said Lipinska. "It takes courage to be here, and we support each other through a strength in numbers." Slogans such as "we're here, we're queer, get used to it!" are "safe to shout out with 100 others" Lipinska said.

During the march, Peter made a keen observation as the group breezed through a traffic light. "Red lights don't stop us." He said. "But they might have two years ago."

Editorials

Transfer cuts threaten quality of education

Along with the rest of Ontario, Queen's is faced with unprecedented transfer payment cuts that either harm the quality of university education irrevocably, or could force Queen's to reach a level of efficiency never seen before.

The cuts - which total approximately 8.5 per cent of the Queen's budget or around nine million dollars - are the result of the transfer loss as well as the five per cent cut in the staff budget as required by the social contract.

Some key elements of the social contract include compensation savings, a low-income cut off, no effect on pay equity provisions and an emphasis on savings through a system of unpaid leaves.

If the demands are not met by August 1, Queen's will be forced to abide by conditions set by the Ontario government. The legislation, however, has thus far been relatively fluid, forcing Queen's administration, student government and faculty and staff associations into a rather terse and frustrating negotiation process.

We, at The Journal, thought we would break from our regular summer schedules and try to figure out what we would do if we had to make the cuts.

And, if the time off is of a significant amount, is there any point in turning on the lights for what might end up a skeleton staff?

The social contract calls for the administration of unpaid leaves of absence in "such a way as to protect overall service delivery and to accommodate the preferences of individual workers." Even though the university is saving money by offering unpaid leaves, it is not getting anything in return. Employees will not be working the same amount for less money, so how will overall service delivery be protected? In essence, it would appear that productivity will in fact be reduced. At this time, however, unpaid leaves do seem to provide the best alternative.

Another issue of great debate was the ancillary fee proposed by the administration. While we feel that collecting funds from students is a fair and important revenue source, the original proposal that requested $250 from each student was not acceptable. The Alma Mater Society managed to negotiate that figure down to $10 per half course and we applaud their successful negotiation skills. We can't help but wonder, however, how much the administration really expected to extract from already depleted student wallets. The timing of the proposal by the administration was unfortunate. Although the unprecedented size of the cuts were something of a surprise, the administration could not have been totally unaware of the impending transfer payment gutting. According to the AMS constitution, the ancillary fee should go to referendum. Because of the timing of the cuts, the fee was not suggested until after the referendum was held and after most students had gone home for the summer.

Secondly, the autonomy and legitimacy of student governments come into question when one realizes that the Board of Trustees can override decisions made by the student government. For example, even if the AMS had flatly refused the fee, (which would have been contrary to the spirit of the Ontario Underfunding Student Alliance), the Board of Trustees could pass it - regardless of their refusal and regardless of the AMS constitution.

One suggestion that arose in our discussions - definitely a long-term suggestion - concerned restructuring on a grand scale. Currently, each department acts like a separate world. The system, as it is set up, requires a workforce much larger than it needs to be. One overriding office that could service the general needs of students in all departments would be much more efficient and less confusing. Although we like the community atmosphere that currently exists, a larger office would mean savings in terms of time, paper, money and more. The reduction in the workforce itself would represent a significant savings, and retirements and attrition could prevent unnecessary layoffs. Unfortunately, this too would mean fewer job opportunities for young people entering the system.

Most of all, we think it is important that everyone recognizes that academics should be the number one priority. The decisions made in the next few months will shape the future of Queen's University and we hope that future will contain diversity of curriculum and a level of autonomy that ensures the integrity and quality of our university experience.

THE GLOOM AND THE GLORY

The Glory:

It appears that Queen's has taken the cue from other Canadian Universities with regards to Women's Studies. With the creation of the Institute of Women's Studies, Queen's University is hopefully moving towards the development of Master's or Doctorate programs that are in place at other schools in Canada. The Queen's Senate approved the change in April and was ratified in May by the Board of Trustees.

The decision to create the Institute will most likely secure funding and provide a greater sense of legitimacy for the program.

We applaud this progress.

The Kingston chapter of the Boys and Girls Club has decided to take part in the fight against racism.

A June 19 article in the Whig-Standard reported that the Boys and Girls Club in Ottawa inadvertently fell victim to a Heritage Front ploy to rent them space for a private function.

For the first time, the Kingston branch has begun conducting specialized anti-racism training for its counselors. By taking a proactive stand against racism, the Club hopes to prevent possible connections to groups like the Heritage Front.

We at The Journal wish them luck in the fight.

The Gloom:

The Ontario Government's Social Contract will mean less work and more inconvenience to Kingston students and residents.

The City of Kingston has been dealt a $1 million cut in provincial funding and has been told to cut $1.9 million in wages. The forced belt-tightening has resulted in a freeze on summer student hiring and the postponement of street repair projects.

Several Kingston-area students experienced disappointment as their summer jobs with the city were no longer waiting for them despite confirmation only weeks before they were to start.

The city is currently reviewing the budgets for other reduction possibilities. The Queen's Journal supports the students and residents as they manoeuvre the potholes during their search for employment.

Ontario residents who make their own beer at Brew-on-Premise establishments may no longer enjoy the current price advantage.

In an attempt to generate more revenue the Ontario Government has decided to impose a $0.26 per litre tax on the Brew-on-Premise locations starting August 1.

While it is not surprising that a sin tax be imposed on the beer, it may have a detrimental effect on the rapidly expanding self-brew industry.

A popular hobby among students, the increased costs may be enough to send students back to the Beer Stores instead of taking the time to brew it themselves.

Although we encourage the attempts to reduce the deficit, we do not believe in giving the major Canadian Beer Companies an unfair advantage.

Opinions

Labs might be combined because students already work with a partner. If there were fewer labs there would be less expensive equipment required. Also, maybe teaching assistants could teach more courses. However, care should be taken to ensure that there is a fair distribution of professors and teaching assistants among students. A $100 tuition increase is not unreasonable.

Kristy Barlow
Engineering '96

talking heads

"How should Queen's deal with the funding cuts that will result from the NDP's 'Social Contract'?"

Waste associated with duplication in libraries and journal subscriptions could be eliminated, to some extent, by integrating library purchasing. Student bars are functioning in the red and they could be privatized to help deal with the funding difficulties.

Tracy Scheffer
Meds 4th year

Address time management problems by streamlining administration with advisory boards such as sub-committees and student government. This would place more emphasis on the recommendations of advisory boards and they might be implemented more often. Perhaps class size could be increased or teaching assistants could teach more courses. We need to maintain the services that the university offers and many departments are already feeling the crunch.

Craig Smith
Science Grad '93
and Research Assistant

Professor's wages should be frozen. They ought to be willing to shoulder some of the burden. If some professors are unwilling to have their wages frozen, this will give the university the opportunity to weed out those professors that are more interested in economic prosperity than in teaching students. Queen's University should be a more caring and sharing environment. Also, professors should be encouraged to give some of their wealth back to the institution from which they received it. This could be accomplished by an "inheritance tax" which would allow the university to inherit a portion of the professor's estate rather than it being inherited by the children in its entirety.

David Rowins
Education '94

Literary Lapoo

Fey photographs

Photographing Fairies
Steve Szilagyi
Ballantine Books
$13.00
321 pgs.

In order to authenticate these photographs, Castle seeks out Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, author and student of the paranormal. Surprisingly, Doyle does not welcome the pictures, but instead offers to pay Castle one thousand pounds if he will arrange for the destruction of the negatives. Castle accepts Doyle's offer and travels to the small village called Burkinwell, where the photos were taken. There, he begins to construct lucrative schemes around the supposed fairies, even as others make plans for him.

Szilagyi has drawn on many cliches to shape his novel. He uses the stuff of mysteries: loyal assistants, motorear accidents, innkeepers, gypsies and giant dogs, and the stuff of fantasies: innocent girls, glowing mists, splendid gardens, and, of course, fairies. Nonetheless, Photographing Fairies is not a "genre" work, and would probably disappoint anyone who read it as such. There is no sleuthing in Photographing Fairies; secrets are revealed through chance or gossip, and everyone's motives are mundane. Similarly, since readers are confined to Castle's point of view, most of the supernatural moments in this novel are not enchanting. For too long, Castle remains an "opportunist without an opportunity," unable to fully appreciate or convey the magic around him. Although Szilagyi uses elements of mysteries and fairy tales, he does so mainly in order to subvert them.

Often this subversion is put to humorous ends. Szilagyi plays on the reader's expectations, drifting almost into parody at times. However, since Szilagyi never quite admits that he's making a joke, the humour in Photographing Fairies is consistently and deliciously dry. Castle's consciously modest (yet consciously superior) narration ensures the reader a quiet smirk, even when events turn sinister.

And it does not take long for that to happen. The meat of Photographing Fairies is unmistakably dark. Castle tells his story from inside a jail cell, where he waits for his execution at dawn. His story moves forward with a helpless inevitability, advanced not by fatal errors or villainy, but by bad luck and petty crimes. This is not a heroic tragedy. Indeed, Photographing Fairies is not about Castle's death sentence at all, but about what he learns on the way to it. In Burkinwell, Castle learns about truth, wonder, and "the terrible power of innocence."

By sentencing his protagonist to death before the story has even begun, Szilagyi could have created a situation from which there was no satisfying escape. Could have, but didn't. Simply put, the last chapter of Photographing Fairies is breathtaking. In one scene, Szilagyi brings together the humour, mystery and perfect narration that makes the rest of the novel a success, while at the same time finally producing the magic that Photographing Fairies deserves.

Tim Mitchell is The Journal's Literary Lapses Assistant Editor and would clap his hands to save a fairy.

Editorial Board 93-94

- Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter
- Managing Editor
David Pavao
- News Editor
Jeff Gray
- Production Manager
Colin Ho
- Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse
- Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis
- Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland
- Editorial Page Editor
Douglas Macgregor
- Features Editor
Alison Masemann
- Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols
- Graphics Editor
Richard Dubois
- Photography Editor
Marika Glickman
- Assistant News Editors
Brock Martland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlaxson
- Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down
- Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petrie
Ryan Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens
- Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn
- Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yamell
- Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

- Christine Geracimo
Advertising Manager
- Andrew Nielson
Creative Staff Manager
- Alex Hamer
Sales Representatives
- Chris Ritchie
Flora Macaulay
House & Systems Manager
- Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the Editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario.

Editorial & Advertising
telephone: 545-2800
Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Summer Circulation 3,000

Contributors

Jason Budgett, Dave Coleman, Kirsten Cilly, Jason Heroux, Jane Mundell, Anne Yourt.

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

Entertainment

A body-slammin' good time

THE QUEEN'S PLAYERS
The Young and the Wrestlers at the Clark Hall Pub

BY RYAN P. CHEN

The Queen's Journal

It doesn't take a comic genius to satirize the melodrama that one finds in day-time soaps or so-called professional wrestling. But it does take the zany skill of a troop like The Queen's Players to translate easy satire into brilliant success.

The plot of The Young and the Wrestlers centres around the familiar soap opera premise of rival families struggling over a multi-million dollar business venture. This time, however, the wealth isn't in real estate, oil or perfume, but in the sweaty antics of the World Wrestling Federation (WWF).

Hillary Adonis (Jenny Hayden) schemes to wrestle the WWF away from the Hart family by prodding her preppy son Brent (Brian Bagatto) into an amorous relationship with Victoria Hart (Sarah Hunter), the heir apparent of the "Hart Foundation" and the Woman's Wrestling title-holder. Meanwhile, the crotchety Eunice Chancellor (Carolyn Taylor), eager to humiliate the Hart family, ruthlessly forces her niece Chelsea (Lara

Such plots and counter-plots dominate the story. For instance, Victoria successfully defends her title by having her sister Phoebe (Soozy Atkins) poison her opponent. And when Grambo Hart (Kate Phillips) loses a $15 million wager with Hillary Adonis, she has her relatives ambush the Adoni at a cocktail party. The whole story climaxes with the massacre of both the Hart and Adonis families at the evil hands of Eunice and her Uzi.

The script is as amusing as it is absurd. The Players hold the worlds of soaps and wrestling up to their satiric scrutiny, and their scathing portrayals exploit the well known trademarks of these television staples. Chris Patterson, in his role as Hugh Hart, does a lovely parody of Y & R's Victor Newman by capturing his pretentious accent and ranting about his daughter's "punkie boyfriend."

Not to be outdone, Suresh John is adorable as the villainous wrestler, Lawrence "The Defecator" Tero. Sporting a Mr. T haircut (well, a wig actually) and mimicking his pre-historic speech, John's Defecator celebrates his victories by, as Dr. Fever (Andy Wang) squeamishly states, "expelling his anal contents on his defeated opponents." (A subliminal commentary on sional" wrestling perhaps?) Even the realm of NHL hockey is tangentially attacked in the incarnation of the Defecator's unfortunate rival, Dennis "110%" Savage (Peter Harris).

The Players are equally fierce in their ridicule of every day life. As Eunice tells her niece Chelsea, "I've got some good news and some bad news. The good news is that your parents were killed in a motorcycle accident. The bad news is that I've got you a summer job with INQ." Similarly, when Cleft Adonis (Lloyd Balme) predicts the winner of the Defecator-Savage about his reasoning gives credence to the Freudian theory of personality: "I'll have to go with the Defecator, 'cos I like a good shit just like everybody else."

Mommy, Mommy! Where's my comb?

Although the Players' sardonic and scatological sense of humour keeps the audience rolling in their seats with laughter, the real joy of their show is in their musical performances. Backed by Hulk Hanson and the Atomic Body Slammers, the Players' display a diverse repertoire, ranging from archaic hits such as "Eye of the Tiger" to recent radio favourites like "Under the Bridge."

excellent rendition of The Spin Doctors' "Two Princes." That Bagatto performs this song topless is perhaps the best indication of The Players' lack of subtlety — they are shamelessly blatant in everything that they do.

The up-front nature of The Players, however, isn't enough to really spoil their performance (I suppose one could argue that it actually makes the troop more effective in some ways). There are so many outstanding numbers that it's difficult to pinpoint the real show-stopper. Certainly, one of the show's highlights is John's version of A-Ha's "Take On Me." The visual and aural juxtaposition of his two-inch mohawk and screeching falsetto has an ingenious comic effect.

Since nothing is sacred with The Players, one expects their parodies of numbers by Fame, R.E.M., Paul Simon and Pearl Jam. They even suggest a bit of self-parody, as their own version of "Always Look On the Bright Side of Life" pays tribute to another successful comedy troop, Monty Python.

While every performance of The Young and the Wrestlers guarantees near capacity attendance, intermission doesn't provide The Queen's Players with the kind of exposure they deserve. If you failed to see them last week, make sure you catch them in the fall, when maybe their next project will be entitled Job Trek: Boldly Going Nowhere.

You see I'm still smarting over the disappointment of Achtung Baby and the ensuing Zoo TV juggernaut. Anyone familiar with the tale of "The Emperor's New Clothes" will understand how I feel about the Zoo TV Tour. Nobody is willing to come out and say it, but this tour is a joke — a bloated monstrosity of a joke.

The Queen's Journal

Well, the news in a few weeks from now U2 will release a new studio album entitled "Zooropa." I actually have no idea how this title will be spelled, and frankly I don't really care either.

You see I'm still smarting over the disappointment of Achtung Baby and the ensuing Zoo TV juggernaut. Anyone familiar with the tale of "The Emperor's New Clothes" will understand how I feel about the Zoo TV Tour. Nobody is willing to come out and say it, but this tour is a joke — a bloated monstrosity of a joke.

The tour was heralded by most critics (even Rolling Stone) as U2's "comeback" tour, a self-reflective technological marvel that allowed the audience to revel in the latest media blitzings. And while the sheer size and complexity of the tour was impressive, the same thing could be said about the dinosaurs. The simple fact is that Achtung Baby was, by U2 standards, an inferior product, both lyrically and musically.

Ironically, U2 has met with their greatest success with Zoo TV, having just signed a $170 million record deal, the biggest ever offered to any group. Hail to Marshall McLuhan — the medium is the message. But wait a minute, is Bono really selling cd's by allowing people to watch big screen TV? And what does phoning George Bush have to do with great songs? Not much, but something has to be done when your losing your edge.

A sliver of entertainment

SLIVER
Directed by Phillip Noyce
The Capitol
BY JASON HEROUX

The Queen's Journal

The exploration of the claustrophobic tensions of an apartment building is not a novel premise for a movie and Roman Polanski did an admirable job with The Tenant. Sliver is also the antecedent of the numerous movies based on the premise of film viewing as voyeurism. Sliver attempts to combine these two motifs and create a new synergy, but in the end this movie lacks any real cinematic impact and improves little on previous efforts in these fields.

The movie concerns a series of deaths that have occurred in a high-rise apartment building. Sharon Stone plays an insulated book editor who moves into the building and meets a series of deceiving neighbours. Scriptwriter Joe Eszterhas, as in his previous movies (Jagged Edge, Basic Instinct), creates an ambiguous web between all the characters, winding the convoluted plot into a climax where anybody could have killed anybody. But the resolution seems unjustly arbitrary. Eszterhas merely picks out one of any possible endings which he has so carefully suggested.

A lesson in mouth to mouth.

Courtesy of Paramount Pictures

The audience knows from the opening credits that foul play was involved in the apparent suicide of the tenant who previously inhabited Stone's apartment. Take your pick of culprits: William Baldwin as a suave, kinky computer whiz, or Tom Berenger as an obnoxious, self-destructive writer. There is even a quiet little janitor who pops in and out when the lights flicker or when the security cameras break down.

I used to find Eszterhas's scripts refreshing because they never blatantly pointed at a hero or villain. When his scripts work there is always an unpredictable tension resulting from characters battling their own demons along with the unknown enemy. But when his scripts fail, you just don't care who wins in the end.

Sliver doesn't work. Stone is unable to accommodate the Janus-faced role which the film requires of her: timid, fragile victim on one side, sex goddess on the other. She comes across like a stalled car, not sure which direction to take. Berenger manages to wrestle some energy from his lines. Nobody says "fuck" like him. Baldwin has two acting styles: messy hair and combed hair.

Most of the dialogue bounces back and forth between Stone and Baldwin. They indulge in flirtatious little quips as they try to find out who is in control, who wears the panties in the relationship. After making love, Stone says, "You left the door open. You knew I'd come alone." To which Baldwin coolly replies, "I thought we came together."

Some people may like this film. It all depends upon whether one sees it as a cinematic experience or as foreplay for a date. But being based on a novel by Ira Levin, who wrote the critically acclaimed Rosemary's Baby and The Boys from Brazil, it is excusable to expect a little more from this tepid effort.

Successfully

THE CRANES
Forever
BMG
BY JUSTIN KEMP

The Queen's Journal

Forever gives us the second full-length effort by British band The Cranes, following their acclaimed 1991 debut, Wings of Joy. The Cranes are a four-piece from Portsmouth, made up of brother and sister founding-members Jim and Alison Shaw, and guitarists Mark Francombe and Matt Cope.

For the most part of 1992, The Cranes were undertaking a ninety date world tour with England's venerable gothic rocksters, The Cure. Forever as a work is obviously influenced by The Cure, but The Cranes have a definite sound of their own, forging the inclusion of pop hooks, and producing a collection of unobtrusive melodies and gentle movements.

The child-like voice of Alison Shaw dictates the direction of The Cranes' sound on Forever, the entire feel of the cd revolves around her vocals. Shaw's voice produces a dream-like sense to every track. Her unique vocals produce their greatest impact when the musical backdrop becomes the most ethereal, yet for most of this release, Shaw's desperate cries and whispers never completely marry with the gentle guitars and flowing keyboards.

The opening track, and first single, "Everywhere," sets the texture for the rest of the release. Gentle rollercoaster keyboards overflow onto clockwork melodic guitars, with the aching vocals being the showpiece and navigator for the song. It finishes as an honest, unobtrusive track, but never generates any real excitement, and is an accurate indication of what is in store for the listener.

The cd's stand-out track, the five-plus minute "Cloudless," is the only offering where melody, pace and feel of the music truly mesh with the vocal yearnings of Shaw. The majority of the tracks appear to have little direction, and often build via the continual addition of guitars, keyboards and almost-absent drums. The effect is that the songs progress until they end at no real destination, but simply fade away.

Nonetheless, Forever is a beautifully-crafted, well-produced piece of work, and will be well received by those who already enjoy the warm and tranquil flows of The Cranes. There are no real disappointments here, but unfortunately, there are very few moments that entrap the listener or garner true excitement.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely

Experienced Electrologists

Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON

Kingston Since 1959

Free Consultation Call

542-5595

Too hot to handle

JOHNNY CLEGG & SAVUKA
Heat, Dust & Dreams
EMI
BY ANNE YOUTR

The Queen's Journal

Heat, Dust and Dreams is the latest release from South African musician Johnny Clegg and his innovative band Savuka.

Long before it was fashionable for musicians to declare themselves against Apartheid, Johnny Clegg had dedicated his life to fighting it. As a teen growing up in South Africa, Clegg often found himself in trouble with the authorities for his visits to the black townships. It was in these townships that Clegg immersed himself in the Zulu culture. He learned their language, traditions, music and dances, as well as the respect of those whose culture he had embraced so wholeheartedly.

This experience led to the formation of Jutoka and eventually Savuka — a multi-racial, anti-Apartheid band playing to only integrated audiences. Mixing traditional African music with electric instruments, Zulu with English, and emphasizing their political message, Savuka defied the Apartheid system with their existence alone. As Clegg states in Robin Denslow's book, When the Music's Over: "Because segregation hasn't allowed us to mix, those bands that are mixing cultures are making very profound political statements."

The band faced numerous difficulties not only in South Africa but abroad. In the 1980's The British Musician's Union (BMU) adopted a no tolerance policy towards musicians who played in South Africa. This stemmed from a UN resolution urging boycotts against South Africa and led to the formation of Artists United Against Apartheid, and the song "Sun City." However, the BMU's rigid policy failed to consider such bands as Savuka. Despite a history of speaking out against Apartheid from within South Africa and playing only to integrated audiences, Savuka found themselves unable to perform at the Nelson Mandela Seventieth Birthday Tribute in 1988, even with the support of the ANC and Winnie Mandela.

Clegg's political edge remains on Heat, Dust and Dreams with songs such as "When the System Has Fallen." However, other songs, such as "These Days" and "Your Time Will Come" intermingle the concerns of relationships and finding the strength to deal with the future along with political undertones.

The Zulu lyrics and Clegg's concertina playing create an unmistakably African sound, but Heat, Dust & Dreams is far from Worldbeat and is the most Western of Clegg's offerings. It is often as conventional as any other pop/dance tune, except for the intelligence of Johnny Clegg's lyrics.

Heat, Dust & Dreams does have some interesting offerings that are worth noting. I was pleased to hear "These Days" getting airplay when I was in Toronto a few weeks ago. The song is typical of Savuka's style, but features a bagpipe in its opening. It isn't an instrument which is typically associated with African pop, but it succeeds in creating a tumultuous opening, reflecting the cd's lyrical focus on the turmoil not only within South Africa, but throughout the world.

This release is enjoyable, but the move towards a more Western rock orientation isn't always for the better. At times it just sounds like contemporary pop drivel.

As the formal Apartheid system breaks down, the fate of South Africa rests in whether its people, both black and white, will be able to come together to form some semblance of unity. Savuka taps into this forbidding uncertainty while embodying the spirit of racial harmony. Let's hope they don't forsake their own success in their move towards a greater reaching but less African sound.

Joshua Tree Presents

RISEING COUNTRY STAR
RONNA REEVES
Direct From Nashville

SPECIAL GUEST
JIM WITTER
"A New Star!"
Country Music News

FRIDAY, JUNE 25, 1993
8:00 PM

Tickets $18.50, GST
GRAND THEATRE

281 Princess Street, Kingston
BOX OFFICE (613) 530-2050
Phone orders with VISA or Mastercard

A RISING STAR
COUNTRY CONCERT SERIES

Back Page

Ghetto Gourmet

Crunchy Jumble Cookies

For your summer-time sweet tooth... submitted by Jenn Brayton.

- 1 1/4 cups flour
- 1/2 tsp baking soda
- 1/4 tsp salt
- 1/2 cup margarine or butter
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 tsp vanilla
- 2 cups rice krispies
- 6 oz chocolate chips (1 cup raisins)

Sift flour, soda & salt. Beat margarine, sugar and add egg & vanilla, beat well. Mix in dry ingredients. Stir in rice krispies and raisins. Cook at 350 F for 8-10 minutes or until firm to touch.

Dave Colton

BOB RAE CUT-BACK MEMORIAL SPACE

SAY IT AGAIN, BOB...

You've probably seen those television advertisements promoting the insurance plan offered by a large Canadian insurance firm. "Imagine visiting yourself in the future," says the voice-over, as the character in the ad meets a richer, healthy and more-outrageously happy-than-a-glue-sniffing-hyena future self. However, the future Premier of Ontario wouldn't have been happy if we had pulled this trick on him ten years ago, when he was still Mr. "Right guy, wrong party."

In light of the future ex-Premier's much-hailed, social contract and its cutbacks to university funding, we present these gems from his March 18, 1983 interview with the Journal. We're sure you'll treasure these choice remarks and display them proudly beside such classics as "But the check really is in the mail," "If we do it standing up, you won't get pregnant" and "Comrade Andropov has a cold."

Take it away, Bob...

"I think part of the government's job is to provide people with a sense of opportunity and when the private sector doesn't do it, can't do it, or won't do it, then the government has to do it. It's a simple as that."

"I think that the commitment of the province to quality of education has to be not only maintained but improved and transformed."

"I think the basic mistake is that the Conservatives have made in underestimating the importance of educational investment as a base for our post-industrial growth."

"...Ontario spends less per capita on post-secondary education than any other province. As in many other fields, the provincial Tories would rather have the luxury of blaming the Liberals for what's happened rather than solving it themselves."

"And to simply abandon the universities to the world of private charity is a mistake. Education is not a matter of charity, education is a matter of right and is a matter of providing opportunities."

"The province of Ontario has got to be prepared to make investments in its people, and that to a considerable degree means being prepared to make investments in education, especially post-secondary education."

JOURNAL

Nazi Merchandise Sparks Protest

BY TARA HILLIS
The Queen's Journal

Chants like "no profit for racism," "Nazis out immigrants in," and "no profit for hatred," rang out on Princess Street in the early afternoon of July 17.

An ad hoc group of about 50 protesters, many of them from the Queen's community, arranged the protest in response to the selling of Nazi paraphernalia and memorabilia at the two local army surplus stores, Army Surplus and Dundee Military Surplus.

After assembling at McBurney Park at Clergy and Ordinance Streets, the demonstrators made their way down Clergy to the Army Surplus store where they voiced their objections with placards that contained phrases like, "Zero Tolerance For Hatred" and "Nazism Is Not A Hobby."

Several passing cars and a bus honked their horns in support of the anti-racism demonstration.

The protesters later made their way down Princess Street and demonstrated in front of the Dundee Military store.

The group has been encouraging a boycott of both stores since their initial meeting, which happened on July 12.

Group member Brad Waugh said they particularly objected to the sale of newly produced swastika flags which he said had no historical value.

Gil Fletcher, a co-owner of the Army Surplus store, said that the store had been unfairly chosen as a rallying point.

He stated that he agreed with the group's non-violence stance. "Symbols aren't violent, people are," he said. The store has a diverse and varied assortment of customers, among them many Queen's students and persons involved in re-enactment were the primary purchasers of the Nazi merchandise, Fletcher said.

Fletcher added that he had taken the ten flags he had in his store off display, in response to four customer complaints.

Marion Marx went into Army Surplus the morning of the demonstration to express her objection to the sale of swastika flags. She said she was not persuaded that swastikas had a historical value that justified the store display.

Please see NAZI / p. 2

Protesters on Princess St. rally against sale of Nazi merchandise
Marika Gilekman

Assault on woman in Douglas Library washroom raises security questions

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

A physical assault against a woman student in a second floor washroom at Douglas Library last Wednesday has Queen's security increasing the number of patrols of the facility as a temporary safety measure.

Howard Pearce, director of security and parking at Queen's, said that Queen's Security responded to a call from Douglas at 1:20 p.m.

"A male attacker pushed a woman back into the stall of the women's washroom," Pearce said, "and she hit her head against the wall, sustaining a minor injury to the back of her head."

He added that Queen's Security has managed to "get a good description of the assailant."

The Queen's community was alerted to the incident when Tom Williams, vice-principal (operations and university relations) disseminated a memo throughout campus later that day.

In the letter, Williams said that "it is imperative that members of the Queen's community know about such attacks quickly so that they may take the appropriate personal safety measures."

According to Pearce, the attacker fled the scene immediately after the assault.

Pearce was unable to confirm whether or not the assailant had been arrested, as the investigation has been turned over to the police.

"Once the police arrive it becomes their investigation," said Pearce. He added that "in the case of an assault the victim must agree to talk to the police" before they are brought in.

He said that there was "no hesitation" on the part of the victim to call the Kingston authorities.

On the weekend, Kingston City Police could not verify whether or not an arrest had been made in the case.

Meanwhile, in the wake of the attack, Queen's Security "has [temporarily] increased the number of hours that security personnel" will patrol at Douglas Library, said Pearce.

According to Pearce, this is the first assault on campus this summer, and the first at Douglas Library in three years.

He did, however, acknowledge that "Douglas does have quite a history [of incidents]," and said that "this is one of the reasons we have the amount of security that we do." Queen's security patrols the site regularly every day.

Pearce confirmed that the new Stauffer Library was designed with safety precautions that were not installed at Douglas Library. "There will be quite a lot of assistance phones, a locking system, a lighting system...a lot of design features that will make it safer than Douglas."

Hargreaves said he was happy to have Elberg back. "It certainly doesn't hurt to have the best running back in Canada. It is definitely a big boost," he said.

Hargreaves also said that not only Elberg's skill as a player but his leadership qualities made him the valuable asset that he was to last year's Vanier Cup champion Gaels.

Hargreaves said that the Gaels offense will retain the adjustments made without Elberg, and add him as a slotback.

"We will be much tougher to defend [against]," Hargreaves said.

As for the team's chances next year, Hargreaves wouldn't commit himself: "We'll be competitive, but I have no idea."

Elberg returns to Queen's

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

He's back.

The Golden Gael's favourite son, running back Brad Elberg, is returning to Queen's next year to complete his honours degree, and will be reporting to football practice on Aug. 26.

Gael's coach Doug Hargreaves explained that Elberg had signed with the Philadelphia Eagles, but wasn't eligible to play because he had only played three years of football.

Elberg could not be reached for comment.

Hargreaves said that the National Football League stipulates that players must have four years of university ball under their belts to be eligible to play.

LOOKING BACK

THESE STORIES WERE REPORTED BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL IN 1980:

Student demands that Queen's University, as a shareholder in Noranda Mines, oppose the company's planned $350 million investment in Chile led the Board of Trustees to send a representative to the annual shareholder's meeting. However, the Board would not publicly condemn the investment.

Several hundred Queen's students went on a rampage at the McGill-Queen's football game, disrupting play and causing a premature ending to the game.

Damages of over $400 in clean-up costs resulted from an early morning raid on the fourth floor of Gordon House by residents of McNeill House.

Outer Council passed a motion to "suggest to the Senate of Queen's University that convocation retain its religious elements." AMS President Donna Finley supported this decision saying the Lord's Prayer is "universal."

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society was forced to postpone their scheduled by-election because they failed to meet constitutional election requirements by not publishing the platforms and pictures of candidates.

A proposal to install prophylactic dispensing machines in campus pubs and washrooms was recently turned down by the AMS Executive after they decided that such machines would not hold up to constant student abuse.

Liyanda Lekalake, a first-year arts student at Queen's, won the Nobel Award for an essay entitled "Black consciousness in South Africa and its Practical Manifestations."

Strangest Editorial From 1980:

"BETTER DEAD THAN RED -

I knew it would happen, I knew it all along: Trudeau is turning Canada Communist. I know you don't believe me, I can tell, but its only because the Liberals have brainwashed you. All your Christian principles have been ravaged by blasphemous Socialism, and you cant even see that it's happening..."

Dave Fraser

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

PERSONALS

Misha: You said that in the year of long press nights to come I was to remember that there was no place you'd rather be than by my side. Don't worry, I'll be standing right beside you all the way! Love Danny

FREE WHOPPER

Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable items payable by acceptor. Valid only at participating Burger King® restaurants.

EXPIRES JULY 4, 1993

$1 OFF POUTINE

Crispy, golden fries smothered with delicious melted cheese and gravy.

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable items payable by acceptor. Valid only at participating Burger King® restaurants.

EXPIRES JULY 4, 1993

Inside

NEWS
BIKE THEFT.....3

EDITORIAL
THE UBYSSY.....4

ENTERTAINMENT
CROWD HOUSE.....6

Quote

"Being engineers, we're by nature competitive people."
— T.J. Parass,
Queen's Solar Car member

Solar car holds its own in Sunrayce '93

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's University Engineering Solar Team, Sunquest, recently matched technology with universities from all over North America in the Sunrayce 93 Dallas to Minneapolis race.

The Queen's contingent successfully completed the 1000-mile route, finishing a respectable 14th out of 34 competitors.

But T.J. Parass, a crew member for the Sunquest team, said that the team's most noteworthy accomplishment was achieved off the racetrack.

"We gave a lot of people a lot of knowledge about solar energy," said Parass, referring to the presentations that the Sunquest team made to local public schools to promote the alternate energy source.

"If our aim was to educate people about solar energy and promote science and technology, we accomplished our goals," he said.

According to Parass, financial constraints made his team set realistic goals from the beginning. "We knew that we didn't have the operating budget to win," Parass explained, "so we built a car that would be reliable and finish the race."

He said that the Queen's team had little chance against American schools such as the eventual race winner Michigan, who ran an operating budget of $1.4 million American.

Parass estimated that the Michigan team expenditure on an expensive class of solar cells, the devices which trap and store the sun's energy, exceeded the entire operating budget of the Queen's, which ran at $250,000 Canadian.

"They spent more money on cells than we spent on the entire car," said Parass, who did concede that the Michigan team built a "superior car."

Despite the discrepancies in operating budgets, Parass said that organizers of the intercollegiate Sunrayce competition attempt to maintain a level playing field by placing specific design restrictions on the cars.

Forcing the competitors to work within specific technological parameters, said Parass, has the effect of redirecting the emphasis of the endeavour from spending money to being creative.

"If you're limited to eight square metres of solar cells," he explained, "it becomes up to you to play with the geometry of the area you have."

Parass said that technological innovations generated by competitions such as Sunrayce will eventually be seen in the auto marketplace.

"Though we will likely never see a car run solely by solar technology, we will see a lot of electrically powered cars," which exhibit the light-weight efficiency and aerodynamic standards set at these competitions, he said.

Parass said that the shell of the Queen's solar car is made of Kevlar, the same material used in bullet-proof vests.

Kevlar is "very light but very strong," said Parass, a combination which is crucial in a competition where weight plays such an important factor.

The car was originally scheduled to compete in the Australian World Solar Car Challenge this November, but, according to Parass, the Sunquest team has decided to "roll over the $50,000 it would have cost to compete in Australia and put it towards a new design."

Parass said that the team will now shoot for the 1995 Australian competition.

In the end, Parass said, the solar car experience taught him not only the value of teamwork, but also gave him an appreciation of his engineering education.

"School had become a matter of calculations and theory," he said "but actually having the chance to design something has made it seem important to me."

Parass, who will be next year's mechanical manager for Sunquest, said that the team is now beginning to canvass the private sector to support their new car, which will feature a whole new design.

Parass hopes that the new car, which will be started from scratch, will fare even better in upcoming races. After all, he said, "being engineers, we're by nature competitive people."

New bioscience centre

The Queen's Journal Staff

By the time the class of 1999 arrives at Queen's, biology, chemistry and environmental science researchers will have an additional 53,000 square feet of research space.

On July 20, Dave Cooke, the Minister of Education and Training, announced that jobs Ontario Capital will invest $24 million in a BioSciences Complex here at Queen's University.

On the same day the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade announced a $1.5 million grant to Queen's for the development of a Technology Transfer Centre, which will be located inside the BioSciences Complex.

In all, the project will cost $50 million. The rest of the funds will be raised by the university, private enterprise and the city of Kingston.

The building will be used to combine the research talents from variety of fields, including biology, geography, geology, and chemistry.

Professor Gerry Morris, head of the biology department, said that even policy studies and urban planning would be involved with research in the complex.

The transfer centre will ensure that research reaches the hands of the public much sooner.

Principal David Smith said that, although the centre brings researchers closer to industry than ever before, the centre would not threaten the autonomy of the research done.

He explained that the university has codes of ethical research outlined in the Senate. Researchers will continue to follow their own interests, he said.

The building will provide the space needed for containing genetically-engineered clones and vectors, radiosopes and potentially dangerous chemicals. Sealed laboratories and special facilities will be housed in the complex as well.

Also, the complex will free up space in Earl Hall - which will be completely renovated - for animal holding facilities, growth chambers and a central facility for DNA fingerprinting.

Professor Morris said that little research is done on animals at this time.

Insects are a focus of research, however. Using insect biotechnology, researchers hope to develop environmentally acceptable methods of insect pest control to replace or supplement toxic chemicals.

Three researchers at Queen's in plant biotechnology are working on improving the yield of crops on marginal lands by improving plant nutrition, and modifying the content of plants such as canola.

Another researcher in biochemistry is hoping to transfer fish anti-freeze protein genes into crop plants so they can produce their own anti-freeze and become frost resistant.

Other research products include the biological treatment of hazardous industrial wastewater, developing fermentation processes using genetically-engineered organisms, monitoring and predicting the interactions of wild populations, determining the genetic relatedness of individuals and the genetic distinction of populations and species.

Furthermore, when the complex is completed and Earl Hall renovated, biology students will have access to more research labs, lecture rooms, seminar facilities and library space.

Enrolment in biology has increased at Queen's by 148 per cent in the last ten years.

The transfer centre will allow the university to enter the first stage of testing and commercializing newly discovered processes and products.

Parteq, the not-for-profit corporation responsible for commercializing intellectual property generated at Queen's, will be located in the transfer centre.

The Business School's "Small Business Consulting Unit" will also have office space in the centre.

Products and research will be on display in the centre for the general public, business, venture partners and other researchers. If preferred plans go ahead, the complex will be built in the parking lot behind Earl Hall, said Queen's University Vice-Principal Tom Williams.

He said that the administration has a changed approach to big projects such as the complex.

"I think that we changed our whole approach to running large scale capital projects with the Stauffer Library.... We're much better equipped now," he said.

"We're a far more professional operation now than we were five years ago," he added.

Nazi paraphernalia

Continued from page one

"Looking at a flag is different than leaning history," Mara said.

She added that she would normally not go into the store.

Former Queen's student Hannah Kaufman explained her reason for going to the demonstration: "It sears me."

"Nazism has a direct impact on my life and my heritage," she said.

She said she knew of people in the community who were upset about the sale of swastikas at Kingston stores, but who had not gone to the demonstration.

"It is important for people to protest," she said.

Wagha said that he viewed the demonstration as an act of expression that responded to the expression in the display of the flags and paraphernalia. He said that the demonstration was meant to raise Kingston's consciousness about racism.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

on the
Queen's Journal Board of Directors

The Queen's Journal shall have a Journal Board of Directors which shall be charged with the responsibility for the long term strategic planning and financial operations of the Queen's Journal and shall be accountable to the AMS Board of Directors.

The Queen's Journal seeks the following individuals to complete its Board of Directors for the 1993-94 session:

- 1 One professor or other qualified non-student with a knowledge of Queen's and a knowledge of the nature and functions of the Queen's Journal; this shall normally be a two year term.
- 2 One student-at-large*
*(Individual should preferably not have any affiliation with AMS services, clubs, councils, or committees.)

Individuals interested in these positions can submit their names at the Queen's Journal office located at 272 Earl St., or call 545-2800 (Tues. - Thurs. 8:30 - 4:00)

Bike theft: Organized ring or joy-riding kids?

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

It looks like history student Sarah Cooper will be walking to work from now on.

Her bike was stolen from the storage room of her ghetto apartment. "At first, I thought I'd see my bike again," Cooper said. Now she's not so optimistic.

Cooper's story is one of hundreds heard each year in downtown Kingston. In 1991, 889 bicycles that were valued under $1000, and 48 bikes valued over $1000, were reported stolen. In 1992, those figures soared to 1018 and 61 respectively.

And those are the ones that are reported. Inspector Randy Elliott of the Kingston Police Force estimates that the real theft figures may be significantly higher. Elliott also noted that 80 per cent of stolen bikes are gone forever.

"It's insane here," said Ashan Baksh, of Cyclepath, a downtown bike store. Baksh said they get people in daily speaking about thefts. "In my estimate, Kingston is in the highest theft bracket." Elliott said that the police are not aware of any organized theft ring, saying that the majority of thefts are the work of "joy-riders." Dozens of bikes are found in Lake Ontario each year.

Cooper agrees: "I think it's young kids." But the word on the street speaks organization and conspiracy.

Shelley Lewis, a Queen's graduate, heard "that within an hour of being stolen, a bike is disassembled and on the way to Montreal." Jamie Kingston, a recent graduate, concurs: "For sure they go out of town—it's worth a thief's while to go to Toronto; it's a larger market."

Baksh was definitive: "A couple of months ago a crew came up from Montreal or Toronto to clean out bikes."

And the reason for this disproportionately high theft rate? "It follows logic that where there is a concentration of bikes, there will be greater theft," said Elliott. Baksh's comment was similar. "A lot of people ride in this town," with the main bike owners living "in a confined area."

It is no longer sufficient to remove the front wheel and lock it to the frame to discourage theft. Many students carry around their quick release seats and helmets when leaving their bikes in public. But with the greater expertise of thieves, an owner would need to remove brakes, shifters and even handle bars to be fully secure. Often the components are much more valuable than the frame. Prevention is the key. "Queen's should have better locking facilities," said Baksh. "Even if they had a wire cage or something where you paid 50 cents a day, a lot of people would do it." He noted that "ten bikes could be stored in one parking spot."

Muhammad Hadzic, also of Cy-

Dave Coleman

clepath, said that it is not wise to leave a bicycle on a front porch. "It's like advertising what type of bike you have" and allows the thieves to "fit it into their schedule." Both agreed that it is best to keep bikes inside at night.

Lewis mentioned that she doesn't "have faith in the system to get bikes back."

Vania Hakh, a friend of Cooper's, is also sceptical of the likelihood of the bike ever being recovered by the police. The police handled the report by telephone.

"I called the police to claim the insurance money," Cooper said. "Insurance companies require police reports before they can honour claims. Holway and Hutchinson Insurance Brokers of Kingston affirmed that students may claim a theft on their parents' policy, under an off-premises category.

Elliott sees this as feeding the problem. "The insurance companies are too willing to pay," Elliott said. "People would care about their property more if they didn't know it was so easy to get reimbursed." Of the 200-300 bikes turned in to the police every year, less than 50 are claimed by the owners.

Baksh is also critical of the insurance companies. "I'm surprised [they] don't do something about [bike theft]. They dish out a lot of cash."

However, the perceived ease of insurance claims is not always a blessing. "The deductibles are sometimes really high," Hakh said. "And if you claim, the [insurance] premium goes up...it's not worth it."

Some advice to avoid theft:

store bikes inside whenever possible lock bikes in an open, busy place ("If they are going to steal it, make them work for it," said Hadzic.)

try not to leave bikes outside at night and cross your fingers.

New $100 student levy to go before trustees

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips says that "students have been included throughout the process" in the implementation of a new student levy to help ease the impact of budget cuts on the university.

But the process isn't over yet. Philips said the AMS is proposing several stipulations attached to the new levy, which totals $10 for every half course to a maximum of $100. The stipulations will go before the Board of Trustees July 29 for approval, and they include:

that a plan is developed to absorb the revenue from the levy back into the budget 3 years from now, so that the levy could eventually be rescinded.

giving students a say in how the money is spent. Currently, the AMS is proposing that $300,000 of the fee's expected revenues of $1,300,000 go to new student bursaries, $825,000 go towards financing existing scholarships, and $175,000 to cover the administration's share of the John Deutch University Centre.

any proposal to increase the levy after next year must be passed in a student referendum, and any new fee imposed must first pass in a referendum. However, Philips said she is sceptical that all of the AMS proposals will be passed by the board. She doubts that the levy will actually be absorbed back into the budget in three years: "I think this thing is with us forever."

She also said she figured the Board of Trustees would be reluctant to subject any new fees or raise in fees to a student referendum.

Philips said that the board might amend the referendum proposal to stipulate the Board of Trustees would not be bound by the vote's results.

Or they might just scrap the referendum idea altogether, she said.

In spite of her doubts that many of the stipulations around the fee will go through, Philips said that in relation to other Ontario universities, "we are lucky."

"I'm appalled at U of T," Philips said. The University of Toronto has announced a new student levy of $185.

The fee at U of T was strongly opposed by U of T's student governments, and was implemented without sufficient student consultation, said Philips.

The University of Western Ontario has also imposed a similar fee of $150 on full-time students for next year.

The social contract at Queen's

The Queen's Journal Staff

The provincial government's so-called "social contract" deadline of Aug. 1 is looming as administration, staff, faculty and student organizations meet to wrestle with ways to recover $11 million in revenues lost as a result of the reduction in transfer payments from the province.

Anything agreed upon will have to be passed before the Board of Trustees when they meet on July 29.

Of the $11 million, the social contract's wage roll-backs amount to $6.7 million. Here's how Queen's proposes to deal with the situation, as articulated in the report "Queen's Response to the Provincial Cut-backs" written by Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips:

The proposed salary roll-back from contracted 1993-94 wages totals $6.7 million.

$2 million will be borrowed for three years from the small pension surplus at Queen's, and if an agreement is made before the Aug. 1 deadline, then $1.4 million less has to be cut from the budget. This would leave a $3.3 million to slice from wages. Proposed is that staff would still receive their contracted three per cent increase for 1993-94 (agreed upon before the budget and social contract cuts were announced) but, they will also take six unpaid holidays next year which would amount to three per cent decrease in annual takehome pay.

The proposed $10 per half-course student levy will rake in $1.1 million, to go towards financing scholarships and the John Deutch University Centre.

$0.6 million will be taken out of research spending.

The remaining $3.6 million will come from restructuring fund commitments, a reduction in the education budget, and $1.2 million in as of yet unallocated budget savings, for a total $11 million.

Philips believes that "it looks quite probable that a local agreement will be established in time for ratification by our Board of Trustees on July 29, 1993."

Queen's student Robert McKereher has captured second place in the undergraduate category of the Business Student Writing Awards with a paper entitled "Expert Systems Live Up to Their Name in the Financial Services Industry."

McKereher, who graduated from commerce this year, will spend the summer taking an intensive language course in Germany prior to beginning a 12-month position with Credit Suisse in Zurich.

The awards, which are sponsored by the Royal Bank of Canada, were presented at a dinner held in Toronto on July 15.

On July 12, the Canada Council announced that German scientist Dr. Geerd Diercksen has been awarded the 1993 Canada-Germany Research Award. Dr. Diercksen was nominated jointly by the University of Waterloo and Queen's University, and will divide his time in Canada between the two host institutions.

While at Queen's, Diercksen will collaborate with Dr. Vedene H. Smith and others on research in the area of computational molecular physics and chemistry.

The award, established in 1991, enables a German scholar to spend up to a year in Canada to pursue research in his/her area of study. The value of the award is $75,000 plus a travel allowance of up to $20,000.

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

- Editor-in-Chief: Sarah MacWhirter
- Managing Editor: Dave Pavao
- News Editor: Jeff Gray
- Production Manager: Colin Ho
- Entertainment Editor: Rob Furse
- Photography Editor: Marika Glickman
- Sports Editor: Joel Sutherland
- Graphics Editor: Richard Dubois
- Opinions Editor: Tara Hillis
- Features Editor: Alison Masemann
- Literary Lapses Editor: Megan Nichols
- LifeStyles/Backpage Editors: Derek Walker, Joey deVilla
- Editorial Page Editor: Douglas MacGregor
- Assistant News Editors: Brock Martland, Brad Elder, Lori Thorlakson
- Assistant Production Manager: Adrienne Down
- Assistant Entertainment Editors: Ian Petrie, Ryan Chen, Sian Beddoe-Stephens
- Assistant Sports Editor: Jen Flynn
- Assistant Photography Editor: Derek Yamell
- Assistant Literary Lapses: Tim Mitchell
- Business Staff 93-94:
 - Business Manager: Chris Geracimo
 - Advertising Manager: Andrew Nielson
 - Creative Staff Manager: Alex Hamer
 - Sales Representatives: Chris Ritchie, Fiona Macauley
 - House & Systems Manager: Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario.

Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800
 Fax Number: 545-6728
 Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
 Circulation - 3,000

Contributors

Dave Coleman, James Keast, Sandro Pasquall

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

To be, or Ubysey?

After 74 years of service, The Ubysey, University of British Columbia's student newspaper, was shut down. On June 2, after students had gone home for the summer, UBC's Alma Mater Society voted to end the paper's long history.

The primary reasons cited for this shocking move - which was criticized in an editorial in the Globe and Mail - were: the paper's editors had been irresponsible, the newspaper was managed in a way that was fiscally irresponsible, and The Ubysey did not represent students' interests.

The events which culminated in the closure began when a petition - eventually declared invalid - was circulated among students expressing a desire to cut student funding of The Ubysey.

The paper ran several articles to which students, advertisers and student council took exception. A story was printed that told students how to ride the BC Transit without paying, and an issue on sadomasochism was substituted for the annual Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual issue. In March, the paper published a personal attack on the AMS president after a disagreement between the editors and the president.

The Ubysey's fate was on the agenda at several student council meetings in May. After the AMS decided they didn't have sufficient control over the paper's content, The Ubysey was shut down and the paper's staff was locked out.

It is clear that the student government had too much control over the paper. The AMS was responsible for all advertising and funding. Given this control, the charge of fiscal irresponsibility is definitely not a persuasive justification for the shut-down.

This fiscal control allowed the student government the power to make specific editorial decisions about the nature and content of the paper - and thereby denied the paper of its integrity and editorial autonomy.

Unfortunately, the AMS believed that the newspaper should reflect their views and their perspective. This attitude threatened the ability of The Ubysey to function in a democratic and responsible manner. A university newspaper should only be responsible for func-

The argument that the paper does not represent student's interests has been popular in recent years. We hear it on Queen's campus when the funding of Surface is questioned.

It was an argument used to force a referendum on Ryerson's campus regarding the issue of funding for CKLN Radio several years ago. The question of representation is frequently involved when campus medias are being questioned.

The editorial board at The paper. Students who feel their interests are not being represented should express this to the editors - and better yet, participate in determining the content of the paper.

Admittedly, it is difficult to decide what makes it into the paper. Quality of writing, the timeliness of an article, and the amount of material submitted always affects these decisions. Choices about what should be printed are always difficult for the editors in every section of a paper. These decisions should be made to account for the diversity among student interests.

Although a university paper ought to appeal to the interests of the student body, this does not mean that the paper should only represent one perspective - unless it is the mandate of the paper to do so. Needless to say, the greater the diversity of perspectives that are represented, the more readers chance to benefit.

The special structure of student newspapers ensures that they will reflect different interests with each issue. Questions about whether a given paper is interesting or responsible can only be answered according to the last issue. The future possibilities of a paper cannot be decided according to that last issue. Furthermore, student governments should never determine what the future of a paper will be. The invisible hand of public opinion would decide the future of the paper without the assistance of the student government.

The closure of The Ubysey exemplifies the dangers of a student government that exercises too much control. A newspaper is a forum of expression - and at the university level more than any other, that expression should be free from the fetters of the interests of the elected student government.

tioning according to its mandate - it should not need to anticipate the specific interests of the student government. The mandate of a paper gives it primary responsibility to represent the news in a way that is relevant and interesting to students.

The student government can tell the paper's staff to produce the paper - and no more.

While there does seem to be evidence that poor editorial choices were made about which articles to print, the position of editor was a temporary, elected position, as it is at many university papers. Closing the paper down seems to be an extreme reaction to what appears to have been a bad editorial year.

Queen's Journal appreciates the need for the content of newspapers to appeal to students. The university community pays a percentage of the paper's operating costs and should thus expect to find their interests represented in its pages. Students, however, comprise a diverse group and few things are going to interest all students.

The AMS at UBC cited extra copies of The Ubysey around campus as evidence of lacking student interest. If inadequate interest explains the excess copies, why did more UBC students not submit articles that were of interest to people like them? The Ubysey's contribution policy allowed any student to

The price of freedom

Each year, come November 11, we are asked to remember and honour what our ancestors fought and died for. We are told that they fought for freedom. In the second world war, freedom from the religious and racial persecution of the Nazi regime.

Millions died under the symbol of the swastika, died because they were not of the "Aryan" race. For many, the threat of violence and even death based on colour or religious persuasion is not an issue of the past, but of the present.

News reports from around the world tell horror stories of acts committed by the new nazis. Governments agonize over the resurgence of ultra right-wing neo-Nazism. The spreading fear and hatred felt among youths toward "foreigners" or blacks or Jews demands attention, but in a world of individual rights and freedoms little can be done until a crime is actually committed.

For many of these youths, the symbol of their hatred and fear is the swastika. Nazi paraphernalia carries the baggage of the holocaust, and will thus always, in a broad, social sense, represent racism - no matter what the individual beholder may consider it to mean.

Nazi paraphernalia has been available for purchase in surplus stores since the end of the second world war. Some people buy the paraphernalia for historical significance. Some people buy it out of ignorance and poor taste. Others, however, know what the symbols stand for and buy not just the product but the philosophy that led to and maintains its existence. Now, nazi paraphernalia is mass produced - forget the real thing, the historical article. Polyester flags and uniforms are available for today's Nazi.

Recently, a number of protesters got together in Kingston to let surplus store owners know what they thought of this. To let them know just what the swastika meant to them.

They carried signs in front of surplus stores reading "No Profit From Hatred," "Swastika = White Supremacy = Death," and "Fight This Racist Town." The protest was not an attempt at censorship, but an act of expression considered logically equivalent to displaying the Nazi flags.

Despite all the hatred it represents, Nazi paraphernalia should not be banned. It is apparent that the social mores embodied in regulatory standards seem to be highly subjective. Why is it that gay erotica is stopped from coming into Canada but Nazi flags and uniforms pass through the border without question?

It shouldn't be up to the government to decide what consumers have the right to buy - just as it shouldn't be up to a group interest. Here we enter the classical conundrum of individual versus group rights. However, the Nazi experience showed the world what can happen when the individual rights of all are not first and foremost. Consumers have the right to purchase what they want, proprietors have the right to sell what they want, and protesters have the right to let their views be known.

Banning Nazi paraphernalia is also a bad idea from a simple psychological point of view. The paradox of banning a symbol is the allure that action would create. Anything you can't have becomes that much more desirous.

With groups like Heritage Front on the rise, it is imperative that people stand up and say what the swastika means to them. The Lone Star removed the rebel flag after customers complained they could not sit under it knowing what it represented. The owner of the Army Surplus Store removed all Nazi paraphernalia after customers complained.

A skinhead in Toronto asked a

Opinions

"Poverty and violence. All major problems are caused because there are 'have nots'. Violence is the result of poverty. Problems like the environment can't be solved in the 'third world' without solving the problem of poverty - it depends on the resources they have."

Anup Singh
MBA '94

talking heads

"What do you think is one of the most pressing problems in contemporary society?"

"It's a 'me' society. Everyone is in it for themselves instead of the whole society."

Padmini Swaminathan
Swami Swaminathan
Parents of Con. Ed. Student

"People lack knowledge of how important education is."

Hang Whan
Eng. '95

"Racism has been a problem for a long time. People have been talking about it a lot but not doing anything about it. We need to educate people more so they show more love, patience and tolerance."

Paul McElhinney
Queen's Staff

"The environment because it is our world and it's being destroyed because we're not taking care of it."

Klaudia Dimitrienko
Arts & Sci. '96

Literary Lapses

Dig it, man, your candy apple smile just don't sweeten this camper's eye, rather be ridin' a Harley choppin' through Alberta with my hair flowin' with the wheat, windblown and hardassed.

Wrap me up in leather and studs, lots of 'em, with big chests and a hot groin and zero appreciation for solitude. Drag me shoutin' and droolin' strung out and experienced; I'll thrill your marrow with sixteen pills and a heap o' thrust.

Yah that's right sixteen thrills and a swig o' Daniels lickin' down your chin. I'll taste you man, I'll lick my teeth into you ride your bedsprings cold blooded and bruise you like a bitch.

Does that paprika teaser turn your head? Do you like that island heat sweatin' down your spine, rub of rum and tongue of fire? I'll do you both whip your bullballs in tandem smack your hides crimson and hang you on the wall to dry. spray of plaster snow in your hair and up your nose.

Run that razor across your mirror and snort up the white teeth in your candy apple smile before I wink an eye man.

A Very Dark Eye

She sits with her hand in her lap. The thought of him is heavy. In the crinkle of her gown stands a ladybug, staid, and the sun goes down below the horizon. A lamp spreads a little light in a dark room where the furniture exacts a compelling tale. Poverty is above all else a lack of image, but she smiles at the sunset and reflects on the promise of the moon.

Aristotle is dead; what will quiver her mind if not reason? Quality with abandon and the rest stands as a prelude. It is six o'clock.

We will all die one day. He once said this while eating falafel, smiling food without reserve. Taste of garlic and a farther place. "The Tuareg were once indigo devils spitting power into the sand. Whence came the fall?"

A pile of napkins. So many napkins and no food. How might I commend the progress of overwrought chandeliers spreading a dead moonlight over Persian rugs? We will all eventually kill the night.

Confession

A church stained with colour; red and yellow, and the pews on fire.

He said that he loved me like Jesus, you understand and that I had the voice of an angel.

An office with many books, dulled songbooks and bibles; the bibles were dusty. Two-handed arch menacing to the roof, how many hands rubbed those polished curves slowly, with strength.

There were many candles that cried long, wax tears soon too hard to flow anymore. And in and out of focus came crucifixes, splayed wooden Christs every where; he suffered to give us God and the church - Jesus, and his hands pinned.

There were many hands.

~ Poetry by Sandro Pasquall

Entertainment

Crowded house and the brothers grim

THE LAST DAYS OF CHEZ NOUS
Directed by Gillian Armstrong
BROTHER'S KEEPER
Directed by Joe Berlinger &
Bruce Sinofsky
Princess Court Cinema
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The claustrophobic nature of domestic space, and its corrosive effects on relationships and psyches, has long been a profitable theme for writers and filmmakers. Such situations are double edged, however, carrying the potential to be realistically evocative or heavily-handedly mundane. Hence, many of the most successful explorations of the theme have been daring in style and tone (a striking case in point being the wonderfully black visions of Roman Polanski in Repulsion, Rosemary's Baby, and The Tenant).

Australian director Gillian Armstrong brings much more understatement—arguably too much—to The Last Days of Chez Nous, which chronicles the demise of a Sydney household. The centre of Chez Nous, both in film and house, is Beth, an occasionally irascible and increasingly world-weary writer. Her husband, J.P., is a Frenchman, and Continental in the way that all Europeans seem to be in the eyes of non-Europeans: madly charming yet arrogant, and upright about cheese. J.P. feels displaced by Beth's career, and, on the verge of receiving his Australian citizenship, frequently wonders why he ever left Europe in the first place.

Filling out the house are Ammie, Beth's coltish teenage daughter from a previous marriage, and Vicki, Beth's younger sister. The film opens with Vicki returning to the fold after a humiliating trip to Italy in pursuit of a man. Full of ill-defined longings to have more than she's got, and more than she is, Vicki proves to be the catalyst in the "Fall of the House of Beth."

One really doesn't need extensive training in film plotting to see where things are going. Indeed, while Helen Garner's screenplay contains a number of finely observed moments, she has created a confluence of so many dramatically loaded situations that at times it feels like you're watching a ninety minute episode of Neighbours (with better production values). The fact that one can mention an abortion, a reconciliation with an estranged father, and a first love without giving up the bulk of the plot suggests a script trying to cover itself by touching every pos-

Table, with her hair ablaze and long legs perpetually curled in an expression of stifled energy.

Director Gillian Armstrong remains best known for her 1979 feature film debut, My Brilliant Career, adapted from Miles Franklin's classic novel. Not only did the film launch the career of its lead, the incomparable Judy Davis, it propelled Armstrong (then just 27) into the ranks of the great wave of Australian directors who emerged in the 1970s, including and unwashed, in central New York.

Bill Ward suffered from a number of ailments (involving, among other things, an accident with a chainsaw), and it was assumed he had died of natural causes. When the autopsy raised the possibility of foul play, Delbert was questioned and signed a confession indicating that he had smothered his brother in his sleep to end his pain, with the consent of the other two brothers. Despite Delbert's subsequent recantation, and the apparent willingness of the police to take advantage of his ignorance, he was charged with murdering Bill.

The charge initiated a fascinating chain of events, culminating in Delbert's trial. While the citizens of nearby Munnsville had previously accorded only a minimum of acceptance to the Wards—"The smell might get the best of you," explains one woman—they quickly rallied around Delbert, as the case became a question of country folks versus city slickers. The Wards were outcasts, but they were Munnsville's outcasts.

The trial raises a number of issues: the ethics of mercy killing, the motivations behind both the prosecution and the defense of Delbert Ward, and the ability of the justice system to serve citizens at the margins of society. First time directors Berlinger and Sinofsky do almost everything right, in an excellent example of shoe-string filmmaking (much of the film was shot during evenings and weekends as the directors had day jobs). They skillfully present the life of the Ward brothers without patronizing their subjects and wryly record the media circus surrounding the case.

Brother's Keeper is a thought-provoking exploration of both a community and the notions of justice in contemporary society. That so many films can profitably examine such topics only serves to affirm their relevance.

The Last Days of Chez Nous July 29 - August 3
Brother's Keeper - August 6 - 9

"Hey buddy! Can you spare a dime, or possibly some elocution lessons?" —Lyman Ward

Photo Courtesy of Creative Exposure

sible base. In the process, a number of potentially interesting avenues are neglected, such as the uneasy status of an immigrant in a country whose cultural credo has traditionally been "be like us or bugger off."

The cast carries the film. Bruno Ganz, best known as an angel who aspired to humanity in Wim Wenders' Wings of Desire, has a rumpled charm perfect for the role of J.P. (that Ganz's German accent pokes through his characterization fairly frequently is a minor quibble). And Kerry Fox, justly acclaimed for her performance as tormented writer Janet Frame in Jane Campion's An Angel at My

Fred Schepisi, Peter Weir and Bruce Beresford. Moreover, Armstrong became recognized, almost instantly, as one of the leaders of intentional women's filmmaking—justifiably so, as fifteen years ago, one would be hard-pressed to think of many working women directors.

But today Armstrong is now just one of the increasing number of women making films in Australia and New Zealand, sharing the stage with the likes of Jane Campion (whose The Piano shared the Palme d'Or at Cannes this year) and Jocelyn Moorhouse (Proof). To assert that Armstrong has been eclipsed is perhaps unfair, but it

Toronto discovers the joy of sax recently, including the album Lush Life: The Music of Billy Strayhorn.

Rollins, conversely, pushed the musical boundaries with a sextet that included a guitarist, trombone and two percussionists, along with long-time collaborator, bassist Bob Crenshaw. Exploring musical territory that included Latin and country based rhythms, Rollins flaunted the virtuosity that has made him the jazz world's greatest living saxophonist.

Casting a pall over the festival were the recent deaths of Miles Davis and Dizzy Gillespie. The week was dedicated to Gillespie, and both Rollins and Henderson had strong ties to Davis.

Rollins got one of his first breaks with the Davis small groups in the early fifties, an experience that helped to launch his distinguished career. Henderson played briefly with Davis in the mid-sixties, and just recently finished an album-length tribute to his memory.

Although Henderson has gained more attention for his recent work than Rollins, in a live performance setting, Henderson is subdued, and works largely alone. Holland and Foster were relegated to supporting roles not by their playing, but by the lack of ensemble spirit, which Henderson refused to encourage. This segregated approach made for excellent individual performances—Holland displayed incredible skill and fascinating improvisation on his instrument—but there was little group interaction between the three. Rather than take advantage of the talent of his sidemen, Henderson tended to ignore them, standing aside to let them take a solo turn, but otherwise following his own path. Thankfully that path is an interesting one, garnering Henderson some long deserved attention from the jazz world.

Rollins, on the other hand, the titan who for so long has dominated the spotlight which Henderson now shares, filled his show with pure joy. For two-and-a-half hours, he filled the air, the stage, and the hearts of his players and audience with a love for music and its creation.

Rollins showed little discom-fort with his place in the pantheon of jazz gods, freely exploring different musical ideas and styles with little concern for expectations, only results. The diversity and talent of his ensemble led to fine musical moments from Latin-inflected congas to country-flavoured guitar. Rollins is now in his early sixties and has travelled a long road that few survive. The obvious love for the music he is making resulted in a delightfully entertaining show.

In a music world with rapidly growing generational conflict, between Young Lions and elders, the Toronto DuMaurier Jazz Festival provided an opportunity for two of the greatest jazz practitioners to let loose—for the sake merely of making music.

The older & wiser Westerberg

PAUL WESTERBERG
14 Songs
Sire/Reprise
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

Given the understated tone of the final two Replacements albums, one could be excused for asking if "Matsinger Paul Westerberg was competing for the title of 'Nicest Guy From Minnesota Since Brandon Walsh.'" Now, after contributing a couple of enjoyable if forgettable tunes to the Singles soundtrack, Westerberg is back with his first solo album 14 Songs. The burning question remains: has the Bastard of Young turned into nothing more than James Taylor with an attitude?

The opening track, "Knockin on Mine" is a statement of intellectual principles in the Replacements tradition, featuring the line Wisdom is ignorance, stupidity I call freedom. It's a good, catchy rock tune, possibly the best on the album, though I'm not sure about the mandolin solo. The single "Dice Behind Your Shades," while unquestionably AOR fodder, is nevertheless enjoyable.

Westerberg's reflective side emerges strongly on several songs. "First Glimmer" is a bittersweet recollection of virginity lost (it opens with Do you remember me...), while "Runaway Wind" manages to rise well above its title, which sounds like something a towne would have airbrushed on the side of his van. One of the best of these quieter efforts is "Black Eyed Susan," a rather beautiful demo recorded in Westerberg's kitchen.

Let one get the impression that Westerberg is headed for employment as a Hallmark card writer, there are a few indications that he can still be beer-soaked and stupid with the best of 'em. "Silver Naked Ladies," an homage requiring little explanation (hint: it's about strippers), recalls the Stones and the Faces (forgive this clichéd critic's crutch).

Although Westerberg, on the album and in interviews, is clearly trying to distance himself from his past work, two of the album's closing tunes, "Something is Me" and "Down Love," with about six words and far fewer chords between them, will bring back warm Replacements memories for any fan.

Given that the Replacements were often the perfect accompaniment for getting drunk in a park, it is odd to play this album during dinner with the parental unit. Indeed, having your parents like an early Replacements album would defeat the purpose. It would be even more weird, however, to expect Westerberg to keep playing "Take Me to the Hospital" into middle age (admittedly, the Ramones seem destined to be playing "Blitzkrieg Bop" in their seventies, but they're a special case).

However much Westerberg has moved into the mainstream over the years, he remains true, possibly the best on the album, though I'm not sure about the mandolin solo. The sardonic sense of humour which infused such "Mats tunes as "Waitress in the Sky" remains an asset, surfacing on "Mannequin Shop," an indictment of cosmetic surgery (Are those yours?). Westerberg's voice, always amiably croaky, is now complemented by some happily amateurish sax playing.

The title 14 Songs was apparently inspired by a collection of J.D. Salinger stories, and indeed, it's fairly easy to see Westerberg as an admirer of Holden Caulfield. This is apt, in that throughout his career, the drunken bouts of stupidity have always been tempered by insight and ironic self-awareness. Westerberg remains the smartass at the back of the classroom: he may be older, wiser, and somewhat more commercial, but he hasn't been co-opted. Put on the album, have a beer, and enjoy.

Paul Westerberg will be playing Lee's Palace in Toronto on August 13.

Colourless music

STEPHEN DUFFY
Music in Colors
Parlophone/EMI
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

Apparently, Music in Colors is Stephen Duffy's eighth studio album. I write this with much surprise since I can only remember his early Eighties dance hit "Kiss Me" and his cover of Leonard Cohen's "Bird on a Wire." Although he is an artist who, on average, has a release every other year, Stephen Duffy still remains an obscure name.

Perhaps that is why his latest offering features the celebrated talent of violinist Nigel Kennedy. Considering that Duffy's musical career has led nowhere but to the bargain bins at second-hand record stores, Kennedy's recruitment seems like a desperate move. In a leech-like fashion, Duffy has attached himself to a man whose name is synonymous with musical excellence, and I suppose the marketing works as follows: If Stephen Duffy is working with Nigel Kennedy, then he must be a virtuoso as well.

Of course, such propositions are not necessarily true. The logic is faulty.

Music in Colors consists of nine songs, with each song being linked to the next by a transitional piece. As Duffy explains, these interludes "take us from the key and tempo of one song to the next." I presume Duffy's intention was to produce an album that was a unified work, a type of pop symphony. If this is so, then Music in Colors is something like Mozart's A Musical Joke, but without the intended irony.

The weakness of Music in Colors is a fatal one. Duffy's songwriting simply does not measure up to the abilities of the prodigy he employs. Kennedy composed and performed all of the transitions, and although each is only about a minute long, they are, frankly, much more interesting than the songs they introduce. Kennedy's transitions are thought provoking and emotionally stirring, whereas Duffy's songs are musically one-dimensional and lyrically superficial. The stark contrast between the two performers leads me to wonder why Kennedy is wasting his time with such an inferior artist. If he wanted to record a pop album, why didn't he do it by himself, or at least with a more competent musician?

Music in Colors does have its moments, but the moments are indeed few and far between. If one listens, albeit rather strenuously, they can be detected. Fortunately, Duffy is wise enough to never use the string arrangements as mere padding to his simplistic pop tunes. Kennedy and his violin are foregrounded just as much as the guitars, the bass and the drums. He breathes life into "It Sparkles!" and "She Wants to Share Her Magic" — numbers that, without his presence, would otherwise be dead. The sparkling magic belongs to Kennedy alone.

If there are any highlights to this dismal release, then they undoubtedly occur in the catchy love songs "Natalie" and "Totem." Despite being obvious in method and ridden with clichés, these two tracks are adorable in that they capture a certain giddiness that is irresistibly attractive. With a balance of infectious guitar riffs, soothing strings, and Duffy's adolescent voice, "Natalie" and "Totem" manage to transcend the dullness that plagues the greater part of the album.

"A Fall From the Sky", the final song of Music in Colors, ironically encapsulates the failure of Duffy's latest, and perhaps last, musical endeavour. As the decent imagery suggests, Duffy once again falls into the abyss of mediocrity.

If you're interested in hearing what Nigel Kennedy has to offer the pop world, then pick up the single of "Natalie." But don't bother wasting your money on Music in Colors, unless of course, you're filthy rich and happen to find it in the reduced browser at your local record store.

Classifieds

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

GRADUATE STUDENT on the way to McGill for September. Are you looking for someone to share living accommodations? If so, please call 531-4440. THANKS for hanging in there when I needed you to Danika. Three down, thirty-five to go... really!

Princess Towers

AFFORDABLE DOWNTOWN LOCATIONS:
- BACHELORS, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, & 8 BEDROOM UNITS
- SOME HAVE BALCONIES
- HEAT & HYDRO INCLUDED
- PARKING EXTRA
- COIN LAUNDRY & CABLE T.V. AVAILABLE IN BUILDING
- NEAR BUS & LARGE GROCERY STORE
- WE PROVIDE GROUP DISCOUNTS AND SHORT TERM LEASES

PRINCESS TOWERS
401 Princess Street
Kingston, Ontario
K7L 5C9
613-544-1842

THOUSAND ISLANDS
LAYHOU
presents
I'LL BE BACK BEFORE MIDNIGHT
A Suspense Thriller by Peter Colley
Sponsored by
BISHOP & BRUCE PHARMACY
July 22 - August 22
BOX OFFICE 382 - 7020
GRAND THEATRE 530 - 2050
FOX 960

LifeStyles

Emily Moore Alumnus spotlight

Former Alma Mater Society President Emily Moore was named one of Canada's 10 Rhodes Scholars last spring. In a speech given to the Grant Hall Society in May 1992, she discussed the problems and hopes of Queen's University. The following are her concluding words from that speech...

"In times of chronic underfunding, we must always re-evaluate our priorities, and in a diverse community there will be tension around perceived changes in those priorities. Such tension manifests itself in many ways, some of which are destructive, and I believe that it can only be relieved by a careful balancing of concerns. I also think that more creative solutions, such as the Queen's National Scholars, the Instructional Development Centre, the Mature Student's Association, and the Human Rights Office are needed to make optimum use of our scarce resources in addressing these concerns.

"Now I'm off to the world of a graduate student's concerns. At Oxford, I'll not have to take any courses towards my PhD, so quality of teaching will be less of a concern, while quality of the research environment will be even more of one. I've also been told that Queen's is light years ahead of Oxford and Cambridge when it comes to addressing sexism, racism and classism, so I guess there'll be lots to sink my teeth into 'across the pond.'

"The Queen's community, of which we are all important members, should be commended for the valiant efforts that it's making in the face of challenges presented by chronic underfunding. The Queen's Challenge, Alumni Annual Fund, and other means of support, in money and in time, are much needed and appreciated. There's still work to be done at Queen's, and it will take all members of the Queen's community to develop creative solutions to the problems which arise."

hot and not a semi-regular feature to help keep trend victims up to date

Hot

- 80's nostalgia
- Toques and sock hats
- President's Choice Beer
- SST records "Kill Bono" T-shirts
- PJ Harvey
- Pets
- Fire
- Your own judgement

Not

- 70's nostalgia
- Baseball caps
- Labatt Wildcat
- U2 "Zoo TV" T-shirts
- Melissa Etheridge
- People
- Ice
- Filler columns like this sun, clouds and precipitate

Typical highs: 28-ish °C
lows: 15-ish °C

MOST OF THIS WEEK:
Humid with scattered showers & thunderstorms

Hints from Jose: The odds of your being struck by lightning increase dramatically if you stand in the rain under a tall tree in the middle of an open field, waving a metal golf club and yelling "Storms suck!"

the breakfast hangouts of champions

When most people think "social occasion," they envision such activities as going out to bars or parties, or having dinner with friends. But socializing should not be limited to the evening, and there are a few people in this world (though not many at Queen's) who enjoy getting up at a reasonable hour in the morning and deciding they want to be around friends, or want to be reminded of the bygone era of the family meal. For these people, the Sunday breakfast was created.

Many establishments around town offer specials on Sunday mornings. Some like the Toucan, will give you a traditional English breakfast of beans, bacon, toast and eggs - sorry, no substitutions. Travelling around to different establishments yields some variety in foods offered and should satisfy most culinary palates. The cuisine is not always the epitome of healthy eating, but there is a certain enjoyment in a meal that doesn't lie in the quality or type of food.

Without a doubt, the best thing about a Sunday breakfast is that you're among friends, family or both. What a great way to show your parents that you can go to a pub and walk out an hour or two later without getting slobbering drunk! What an ideal place to take friends in town for the weekend before you part ways.

The Sunday breakfast is a great occasion to be with people you care about, have a hearty meal, and those people who don't have to go to work can still have the rest of the day to relax and enjoy their summer.

Here's a list of places that were recommended by experienced Sunday breakfasters/brunchers.

- ▲ Baltic European Deli: 8 am - 6 pm, breakfast special served all day (every day in fact) of three eggs for $3. Sausage lover's heaven.
- ▲ Brew Pub: 11 am - 2:30 pm, meals include steak and eggs, eggs benedict, etc and range in price from $4 to $8. Great eggs benedict.
- ▲ Chez Piggy: 11 am - 2:30 pm, a wide variety of delicious meals for $8 upwards. Legendary coffee. The place to scam a meal off the parentals.
- ▲ Morrison's: 7 am - 2 pm, standard breakfast fare at reasonable prices ($3 up). Joey recommends the pancakes, Kingston's most filling.
- ▲ Toucan: Serving from 12 - 5 pm, $2 gets you a traditional English breakfast. Part breakfast, part hangover victim/social butterfly meeting.
- ▲ Wellington: Serving from 11 am - 4 pm, $2 gets you a traditional English breakfast. Live jazz makes this the home of the bebop breakfast.
- ▲ Your place: Yeah, if you like month-old "Lucky Charms."

Derek Walker can be seen wandering Kingston streets early Sunday mornings looking for the special Sunday special. Joey deVilla wanders the streets looking for basements to break into.

FREE WHOPPER
Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by customer. Valid only at participating Burger King® restaurants. EXPIRES SEPT. 15, 1993.

FREE WHOPPER
Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by customer. Valid only at participating Burger King® restaurants. EXPIRES SEPT. 15, 1993.

Tonight and Sat. - Leslie Spit Tree-o
Sun. - Wild Blues
Yonder

QUEEN'S Journal

TD BANK OPEN YOUR TD ACCOUNT

JOHN DEUTSCH UNIVERSITY CENTRE
SEPT 6-10 & 13-17
FROM 9:00 TO 4:00

TD STUDENT PLAN FEES CUT IN HALF

Volume 121, Number 4 Serving the Queen's Community since 1873 Friday, September 10, 1993

CALLING CONTRIBS!!!

COME WORK FOR THE JOURNAL - 272 EARL STREET - 545-2800

Students to wage cross-country election campaign

19 student governments form coalition

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Move over, Kim Campbell. Watch your back, Jean Chretien. The Vote Education coalition is after you.

The student governments of 19 schools across Canada, including the Queen's Alma Mater Society, are today officially launching a national campaign to put education on the agenda for the upcoming federal election.

"We're not going to let education fall by the wayside," said Taz Pirmohamed, AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner, and a coordinator of the Ontario leg of the campaign.

The Vote Education campaign came together at a conference of student leaders held in August at the University of Saskatchewan.

It is to include both national and local advertising. A radio ad has been produced, and lawn signs, door signs, and an information booklet are in the works.

"Unconventional publicity techniques" may be used as well, said Pirmohamed. Just how unconventional, though, she wouldn't say.

The main thrust of the campaign is a survey being administered to every candidate in all 295 ridings across the country that will solicit the candidates' views on education. Pirmohamed said the survey results will be used in the campaign to inform voters which candidates have made education a priority.

She also stressed that the campaign is strictly non-partisan.

Lawrence Kuo gives Jamie Humble a Frosh Week buzz. Murika Glickman

FROSH WEEK, CHA GHEILL!

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

The 1990's version of Frosh Week began successfully at Queen's on Monday. Frosh found themselves "amazed by the spirit here," "really hyped," as well as "pretty confused."

First-year student Selena Liu said "It's been really good" while remarking that his "brother came here four years ago, and the things he did were a lot more risqué. I hear it's a lot more tame than it used to be."

The focus of events has certainly shifted from a decade ago. Hazing and drinking games have been replaced by an emphasis on academics and inclusiveness.

This year, students began their week on an academic note, being greeted in a convocation-like address by the principal. Arts and Science students spent their first full day listening to alumni, discussing classes with their gaels, and shopping at the "supermarket" of courses, the Academic Cellidh.

Head Gael Andrea Whiting told The Journal the week's "number one focus is academics - that's why they [the frosh] do all their academics at the beginning of the week."

These events, however, have not taken over the week. Wednesday saw hundreds of frosh at a carnival at City Park. The frosh took part in line dancing, dunking gaels, racing

Student traumatized by sexual assault in William Street home

BY SARAH MACWHIRTER and BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

The following is a personal account of a sexual assault which occurred at 4 a.m. Thursday morning in the 200 block of William Street. The victim of the assault, a third year Queen's student, wished to remain anonymous but was willing to tell her story.

"I was safe. I left Alfie's and I made sure a girlfriend walked me home. I went inside and put the lock on my door. I was sitting by myself watching TV. My housemate came home and we sat and talked and someone else came home and we sat and talked. About 1:30 in the morning I went to bed.

"About four a.m., I guess, I awoke to someone fondling me and I tried to get him to go away and I asked him a few questions and he answered and he wouldn't get off, get out of my room, and get away from me. And then he masturbated in front of me. And then when I screamed he left.

"I ran upstairs and I called 911 and they were great and they helped me out and the police were there within 30 seconds to a minute I'd say after I made the call.

"I was completely terrified... because you don't know what they're capable of. You never think it's going to happen to you. You feel completely invaded because it's something of a sexual nature and that's completely private.

"When someone does something like that to you, it's complete invasion. It's one thing to break into our house and take all our possessions. I can replace those. But I can't replace my feeling of security and comfort with myself.

"I can't even go into my bedroom. There's no way I can sleep in my own bed. I feel so vulnerable... I can't sleep because when you're sleeping there's nothing you can do. And I can't not sleep.

"It's really important that it gets out that this happened... that people take precautions. But if anyone ever finds themselves in this position, they also realize it's really hard because people are talking about you and they're talking about something really personal that happened to you.

"Rape or sexual abuse of that nature are all the same. It makes you feel gross about yourself. It's the safety and the security and the invasion and the privacy and the hurt. Anything sexual is one and the same... Don't downplay it because it's not penetration per se..."

"I couldn't feel more unsafe. I couldn't feel more vulnerable than I do now."

Please see ASSAULT, page 11-

Student traumatized by sexual assault in William Street home

Please see VOTE, page 10

Inside

- NEWS BREAK-INS9
- FEATURES AMS EXEC.....22
- ENTERTAINMENT THE HIP.....28

Please see FROSH, page 10
More on FROSH, pages 5 & 13

Quote

"[Women's] centres don't make the patriarchy go away."
- Mary Syrett, treasure of the Women's Centre.

City Sports Phone 542-4415
208 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT.
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

Walking, running, hiking SHOES court, volleyball, soccer, aerobic, cross-training	QUEEN'S HATS FROM $14.99
See you at the SIDEWALK SALE on Friday, Sept. 10
Graphite squash rackets reg. to $119.99 SALE from $49.99	Great Assortment of crested ruggers, sweats, sweaters, t-shirts & shorts

TEAMS ○ FLOORS ○ CLUBS ○ FACULTIES
Jackets ○ T-shirts ○ Rugby Jerseys ○ Golf Shirts ○ Sweats
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ○ Custom Creating at Very Special Prices!

Alfie's

THE ESSENCE OF QUEEN'S

DJs BANDS

SMOKERS BIG SCREENS

POOL GREAT PRICES

SUPPORT YOUR CAMPUS PUBS!!!

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

CTV political analyst Mike Duffy wasn't willing to make any wagers on who will win the upcoming federal election at a speech given in Banrigh's Fireside Room Tuesday night.

"Since you asked, I don't have a clue who's going to win," Duffy said to an audience of about thirty Queen's students. The talk was originally scheduled in Grant Hall, but was moved to Banrigh because of the small turnout.

Duffy said that it was time "to take back Canada" and called for more political involvement among citizens.

"Apathy is an all-pervasive disease in our country," he said. "There's a bigger crowd out of Karaoke drinking... than there are here tonight."

He said that last year's referendum on the Charlottetown Accord was "the Canadian equivalent of a peasants' revolt."

"It was an unprecedented display of the will of the people," Duffy said.

Duffy stressed that political involvement, on the scale of what was seen during the referendum campaign is "crucial to the future of the country."

But unfortunately, Duffy said, "a lot of Canadians have gone back to sleep" since last October.

"There's a war under way for the taxpayer's dollars and the future direction of our country," said Duffy, and it's imperative that the people of Canada have a say.

Duffy said that as the baby boom generation ages, health care costs will increase, and tax burdens on succeeding generations will begin to balloon out of control.

"There is a great potential for inter-generational conflict," said Duffy. For him, the key to resolving conflicts is to get involved.

"I don't think we're doomed. We're only doomed if we leave it to the professional politicians. The challenges ahead of us go beyond deciding how seats there should in the Senate," Duffy said.

Duffy said that politicians "have to have candour" and tell people what they might not want to hear.

"We have to wipe away the bullshit, the fakery and the puffery," from politics, Duffy said, adding that politicians should "stop talking in code."

He cited the Reform Party's pledge to "take a new look at immigration" as an example of politicians talking in code about a "potentially racist policy."

When Duffy finished his planned address, he went more or less off the cuff, and entertained his audience with humorous anecdotes about figures in Canadian politics.

In spite of the audience's small size, Duffy still started off his address with compliment after compliment for Queen's.

"This is the thought control centre of Canada. Queen's has turned far more than its share of great Canadians. This is a first rate school."

He mentioned however, that his eighteen year-old son Gavin chose to attend Carleton University this year, instead of Queen's, because he "couldn't stand to be more than a ten-minute drive from Hull."

Mike Duffy making a point.

Marko Ghickman

Schubert to take leave and retire

BY SHARON TROFIMUK
The Queen's Journal

While 2,800 first-year students jump into their university careers next week, one of Queen's veteran professors will quietly step out of the academic scene.

Mathematics Professor Cedric Schubert was convicted in December 1992 for the sexual assault and indecent assault of his stepdaughter which occurred 10 years ago. He will not be returning to classrooms this year, or ever again.

Instead, according to David Turpin, dean of Arts and Science, Schubert has elected to exercise his right to an extended leave of absence, and a year of sabbatical in 1994, followed by an early retirement. Said Turpin, "I respect his decision to seek early retirement—that's his call."

The news comes as a surprise to many, since a recent Senate report concluded that Schubert no longer constituted a "danger to the learning environment" at Queen's, and that termination of his employment as a professor was unnecessary.

The Senate Report—based upon the findings of an administrative investigation team appointed by Principal David Smith in January—aroused the concerns of the Alma Mater Society executive on several counts.

Taz Pirmohamed, AMS academic affairs commissioner, said that she had been "very much opposed" to the Senate's decision to allow Schubert back into the classroom.

"As a member of the AMS, I can say I'm glad he's not coming back—he was a threat to the learning environment, and I'm glad that the administration made this decision that gives such a clear message to students."

Todd Minerson, AMS vice-president (university affairs) said that he found Schubert's decision a little surprising, but that he personally was not in a position to say how the decision would affect students, because he had never been enrolled in any of Schubert's classes.

However, Minerson did stress that the issue was "bigger than just Schubert." He questioned the code of conduct that he said was applied differently to members of faculty as opposed to students in cases of sexual assault.

He also called attention to what he referred to as a problem of "nebulous administrative investigation."

According to Minerson, the administrative investigators appointed by Principal David Smith—Bill McLatchie, VP Research and Alice Baumgart, VP Human Services—made use of reports from faculty members and the Dean of Studies, but did not consult students involved in protests or classes.

"The report claims to recognize student concerns, but I have difficulty in seeing how they did it, as there were no students consulted, and it was completed in an inconvenient time in the summer while no students were here."

Minerson said he found the lack of student consultation "pretty upsetting," since one of the main aims of the investigation was purportedly to protect the learning environment of Queen's, in which, he said, "students have an ultimate stake."

Administrative investigator Bill McLatchie did not wish to comment.

Both Pirmohamed and Minerson expressed dissatisfaction with what they described as the secretive nature of the administrative investigation, which, according to VP Tom Williams, is used when any review "might impinge upon a faculty member at Queen's."

Minerson said that it was up to the AMS and the Senators to correct the procedure and get information of this kind to the public. It is currently standard procedure that only members of the University Senate may know the details of such an administrative investigation.

Williams agreed that it may be helpful to review the administrative investigation process in light of the Schubert case, but said he did not wish to speculate on the nature of any possible changes.

Delna Karanjia expressed her concerns as a second-year arts student currently enrolled in Math 121. "Student representatives should have been the first to be consulted because they are the ones directly concerned—they are the ones being taught."

However, she added that "student reps should keep in mind that [Schubert's crime] happened seven years ago, and that if psychiatrists, administration and students were satisfied that he no was no longer a danger to the learning environment, then the man should be given a fair chance."

Schubert pleaded guilty to charges made by his step-daughter that he kissed her breasts and lips and touched her legs and buttocks. The Crown rejected other allegations on her behalf and confined Schubert to a month-long jail sentence which he served in December 1992.

Schubert resumed teaching in January, 1993 amid student protests, including a masked demonstration held by the ad hoc Men's Wing of the Queen's Security Council.

Schubert's students were told by members of the math department that they could opt out of his class if they wished to do so. Two women did opt out, while a considerable number of students remained, many supporting the professor.

Schubert requested, and was granted leave on January 28, 1993, after finishing the winter term.

No members of the mathematics department chose to comment on Schubert's decision at this time.

Schubert has been a professor at Queen's since 1969.

The Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston, a volunteer-based, non-profit organization dedicated to assisting women in conflict with the law, is in urgent need of volunteers for the Court Support Program, Wednesday Evening Program at Prison for Women, One-to-One visiting and others. Volunteer training starts soon. Interested parties are asked to contact Lori at 544-1744 for more details.

University employee Ross Tretheway is urging the Queen's Community to save the pull-tabs from their aluminum cans and look for deposit cans throughout campus. The pull-tabs will be collected in order to raise money to help purchase wheelchairs for local residents who are in need. Ross would also be grateful to receive assistance for his endeavour. He can be reached at 542-7104.

To all female Queen's students feeling confused at Orientation week's end: On Sunday, Sept. 12, the Queen's Women's Centre invites any female students to drop into the women's-only space located at 51 Queen's Crescent. They will be offering "morning after" support, consisting of aspirin and tomato juice and hugs from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Know what's wrong with women in journalism?

There aren't enough of us.

Come write for news.

272 Earl St.
545-2800

NEW Cheap CHEQUING MONEY SAVER!
For students only
THE BEST STUDENT CHEQUING ACCOUNT DEAL IN TOWN
Only $2.00 a month

and you get

- ✓ Unlimited Cheque Writing
- ✓ Your Cheques Back Monthly
- ✓ A Monthly Statement
- ✓ A Chequing and a Savings Account
- ✓ Your Member Card so you can use Almost Any Teller Machine Anywhere!
- ✓ Low Cost Cheques

OPEN
Mon. - Wed. 9:30am - 5:00pm
Thurs. - Fri. 9:30am - 6:00pm
Sat. 10:00am - 1:00pm

DOWNTOWN
18 Market Street
(Beside City Hall)
549-3901

IN THE TOWNSHIP
795 Gardiners Road
(Corner of Taylor Kidd)
384-5555

Credit Union
KINGSTON COMMUNITY CREDIT UNION
Banking Where You Belong

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

HAVE YOU DEDICATED YOUR LIFE TO THE TIRELESS PURSUIT OF:

PHOTOGRAPHY?
SPORTS?
ART / LITERATURE?
DESIGN?

THEN THE

TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK

WANTS YOU!

We require editors and staff in the above areas and more. Even if you just want to get involved and learn something new, we'd love to teach you! Come to our booth of Clubs Night to talk to our editors and learn more about the TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK. A complete listing of available positions will be posted there. Watch the Journal for an announcement of our first meeting.

INTERESTED IN WORK OR STUDY ABROAD?

COME AND VISIT

the Work/Study Abroad Resource Library

- books
- videos
- database of programs
- information on exchanges
- student representatives from abroad

PLACE: the International Centre, just past the Quiet Pub on the first floor JDCU

HOURS: 10:00 to 12:00 & 2:00 to 4:00

for information call 545-2604

"Queen's Best Kept Secret"

AUDITIONS

Kingston '93

Tuesday, September 14th
THE GRAND THEATRE

Men Only - 6:00 - 7:30 pm.
Women Only - 7:30-9:00 pm.

 Must be able to both Sing and Dance*

For further information,
Contact Moira Davies #389-1590

Roses
Long Stem!
9⁹⁹ / DOZEN

5 ft Palm trees
19⁹⁵

FREE delivery to Queen's area on large tropicals!

Stone's Flowers
LIMITED

248 PRINCESS ST KINGSTON ONT
PHONE 544-1208

More checks to stop AMS cheques

Model UN excesses cost students $4000

BY LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

An unwelcome legacy of chronic budget overruns has forced the Alma Mater Society Campus Activities Commission to tighten up its bookkeeping.

Queen's Model United Nations, is the most visible example of overspending. Last year the committee ran more than $4000 over budget, according to AMS Vice President (Operations), Tim Wilson.

Past Model UN Co-chair Christine Lonsdale admitted there were "difficulties" with the budget, but said she did not believe that the difficulties amounted to a $4000 difference. "I think that this is a paper error," she said.

To address these problems, the AMS is introducing a series of checks and balances that current Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell says will increase accountability. A new computerized ledger system will bring committees under commission scrutiny every month.

Mitchell herself will enter the monthly account for each committee and compare the figures with the projected budget figures for the committee.

Month-to-month tracking will allow the commission to catch over-spending, Mitchell said.

In addition to their budget problems, last year's Model UN executive couldn't agree on whether communications between the commission and committee were adequate.

Past Model UN Co-chair Thierry Del Prado said that the committee had "intensive contact" with the commissioner last year. "We worked very closely together," he said.

Past Model UN Treasurer David Knight, however, said the committee had "very little contact from the commission." Knight said that he was never consulted through the committee during the course of the year.

According to Lonsdale, communication between the committee and the commission was poor. She said that the deputy commissioner assigned to the Model UN committee, Darren Monta, "did not know much about the committee". However, "he was there when we needed him," she said.

According to Lonsdale, the budget allocated to the committee was inadequate. "We knew that we were being asked to do the impossible from the beginning."

However, Knight said that budget problems were not discovered until very late and that the original budget allocated to the Model UN committee was adequate.

"We would have had enough money if there had been more fiscal responsibility," he said. "It was very difficult to control spending," he added.

Although all cheques had to be authorized through the AMS, Knight said that spending problems occurred "at the committee level." "Various sources" within the committee were spending money, Knight said.

In Knight's final budget report to the Campus Activities Commission, he stated "there was a problem in communication between the administration members of the committee and the finance director."

In his report Knight states "I found out after the fact that many prices had been given to me at the basic rates before taxes and actual costs were thus 15 per cent higher than budgeted for."

Knight said the actual expenses contained some surprises for him including $488 spent on "Committee and Page Thank You's".

Knight's report states that the gifts "were purchased with the knowledge of only one committee chair and one committee member. [they were] unfortunately a surprise for the finance director well after the final budget planning had occurred."

The overspending problem in the commission isn't restricted to Queen's Model United Nations. AMS Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson said that budgets for Campus Activities generally run over. Past student events, he said, have drawn from the unallocated surplus funds to make up the difference.

Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell said that she did not believe that every committee in Campus Activities suffered from underfunding.

She said that historically, many of the larger activities in the commission tended to run over budget. Smaller committees, such as Kaleidoscope, actually came under budget last year, Mitchell said.

Mitchell believes that the Model UN committee was not allocated enough money last year. The committee received a funding increase of approximately $1500 this year.

Increasing the budget for committees that run over is not the solution, she said. "Ideally, I think that the committees should run on budget."

Mitchell will present the proposed spending control plan to the AMS Assembly on September 14th. The plan will require each committee to submit revised budgets to the Assembly at the second meeting in the fall term and the first meeting in the winter term.

Under the proposal, any changes to the budgets, including requests for more money, will be subject to Assembly debate.

"The only way to be accountable is if Assembly is kept updated," Mitchell said.

If, despite these checks, committees do run over budget, Mitchell said that committees should work to earn the money back.

"They could hold bake sales, operate the coat check at Allie's," she said.

"The money is supplied by student interest fees and we should be fully accountable to students," Mitchell said. "I don't take it lightly."

Students share burden with new $100 levy

BY KAREN HALL
The Queen's Journal

Due to the impact of cuts in transfer payments and the "social contract," you're forking out another hundred bucks on top of your tuition.

The Compulsory Student Assistance levy is one way the Board of Trustees is trying to lessen the impact of an $11-million funding cut to the University.

The levy is $10 per half course, to a maximum of $100 per year, and is expected to pull in $1.1 million this year. It is expected to be rescinded in three years time, but Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips already questions how likely that is.

"I think this thing is with us forever," said Phillips this summer. The Board of Trustees has the money earmarked for new student bursaries, financing scholarships, and operations costs of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips is concerned by such targeting. In a letter to the student body, she wrote of her concern that specific targets for levy funding would "create a dependency by those services on the levy that would prevent the revenue from ever being rescinded."

Philips also expressed her concern about the lack of accountability to students. The Board of Trustees "imposed the levy but no efforts were allowed to impose controls on increases of the levy, nor on accountability to students," Phillips is "disturbed that [the Board of Trustees] won't be guided by students views on ancillary fee increases...or commitment to a process that guarantees consultation with students while they're on campus."

She hopes that a long-term solution will be decided by March, with significant student input.

Originally, any increases in the levy were to go to a binding student referendum for approval. However, the Board of Trustees "did not want to be bound to a decision of a referendum," because of the concern that students would never vote to increase the levy, Phillips said.

fresh week

High Marks for '97's

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Sorry, Golden Words—these frosh aren't dumb.

This year's class of '97 arrives with very successful high school years under their belts, carrying forth a long tradition of lofty cut-off marks at Queen's.

According to statistics released by the Registrar's Office, entry marks stayed relatively similar to last year's class, with the exception of big jumps in the faculties of Nursing and Commerce.

Shelagh McDonald, the assistant registrar (admissions and liaison), said that the six per cent increase in faculty of Nursing could be attributed "purely to supply and demand."

Cut-offs for the faculty of Commerce also jumped significantly—from 84 per cent to 87 per cent—while the number of admissions in the faculty dipped, said McDonald. The number of admissions dropped to 180 this year from 205 in '92-'93.

She explained that the dip in Commerce admissions was an intentional decision on the part of the faculty designed "to accommodate students transferring into Queen's."

"It was a deliberate move to get very good students at the second year level," McDonald said.

McDonald said that the wide range in marks which characterized both Arts and Science Concurrent Education was due to the implementation of a new application process for these faculties.

Faculty	'93-94	Cutoffs '92-93	Target number of admissions
Bachelor of Arts	84	84	820-880
Bachelor of Science	84	83	525-615
Con. Ed Arts	80-96.3	90	90
Con. Ed Science	80-97.7	91.3	30
Phys. Ed.	84	84	75
Fine Arts	77	78	30
Music	77	77	40
Applied Science	85	84	450
Commerce	87	84	180
Nursing	78	72	75
Occupation Therapy	86	80	40
Physical Therapy	90.5	9	40

Smith welcomes frosh

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

The class of 1997 was welcomed to Queen's in an elegant convocation-style ceremony, Monday at the Jock Hartly Arena.

The 2,550 students arrived in semi-formal dress to organ music, and were greeted by Principal David Smith, Rector David Baar, and speaker Katherine Wynne-Edwards, a biology professor and Queen's National Scholar.

After an academic procession led by bagpipe players, Principal Smith spoke to the students in a speech reportedly very similar to last year's.

He praised their diversity and high marks, while warning them about "effortless superiority," saying: "If you are looking for elitism, let it be an elitism of scholarship and social responsibility."

Smith went on to give some advice to frosh. He stressed the importance of "rigorous standards of honesty," "respect for the equal dignity and rights of others," and "the free expression of ideas." Students were warned that Queen's "is not an oasis for incorrigible idleness and peripatetic party-

"It was not a simple process" where students were chosen "literally down the line [of entrance marks]," she explained, but one which featured an emphasis on extra-curricular involvement and effort.

McDonald said that acceptance to ConEd depended equally on academic average and the rating given to the applicant's personal information sheet, a document which outlines the student's non-academic performance history.

This evaluation process corresponds to the one used by the "consecutive program" (when students achieve a degree and then pursue Teacher's College), said McDonald, and is designed to get outgoing people "into the teaching profession who would be able to communicate with students."

McDonald noted that admission to the faculties of Music and Fine Art is also not completely mark-dependent, "as strengths in talent that the applicants need [in their field] is obviously heavily weighted."

McDonald was quick to add that no cut-off marks are etched in stone, as admission to Queen's is never a purely objective process.

"With every application the students send a personal information sheet" which details involvement in music, sports and community work, she said. "We are looking for well-rounded students."

As with cut-off marks, the male-female ratio remained fairly stable this year, with female students representing about 55 per cent of the '97 class.

A-1 CLOTHING STORE LTD.

Your Great Outdoor Store

358 KING ST. EAST
KINGSTON, ONT.
Tel.: 548-8732 K7L 3B6

A LOCAL FAMILY BUSINESS
FOR THE PAST 56 YEARS

A-1 BRANDS • A-1 SERVICE • A-1 PRICES • THAT'S A-1 CLOTHING!
CORNER OF KING AND PRINCESS DOWNTOWN

GERONIMO

Reg. to $120.00
A-1 CLOTHING
Downtown at
KING & PRINCESS

SALE PRICE $89⁹⁸
With this Coupon
RECEIVE $10.00
OFF THE SALE PRICE
(offer expires Fri., Sept. 24, 1993)

COOL POOL

POOL PUB • POOL PUB • POOL PUB • POOL PUB • POOL PUB

SHOT

Growth of Divis... 547-Real

Queen's mourns prof

BY JANE MUNDELL
The Queen's Journal

Queen's has lost one of its most respected and distinguished teachers, scholars and friends.

Dr. Catherine Brown, an associate professor in the department of history, died suddenly in her sleep on Aug. 17. She was 64.

Brown began teaching at Queen's in 1966. Although her area of specialty was medieval history, she started making her mark as a teacher of introductory History 121.

As a result of her hard work and dedication, she was honoured with the Alumni Award for Excellence in Teaching in 1983. She also won an Arts and Science Award.

Brown earned her Ph.D. while teaching at Queen's. In 1987, a greatly expanded version of her thesis was published by the Cambridge University Press. The work, Pastor and Lady and the Theology of Jean Gerson is a study of one of the most prominent medieval figures and is renowned for its excellence.

Instead of writing a new book, Brown put all of her energy into preparing a new course, European Thought and Culture in the Later Middle Ages, which she began teaching two years ago.

"She was a very conscientious and meticulous worker. She did everything thoroughly [and] exhausted herself in the process of preparing it," said Professor James Stayer, a colleague and close friend.

The department has been "stunned by losing her," Stayer said. "She won't be replaceable."

Brown also held a major administrative role in the department over the past seven years. She was the Chair of Undergraduate Studies until 1992 and was Deputy Chair of the Department at her death. She has also acted as Secretary of Faculty Board and served on a number of committees within the faculty.

"She put herself 100 per cent into a combination of teaching and academic writing and administration," said Stayer.

Tamara Howarth, a former History 121 student, expressed great sadness when told about Brown's death. She described her as "a wonderful woman."

"I was glad that I had her as a teacher. I wish others had had the chance," she said. "I used to drop by her office all the time."

Professor Robert Malcolmson, head of the history department, said that Brown was "undoubtedly one of the most effective and challenging and respected teachers in the department."

"Students were always extremely keen to get into her classes," he said.

Katy Waugh, who has taken courses taught by Brown for three years, shared his sentiments.

"She was one of the most intelligent people I have ever met," she said. "I have so much respect for her. She was willing to talk to students and took an interest in everyone. She was a terrific lady."

Professor Stayer said that Brown had "a sense of humour about herself which was always a help with her students and came through with faculty members as well."

He also said that she took a great interest in new things. "In the last year or so she decided that understanding baseball was something worth doing," he said. The decision resulted in her attending a number of Blue Jays games.

"She was a very good friend," said Professor Stayer. She was "someone that all members of the department as well as students found easy to talk to. She spent long hours talking to students about their papers and advising them."

Stayer also made reference to her love of teaching. "When she got in the classroom, she forgot about everything else," he said.

Malcolmson described her as "a person who had high academic standards and was able to communicate her knowledge in a lucid, very humane manner which engaged students in an historical understanding in a very vibrant way."

Brown is survived by her husband Norman and by three adult children. Funeral services were held August 20 at St. Mary's Cathedral.

Safe space for women

BY LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

There are no men tonight in the Grey House at 51 Queen's Crescent.

In fact, every Monday evening from 6 pm until midnight, the Grey House will be a women's-only space.

The space is there as a result of the Women's Centre at Queen's University, a collectively-run support network and resource base for members of the Queen's and Kingston community.

According to Women's Centre treasurer Mary Syrett, women must be able to have a safe space. "Feminism in its very essence has always erupted in its purest and most energetic form in a women's-only space."

Syrett says that many university women do not see the need for an exclusive space for women. Many women, she said, seek feminism inclusively with men, to avoid antagonism.

Kim Paton, (Arts '95) says "I don't see the need for a women's-only space. I think that it causes a lot of division. I think that a lot of men feel offended by it."

Paton was half-way through her shift on the AMS walkhome service. "There is a lot of hype about men right now," she said, adding that generating fear is not productive.

Neil Livingston, a Science '94 student, said he understood the need for a place to feel safe but wonders what this precedent will lead to. "Their point is to have a place where women feel included," he said, "but I just have a hard time excluding anybody from anywhere."

A women's-only space, although controversial, is constitutional, Syrett says. The Canadian Constitution guarantees the right to organize exclusively to any socially disadvantaged group.

The Women's Centre receives money and support from members of both the Queen's and the Kingston community. A major victory was won for the centre last year when the student interest fee that the Centre shares with the Birli Control Centre, the Lesbian and Gay Association and Telephone Aid Line Kingston was made non-opt-outable.

This year, Syrett hopes to win a $1.00 student interest fee in the spring referendum. The Women's Centre currently receives only 10 per cent of the $2.25 fee collected for the four groups.

Part of the money goes toward the maintenance of a small Women's Centre library on the second floor. Books are signed out on the trust system and new borrowers are issued a card and shown the hiding place for the library key. Three out of four of the centre's library cards are currently held by men.

In one evening, six women used the space in the Grey House. "We don't need to justify the space by the number of people who use it," says Bobbi Spark, one of the women who collectively operate the Women's Centre. "The number of people who visit is not a reflection of need," she added.

"I feel the continued value of this centre lies in raising consciousness." A women's space, Syrett says, is only part of the solution.

"Centres don't make the patriarchy go away."

Summer in review

summer employment. Peter Harris, one of the students attempting to recuperate the lost salary through the labour board, said the group is still awaiting news from the board.

On June 19th, over 100 people took to the streets of Kingston to celebrate Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Pride Day. Members of the group carried placards with slogans such as "Out Proud and Fighting" and "Snash Homophobia."

Rally co-organizer Julia Lipinka said that "she had hoped for more people" but said that "there were more people than last year." The crowd was encouraged by Mayor Helen Cooper from the City Hall steps, as she declared June 19, 1993 Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Pride Day in the City of Kingston.

The social contract came to Queen's in June, as the Queen's Journal reported for the first time that a $100 student fee hike could be necessary to help compensate for transfer payment cuts to universities from the Ontario government. AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pimohamed said she opposed the fees, calling them "back door tuition fee increases."

According to Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser, government cuts to universities could result in a loss of "a minimum of $9.2 million" in funding for Queen's, which amounts to eight-and-a-half per cent of the university's operating budget for 1993-94.

Queen's University Staff Association President Mark Publicover criticized the move in a letter to Principal David Smith, which was later printed in the Whig-Standard. In the letter, Publicover asked why the practice of accommodating spouses was not "offered consistently," and why the position given to Clark was not offered to other members of the university community first.

In a subsequent interview with The Journal, Publicover questioned whether Turpin was worth the added expense of providing a position for his spouse. Publicover said that Turpin "doesn't have the administrative background" to be dean of the largest faculty on campus.

A letter of response from Principal Smith was also printed in the Whig-Standard. Smith said it is "not unusual to make provision for spouses when trying to attract high profile academics from outside Queen's."

Smith also defended the hiring of Turpin in an interview with The Journal, calling the new dean an "outstanding teacher" and an "excellent researcher."

Fraser explained that "students should consider, as part of the contribution towards meeting this problem, a tuition fee increase that would be special and in addition to [the permitted annual] 7% increase."

In an interview with the Queen's Journal, Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Senator Andrea Whiting expressed her concern that the fees would limit the accessibility of university for many students.

Queen's students can thank the AMS for the fact that the hikes aren't more substantial—originally the ancillary fees were slated to be as high as $50 per full course, but the compromise figure negotiated by the AMS with administration amounts to $10 per half course.

The implementation of the new levy went before the Board of Trustees in July.

May

Not everybody on campus was pleased when it was learned that Laurene Clark, the spouse of new Arts and Science Dean David Turpin, was given a job as a consultant for the university. The appointment was part of the deal which brought her husband to Queen's earlier this year.

Queen's University Staff Association President Mark Publicover criticized the move in a letter to Principal David Smith, which was later printed in the Whig-Standard. In the letter, Publicover asked why the practice of accommodating spouses was not "offered consistently," and why the position given to Clark was not offered to other members of the university community first.

In a subsequent interview with The Journal, Publicover questioned whether Turpin was worth the added expense of providing a position for his spouse. Publicover said that Turpin "doesn't have the administrative background" to be dean of the largest faculty on campus.

A letter of response from Principal Smith was also printed in the Whig-Standard. Smith said it is "not unusual to make provision for spouses when trying to attract high profile academics from outside Queen's."

Smith also defended the hiring of Turpin in an interview with The Journal, calling the new dean an "outstanding teacher" and an "excellent researcher."

About 100 people marched on City Hall Saturday May 15 as a call for the United Nations to take action to end the strife in Bosnia-Herzegovina. The march was organized by the Islamic Society of Kingston, in conjunction with the Queen's University Muslim Students Association.

Queen's lost a great professor and Canada a great poet and novelist when the English Department's Tom Marshall died of a heart attack on April 28. He was 55. A memorial service was held May 7 at which numerous poets and friends read selections from Marshall's poetry and prose, as well as some of their own.

English Department Head George Logan described Marshall as "an integral part of Canadian literature."

June

Fifty-seven Queen's students found themselves out of work at the beginning of June when INQ, the Independent News of Queen's, stopped its presses. Production of the fledgling newspaper was halted when it became apparent that the publisher of the paper, the Megas Corporation, was not financially legitimate.

The president of the Megas Corporation, John Thomas Dillman, was arrested in early June and charged with defrauding the Canadian Cmcrc Society of more than $45,000. According to Ontario Provincial Police Detective Sergeant Dave McDougall, Dillman was released on bail to his mother's residence in Nova Scotia, and awaits trial in October.

The incident left the Queen's students unpaid for their work in the month of May, and scrambling to find new

July

On July 21st, a female student was physically assaulted on campus when a male attacker pushed her back into the staff of the second floor women's washroom in Douglas Library. Howard Pearce, director of security and parking for Queen's Security, said that the woman "hit her head against the wall, sustaining a minor injury to the back of her head," and added that Queen's Security had managed "to get a good description of the assailant."

Queen's security responded to the call from Douglas at 1:20 p.m., and the investigation was subsequently turned over to the Kingston City Police when the victim requested that the Kingston authorities be called in.

The Queen's community was alerted to the incident when Tom Williams, vice-principal (operations and university relations) circulated a memo throughout campus later that day. In the letter, Williams said that "it is imperative that members of the Queen's community know about such attacks quickly so that they may take appropriate personal safety measures."

Pearce said that security at Douglas Library would be boosted temporarily in the wake of the incident.

An ad hoc group of about 50 protesters marched on Princess Street to oppose the sale of Nazi paraphernalia and memorabilia at local army surplus stores. The group, chanting "no profit for racism" and "no profit for hatred," picketed Army Surplus and Dundee Military Surplus. Group member Brad Waugh said that they particularly objected to the sale of newly produced swastika flags which he said had no historical value.

In response to the protest, Gil Fletcher, a co-owner of the Army Surplus store, said that the store had been unfairly chosen as a rallying point. He agreed with the group's non-violence stance, saying that "symbols aren't violent, people are." Fletcher added that he had taken ten flags out of his store display in response to four customer complaints.

The Queen's University Engineering Solar Team, or Sunquest, successfully completed the 1000-mile Sunrayce 93 Dallas to Minneapolis race, finishing a respectable 14th out of 34 competitors.

T.J. Parass, a crew member for the Sunquest team, said that the Queen's contingent had little chance against American schools with operating budgets which greatly exceeded the $250,000 Canadian budget of the Sunquest team. Eventual race-winner Michigan ran on an operating budget of $1.4 million American.

Fiscal restraints aside, Parass said that the team's most noteworthy accomplishment was achieved off the racetrack. "We gave a lot of people a lot of knowledge about solar energy," said Parass, referring to the presentations that the Sunquest team made to local public schools to promote the alternative energy source.

"If our aim was to educate people about solar energy and promote science and technology, we accomplished our goal," he said.

Parass said that the Sunquest team is now setting its sights on the 1995 Australian World Solar Car Challenge.

On July 20, Dave Cooke, the Minister of Education and Training, announced that jobs Ontario Capital will invest $24 million to a BioSciences Complex here at Queen's University.

On the same day, the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade announced a $1.5 million grant to Queen's for the development of a Technology Transfer Centre, which will be located inside the BioSciences Complex.

The 53,000 square foot complex, which will cost $50 million in all, will be used to combine the research talents from a variety of fields including biology, geography, geology and chemistry.

Welcome Back!

- * Student Class Fares
- * Budget Fares
- * Custom Long Haul Fares
- * Rail passes
- * Hostel Cards
- * ISIC cards

Now at 2 locations!

- * Sun Groups
- * Ski Groups
- * City Escapes
- * Travel Books
- * Travel Insurance
- ... and more!

For personal and professional service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

General Travel
86 Princess
549-3553

Long Haul/Group Travel
15 Montreal
549-3561

Greasepole dries up

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

The long, wet, slippery ascent of the muddy greasepole will be totally dry this year, according to the director of Queen's Security and Parking, Howard Pearce.

In an interview with The Journal, Pearce said that Queen's security will "enforce liquor [bans] to the 'nth' degree," and added that "those who persist in drinking will either have their alcohol confiscated or will be asked to leave the grounds, depending on their level of cooperation."

U-Haul trailers, which have traditionally been the mode of transportation to the greasepole site for upper-year students, will also be absent from this year's festivities.

"It is illegal to transport people in the back of a truck," said Pearce, who explained that the practice creates "tremendous liability implications for the university."

Pearce said that the measures are being enforced in order to prevent a repeat of last year's greasepole debacle, which saw "the number of violations exceeded by the number of security people [present to deal with them]."

"Some pretty ugly things happened there last year," commented

Pearce. "Certain occurrences brought things to the boiling level ... and our tolerance burst."

In the wake of those problems Pearce made numerous recommendations to the Senate Orientation Review Board (SORB) covering such concerns as alcohol abuse, the use of U-Haul trailers, and emergency measures.

Queen's security and SORB then met with the Orientation and Free committees during the summer and worked out a plan for the event which, according to Free Committee member Duncan Parker, is "more organized and puts more attention into safety."

Pearce echoed Parker's assurance that safety measures are a priority at the event, saying that Queen's first aid will be on hand to treat the numerous minor injuries which are usually sustained by greasepole participants.

In addition, Pearce said that this year, should the ambulance leave the site to take an injured party to the hospital, "the event will be suspended during the period of time when the ambulance is absent." Only upon its return will the event resume.

Parker said that "EngSoc was hoping to have U-Hauls involved," but agreed in the end to "leave them out."

He said that the improvements give him "complete confidence that the day will be perfect."

Pearce said future greasepoles depend on the smooth running of tomorrow's instalment of the age-old Engineering tradition. "If there are problems this year it puts the event in jeopardy."

"The onus is on everybody" to ensure the success of the event, Pearce said, listing organizers, participants, security and Engsoc alike.

Pearce added that this year "absolutely no vehicles will be allowed into the site who haven't received prior authorization." He said that spectators must park at least two kilometres away, on the shoulder of country road #4.

Engineering frosh will mount the grease pole Saturday morning.

AMS denounces 50 percent tuition-hike

The Queen's Journal

Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips is not impressed by the Council of Ontario Universities proposal to hike tuition fees 50 per cent by 1995.

"Shifting the burden on to students is no way to improve the quality of education," Philips said.

Under the proposal, full-time undergraduate students in Ontario could pay as much as $3,030 in tuition fees.

Philips said that any plan to up tuition is unacceptable without major student aid reform.

The Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA), of which Queen's is a member, also maintains that any tuition increase must be accompanied by an increase in money for student assistance to preserve accessibility, as well as matched with more support from both the public and private sectors.

Philips agrees. "There are lots of ways to raise revenue," she said, citing as an example more tax incentives to business for donations.

The council's proposal includes a provision to create a student loan scheme that would tie graduates' repayment rates to their incomes.

Philips said she was in favour of a centralised income contingency student loan plan, but she maintained that any such plan must be in place before any substantial tuition increase goes into effect.

Philips is also worried that student aid will increasingly take the form of local bursaries, which students would only be able to apply once they had been admitted to university.

"We think student aid fundamentally has to come first," said Philips.

Break-ins almost double during frosh week

frosh week

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

The return of Queen's students to the ghetto brought a surge in house break-ins this week.

Some, such as Michaela Williams, a fourth-year psychology student, had property stolen. She had CDs stolen Sept. 4th. The thieves climbed a fire escape, broke a window, then unlocked the window to enter the house.

Williams thinks that the thieves left quickly, perhaps after realizing that a housemate was sleeping in the house, since they left her speakers detached but not missing. Sgt. Bob Napier told The Journal that while he did not have exact numbers for the ghetto area, the city reported 37 break-ins in the first eight days of September. This is twice the normal average of 20 break-ins a week.

The incidents typically occur when students are not at home, such as Christmas and Reading Week, and when they are the least settled, such as the beginning and end of term.

Mika Yamamoto, a fourth-year commerce student, was such a victim. Her house was broken into on the last day of exams. Worse, it occurred the day before she was leaving to Germany on an exchange program.

The thieves took a stereo, phone, answering machine, CDs and cash, while mysteriously leaving two Walkmans and jewelry in plain view.

Yamamoto has changed all her locks, added motion sensors, and put up better lighting since the break-in.

She offered advice to students: "Always keep your door locked—a lot of people keep their doors open in the ghetto and laugh about it, and people just walk into houses."

Sgt. Bill Doxtator stressed this same point in an interview with The Journal: "You'll find that a large majority of the students won't lock their door."

Although these cases are treated the same as houses where the door is locked, they are frustrating to the police because they are so easily prevented.

"It's just common sense," said Doxtator. "We'd all like to live in a world where everybody's good, but we are subject to crime."

The ghetto is a high traffic area, with many more people coming and going than a typical neighbourhood, Doxtator explained. In addition, house crawls and open parties often give criminals the chance to "case a house."

Doxtator suggested using "decent, dead-bolt locks," marking equipment for identification, and good lighting around doors and large windows. These steps, he said, would make a great difference in preventing burglaries.

Furthermore, students should not hesitate to report to police any suspicious behaviour or stalking.

New National Party comes to Queen's

BY LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

Richard Kicksee thinks the National Party's zero-tuition policy will appeal to students hit by burgeoning education costs, and attract them to the newest political club at Queen's University.

Under the zero tuition proposal, students would pay nothing for their university education until graduation, when income-based repayment begins. It is one of the ideas that Kicksee, a graduate student in history, hopes will draw students to the National Party at Queen's, which he is forming.

The National Party is not the first to propose deferring tuition payment until after graduation. The Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA), of which Queen's is a member, supports an income-based loan repayment program which is similar to the zero-tuition policy of the National Party.

Tuition reform will ensure equal access to education and the payment schedule will accommodate student financial realities, Kicksee said. Kicksee declined to comment on details of the plan which he said was still under development.

The fledgling National Party, formed by Edmonton publisher-turned-politician Mel Hurtig has attracted more than 5000 members across Canada. According to Kicksee at least 150 candidates will run in the next federal election.

The National Party at Queen's will not be a youth wing. Kicksee explained that the National Party wants to include the average Canadian in politics, and wants to include students as full members of the party.

More student appeal, Kicksee said, lies in the fact that education is a high priority for the National Party. He accused the Conservative government of failing to focus on education. "It is a myth that there is no money. If the government changes its priorities, there will be more money for education and social programs," he said.

Kicksee said that the party wants to see power wrested from the hands of powerful lobbyists and returned to the people. The present tax system, he said, has given societal advantage to large corporations.

Ironically, the National Party, which does not accept corporate donations, must rely on ratification by the Alma Mater Society, a corporation, before it can officially become a club at Queen's.

To encourage student participation in the National Party at Queen's and the political process, Kicksee said that he plans to hold open meetings where students could debate issues important to them and the future of the country.

The party is very interested in listening to new ideas, he said. "We are not a doctrinaire party, we will take good ideas from anywhere."

Kicksee is optimistic about the National Party's chances in the upcoming election and wants to see a campaign of substance, not image. "We hope to run an educational campaign," he said. "We are going to ask tough questions."

"We're running to win."

CITY OF KINGSTON NOTICE

DISPOSAL OF LARGE ARTICLES

Large articles (i.e., furniture, appliances, etc.) can be disposed of AT NO CHARGE at the Laidlaw Transfer Station, 398 Dalton Avenue for the dates and times shown below:

Sept. 2 - Sept. 23, 1993 Monday - Friday 8:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m. Saturday 8:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

Residents may be requested to provide proof of residency (i.e., driver's license).

Please note, however, that disposal fees will continue to be charged for tires or building materials.

There will be a white goods collection (i.e., stoves, fridges, etc.) and a yard waste collection in the fall after Thanksgiving. Collection schedules will be advertised.

As a reminder, yard wastes and hazardous wastes may be dropped off without charge at the K.A.R.C. facility, 70 Lappan's Lane at the times indicated below:

YARD WASTES (leaves, brush, etc.) Monday - Friday 8:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Saturday 8:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.

HAZARDOUS WASTES (batteries, paint, oil, propane cylinders, etc.) Thursday 9:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m. Second Saturday of each month

Please note that the Transfer Station and K.A.R.C. facility will be closed Monday, September 6, 1993.

The City of Kingston supports and encourages the concept of REUSE. Prior to disposal, please check with your family, friends or Social Service Agencies as to whether your unwanted household items may be of use to them.

G. de Lugt, P. Eng.
Acting Commissioner of Works

news wants U

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced Electrologists
Recommended by Physicians
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation Call 542-5595

Everyone needs a PAAL.
Stay protected with the PAAL, Quorum's Personal Attack Alarm that blasts 109dB (min) when you simply pull the pin. Choose either the standard or sports model. Carry it to school, the mall, the park, wherever you go. PAAL lets out a cry for help whenever you need it. And only Quorum gives you that kind of technology and security.
Quorum Scoring Life
PAUL COX
384-8334

POSITIONS AVAILABLE AT THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL BUSINESS MANAGER:

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE JOURNAL HOUSE, 272 EARL STREET, AND ARE DUE SEPTEMBER 17 AT 5:30 PM.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is responsible for the long-term, strategic planning and financial operations of the Journal and is accountable to the AMS.

ONE PROFESSOR:

OR OTHER QUALIFIED NON-STUDENT WITH A KNOWLEDGE OF QUEEN'S AND THE NATURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL; THIS SHALL NORMALLY BE A TWO-YEAR TERM.

ONE STUDENT:

INDIVIDUAL SHOULD PREFERABLY NOT HAVE ANY AFFILIATION WITH AMS SERVICES, CLUBS, COUNCILS, OR COMMITTEES.

WELCOME BACK !!

UPCOMING EVENTS:

EVERY THURS. FRI. SAT.

SUPER LITE NITE
TIL 10 PM!

"If your not sure what this means, come down and find out!!!"

TUES, SEPT. 14th

A LIVE TRIBUTE TO PEARL JAM
BY EVEN FLOW

GREAT DEALS ON SMOKERS!! CALL 547-5553

Stages nightclub 390 Princess Street

"THE #1 CAMPUS NIGHT CLUB"

Come write for News. We won't bite. Honest.

Frosh Week

Continued from page one

in potato sacks, and learning the Oil Thigh. Frosh group leaders pulled first-years blindfolded and holding hands through campus.

Chants and songs were common, though mostly without swearing. As Chief Boss Chris Farkas said, students still learn chants with swearing. "People pick them up. There are upper-years who will gladly teach them."

Farkas said the week has been "just great," as Commerce bosses and frosh go on house crawls, register, and party in this year's "grunge" theme.

Head Gael Whiting also found the first few days "fantastic," saying that Arts and Science events have been running "to a T." We've got an amazing group of people."

Whiting strongly supports the revamped version of the week. "They're positive changes, and I think they're necessary as well. This is the way society's moving today."

Frosh Week events will wrap up tomorrow, giving students one day to recover and prepare for classes.

Vote Education

Continued from page one

Pirmohamed said the campaign was formed as an alternative to the Canadian Federation of Students campaign. "We felt the CFS campaign would not represent the interests of all students," said Pirmohamed. Almost all of the participating schools are, like Queen's, not members of CFS.

The Vote Education campaign will "focus on the economic impact that higher education has on the Ontario and Canadian economies," said Pirmohamed.

She said that this "positive economic message will serve to link education to the central issue of the election."

The coalition of student governments behind the campaign represents 800,000 students nationwide, and include the University of Saskatchewan, the University of British Columbia and the University of Calgary, along with the member schools of the Ontario University Students Alliance (OUSA).

OUSA is comprised of Queen's, the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario, Brock University and Wilfrid Laurier University.

Pirmohamed said the coalition is seeking volunteers of all political stripes, and is in need of financial contributions as well.

She also said that the coalition hopes that faculty, staff, alumni, and people dealing with other levels of education, such as secondary-school teachers, will become involved.

International students may lose OHIP coverage

BY LAURIE NORTH
The Queen's Journal

Thousands of international university students across Ontario may be denied health care coverage if a proposal to end the benefit is passed in the Legislature.

"Cutting the coverage would place a financial strain on many overseas students who are already struggling to make ends meet," wrote John Spicer, an international graduate student and president of Queen's International Students' Society, in a letter to Gary Wilson, MPP for Kingston and the Islands.

Spicer explained that "an extra $500 per annum, especially when we are already feeling the squeeze from the federal government, who have increased the cost of student and employment visas so that they now cost $100 each" would increase the difficulties of studying in Canada.

For students with families, the additional cost of health insurance could have "particularly serious implications," David Lurie, an analyst for the Ontario Ministry of Health, said. Students would have to pay income tax and GST, but have little means to increase their income, he said.

Furthermore, Lurie explained that working foreign students contribute "directly to OHIP through the provincial sales tax," as well as through the payroll tax for Queen's employees.

If the proposal is implemented, Spicer suggested that international students be exempt from these taxes.

However, Lurie explained that the provincial sales tax "does not directly fund OHIP but instead covers a wide range of public services." In an attempt to reduce the Ontario deficit, Lurie said that each ministry was required to assess their financial situation and determine any areas which could be modified. For this purpose, they examined the Canada Health Act.

Under this act, Lurie explained, temporary residents and refugee claimants are not necessarily legislated to receive OHIP eligibility.

Considering the average cost per individual is $1,700 per student, and with approximately 20,000 students across the province, Lurie noted the financial burden of supporting international students, while at the same time covering Canadian residents who study abroad for four year period.

"In the majority of provinces," Lurie said, "foreign students are not covered under provincial health plans." The ministry would ideally take steps to standardize health coverage from province to province.

Alternatively, "there are affordable health insurers who provide coverage for an approximately $500/individual or $1100/family per annum," explained Lurie.

In addition to the potential financial tensions, Spicer noted that, "At Queen's all students are required to have proof of health insurance before they can register." Some students may encounter delays due to difficulties in transferring funds from their home.

Lurie stressed that the proposal has not been passed and if accepted, affected individuals will have three months to appeal. The QISS General Assembly Meeting will be held on Sept. 22. Students interested in discussing this issue are welcome to attend.

Supermarkets—paying for packaging

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

"Would you like a bag with that?"

The issue of over-packaging in supermarkets has many environmentalists questioning just how necessary some commercial packaging really is.

Michael Crummey, co-ordinator of Kingston's branch of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG), said the source of supermarket packaging is "mixed."

"Some is by producers, and some is by the supermarket," Crummey said.

The main purpose is to "get people to buy more than they need, keep the displays nice and reduce the amount of [work] hours."

A consumer booklet distributed by OPIRG called "The Supermarket Tour," describes how the use of cellophane, cardboard and plastic-foam packaging for fruits and vegetables "serves no purpose for consumers." Instead, this packaging "prevents picking over [selecting the best quality item]...and encourages larger purchases."

Some consumers are wary of the packaging of fresh foods. Doug Andrews (Artsci '96) said he avoids pre-packaged vegetables "because I don't know what's in there."

Kirsten Bain (Artsci '96) said that she also dislikes the lack of control: "I like picking my own [produce]. You can decide what you want, and you may only want a little."

Crummey agrees. "If [the supermarkets] allow people to pick through, they will buy less and leave behind the junky stuff." Joanne Badida (Commerce '96) is troubled by the environmental impact of supermarket over-packaging.

"I can't justify the packaging [of produce] when it is so bad for the environment," she said. Badida added that while she can always reuse a bag, the foam and wrapping is merely waste.

Andrews called some of the packaging "disappointing," noting that some of the produce "travels the world and then it is packaged here."

"You don't eat the outside of a coconut," Andrews said, and yet coconuts were wrapped in plastic at the A&P store at Princess and Barrie Streets.

A&P store manager Randy Allen said he doesn't have a great deal of control over the packaging of fruits and vegetables. "It comes to us pre-packaged from head office," Allen said, adding that only the fresh meat is packaged in the store.

A spokesperson from A&P's head office could not be reached for comment.

Badida isn't worried about loose vegetables being handled by other consumers and does not see this as a justification of packaging. "You can always wash vegetables," OPIRG questions that assumption however.

It seems that supermarket packaging also exists in an invisible form. OPIRG asserts that fresh foods such as apples, peppers and cucumbers are subjected to a cocktail of "post-harvest treatment."

These include fungicides, bactericides and waxes—agents that cannot be washed off. Wax is fat-soluble and thus "accumulates over time" in human tissue.

Although A&P is the most visible supermarket for the Queen's community, Crummey said that over-packaging is "serious" in all supermarkets.

OPIRG says packaging is responsible for 50 per cent of solid waste in land-fills. Kingston figures were not available, but Toronto is estimated to produce 4000-5000 tonnes of packaging waste per day, according to OPIRG.

Dave Coleman

A&P manager Allen said that "recyclable bags are all we use." They do not discourage the use of plastic carrying bags, but Allen said A&P uses "strong bags that can hold more groceries."

According to OPIRG sources, companies often use 10 per cent more plastic to maintain the strength of biodegradable bags.

Even if the plastic does degrade, it does not disappear. Instead it exists "as dust or small bits," says the Ontario Recycling Advisory Committee. This committee "fears that degradable plastic will slow down efforts to recycle plastic."

An added difficulty for concerned consumers is the lack of regulatory controls. "Biodegradable" and "photodegradable" have no legal meaning, thus any company may use these terms regardless of the validity.

Assault victim concerned about house security

Continued from page one

Kingston Police Sergeant Bob Napier described the assailant as six feet tall, 190 pounds, athletic build, unshaven, and wearing a blue lumberjack-type coat. This description was based on the victim's discussion with police, as there were no other witnesses.

News of the assault was distributed by the office of the Vice-Principal (Operations/University Relations) to residence dons and students, CFRC radio, The Journal, and to all departments, as well as offices such as the Dean of Women and the Chaplain.

Kathy Beers, assistant to the Vice-Principal (Operations/University Relations), said that new students must realize this is a city.

"Crime happens and sexual assaults happen... They shouldn't think they're in some protected area because they've arrived at Queen's," she added.

Her office is trying "to raise people's awareness" and to allow victims to "feel that they can come forward if it's happened to them."

Sergeant Napier told students to make sure their doors are locked and that entrances are well-lit.

"I'm not suggesting you turn your house into a fortress, but if you have your place secure, you're safer," he said.

Although Napier said "it is less likely that this could have happened had [the house] been locked," he added that it is "impossible to guarantee that anything won't happen 100 per cent."

The victim said that landlords should pay more attention to house security.

"Until something like this happens, landlords and people like that won't deal with things that need to be dealt with like porch lights.

"Our porch light - we bothered our landlord for ages. He was right over today, granted I'll give him that... [But] it took something like this to happen for him to get off his ass and get us a porch light... He left screens out of our door which is an open invitation," she said.

The Kingston Sexual Assault Crisis Centre offers counselling to victims of sexual assault, and has a confidential Crisis and Support line which is staffed 24 hours a day, at 544-6424.

BILLBOARD
John Deutsch University Centre
COMMUNITY BUILDING

THIS MONTH IN THE JDUC

- Mon, Sept 13 - Wed, Sept 15
ASUS Poster Sale Lower Ceilidh
- Mon, Sept 13 - Fri, Sept 17
Queen's Book Exchange, a non-profit service of the Queen's Christian Fellowship Wallace Hall
- Thu, Sept 16 - Fri, Sept 17
EngSoc Poster Sale Lower/Upper Ceilidh
- Mon, Sept 20 - Fri, Sept 24
AMS United Way Committee Plant Sale Lower Ceilidh
- Mon, Sept 27 - Fri, Oct 1
AMS Education Commission National Issues Awareness Week Lower Ceilidh
- Tue, Sept 28
AMS Academic Affairs Commission OSAP Awareness Day Lower Ceilidh
- Wed, Sept 29 - Thu, Sept 30
ASUS Carnival: Charities Awareness Lower Ceilidh
- Wed, Sept 29, 8:00 - 11:00pm
AMS Coffeehouse Lower Ceilidh
- Fri, Oct 1, 11:30am - 1:30pm
Campus Planning and Development, Public Meeting on the Campus Master Plan John Orr Room

REGULAR MEETINGS

- Sundays (beginning Sept 19), 7:30pm
Sunday Evening Worship with Canterbury Centre, Geneva Fellowship, Newman Centre and Queen's Christian Fellowship Wallace Hall
- Tuesdays (beginning Sept 14), 8:00pm
Internationalist Socialists Third Floor Common Room

STUDENT EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY!

Program Intern

The JDUC's Program Committee is looking for a creative, energetic student with excellent organizational skills to serve as a part-time program intern during the fall and winter terms.

The intern will assist in the planning, implementation, promotion and evaluation of the JDUC's educational and cultural programs for the Queen's community.

Job descriptions and application forms are available at the JDUC general office. Closing date for applications is Friday, September 17 at 4:30pm.

$$$$

FOR COMMUNITY BUILDING

The JDUC Program Committee's new Small Grants Fund supports student organizations or clubs and university departments or associations in holding community events in the JDUC.

A minimum of ten grants of up to $300 will be available in each of the fall and winter terms and a minimum of five during the spring/summer session.

Guidelines and application forms are available at the JDUC general office. Deadline for submission of applications for fall term events is Friday, October 1.

LOCKERS

Why carry your life's belongings around with you, when for ten bucks (plus another ten as a lock deposit) you can have a locker in the JDUC or along Mackintosh-Cory Student Street? Get one soon - they're going fast! Available through the general office.

Billboard is a monthly advertising feature highlighting community events in the JDUC. Items for the October Billboard must be submitted to the JDUC general office by Monday, September 20 at 4:30pm.

Ceud Mile Fáilte
(100,000 welcomes)
from
THE U.K. NIBBLER

Kingston's only Scottish Bake Shop

Come see our Scotch Meal Pies, Sausage Rolls, and Bridies at Ye Olde Tuck Shoppe.

Bring this coupon & save
30¢ off your leatime treats

30¢ off ANY SCOTCH MEAT PIE,
SAUSAGE ROLL, OR BRIDIE.

Valid from Sept. 10 - Sept 24 THE U.K. NIBBLER

STUDENTS

YOU HAVE UNTIL OCTOBER 1st, 1993 TO OPT OUT OF THE AMS / GREENSHIELD
HEALTH PLAN.

REMEMBER, PROOF OF AN EXTENDED
HEALTH PLAN IS REQUIRED TO PROCESS YOUR OPT-OUT FORM.

BETWEEN SEPT. 20th AND OCTOBER 1st
COME TO THE AMS OFFICE LOCATED IN THE LOWER LEVEL OF THE JOHN DEUTSCH UNIVERSITY CENTRE BETWEEN 9 am AND 2 pm.

CASUAL FASHION

... AT VERY LAID BACK PRICES!

EXCLUSIVE TO S&R!

FLANNEL BOXERS
BUTTON FLY - GREAT PLAIDS!

THE BEST PRICE AROUND!

SALE $6.99

QUEEN'S T-SHIRTS AND SWEATS

WITH PLAID 'QUEEN'S' LOGO AND GRAND HALL CREST

PLAID TRIM T-SHIRT $19.88

DOUBLE LAYER CREW NECK T-SHIRT $15.99

HOODED FLEECE TOP $29.88

EMBROIDERED QUEEN'S FLEECE OR KNIT BOXERS AND CAPS

QUEEN'S COLOURS EMBROIDERED ON ASH GREY OR BLACK CREW NECK FLEECE TOPS, BOXERS AND PEAKED CAPS.

CAP $10.99

FLEECE TOPS $19.88

KNIT SHORTS $14.88

FLEECE SHORTS $15.88

JEANS
JEANS
JEANS

WE HAVE YOUR FIT!

VISIT OUR FASHION WEARHOUSE

WE CARRY MEN'S AND LADIES' STYLES FROM LEVI'S, IKEDA, SANTANA, P.G.I. BROWNS, GASOLINE, POINT ZERO, AND MORE!

ALL DISCOUNT PRICED AT S&R!

SETTING A HOUSE

WAFFLE WEAVE TEA TOWELS 24" x 32" SALE 88¢

DISH CLOTHS 15" x 14" 3/100

SHEET SETS 50/50 POLY/COTTON ASSORTED PRINTS

TWIN REG. 16.99 DOUBLE REG. 21.99 QUEEN REG. 34.99 SALE $12.99 $19.99 $26.99

CHAIR PADS RUFFLED EDGE WITH TIES SALE $4.99

SHOWER CURTAINS SOLID COLOURS 72" x 72" MAGNETIC BOTTOMS REG. 3.49 SALE $2.99

SHOWER HOOKS ASSORTED COLOURS $1.59

COUCH AND CHAIR TROWS ASSORTED FABRICS AND SIZES $19.99 TO $59.99

THESE GREAT PRICES AND MORE FROM S&R'S LINENS DEPARTMENT!

LAUNDRY BAGS 100% COTTON $7.88

PILLOWS 17" x 23" 2/7.00

POLYESTER PILLOWS COTTON COVERS NON-ALLERGENIC 19" x 25" $5.88

SAVE ON ESSENTIALS AT S&R

HEALTH & BEAUTY AND GROCERY ITEMS FOR LESS!

PLUS...

DON'T MISS OUR DOLLAR SECTION.

YOU WON'T BELIEVE WHAT YOU CAN GET FOR A BUCK!

SALE PRICES IN EFFECT UNTIL SEPT. 16, 1993.

There's nothing like it!

27 PRINCESS STREET

RIGHT IN THE HEART OF DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

STORE HOURS WEEKDAYS 9:30 - 9:00 SATURDAY 9:30 - 6:00 SUNDAY 12:00 - 5:00

Queen's Frosh Week '93

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter
Managing Editor
Dave Pavao
News Editor
Jeff Gray
Production Manager
Colin Ho
Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse
Features Editor
Allison Masemann
Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis
Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland
Graphics Editors
Richard Dubois
Joey deVilla
Photography Editor
Marika Glickman
Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols
Backpage & Misc. Editors
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla
Assistant News Editors
Brock Marland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson
Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down
Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petrie
Ryan Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens
Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn
Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yarnell
Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Business Manager
Vacant
Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielsen
Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer
Sales Representatives
Chris Ritchie
Fiona Macaulay
House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of the Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Consents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 3,000

Contributors
Steve Cain, Dave Coleman, Dave Delcloc, Frank Dixon, Karen Hall, Justin McKellar, Jane Mundell, Laurie North, Lee Petrie, Sharon Troimuk

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

Tuition hike proposal endangers accessibility

If the Council of Ontario Universities has its way, undergraduate students can expect a 50 per cent tuition hike by 1995. First we saw the hundred dollar levy, and now we see another proposed fee increase to be shouldered by students. A dangerous trend is being set - propagated by university administrators, and supported by a government, who seem to be ignoring the fact that many students have trouble finding the money to get through the year.

Although it is obvious some students never worry about paying next month's rent, those students are the minority. The argument that university students are wealthy brats frivolously wasting their upper-class' parents' money may be true in a few instances, but it certainly doesn't hold true for the majority.

Raising tuition rates won't make these students more serious about school, as some suggest. Raising base fees will only endanger accessibility. Many self-supporting (if not self-sufficient) students will likely no longer be so under such a rate hike. This is especially true when one considers that the summer job situation has only worsened over the last few years, and holds no promises for the future.

The proposed hike is supposed to go hand in hand with a restructured loan program. We all agree that the loan system needs restructuring. A revamped loan system is needed to ensure that accessibility isn't threatened. And one of the only ways to do that is through gradual fee increases to accommodate for increased costs. This too, however, must be joined with job opportunity. Students will be more hesitant to borrow even on an assistance program if they don't feel confident that a job awaits them in the future.

Furthermore, loan defaults being the problem they are, a system that would encourage more loans may in fact be a short-term solution. Higher fees would likely mean more loans, and possibly saturation of the loan system.

The suggestion that tuition fees

The question at the heart of this problem is: is education a privilege or a right? Up until the end of high school, education is a right. And one of the tenets of that right is government control of curriculum and course requirements. That would not be acceptable at the university level. Although the days of the radical zero-tuition goal put forward by the Ontario Federation of Students have ford the extra initials after their names. Job requirements have exceeded what society is willing to pay for.

The degree has been devalued, but its cost has only risen. The mark requirements for entry rise every year limiting accessibility, and this is not necessarily a bad thing. But with tuition hikes as well, more and more people will be turned away from the university experience.

However this is solved will affect more than just the student trying to make the money to pay for school. A well-educated population has a higher standard of living. Why would anyone want to stand in the way of this?

Furthermore, a better educated population means a better position in the international scene. Canada will be more globally competitive if we are equipped with an educated population. Why would anyone stand in the way of that?

And, what ever happened to the liberating idea of education for education's sake? This would only apply to the very wealthy?

In the end, everything has to be paid for. But, how decisions are made about how our education is paid for should be an open and cooperative process. While it is likely that the Council put forth the proposal on the basis of "ask for more than what you expect to get," this approach is not conducive to cooperative and beneficial decision making. Solutions must be reached openly, with student input, and with long-term considerations. Otherwise, the solution will only be the creator of more financial nightmares.

for professional schools be hiked significantly holds the assumption that the graduates will make more money and be able to return that to the government. However, the fact remains that more and more young professionals are not finding work. Even more distressing, this suggestion would only propagate a class system that discourages those from lower-income backgrounds from seeking higher-income opportunities - because they wouldn't be able to afford to.

Since passed, zero-tuition would be ideal. The reality is, however, that the costs must be shared. Post-secondary education is not a right, but a privilege to those who can afford it. But today, post-secondary education is not only a privilege. It is virtually a necessity. While it used to be that a high-school diploma was sufficient and a bachelor degree significant, now a degree is often the minimum and graduate school significant. The job market demands more and more but many cannot af-an open and cooperative process. While it is likely that the Council put forth the proposal on the basis of "ask for more than what you expect to get," this approach is not conducive to cooperative and beneficial decision making. Solutions must be reached openly, with student input, and with long-term considerations. Otherwise, the solution will only be the creator of more financial nightmares.

THE BEAT GOES ON

Is there a generation gap? Many would suggest there is. But if you consider the experiences of frosh 50 years ago, Queen's orientation week is the bridge between 1943 and 1993.

With orientation week drawing to a close, the Class of '97 may feel slightly disoriented. It has been told what to do and where to go by staff, administrators and upper years too often to count. They have had to adjust to dietary changes, and altered sleeping patterns. They have met hundreds of people since first arriving and they have been told hundreds of stories - some true, some not.

In 1943, the frosh were also subject to various deprivations and excesses, although perhaps not to the same degree. Almost for certain, by the end of the first week their heads were also spinning.

Although the various forms of initiation have fluctuated over the decades, most frosh will experience some form of humiliation by weeks end.

Today, as in 1943, most of the initiation activities are so called "good natured fun," and an attempt to submerge each new student into their new surroundings. Today, as in 1943, some of the activities go beyond the threshold of mutual entertainment and step into the realm of intimidation. Today, as in 1943, this is unacceptable. We must only hope that both then and now, the memory of Frosh Week is a fond one.

Fortunately today, unlike 1943, awareness of issues such as sexism, racism, and homophobia removes at least some of the risk of negative experiences at Queen's. In this sense, a kinder, gentler Frosh week clearly benefits the entire university atmosphere.

The similarities between the frosh of the present and of the past go further than learning the same songs and cheers and belting them out repeatedly at the first football game.

Come Monday morning, first year students will learn of their academic expectations, their first as-ignment dates and the level of competition. No doubt most will be up for the challenge, despite initial apprehension. However, truth be told, many will be disappointed with the opinions and marks offered by instructors.

In 1943, then principle Dr. R.C. Wallace told incoming students that, following governmental policy, "all incompetent students must be ruthlessly weeded out." Wallace justified this position by suggesting that all able-bodied individuals were needed for the war effort.

That significant pressure to either perform academically or be sent off to war may seem unique to times of world-wide conflict, but the connection may be closer than some would admit.

The Class of '97 faces the incredible challenge of successfully completing their post-secondary educational careers - or be tossed out into the tumultuous "real world." Definitely not a comforting thought.

Then, as a consequence of the Second World War, no frosh in 1943 could be guaranteed more than one year at the University. Now, as a consequence of the Ontario government's war on the recession, students can no longer be guaranteed the ability to afford increasing tuition fees or secure needed financial assistance.

Despite the somewhat gloomy future facing first year students then and now, the ability of Queen's students to overcome these challenges has been proven repeatedly over the years.

Human nature being what it is, all can feel confident that a Queen's student then is a Queen's student now. A frosh in 1943 shares many of the same memories of university as will a frosh in 1997. As will those from all the years between and beyond.

The Queen's Journal welcomes the Class of '97 to the Queen's community of Kingston and worldwide.

Opinions

"Sleep after frosh week!"
ASUS Orientation Exec

talking heads

"What are you looking forward to this year at Queen's?"

"Passing first year" Commerce '97
Frosh Syndicate 17

"'96 frosh" The Grease Pole

"Graduating" Kai reen Patton and Evan Castel
Phys Ed '94 and LifeSci '94

"Having a good time with all my frosh" Parey Burgess

"Another Vanier Cup" Queen's Band

Opinion? Everyone Has One

Well, it's September and that means that the population of Kingston will surge yet again as students, determined to study more diligently this year, prepare for a new academic year. September also means that the Journal House will become active with the creative and intellectual thought of new and returning staff—all of whom are sure to arrive with inspirations for their respective sections. This is where I come into the picture... as the new Opinions Page Editor I am plenty inspired and would like to share some of my ideas with you.

The Opinions section is your section. The population at Queen's University is diverse and it is important that this diversity is represented on the pages of the university's largest paper. So let everyone know you're out there—express your ideas and your perspective. I would like to see the Opinions Page provide a voice for as many perspectives as possible.

Do you have any ideas for the Opinions Page? Is there anything special that you want to see? Let me know; the section should reflect your interests. Don't forget to include a phone number so that I can contact you if I have any questions!

The Opinions Page is the most accessible section of the paper. Any student can contribute—no experience required. However, stylized prose or emotive sonnets are preferred (only joking). Actually, I take all letters to the editor very seriously and if I can read it I will seriously consider printing it. But, The Queen's Journal cannot print all the letters it receives. Any defamatory or libelous comments cannot be printed, but if there is any redeeming value in the letter, it may be edited, with the author's consent, to exclude the defamatory remarks.

Any ideas that are relevant to students are relevant to us at The Journal. Ideas can be expressed in a variety of ways. If you do not feel comfortable expressing your ideas in the form of a letter, I encourage you to submit your ideas in some other form. I would like to begin a new section on the Opinions Page where expressions that are not in the form of a letter can be published. Let me know that you are interested in seeing this kind of section—make a submission!

Tara Hillis—Opinions Editor

Sick of Silence? Tired of Talking?

Why not write a letter to the editor at The Queen's Journal? Letters can be submitted on the first floor of the Journal House at 272 Earl Street, or can be sent by mail. Letters should be submitted noon two days prior to the date of publication of the issue in which you would like the letter to appear. The Queen's Journal is published on Tuesdays and Fridays during the regular academic year (except, of course, during exams). Please include a phone number where you can be reached. Let us know that your out there—express your opinion!

To Richard Dubois, from all of us at The Journal.

THINKING OF YOU ...

Hey man... Sure we'd wish Richard was here!
Yeah, but this'll keep him occupied until he returns!
AND WISHING YOU ALL THE BEST!

Sarah MacWhirter
Lori Thorlakson
Rob Furse
Tara Hillis
Joey deVilla
Megan Nichols
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla
Brock Marland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson
Adrienne Down
Ian Petrie
Ryan Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens
Jen Flynn
Derek Yarnell
Tim Mitchell

And all the rest of us not here at this hour!

The following column has been submitted by Basil Girgrah. The views expressed here may not necessarily reflect those of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board.

2960 Students In The Closet

Someone once asked me, "Why are there so few gay men at Queen's?" Well, let me tell you, I think about that question all the time. I don't think that there are any less gay men at Queen's than in the greater community (10%), but that gays, lesbians and bisexuals are much more afraid to be out in this environment.

I know nearly 30 men and about 10 women who are out at Queen's. I don't claim to know all queers at Queen's, but because of my political activism, I have met most of the out queers on this campus. By "out", I mean that they admit their sexuality (gay, lesbian, bisexual or even heterosexual) to all schoolmates, housemates, professors, etc. Not all of these people are out to their parents or family, however. I know an additional few who are not out to everyone at Queen's, but who are out within the lesbian, gay and bisexual community. Now, statistically speaking, at a university the size of Queen's (approximately 15000+) at least 1500 are gay or lesbian, with an additional 1500+ being bisexual. This means that 2960 (remember this number, it's very important) students who are gay, lesbian or bisexual are in the closet (either by choice or by force). Many of these people are active in other cities, but not in Kingston. You, like many (other) queers, may ask yourself, "Why is that?"

On many occasions, I have been in a gay bar in another city (Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver) and have seen men, presumably gay or bisexual, who were wearing a Queen's baseball cap, sweatshirt or even leather jacket. This would indicate that they were at the time or had once been a student here. I always wondered why these people felt comfortable enough to go out in another city, but not in Kingston. I have in the past 3 years of being out here discovered the answer. It's a case of anonymity.

Kingston is a very small city. Everyone tends to know everyone else's business. It's not as easy to be inconspicuous or anonymous here as it is in say Toronto or Montreal. Students at Queen's are a very tight knit group; students live very close to each other, so everyone seems to see everyone else all the time. This does not allow for much privacy, therefore it is very difficult for a person to go to the gay bare without being noticed. To top things all off, Queen's and many of its students seem to be very closed minded. Trying to get the university administration and student to accept new ideas is like pulling teeth. It's no wonder that so many people don't feel very comfortable at Queen's.

For queers at this university, life can be very lonely and depressing. There is only one bar in town that caters to lesbians, gays and bisexuals. There are a couple of restaurants and cafes that are queer-positive. There is one sports organization that offers an alternative to women. There's only a small paper dealing specifically with queer issues. Fortunately, the Princess Court Cinema shows the occasional film with gay or lesbian themes. Beyond that, there's very little for gays, lesbians and bi's to do in Kingston. Thankfully, the Lesbian and Gay Association exists and provides several services to the queer community in town. There is a lending library of over 600 fiction and non-fiction books (available to everyone), a weekly informal drop-in, a Speakers' Bureau and a phone line that is staffed 7 to 9pm Monday to Friday. Now, remember that number I said would be important, well here's where it comes in. For more information about what to do in town for gays, lesbians and bisexuals, call 545-2960.

Now some people call me Miss Landers so I'll give y'all some advice. For people out there who think (or know) that they are gay, lesbian or bisexual, give the phone line a call to chat or to find out information. The drop-ins are very informal and much more comfortable than you think. When I first came out, I was very frightened of walking into the Grey House but found that once I stepped in, I was very comfortable and people were very welcoming. I was worried about confidentiality but everyone that I met was very discrete when I saw them in the streets. And remember, don't let the homophobes get you down, cuz there's lots of us queers here. To the heterosexual in the audience, at least one of your friends is queer and is not telling you because he/she doesn't trust you with that information. Do something to win that person's trust and you may be surprised at who comes waltzing (or at least vogueing) out of their closet.

Basil Girgrah is just another queer at large.

SEPTEMBER 11

QEA
QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

& OP
Obvious Child Productions

PRESENT

THE LOWEST of the LOW SLOAN DIG CIRCUS THRUSH HERMIT

BARTLETT GYM, DOORS OPEN AT 8:00pm.
$2 COVER - TO CHARITY, BRING YOUR STUDENT CARD. ALL STUDENTS WELCOME.

SO MUCH MORE THAN COVERALLS ...

Unbeatable jeans, sweaters, sweats ... even socks!

PHASE 2 has it all at amazing low prices!

QUEEN'S FLAGS $14.95 + tax
QUEEN'S CAPS (wool or plaid) $14.95 + tax
TRICOLOUR FACE PAINT $3.75 + tax (per set)
LABCOATS $7.95 - $9.95 + TAX

MONDAY TO FRIDAY
9:30 am to 9:00 pm
SATURDAY 9:30 am TO 6:00 pm
SUNDAY 12:00 pm TO 5:00 pm

Shop Experience Kingston's Shopping Adventure Today!
PHASE 2
CLOTHING INC.
353 Princess Street, Downtown Kingston

the COCCAMO

RENOVATIONS ARE DONE...COME AND CHECK'EM OUT OVER 40 TELEVISIONS, POOL TABLES, AND STILL GREAT TIMES

LITE NITE EVERY NITE UNTIL 10 (WEDNESDAYS SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE)

MONDAYS
THE TRADITION IS ABOUT TO BEGIN
MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL PARTY
WATCH ON OVER 40 TELEVISIONS

WEDNESDAYS
THE HOTTEST MIDWEEK PARTY IN TOWN
ALLSTAR LITE NITE a.k.a. LADIES NITE
SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE
LADIES PAY NO COVER EVER

THURSDAYS
THE BEST INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE EVER
BUDGET BUSTERS...INVENTORY CLEARANCE
THURS. SEPT. 16TH

FRIDAYS
IT'S TIME TO CELEBRATE THE WEEKEND WITH GHETTO GETAWAYS
(FRIDAY AFTERNOON FROM 1:00 PM TO 8:00 PM)
YOU JUST NEVER KNOW WHERE YOU'LL END UP!
FREE PIG ROAST & CHILLI

THE WEEKEND
HURRICANE FRIDAYS
SATURDAY NIGHT DANCE PARTY
PARTY UNTIL 3 AM FRIDAY & SATURDAY
GREAT MUSIC + GREAT PEOPLE MEMORIES FOREVER

178 ontario street, 544.6885

REMEMBER TO BOOK YOUR SMOKERS & CLASS PARTIES AT THE COCCAMO CALL 544.6885 ASK FOR THE MANAGER

Over $6,000,000 paid out last year! Book your smoker with us! 531-5300

Tonight and Saturday night:

THE LESLIE SPIT TREE-O

Come early - super cheap 7:30 - 9:30

Sunday - WILD BLUES YONDER
Rockin' Blues - no cover

Coming Soon!

Bourbon, Road Apples, The Waltons, One, Hopping Penguins

The Best Bands, The Lowest Cover.

All next week don't miss AJ's gigantic

BACK TO SCHOOL SALE!

The Best Deal in town ... all week long!!!

FOOD SPECIALS

- Sun. - Poultry in motion! 2 for 1 chicken dinner
- Mon. - 20 cent Wings
- Tues. ALL-U-CAN EAT spaghetti - $2.99
- Wed. - Attack of the Giant Fahita! One BIG Chicken Fahita - $1.99
- Thurs. - Buck a Burg. Mini AJ's Burgers for only $0.99. Wimpy Heaven!

Good Deals. Square Meals.

Every Thursday, get ready for our

Dipso Mania Party!

Games! Prizes! D.J. Tim!
Party cheap ALL NIGHT LONG!

DIPSOMANIAC / dispø' meiniaek / i.n.
Any student with a penchant for indulging at AJ's Thursday Nite Dipso Mania Party. Has an innate fear of paying full price for a beer and is prone to abnormal cravings for Lino's poutine at 2am.

ATTENTION ALL CLUBS

Pre-registration for Clubs Night will be held Sept. 14 from 4:00pm - 7:00pm in the McLaughlin Room (JDUC). You must be pre-registered to attend.

CLUBS NIGHT SEPT. 21, 1993

THURS. SEPT. 16

IN BENEFIT OF THE QUEENS UNITED WAY

STREET DANCE

& GOLDEN GAELS PEP RALLY
GREAT LIVE BANDS - 7 P.M. START

THE TEA PARTY

WITH SPECIAL GUESTS

LITTLE BETTY

PRINCESS STREET BETWEEN DIVISION & BARRIE
$2 ADMISSION PROCEEDS TO BENEFIT THE UNITED WAY - "SUPPORT YOUR TEAMS"

IN CASE OF RAIN EVENT WILL BE HELD INSIDE AT STAGES

Action FLOORING KINGSTON

FREE DELIVERY

CARPET STARTING AT $4.99 / sq. yd.
VINYL STARTING AT $5.99 / sq. yd.
PEEL STICK TILE STARTING AT $0.99 / sq. ft.
PINEAPPLE AREA RUGS each $79.00

PROFESSIONAL INSTALLATION AVAILABLE

662 Princess St.
(Beside The Keg)
531-8705

810 Development Pl.
(Across from Celebrity Sports Wolrd)
634-3657

PACKARD BELL

America grew up listening to us. It still does.

Force 715 with SVGA Colour Monitor $ 2,499

- 80486dx/33 Mhz Processor Intel microprocessor
- 8MB RAM expandable on board to 36MB
- 340MB 12ms hard drive
- 3.5" and 5.25" diskette drives
- 14" SVGA colour monitor PB8549SVGL
- Internal 2400 baud modem
- Pre-installed software includes: MS DOS 6.0, Microsoft Windows 3.1, and more ...

Force 110 with SVGA Colour Monitor $ 1,499

- 80486sx/25 Mhz Processor Intel microprocessor

Force 2010 with SVGA Colour Monitor $ 1,999

Multimedia System

- 80486sx/25 Mhz Processor Intel microprocessor
- Internal 630MB CD-ROM Drive
- Sound card and satellite speakers
- Pre-installed software includes: Toolworks, Grolier's Encyclopedia

More features of the Force 110 and 2010 systems:

- Desktop Model
- 4MB RAM expandable on board to 36MB
- 170MB 17ms hard drive
- 3.5" diskette drive
- 1280 x 1024 local bus video with Windows Accelerator
- 512KB video RAM
- 14" SVGA colour monitor PB8538SVGA
- Internal 2400 baud modem
- Pre-installed software includes MD DOS 6.0, Microsoft Windows 3.1 and more ...

14" VGA Colour Monitors with tilt/rotate base

PB8538SVGA $ 315

- 39mm dot-pitch and analog signal input, up-front controls
- Supports maximum resolution 1024 x 768 pixels in interlaced mode

PB8549SVGL $ 415

- 28mm dot-pitch and analog signal input
- Supports maximum resolution 1024 x 768 pixels in non-interlaced mode
- Very Low Magnetic Frequency rating of less than 25nT

InkJet and Laser Printers

- DeskJet 500 $ 395
 - DeskJet 500 "C" colour $ 535
 - DeskJet 550 "C" colour $ 810
 - LaserJet 4L $ 945
- (includes paper and parallel cable)

Mac to School Specials

Special Apple Bundle Pricing Until September 30th

All Macintosh Specials include: 4MB RAM, SuperDrive, Apple Keyboard, and an Apple StyleWriter II Printer

Macintosh Colour Classics

- 80MB Hard Drive $ 1,590
- 160MB Hard Drive $ 1,755

Macintosh LC III

- 80MB Hard Drive, 14" Basic Colour Monitor $ 1,975
- 80MB Hard Drive, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,230
- 160MB Hard Drive, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,400

Macintosh LC 520

- 80MB Hard Drive, CD-ROM, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,430
- 160MB Hard Drive, CD-ROM, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,600

Macintosh Centris 610

- 80MB Hard Drive, CD-ROM, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,600
- 160MB Hard Drive, CD-ROM, 14" Macintosh Colour Monitor $ 2,760

LaserWriter 300 upgrade

- Upgrade a StyleWriter II to a Personal LaserWriter 300 $ 400

Software, software and more software ...

Uncomparable prices!! Check out our selection of Adobe, Aldus, Borland, Claris, WordPerfect, Lotus, MicroSoft, Systat, and other software.

Microcomputer Store
Computing & Communications Services
Dupuis Hall, Room G25

Sales to Faculty, Staff and Full-time Students Only

Queen's University Computing & Communications Services

Features

The new school year means more campus politics. To get all of you started, the Features Section conducted an inaugural interview with the Alma Mater Society Executive: President Katherine Philips, Vice-President (university affairs) Todd Minerson, and Vice-President (operations) Tim Wilson.

Can't stop thinkin' about tomorrow The AMS Inaugural Interview

Let's start with what's happened over the summer. What important issues has the AMS dealt with this summer that will effect Queen's students?

Katherine Philips: Well, the compulsory student assistance levy and Social Contract negotiations. That was May, June and July. Health Plan negotiations, and there was a lot of sort of inner office management stuff. Also, creating a better communications strategy to the university.

Tim Wilson: The first thing for me would be the efficiency audit. Another would be looking at the general accounting, budgeting and strategic planning procedure. And third would be information systems, computers. The other thing would be a Campus Buying Consortium: schools got together and decided to develop a group that would do bulk contract negotiations nationally...

[In addition] I've been working on recommendations for implementation of the pay equity study that was done last year, and also looking at reevaluating the benefits policy for the permanent staff.

Todd Minerson: Child care took up a lot of my time at the beginning of the summer, looking at the feasibility study we had commissioned on childcare services within the University community, and looking at proposals and alternatives along those lines.

Women's safety has been a big issue: we have been working on a safety audit of the JDUC and all the AMS services...and we're also going to form an assembly committee to ensure that these issues maintain a high profile, that the follow-up and the prioritization is taken care of on issues of women's safety.

We're working a lot on housing issues, with Dera [Nevin, Communications Commissioner]. We're trying to target educational programs this year because a lot of things will be coming up. We feel there isn't a solid base of awareness about housing issues for students. And a lot of things are coming up: the official plan of the city, the Ontario Municipal Board complaint that we've registered in regards to that...[it] designated the student housing area as a distinct place in Kingston. As well, some of the terms they used like transient and stable areas could potentially be used against students in the Kingston area.

Also working with the Anti-racism Steering Committee and the grant they received from the Ministry of Citizenship: we're looking into that...and we'll be tabling a report to the Queen's community in the fall. I've been working also on a sexual harassment proposal for the AMS...for our employees but also for volunteers who are affiliated with the AMS. I hosted a round table conference of 12 different schools: we just spent a day and a half discussing issues and ideas.

Would you say that your expectations have changed about what you can accomplish this year since the beginning of the summer?

KP: Well, maybe now would be a time to talk about one of our big projects this year which we've learned over the last four months needs to be examined, which is restructuring the entire AMS both corporate and society-side. Presently there are problems: it's not a personality conflict situation, it's more of a jurisdictional, cost, size problem that occurs year after year.

TM: For the past ten to fifteen years it's been a matter of "Here's another committee, let's put it here", a person's job gets too big...and then a new position is created. There hasn't been a systematic look at the processes.

TW: It's basically the whole organization, the way it works has been a lot of "cut and paste" new things come up or things are deleted...It's line the procedures, timelines that we're going to follow. The first step is to ask what the AMS should be providing for the student body, and from that point...build upward and decide what structure is best for the provisions of those needs.

I hear that Professor Cedric Schubert has retired, and will be taking a year leave of absence and a year sabbatical (for which he will get paid), and I wonder how you feel about that and how satisfied you are with that result.

TM: It still illuminates the problems that are evident in the process [of reviewing Schubert's employment]. The desire of the University administration [is] to include students on things which, for them, don't tread on their toes, and don't make them look terribly bad, but at the same time not including us on things that potentially might put a bad outlook upon the administration.

So you're not happy with the way the administration handled it?

TM: No, I'm not at all happy.

What do you think would have been a more optimum result?

TM: Well, I'm not one to say what a more optimum result would have been, because they stated that one of their mandates was to consider the concerns of students and the desires of students but students were never consulted. The optimum result would have been what students would have said to them had they taken the time to go and ask them how they felt about this issue. And it took a group of students to go to fairly radical steps by taking over Richardson Hall to have the issues even brought to them in the first place...It's kind of disappointing to see that something more eye-catching might be needed to get them to address this kind of issue with students in the future.

Well, the big issue I guess is the Social Contract and budget cutbacks. What general endeavours were you involved with over the summer in terms of that?

KP: The AMS was included in negotiations over the Social Contract and general underfunding for the university next year. There were $11 million in cutbacks in revenue for operating the university. So we were a part of that and my biggest problem was the fact it had to be done when students were not on campus, when we couldn't consult with anyone, and when [the province] could unilaterally impose fees when they've never done it before...in terms of the Student Assistance Levy.

What we're searching for now is an accountability structure whereby anything that happens in the future in terms of fees has to happen when students are on campus, and there is a strict consultation [process] that must be adhered to.

"There will be impact, and that is just this year. It will get worse."
—Katherine Philips on underfunding.

How would you try to enshrine that process?

KP: We tried the referendum concept and that did not fly with the Board of Trustees. I know that Vice-Principal Fraser is anxious to come to a consensus on what would be best. There are a number of Board of Trustees members that are really looking out for students and students' needs, which is always helpful. Unfortunately we were at a meeting with the Minister of Education and Training [Dave Cooke], and he announced that there will be significant increases in tuition next year, significantly more than seven percent.

We're now working with OUSA [the Ontario University Student Alliance]. OUSA will be creating a Students in Change Part II type document, which is a response to the Minister's plea to create a proposal of how to get more money in the system without costing the provincial government more. It will be very interesting to come to a conclusion that will be positive for students, but we're going to be working our hardest. The deadline for that is October first, and we'll be releasing that document at that time in conjunction with all the other universities.

SO, does the AMS support a tuition increase?

KP: Not as it is presently proposed by the Council of Ontario Universities.

Meaning the just less than 50% increase in fees with the income contingency loan repayment plan?

KP: No, that is one of their recommendations but it's not part of their proposal. It's not that they say that student aid comes first and then raise tuition. We're not saying "then raise tuition", but student aid must come first. We need to completely change the way students can access money before we change the amount of money that they have to pay to attend a post-secondary institution. But the way things are going in the future we're not going to have enough taxpayer dollars to pay for the number of students that want to attend and so there really needs to be a complete re-haul of the system on how we're going to get money into the system, how much return one gets on their own investment individually, and how much society gets from that person going to university.

The question that the province is asking itself is, "what percentage of the operating revenue of the university should be tuition?" Right now it's around 20 per cent and there's talk of it going to 25 per cent.

TM: I think one of the problems is that a lot of the ideas they're saying right now, a lot of times you just look at it in isolation...the easiest and most simple way [to raise money] is to increase tuition. We think it has to be looked at in a larger scope of things: the loan repayment plan, the costs and the benefits, and the value of education.

KP: Issues that need to be examined are accountability [to the students and] to the province, to taxpayers, tenure, and student input [guaranteed, effective student consultation] to accompany their increased financial contribution.

So in terms of tenure it means reexamining the criteria for tenure, not giving people guaranteed jobs for life?

KP: Exactly. In the '90's when there's so much change and so much uncertainty about jobs...tenure needs to be examined [to see] if it's appropriate any more.

TM: I wish I had some of the statistics I've seen about how much it costs every year to maintain a tenured professor, something like $2 million.

KP: The problem is, one university or one province can't phase out tenure. They just won't get any good profs, because who would want to teach here? They'll just go and get a guaranteed job elsewhere. We'll have to get a worldwide consortium!

What do you think will be the immediate effects of the cutbacks for students?

KP: Well, the additional fee. The negotiated agreement for social contract was that staff and faculty will be taking five days of unpaid leave. In discussion with Dean Turpin, the new Dean of Arts and Science, he was saying, do we stipulate that professors can't take off teaching days? And if we do, are we telling the province, "it's OK for you to cut our budget, and it doesn't even affect our education." And the problem is the profs are just going to come in on their days off anyway, so it's a matter of what message you want to send out to the province, what is the educational environment we want here.

I think that generally students may find profs taking on greater loads, essays taking longer to be returned, more people in their classrooms, less equipment to go around, crowded labs, and less choice in their courses as faculty-student ratios decline. There will be impact, and that is just this year. It will get worse.

You talked about student consultation. Are there any concrete plans, are there any committees that have been set up, that are involved in the consultation or is it just direct with the AMS [and the government and administration]?

TM: The Communications Commissioner has been working quite a bit over the summer, there's a number of committees that are going to be out and about, hands-on, asking for what's going on, figuring out what's happening on campus, what people want us to be doing. There's one called the Enquirer Committee, it's going to be going around asking people questions, what they want to know about the Executive, printing out pamphlets...

There's also a committee that's going to be doing a program called Fill Us In, where Dera [Nevin, Communications Commissioner] has arranged a process for a better way of complaints or suggestions or anything people would have within the AMS, to get to the proper person within the AMS and reply to the person who made the complaint or suggestion...We're really trying to promote high visibility and hands-on [approaches].

KP: We're going to make arrangements to speak to all the residences, because I don't think the Executive has made much of an appearance. It's a really good opportunity to create awareness of the AMS in one's early stages at university.

We've already joined OUSA, right?

KP: Yes.

So if the referendum this fall on funding OUSA fails, what happens to our membership?

KP: Well, actually what we might be doing in order to show we are going to gain efficiency within our society side, we'll take the money from the fee students are already paying to the AMS, to the tune of maybe $4000, and then get the other $4000 from students directly, so that we're subsidizing within the AMS fee. Hopefully people will realize then that we're trying to cut costs.

TW: A lot of the costs of OUSA have already been built into the budget of the Academic Affairs Commission in contingency.

What's the status of the daycare centre?

TM: We received a proposal at the beginning of May outlining a number of possibilities that a consultant had provided for us. Unfortunately they were all fairly expensive in terms of capital investment. The least expensive of all was about $22,000. Avenues we're following [as alternatives] are with the Child Care Committee of the AMS, to look at a babysitting corp, a group of volunteers who are willing to babysit for cheap rates. The other things being considered are night-time drop-in daycare centres. That was one thing that wasn't looked at too in-depth in the feasibility study that was done...

As well we're probably going to be still providing the service that we have on during Orientation Week right now, child care service, as well as a child care service on PD days for the public schools, and we're looking at March Break if it's not conflicting with exam times around here. And we have secured that space in the JDUC for the Parent Resource Centre which will be operating in the next couple of weeks once the Committee gets back and gets on top of things again. That's going to be a space where there'll be berths and cribs for children, information for parents on child-care that's available around the area, and other things like helplines for parents, resources for parents if they're having a hard time.

Tim, in terms of the efficiency audit, is it done?

TW: It's mostly done. We've done all the research as far as the Publishing and Copy Centre, Queen's Entertainment Agency, Alric's, The Quiet Pub and the Student Constables go. We have to wait for the Editor-in-Chief to get back to do the Tricolour Yearbook, and we should be doing the Walkhome Service sometime in the next two weeks. A lot of it also came up during informal discussions. We've done the research now we're just waiting...before we formulate everything into a document with all recommendations.

Any tentative findings right now, general trends?

TW: General trends? A lack of control...a lack of a lot of internal controls and monitoring, to do specifically with inventory and purchases and so forth.

What's been happening with the AMS services over the summer?

TW: I already touched on Work Bursary...and they're looking a lot at refining their policy side. The manager has put together a fantastic policy manual. He's been dealing with a lot of billing problems.

The Quiet Pub we've invested some money in this year. There's been a lot of changes to the internal physical structure. They've purchased a new television, some new furniture, they've bought a lot of new equipment, dishwasher, ice machine, and so forth.

Continued on page 24

...continued from previous page

Vids in the Hall has a new look. We went with a new movie supplier and they've just done a fantastic job refurbishing it. More movies, and a greater variety. They've moved into National Film Board, foreign films; we've got a guarantee of those every month.

Walkhome was originally going to stay open only during intercession, but we decided with the increased funding from the administration and the graduate students, that we'd keep it open all summer...and we're looking into having a post at Victoria Hall. They've already started positioning someone down at Alfie's when it's open at night, and they're looking at establishing a relay service between the different posts. We've made a number of purchases [at Alfie's], which is just basic equipment. That was one of the things that came out: they're spending more on repair than they would spend just buying new equipment. We're waiting for authorization for some more structural changes as far as Alfie's goes.

Studio Q bought great new equipment, so the look of that program will be greatly enhanced.

The Publishing and Copy Centre will not look remotely like it did last year. They bought entirely new photocopiers, they've redesigned the whole layout of the store and painted it.

Todd, this is probably for you. About the rise of hate groups and neo-Nazis on university campuses, do you see any signs of that here in Kingston?

TM: I've actually talked to people from Waterloo and U of T a few times over the summer, and people at Waterloo had a student who came before the problem happened and offered to act as a consultant to prepare the Waterloo campus should something like that arise. We didn't have much confidence in what this consultant would be doing before, so we said to lay off of that for a bit until we see what happens. Hopefully we won't have to deal with that.

I've spoken already to somebody at the Human Rights Office...they seemed to be reluctant to do anything until they see the exact circumstances as well. So we'll cross our fingers and hope it doesn't get here.

The Heritage Front is really actively recruiting among students, especially at the university level. I wondered if maybe you had heard of any incidents here.

TM: I haven't heard of anything here, and as far as I know, some people I've talked to in Hillside haven't heard anything. Human Rights haven't heard anything as of yet. A lot of the things I've been working at over the summer with other universities, it's been just to keep each other aware of these things as they happen. If it does come to Kingston, we won't be caught totally flat-footed, we know what some of the other schools are doing.

Alison Masemann, The Journal's Features Editor, is a great person, with great shoes.

PHOTOS BY MARIKA GLICKMAN

All of these names and symbols are registered trademarks of Queen's University and are protected by law.

Use of these names and symbols, or variations of them, must be approved in advance by the Trademark Use Review Board.

All manufacturers require a Trademark License.

Inquiries should be directed to:

Dene Latta, Trademark Use Review Board
Richardson Hall, Room 224 Tel 613 545-2211 Fax 613 545-6602

WELCOME BACK!

Queen's University Food Service

We are looking forward to serving you ...

Sidwalk Cafe
Mon - Fri: 7:30am - 9:00pm
Saturday: 10:00am - 8:00pm
Sunday: 10:00am - 4:00pm

Skylight Dining Room
Mon - Fri: 11:30am - 1:45pm
Mon - Thu: 5:00pm - 6:45pm

Mac-Corry
Mon - Thu: 7:30am to 9:00pm
Friday: 7:30am - 5:00pm
Sat - Sun: 10:00am - 5:00pm

West Campus
Mon - Fri: 7:30am - 6:30pm

Humphry Hall
Mon - Fri: 8:00am - 1:30pm

The Hill
Mon - Fri: 8:00am - 1:30pm
(extended hours during exams)

Watch for ... Super Saver Specials, Contests, Holiday Dinners, Pasta Buffets, and more!

DON'T GO BUY THE BOOK!

GO BUY THE USED BOOK!

NOW BIGGER in WALLACE HALL

You set the price!! We keep 20% for charity!!
Sept. 13: 14:00am - 6:00pm DROPOFF BOOKS
Sept. 15: 8:00am - 6:00pm ? BOOK SALE
Sept. 16: 9:00am - 4:00pm PICKUP $4 FROM SOLD BOOKS
Sept. 17: 18:00am - 6:00pm

THE QUEEN'S BOOK EXCHANGE

is a non-profit service of Queen's Christian Fellowship

IBM Hewlett Packard Canon LEADING EDGE Panasonic Microsoft and more...

Back to School LESSON #1: NEVER PASS UP A GREAT SALE

NO PAYMENTS TIL MARCH 1994

PACKAGE OF THE WEEK
LEADING EDGE 486 COMPUTER & MONITOR
Canon

EVERYTHING YOU NEED AT A RED HOT PRICE
486SLC computer, 4MB RAM, 170MB hard drive, 2 floppy, DOS, Windows, MS Works for Windows, Mouse, VGA monitor, Canon BJ-5 ink jet printer with three toner and printer cable.

BUY NOW $1799

PLUS ITEMS AT OUR GUARANTEED EVERYDAY REGULAR LOW PRICES.

COMPUTERS
STUDENT SAVER IBM PS1 486 PRICE BREAKTHROUGH
WHY BUY A CLONE?
486
$1479

Macintosh
Save a Bundle
Macintosh LC III and Apple Stylewriter II
$2154

PRINTERS
HEWLETT PACKARD LASER STANDBY OF EXCELLENCE AT AN UNBEATABLE FUTURE SHOP PRICE $1799

HOME OFFICE
Canon COMPACT DESIGN COPIER
$1179

ACCESSORIES
SPECIAL OF THE WEEK
EXCEPTIONAL OFFER FROM JVC
$26

486 SUPER DEAL! COMPAQ ProLinea 486SX
$1799

Apple Macintosh LC 520 ROM, Stylewriter II, Chrisworks Software Bundle $2674

OUR BEST BUY EVER Canon BJ-5 Bubble Jet Printer
$299

brother BEST BUY FOR YOUR HOME OFFICE
$969

CH PRODUCTS BULK DISKS
$48

LEADERS SPEAKERS KENSINGTON
$144

SOFTWARE
SPECIAL BUNDLE OF THE WEEK
$19

PC SOFTWARE
FLASHBACK - DOS $48.99
PLAYROOM V2.0 - DOS $39.99
TYPOMATE - DOS $54.99
DBASE IV V2.0 $399.99
NORTH UTILITIES - DOS $94.99
MONYAT PRO V1 - WIN $109.99
BORDLAND OFFICE UPGRADE $369.99
MS OFFICE V3 UPGRADE - WIN $379.99

FOR UNDER $30.00
MS WORD/EXCEL $399.99
QUICKEN V4 $57.99
STACKER $59.99
MAPRO TEACHES TYPING $39.99
DINOSAUR ADVENTURE $113.99
F117A STEALTH FIGHTER - DOS $26.99
QUINSHIP 2000 - DOS $26.99
INCA - DOS $27.99
ISLAND OF DR. BEAHN - DOS $27.99
COMPIRES II - DOS $17.99
MULTIWORK 30 - DOS $17.99

With 523 advertisement charge payable at time of purchase, no payments until March 1994 billing statement. No additional charges if balance is paid in full by March 1994 billing statement. Due date otherwise stated due from date of purchase. Normal credit terms apply after March 1994 billing statement. Minimum purchase $400. On approved credit. Items marked "SAL" are on sale. Personal shopping only, no reseller. We reserve the right to limit quantities.

FUTURE SHOP DISCOUNT SUPERSTORES

502 GARDINERS RD. KINGSTON, ONT. 634-7261

WEDNESDAY 10-9
THURS-FRI 10-9

FUTURE SHOP
CON HOME OFFICE 0827
AUG. 1993
4578VB
ONT VERSION

Sports

The Summer in Review

BY JOEL SUTHERLAND
The Queen's Journal

The summer is just about over and while a majority of students whittled away their afternoons either working or drinking beer, athletics was still strong at Queen's. There was lots of Softball (the way baseball was meant to be played), slo-pitch really should be in the Olympics, Soccer—the old quote goes something like: Rugby is a (you'll excuse my newsworthy etiquette) "donkey-hole" game played by gentlemen while Soccer is a gentlemen's game played by (again sorry, "donkey-hole") somehow loses the tone) "donkey-holes". Point is, there was lots of stuff happening.

We'll recap all of the final standings for you starting with Queen's Men's Summer Softball (Division I of course). The Grad Club and the Singing Frog tied for first boasting an 11-4-1 record and 23 points. Next up were the Stingers who had a 10-5-1 record (17 points), however, they had four defaults.

In other words, the Stingers could have won it all, or at least finished first in the regular season standings. The Biohazards finished fourth with a tidy 8-8 record. The cellar occupants were the infamous Argyle Sox (7-8), Random Errors (4-11-1), The Shot (5-11-1), and finally Economics finished dead last (5-10, with six lousy points).

This leaves us with the playoffs. During all of August (European vacation season), everybody battled it out on the diamond. I literally mean everybody because there was no elimination based on the regular season results (rendering the regular season meaningless, no wonder the Stingers defaulted so many games in their potential Championship season). To make a long story short, the Stingers stung their way to victory in the playoff final. Their victory came at the expense of the Grad Club, final score 6-5. The horribly awful Economics team, which in any other sport would not have made the playoffs, managed to lose in the first round (luckily) and end up with the consolation prize by beating The Shot, final score (1-0). So congratulations to all, hooray for softball.

There were two other leagues, the final standings for the A League were:

Team Name	W	L	T	Def	Tot
Biochemistry	10	11	-	2	1
Giphy	9	2	1	-	19
RB Eyes	9	1	1	-	19
Nisfits	9	3	-	-	18
Commissos	9	1	-	(2)	16
Economics	6	4	-	-	12
Sluggers	6	6	-	(2)	10
Uncoachables	4	3	2	-	10
Impulsive Monks (sic)	4	6	1	-	9
Allie's	4	5	-	-	9
Shirt Bosses	4	4	-	(2)	8
Classics	4	6	1	(2)	7
Fungis & Fungals	4	5	-	(2)	6
Sundowners	2	8	1	(2)	3
PHD Mgt	1	8	1	(2)	1
Biosphere	-	6	1	(4)	-
Dry Ice	2	5	1	(6)	-

Obviously, there would not be an A league if there wasn't a B league, so here are the B league standings:

Team Name	W	L	T	Def
The Mickey Ducks	10	2	1	-
History	10	1	1	-
Murfriends	10	1	-	-
Cardinals	9	3	2	(2)
Physiology	8	3	1	(2)
Trial Runners	7	1	-	(2)
Standard Deviants	5	5	-	(2)
Goat Cheese	5	4	-	(2)
Dipais Devils	3	4	-	-
Rockhounds	3	7	-	-
Heartbreakers	3	3	1	(2)
MBA Amicus	3	7	-	(2)
Second Moments	3	3	1	(4)
Ellis Strikers	1	6	-	-
Litigators	1	8	-	-
Dilligas	-	6	1	-
Wizards of Id	-	5	-	(4)

Now we move onward to the Grad Soccer League (GSL). Women's Summer Soccer had six teams. Pharmacology (11-1-0) finished on top, the ever sober Pathology department (8-3-3) was next followed by Psychology (5-6-3), Economics (5-8-1), Biology (4-8-2), and Biochemistry was the bottom boasting an impressive (2-9-0) record. The playoffs were deadly and left Pathology victorious. Pharmacology bowed out gracefully losing 2-0. You'll be pleased to know that there were no shootouts.

Men's Soccer had Pharmacology (11-2) finish numero uno, one point ahead of Economics (11-3-1). Economics faced Biology in the final and won! Scandals ensued about bribes and kickbacks and the whole league is being investigated. But you can read about that in the News section. As for shootouts were not a factor in the match.

Other notables that occurred over the summer: The Queen's Mens Eights went over to the Henley regatta in England to compete in the Temple Cup. They lost in the semis by 11 seconds to the University of Dublin. To get an idea of how good this result is, out of a field of forty-two teams, we made it to the Final Four. Nottingham, Bristol, and Westminster were all Queen's fodder. The picture below shows the crew that almost won it all.

Men's eights stroke there way to a strong finish in the Temple Cup at the Henley Regatta.

Photo courtesy of Bob Farrington

Rugby and soccer tryouts have been going on during the past week. We all wish these teams the best of luck (everybody needs a little) in their respective quests for the championship. The traditionally strong (six championships over the past several years) Rugby squad practices at Kingston field. Needless to mention, the Football squad will attempt to defend their Vanier Cup championship season. It appears to be another strong year for athletics at Queen's.

Terry Fox Run

The Terry Fox run is fast approaching

BY JUSTIN MCKELLAR
The Queen's Journal

As summer passes into fall and a new school year begins, it is time, once again for the thirteenth annual Terry Fox Run. On Sunday September 19, hundreds will participate in the run and help beat cancer. Registration takes place at 1 pm in front of Jock Hartly Arena. There is no set fee—participants contribute pledge money or a personal donation of any size.

The run should appeal to athletic and sedentary lifestyles alike. There are three different distances—1, 5 and 10km. And participants can run, walk, cycle, rollerblade or find an original way of getting themselves to the finish line. Refreshments, consisting of water and oranges, will be provided at rest stations along the course.

Opening ceremonies at 1:30pm will build up to the run at 2:00pm. They are to be hosted by an as yet unnamed DJ from radio station FOX960, and will feature Mayor Helen Cooper, Town Crier Chris Whyman and, hopefully, Principal David Smith. Representatives from Superior Nautilus will be on hand to help the participants get warmed up, (runtoured massages and oil baths).

Organizers are hoping to double last year's participation of 350 people. This would help exceed last year's total of $7,000 for cancer research. The Run Committee is breeding interest in the local high schools and Queen's residences by initiating some friendly competition. The Queen's residence with the greatest per-cent participation will be awarded a lovely plaque by the MCRC.

Intramural Bulletin

Intramurals are fun and fast approaching!

BY JOEL SUTHERLAND
The Queen's Journal

Intramurals are a part of Queen's lore, like it or not. For all of those readers who know nothing about intramurals, this article (and others to come!) is for you. WIC, BEWS, and BEWC are terms to be memorized right now! I, to add suspense, will define these in next week's issue.

Intramurals are rigorous activities, the events range from basketball to dodgeball to volleyball to golf to horseshoes. If you do not know how to play horseshoes, feel free to watch the boys at William and Aberdeen, they will give you some halfway tips. There are women's, men's and coed sports.

So, the question on your mind is (I hope) "Where do I sign up?", and the answer is at Athletic Info Night. This will take place on Tuesday, September 14th, from 5:00-7:00pm at the Phys Ed Centre—Bartlett Gym.

Both the women's and the men's programs operate on a faculty based system of competition. This means that participants automatically play with teams organized within their faculty or course of study.

Nobody can get enough of softball. Being this in mind, there is a coed softball tournament on September 25, 26 9am-3pm. The only rules are: 4 pitch, slo-pitch (ie: no windmills), upon reaching first base you must chug a beer, be sure to bring plenty of cigars. Entries are due at the managers meeting Monday, September 20, 6pm in Room 205, Phys Ed Centre, $40 per team (refundable). All teams are guaranteed two games.

Reincarnated Varsity thumps Gaels 42-10

Rob Weir scores all 10 Queen's points
BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

TORONTO

The University of Toronto Varsity Blues came back from the dead last Saturday to crush defending national champion Queen's Golden Gaels 42-10 at Varsity Stadium in Toronto. It was a rude start to the 1993 season, but fortunately has no bearing on the standings, as it was only an exhibition game.

Varsity's one-sided win marked a re-birth of their football program, which had one foot in the grave last December after announced cancellations of many University of Toronto sports. But through the efforts of Varsity alumnus James Ware and others, the Blues should be among Canada's top teams for 1993.

Ware is a former Varsity player who has spearheaded fundraising efforts to save football and other interuniversity sports at U of T, raising nearly $300,000 to date. He played football for both Toronto and Queen's, and is the father of current Gaels' linebacker Tim Ware. Speaking about the glory days of the 1960's, James Ware said, "When I played, this place [Varsity Stadium] would be filled for every game." Alas, that was before the Blue Jays came to town. The 100-year-old stadium, which seats 20,000, had no more than 1,500 fans on hand for Saturday's game, but that, at least, is a start.

Varsity used many big plays to stun the Gaels, rolling up a 28-0 halftime lead. In the 106 years since these teams first squared off, there has never been a longer run than Blues' halfback David Richer's 106-yard touchdown gallop in the second quarter. Put that with Glenn McCausland's 100-yard punt return for a major, a 69-yard touchdown completion from Blues' quarterback Mario Sturino to split end Francis Etienne, a 30-yard major post pattern connection between Sturino and slotback John Nardi, a 34-yard touchdown scamper by fullback Brad Muxlow, and, well, you get the idea. Queen's suffered from slipshod tackling from start to finish. The one-sided contest should NOT be taken as a barometer for the upcoming season.

Bright spots for Queen's were provided by quarterback Rob Weir, who accounted for all ten Gaels points. Weir connected on a pretty 42-yard slant to receiver Ed Kidd for a touchdown, converted the score himself, and kicked a 35-yard field goal. Weir also saw time at receiver and on special teams.

Gaels' All-Canadian tailback Brad Elberg, spurred by three professional teams over the summer, carried off twice, as the Queen's coaching staff used the contest as an audition for the upcoming season. Queen's used four quarterbacks and eleven running backs, as most new players saw some action. Varsity used their experienced veterans virtually the entire game.

Among rookies who impressed for Queen's, perhaps punter Dan Coderre, lineman Steve Vrbancic and fullback John Thelen are closest to contributing significantly in 1993. Coderre punted six times for a solid 35-yard average. Vrbancic, a 6'5", 270 lb. tackle, did not look out of place as he saw substantial playing time. Thelen, son of CFL Hall-of-Famer Dave Thelen, romped for 30 yards on just four carries.

The Gaels will open their 1993 Vanier Cup defense tomorrow at 1 p.m. against University of Ottawa Gee-Gees at Minto Field in Nepean. Steve Othen will start at quarterback. The first home game is two weeks tomorrow against Carleton, at Richardson Stadium.

Football Team Preview

BY THE ATHLETICS CENTRE
The Queen's Journal

One of the most exciting aspects about university sport is its unpredictability. Last fall, who would have envisioned that not only would the Golden Gaels football team win the Vanier Cup, but do it so convincingly? Coming off his second career Vanier Cup win (1993, 1978) and ninth conference championship title, Doug Hargreaves is not predicting any miracles heading into his 18th season as the Gaels' head coach. Only twice in the history of the Cup have teams won back-to-back championships: Manitoba (1969 and 1970) and Western (1976 and 1977).

Last season was truly a thrilling one for Gaels fans and the Golden Gaels football team. Gone from the roster are LB Mike Bonine, DL Eric Dell, CB Chris McCormick, QB Tim Fendegast, FB Paul Boreford, TE Dan Wright, K/P Jamie Galloway, R Steve Yovetich, and C Tom Black. Although each of these players leaves a large void, there is a mix of talented veterans and rookies eager for another football season and the chance to make a name for themselves.

Thirteen offensive veterans, led by OQIFC and Vanier Cup MVP tailback Brad Elberg, return to the Gaels lineup in 1993. At quarterback, Steve Othen (6', 180lbs, Sudbury) and Rob Weir (6', 195lbs, Oakville) are leading the contenders with several other talented players vying for the starting position vacated by graduated five-year veteran Fendegast. Other potential pocket-minders are Sandy Brown (6'1, 175lbs, Westmount, PQ), Nessim Abu-Zahra (5'9, 160lbs, Windsor) and rookies Ryan Moore (6'3, 180lbs, Milton) and Owen O'Neill (5'11, 168lbs, Kingston).

Last year's national leading backfield of halfbacks Elberg (5'10, 200lbs, Regina) and Paul Kozan (6'1, 205lbs, Regina) and fullback Don Warwick (5'9, 205lbs, Arnprior) will be helped out by Steve Bird (5'9, 170lbs, Mississauga), Jon Taylor (6', 200lbs, Kingston), Tyler Kudlar (5'11, 182lbs, London) and rookies John Thelen (6'1, 231lbs, Nepean) and Chuck Burns (5'10, 178lbs, Petrolia). The receiving unit will be led by 5-year veterans wideout Ed Kidd (6', 195lbs, Carleton Place), and tightend Dan McCullough (6'2, 215lbs, Oshawa). Rookie Paul Greenhow (6'4, 170lbs, London) will start at splitend. Other receivers include tightend Kyle Wanzel (6', 195lbs, Sudbury), Western transfer Chris Brown (6'3, 225lbs, Kingston), James Chithulen (6'1, 185lbs, Lynden), rookie Dan Case (6'2, 183lbs, Sault Ste Marie) and wideouts Chris Gear (6', 185, Lennoxville, PQ), rookie Nicholas Maiese (5'11, 168lbs, Toronto), rookie splintends Paul Othen (5'10, 170lbs, Sudbury-brother of QB Steve) and James Friclink (6'2, 180lbs, Guelph). The O-line has a strong field to draw from with veteran tackles Mark Robinson (6'2, 285lbs, Haliburton) and Ken Kirkwood (6'1, 275lbs, Kingston), and guards Chris Peres (6'2, 275lbs, Sudbury), Eric Harpell (6', 230lbs, Oakville), Bryce Ivanchuk (5'10, 250lbs, St. David's), Marco Anglesio (6'1, 230lbs, N.Vancouver), and rookies Brent Card (6', 230lbs, Kingston) and Matt Closs (6', 210lbs, Ottawa). Centring for the O-line is Kevin Parker (6'1, 220lbs, Sault Saint Marie). He is backed-up by Peter Wickwire (6'5, 235lbs, Halifax, NS) and rookie Rob Chalmers (6', 210lbs, Prince George, BC).

Fourteen veterans return to uphold the integrity of Queen's traditionally powerful defence. Look for the Gaels' backfield to be as strong as ever with 1992 Churchill Bowl MVP James Paterson (5'9, 150lbs, Toronto) and Braden Dent (6', 180lbs, Goderich) at corner, with safety Joel Dagnone (6', 190lbs, Kingston), halfbacks Max Turner (6'1, 185lbs, Peterborough), Mark Morrison (5'9, 165lbs, Calgary), and Aron Campbell (5'9, 175lbs, Peterborough) leading the way.

Linebackers will be comprised of Kingston's Craig Sharpe (5'10, 220lbs), Tim Ware (6', 206lbs, Toronto), and Todd Volks (6'1, 205lbs, Petrolia). Sack king, Jamie Lewin (5'11, 200lbs, Hanstead, PQ) is back at rush end with Mark Johnson (5'11, 215lbs, Burlington). Other DBs and linebackers include Jason Capello (5'10, 186lbs, Ottawa), Frank Hallfall (6'2, 200lbs, Kaiserslautern, Germany), Pat Causey (5'9, 160lbs, Deep River), Jon Newkirk (6'1, 215lbs, Halifax, NS), Dylan Foster (6'2, 220lbs, Oakville) and rookies Todd Chapman (6', 192lbs, N.Vancouver, BC), Jason Walker (6'1, 202lbs, Brockville), Dan Coderre (6', 180lbs, Kingston), Sean Walter (5'11, 185lbs, Toronto), Scott Williamson (5'9, 163lbs, Maxville), Jon Kryzanowsky (5'10, 165lbs, Kingston), Jeremy Jones (6', 220lbs, London), Jason Morrison (5'11, 207lbs, Sudbury), Matt Wilson (5'10, 194lbs, Windsor), Glen Young (6', 193lbs, Kakabeka Falls) and Karl Rasmussen (6'1, 215lbs, Nepean-brother of ex-basketball Gael Judd and cousin of current basketball Gael Trina). Down linemen include Matt Zarwony (6'4, 245lbs, Oakville), Scott Gray (6', 260lbs, Sault Ste. Marie), and Stewart Dalfoe (6'2, 280lbs, Belleville), Kevin Buske (6', 251lbs, Almonte), Chris Kelly (6'4, 238lbs, Sydenham) and rookies James Osborn (6'5, 220lbs, Oshawa), Garth Scott (6'2, 218lbs, Lindsay) and Craig Geolfrey (6'1, 210lbs, Kingston).

Weir will replace graduated kicker/punter Galloway as the team's place kicker, while rookie Coderre will take over punting. Other kicker/punters include rookie Jeffrey Wong (5'6, 178lbs, Scarborough) and Dagnone.

With his veteran coaching staff comprised of offensive and defensive coordinators Bob Howes and Bob Mullen, Hargreaves will face the 1993 season as he has all his previous 17... start with the basics, keep mistakes to a minimum and improve each game. After all, he has not amassed his impressive 107-48-3 won-loss-tied record at Queen's by accident.

IF

YOU ARE REMOTELY INTERESTED IN WRITING FOR THE SPORTS SECTION,

CALL 545-2800 NOW

AND LEAVE A MESSAGE

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL WANTS U, TO WRITE

Entertainment

the hippest show in town

THE TRAGICALLY HIP
Richardson Stadium
BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

If you didn't know it before, know it now — The Tragically Hip have hit the big time. After touring this summer with Midnight Oil and Hothouse Flowers, the Hip's sold out show in Kingston last Wednesday was not just another roadside attraction. The concert, a benefit for Kingston area hospitals, was also a successful homecoming for the band.

The Opening Bands

It was not just the Hip who won over the crowd. Openers The Headstones and Andrew Cash both put on energetic shows and were well received by the crowd.

The Headstones are personal friends of the Tragically Hip, which may have had something to do with their place on the bill. However, the band was not at all lame — in fact they were a little rambunctious. Playing straight ahead three chord songs, the lead singer was the focal point of the band, cavorting around the stage like a Mexican jumping bean.

Andrew Cash brought more subtlety to the stage. Cash has just released a new CD entitled Hi and his set drew heavily from this new effort. Notably absent from Cash's show were his old standards "Time and Place" and "Boomtown." The new songs were good, but I can't honestly say anything jumped out at me.

The Hip

With introductions from Dan Akroyd, The Tragically Hip arrived onstage to be greeted to a raucous crowd and a full downpour.

And the band played on...

WHILMAAAA!!!

Body surfing quickly became a favourite pastime in the front ranks of the audience, leading to a steady stream of customers at the first aid tent. But looking farther into the stands there was little movement, just a sea of motionless umbrellas and raincoats. In any event, the crowd's mood seemed to make no difference to Gord Downie who was, as usual, immediately engulfed in his own universe.

Downie's love/hate relationship with the audience was in clear evidence on this night. He quickly gave the crowd a backhanded compliment, saying how great it was to see such a big crowd even though he didn't recognize anyone. Later on in the show Downie grabbed a leather shoe thrown onstage and proceeded with much vigour to tear it apart.

The first song of the night was "Locked in the Trunk of a Car" and showed the Hip to be well polished. Bassist Gord Sinclair and drummer Johnny Fay provided the musical underpinnings with a more than solid rhythm section. Guitarists Paul Langlois and Rob Baker issued tight lead riffs and the heavy chording characteristic of the Hip.

The band's seamless execution of songs was, however, one of their problems, as the show tended to really lack an identifiable climax and failed to build momentum. A more dynamic lighting show would have helped, but part of the problem is inherent in the Hip's songs themselves, which often sound similar and tend to blend together.

The best song of the night was the Hip's signature tune "New Orleans is Sinking." Employing a long improvisational interlude, this tune provided a chance for Rob Baker to shine and had an excellent build-up and release of tension. It justly received the most crowd response of the night.

By the time the 90 minute set was over, the band had played two new songs and stand-out selections from all three of their full-length albums including "Pigeon Camera," one of my personal favourites.

The Encore

Of course it was not over when it was over. The Hip were called back for the obligatory encore, the group didn't even bother retreating to their dressing room underneath the Richardson Stadium stands, they just waited backstage and took congratulations from friends until the crowd demanded their return.

The encore ended with a blast as the Hip played their first single from Up to Here, "Blow at High Dough." This high-paced number, one of the Hip's most energetic, was a wise choice to end the concert, leaving the audience with one final opportunity for cathartic release.

After the Show: The Interview

After the show I had a chance to chat with drummer Johnny Fay and ask him a few questions about the show and the band.

Queen's Journal: How does it feel to return to Kingston and sell out a 10,000 seat stadium?

Johnny Fay: I don't know, we haven't played in two years. We've been gigging at the Toucan and that was sort of demoing Fully Completely before we went into the studio. I think there was maybe a hundred people there, and then you know coming home to play to 10,000 people at a charity gig is great. It makes sense, we used to play just down the road at the Manor, so it's a real step up.

QJ: Speaking of the Manor, do you feel your days there helped develop the bands' style? There was often nobody there?

JF: Yeah, I mean we just sort of forged ahead and there was a couple people there.

QJ: Did you experiment more?

JF: Yeah you tend to definitely.

QJ: I mean Gordon Downie is kind of nuts, did he always have that kind of style?

JF: Gord keeps you on your toes regardless if there's five people there or 10,000 people there.

QJ: So he didn't develop a persona?

JF: No, a show is a show is a show.

QJ: You have three albums out now, how do you feel you are progressing as a band, do you feel as if you are growing?

JF: Definitely, we're better songwriters now and we even played material tonight for our new record, we always do that, we try to work new songs into the set 'cause not only are there people who come back repeatedly to see us, but we get tired of playing the same tunes.

QJ: The first single on the EP: "Small Town Bringdown," contains the line: I want my life to please me! Not another small town home town bringdown. Was that slugging Kingston in any way?

JF: No, not at all, in fact people kind of misconstrued that whole kind of thing. Living in a small town is kind of a bummer, people are always slagging it, but when we go to Toronto, or any other big town, you see it's the same there too; I mean it's a bigger small town.

QJ: Did you want to escape it though at the time?

JF: No, it was sort of drawing light to the fact that it's the same in a big city like that, I mean people really misconstrued that song, in fact we haven't played those tunes in a long time, not for that reason but you just get sick of playing the material quite honestly.

QJ: In "Last American Exit" you have the line "You watch the border offer you fame and watch you drown." How do you feel about America?

JF: America's not the brass ring it used to be. Canadian bands like Loverboy and all these grunge some bands we had to grow up and hear on the fucking radio, they play fucking gruesome songs to break into the States. They were writing songs about America.

QJ: Still like Platinum Blonde?

JF: Yeah exactly, very very true. And you know at those bands now that I saw: April Wine, they have to be the most gruesome band. They're trying to fit into the music of today and it's not working and they are trying to mold themselves into something that they are not and it's sign of the times, and they're old fucking farts and they should get out of it.

...continued

...continued

QJ: Would you like to break into the American market?

JF: Were doing it purely on music, and if you do it on music with no sort of image... [like] purple hair.

QJ: Record company stylings?

JF: Well, not even that you know, nipple ring or whatever. The States are interested, we have pockets where we sell out 1000 tickets and in a lot of cities we have continued better business, which for a band is what you want to do. We've kept putting out records that are better and better.

QJ: You're pretty big in the south, and the east coast too a bit. You've done some touring?

Aim for the toilet...

Letterman laughs again

LATE SHOW WITH DAVID LETTERMAN
CBS
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

The Late Show has been on the air for a little more than week, and after laborious scrutinization, my first thought about David Letterman's performance echoes the marketing slogan of ABC detergent: "Can you see a difference? I can't see a difference."

Apart from a new time and a new theatre the Late Show is really Late Night with a bigger budget and more sympathetic employers. A change in networks has had little effect on Letterman's familiar antics. He's still reciting the infamous Top 10 Lists, interviewing child prodigies and being in general, ridiculous and irreverent.

I suppose David Letterman will always be his wacky, sardonic self. Fortunately, Letterman's shtick touches that part of the funny bone which is thoroughly enjoyable — hence the reason why his "new" show isn't really new at all.

As expected, the Late Show's premiere emerged the victor in the late night TV battle. Capturing a Nielsen rating of 13.4 (which translates into about 30 million viewers), Letterman easily trounced his 11:30pm rival, the Tonight Show.

In a gracious move, Letterman has surprisingly refrained from attacking Jay Leno. TV pundits predict that the late night battle will be an ugly one (with Chevy Chase already debuting this week and Conan O'Brien set to start next week, the contest becomes more complicated). Letterman, however, seems determined to avoid the mud-slinging. Hopefully, the other late night hosts will follow suit.

While he has spared Leno, Letterman has not been so amicable towards his former employer, NBC. Unphased by NBC's threat to initiate a lawsuit if he used any of his old Late Night gimmicks, Letterman has continued to compile his Top 10 Lists. His first list was the "Top ten reasons why the new show would be better," among which were "No more relying on cheap G.E. jokes... unless we're really desperate" and "No more pressure to book the NBC president's son-in-law..." Perhaps his most scathing attack was his response to NBC news anchor (and Letterman's good

Please see LETTERMAN, page 35

Joan Fast

- Certified Ripalu Instructor
- Phoenix Rising Yoga Therapist

545-1573

273 Brock Street (Behind the Fire Station)
First session free. Beginner, Gentle and Vigorous classes offered

What'ya got for under $5⁰⁰

Everything!!

Routine / Salads
Steak & Chicken Sandwiches
Draft / Cappuccino

When you think JJ's.. think FOOD!

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele # : 547 - 3771

Students Get Desperate!

The main cause of student drop-out is stress — stress over not having assignments finished, stress over not staying "caught-up" with the class, and stress over the realization that just staying "caught-up" isn't going to be good enough.

1993 was the worst year in history for students getting jobs right out of college, and this next year looks even worse.

It isn't always the smartest students who get the best grades, but it is always the best readers — the ones who can get the most out of their books on their own.

Simply getting through your reading assignments will only give you the minimum that your professor requires to pass you. Just passing your courses isn't going to be good enough anymore.

In fact, having a diploma or a degree only allows you the opportunities of furthering your education with a more competitive group of fellow graduates.

The '90s will continue to be a decade filled with the most rapid change ever seen in history. Only those who are able to adapt to those changes will be able to remain competitive.

Being able to read all your reading assignments and additional reading selections with increased comprehension and recall will be a pre-requisite for anything you plan to do in the future.

The difference between a good mark and a great one will depend on your ability to read and learn on your own.

Power Reading is the Solution!

Power Reading is an eight-step video course that was developed on a college campus and initially designed for college students. With recent developments in video and computer graphics technologies, this course can now be offered on video, allowing you to learn in the privacy of your own home — at your own pace.

FOR MORE INFORMATION ON POWER READING CALL
1-800-361-1222
1011-FREE BY CANADA AND THE US (24 HOURS)

Power Reading will send you a 30-minute introductory video and halt you just $9.95 plus tax (includes shipping and handling).

One Night in Your Life

54-40
Stages
BY IAN MOREY
The Queen's Journal

Now, I must admit I claimed I didn't know much about 54-40 when I got this assignment. But when I received the set list, I discovered I was far more familiar with the Vancouver band than I had previously imagined. When I saw the titles of the songs, the melodies rushed right into my head. I began to look forward to the show more than ever.

The set started off with "Nice to Luv You," the first single from the band's most recent album Dear, Dear, a song which enjoyed a lot of radio and video play. Lead singer and rhythm guitarist Neil Osborne was a great focal point for the band. He let the music flow through him in the most sinuous, snake-like way. He also made a speech about the plight of his native B.C. forests before going into "Miss You" from 1990's Fight for Love.

The rest of the band had a lot of vigour as well, and given the law of conservation of energy, I figure it could only have come from the audience! Stages—truly the hub of Kingston's nightlife—was packed by 10:30, and during the band's more energetic songs, people got passed up to the front of the stage.

Crowd favourites included the powerful "She La," also from the last album, and two well-loved cuts from the band's debut, the raucous, feedback-laced "Baby Ran" and "I Go Blind." The evening ended on a high note with an extended version of "One Day in Your Life." All these songs were heavily anticipated by the crowd, who were driven into a frenzy when they were played.

It is really a shame that 54-40 haven't received the level of commercial success afforded other bands of their talent. The club circuit may allow for more intimate concerts and a more direct connection with the audience, but playing in the minor leagues is a difficult grind for even the toughest of bands. So next time 54-40 come to town, do yourself a favour: see a solid show by a solid Canadian band and spread the good word.

A Shoestring Debut Worth Catching

A fine day for busking and gunplay in El Mariachi.

EL MARIACHI
Directed by Robert Rodriguez
Princess Court Cinema
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

Two strangers dressed in black separately enter a small Mexican border town, each unbeknownst to the other [cue: tumbleweed]. Each carries a guitar case, one holding its intended instrument. The former is an itinerant musician—El Mariachi—while the latter is a hitman taking part in a deadly underworld conflict. Faster than you can say "Ay Carumba!" the wide-eyed musician is mistaken for said hitman, and, with the aid of a sultry bar owner, must defend himself by any means necessary.

Sound uncomfortably like the plot of some Monkees episode? Actually, El Mariachi is as dynamic an example of low-budget filmmaking as you're likely to see this year. The familiar elements of the film's rather thin plot are more than compensated for by its unsettling blend of humour and nihilism, and the razor sharp editing of writer/director/producer Robert Rodriguez. The result is a cocky debut with a style that brings to mind Godard's Breathless, and the works of Sergio Leone and Sam Peckinpah.

The story behind El Mariachi has attracted as much attention as the film itself, and justifiably so. The average cost of a Hollywood film is now in the neighbourhood of $25 million, and even comparatively cut-rate Canadian features check in at $1 million. In recent years, there have been increasing numbers of Cinderella stories involving films made on the director's credit card (notably John Singleton's Boyz n the Hood). But even these pale in comparison to the genesis of El Mariachi.

Remarkably, the film was shot in Mexico for a scant $7,000, an amount which would buy one day's lunch on a Hollywood shoot. Rodriguez, then a 23 year-old still studying at the University of Texas, raised half the budget by checking into a hospital for a month's work as a guinea pig in the trial for a new cholesterol-reduction drug. Rodriguez shared the bulk of the production duties with high school chum Carlos Gallardo, who also stars in the title role.

The film was shot in fourteen days, each scene in one take, and was intended for sale on the Spanish video market, to raise capital for a "real" feature. Instead, Rodriguez, on a whim, sent a copy to a leading agent in Los Angeles, who liked what he saw and solicited the major studios. Ultimately, a deal was struck with Columbia (who had also picked up Boyz n the Hood), entailing North American distribution for El Mariachi, and future projects for Rodriguez, who suddenly found himself to be a "hot property".

On the festival circuit, El Mariachi was often mentioned in the same breath as Quentin Tarantino's Reservoir Dogs. Despite the films' thematic similarities, and each director's affection for gunplay, the final products remain profoundly different. Tarantino was "discovered" in pre-production, and Reservoir Dogs has the slick look and the cast to prove it. Despite Columbia's involvement in distribution (and blowing up the original 16mm print to 35mm), El Mariachi remains an exhibition of gonzo filmmaking, with tracking shots using a wheelchair and a script that occasionally limps to the ninety-minute mark. In many ways, it is a more exciting film to watch for this very reason.

Rodriguez's first production at Columbia is slated to be a $5 million English remake of El Mariachi. One hopes that the experience doesn't dampen the precocity of his talent, but the precedents don't bode well (most recently, Hollywood persuaded George Sluizer to hamstring his marvellous 1988 Dutch original The Vanishing). In its present state, El Mariachi stands as testament to the creativity of Robert Rodriguez, and signals a new talent in the emerging realm of Hispanic-American cinema.

The Disorder of Things

A CONTEMPORARY CURIOSITY CABINET
Agnes Etherington Art Centre
BY LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

Picasso and Paul Pecl. Cornelius Krieghoff and Jack Bush. What do these painters have in common? Guest curator Tobi Bruce groups these artists and others under the title "A Contemporary Curiosity Cabinet," currently showing at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. The initial premise of displaying rarely seen works from the Art Centre's permanent collection spawns three recurring themes which form sections within the display: Authenticity, Unrepresentative Work by the Artist, and Support Within the Collection. Holding the sections together is the motif of the curiosity cabinet, a structure born in the 16th century to house the various objects, treasures, and curiosities of the private collector. This historical motif becomes the context to consider the nature and purpose of a collection and how it has changed over the years.

The premise of the show creates a serious challenge: how to make a cohesive exhibition out of works connected only by their infrequent use in other exhibitions and their anomalous places within the Agnes Etherington collection. "A Contemporary Curiosity Cabinet" does not meet this challenge successfully and the result is a show that sets up a framework but fails to build upon it.

On entering the exhibition, the viewer is confronted with four lengthy introductory panels that outline the show's purpose and provide historical background. Tighter editing and less pedantry would have reduced this information to a more manageable length, which would maintain the reader's interest while establishing a framework for viewing the show.

The first section of works is "Support Within the Collection." This title is vague and the impact and usefulness of the accompanying text is reduced by a repetitive discussion of collecting rationale, and a general terminology which obscures the connections between the text and the works on display. Precise examples of collecting practices supported by the works on display would allow the viewer to understand why the works are anomalous and why they were collected.

When looking at a lithograph by Ferdinand Leger and a delightful crayon and ink drawing by Picasso, one wonders why these items are anomalies or curiosities. Why are these works infrequently displayed? What makes them worthy of display now? Regrettably, these questions remain unanswered. While it is not necessary to provide the viewer with comprehensive explanations of the rationale for the works' inclusion, the curator's decision to provide only artist, title and date information does little to guide the viewer to an informed conclusion.

"Unrepresentative Work by the Artist" is the strongest portion of the show. The juxtaposition of the artist's unrepresentative work with a photograph of a work showing his "typical style," combined with brief, clearly written text ensures that the viewer understands why these paintings are anomalous and, at the same time, how they are valuable in creating points of comparison within an artist's oeuvre.

The text introducing the section titled "Authenticity" raises thought-

The 1938 painting Trees by Jack Bush featured in the exhibit.

Courtesy of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre

provoking issues surrounding the practice of copying works of art and the modern redefinition of authenticity, but falls short when relating the concepts to the paintings shown. With the exception of Paul Pecl's White Baby Sleeps and the two sculpture copies, the labels for the individual works offer scant information and leave the reader wondering how the works were determined to be unauthentic or if they were always known to be copies.

The cohesiveness and clarity of the show are compromised by various factors. The exhibit attempts to address both the process of collecting and actual collection and the result is that neither issue is probed in depth. Labels for the individual works are inconsistent some are detailed, but many provide only basic cataloguing information. This leaves the objects to speak for themselves, which seems incompatible with the theme of the show: it is necessary to explain why these disparate objects can be ordered into a cohesive exhibit. These problems cause the show to resemble a curiosity cabinet far more than the curator intended: the viewer is faced with widely varying objects and it is often unclear why they are on display.

"A Contemporary Curiosity Cabinet" will be on display at the Agnes Etherington Arts Centre until October 10.

WHEN ONE FOR THE ROAD WAS ONE TOO MANY ...

VICTORIA HALL
545-6087

C.O.R. OFFERS YOU OR A FRIEND A SAFE, SUPERVISED, AND CONFIDENTIAL
PLACE TO REGAIN SOBRIETY

HOURS

Friday, Sept. 10: 6:00pm to 7:00am, Sept 11
Saturday, Sept 11: 12 noon to 7:00am, Sept 12

C.O.R. IS STAFFED BY A DETOX SUPERVISOR AND TRAINED STUDENT VOLUNTEERS.

Falling from Grace

SKYDIGGERS
Just Over This Mountain
Ire
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

For a few years, spanning two albums, and several live performances, I was willing to play along with the Skydiggers. Sure, they were hyper-earnest, their songs were more than a little repetitive, lead singer Andy "Your People Call it Corn, My People Call it Maize" danced like a chicken, and even my dad thought they were bland...but I was willing to forgive all this.

On their second album, last year's Restless, I heard progress, or so I thought: a dash of electric guitar, a hint of excitement. But if Restless was a step forward, the band's new release, Just Over This Mountain is the proverbial two steps back.

It has finally dawned on me that these guys wouldn't know a hook if they were impaled on one. That leaves twelve bland folk-pop songlets which are the musical equivalent of that "Extra Mild Colby" cheese that Via Rail serves: there's no flavour, so there's nothing to dislike, but then again there's nothing to like either. If the Skydiggers were a politician, they'd be Helen Cooper.

Literally, there's not much happening here either. On the last album, at least the band took some feisty shots at their old record company. Here, they're back to being mellow about such ground-breaking topics as missing one's girlfriend. Even the no-doubt very exciting prospect of being pulled down on top of said woman (in a song surprisingly entitled "Pull Me Down") fails to break the band's stupor, which, some sources say is induced by a potent cocktail of Darwin, Seanal, and Deep Woods Off. I will admit that I liked one line in "I'm Wondering": I'm feeling too good to believe in you...Are you feeling too good to believe in me?

But a lyric here and there does not an album make... just ask the Indigo Girls.

Caught in a charitable mood, I might concede that the title track is somewhat catchy with a bit of nice low, twangy guitar, and that "I Thought I Knew You" is a decent ballad. But ultimately, one has to be irritated by an album whose twelve songs sound exactly the same. Just Over This Mountain's one burst of innovation, on the song "Shimmy Up Those Words", consists of some goofy sounds which are frankly annoying.

Oddly enough, there seem to be hordes of people who appear untroubled by the band's apparent dearth of creativity (and yes, tragically, I was once one of them...I was young...In those dark years I even voted Tory). Indeed, at a recent performance in Toronto, there was a throng at the front of the room who, by the looks of it, thought they were at Lollapalooza. I did note with some satisfaction, however, that the bulk of the crowd was pasty-faced white guys who dance like Nightless birds.

But like too many Canadian bands, their success is based on longevity, rather than talent. The Skydiggers have travelled the college circuit more often than Blue Rodeo, and have milked Kingston dry (actually, the phrase "scorched earth policy" springs to mind). Stick around long enough, and you're bound to sell a few albums... how else can you explain The Guess Who? Helix? The Irish Rovers?

Yet, the life of the polemicist is a lonely one, so I'll concede that if you are still a Skydiggers fan, and like complacent (indeed, comatose) folk pop, you'll probably like this album. But I'd rather you didn't.

Life's map says: YOU ARE HERE

The question is:

WHERE DO YOU GO FROM HERE?

To help you find some alternatives:

CAREERS DAY '93

Tuesday, Sept. 21, 1993

10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.

JOCK HARTY ARENA

To make the most of Careers Day '93 attend the:

CAREERS DAY PREPARATION WORKSHOP

Thursday, September 16, 1993

7:00 p.m. Dupuis Auditorium

The importance of seeing Ernest

Would you like your other ear pierced as well?

Derek Yarnell

The Anger in Ernest and Ernestine
Written by Robert Morgan, Martha Ross and Leah Cherniak
Directed by Rob Catto
Studio 102 Productions
BY STEVE CAIN
The Queen's Journal

You always hurt the one you love...
If it feels good, do it...

Jingles are notorious conventions for apparently revealing something profound about human nature but, as is often the case, what they fail to tell is just as important. In the case of the two characters in The Anger in Ernest and Ernestine the above expressions lead them to ask "who is you, why are you hurting," and "if it doesn't feel good - what do you do?"

The play's use of such catch-phrases, which fail to answer the real questions in life, is quite apt. Ernest and Ernestine hide from each other as much as they reveal and this failure to be honest and openly communicate leads to the realization that jingles and mental games are not suitable frameworks for a healthy relationship.

Directed by Queen's drama student Rob Catto, The Anger in Ernest and Ernestine is this fall's first Studio 102 Production, a forum for student actors and directors to put small-scale - but large concept - plays, scenes and performances. Known for their innovation and risk-taking, the Studio 102 productions are inexpensive yet invaluable excursions for anyone interested in the dramatic arts. This first production is no exception to the rule.

Written by a Toronto drama collective, The Anger in Ernest and Ernestine is the story of a young couple who move into their first basement apartment and begin to recognize each other's quirks, patterns, and annoying habits. Through a series of humorous (and often disturbing) vignettes, we come to see the gradual dissolution of the relationship, which culminates fatalistically. Although the plot is fairly straightforward and linear, the authors have chosen this structure to explore the intricacies and sub-levels that exist within every relationship. This exploration works remarkably well.

The play is ostensibly a comedy, typically one of the most difficult genres to pull off successfully, and this difficulty is often compounded when it is a two-person play. Playing straight-man versus clown is usually the standard technique, but in Ernest and Ernestine both Stephanie Baptist and Christopher Rosser are successful in making their characters well-rounded and completely their own rather than mere types.

Baptist is especially strong as Ernestine, the sloppy, fun-loving woman that possesses what Ernest characterizes as "pi-zazz." Her histrionics provide some of the darkest moments of the play, while her energy and conviviality create and sustain much of the play's humour.

Rosser is slightly less convincing as Ernest, more because of his scripping, rather than lack of obvious talent. Trying to swallow a character that is on one hand appreciative of the vibrancy and chaos of the natural world and has artistic aspirations, and on the other is meticulous and obsessive compulsive in his home life, is difficult. Indeed it was hard to see Rosser as a real person, rather than a character, albeit an interesting one. Nonetheless, Rosser is also admirable, quite hilarious in places and chillingly harsh in others.

The production values, for such a small scale, are also impressive. Of note is the large furnace, complete with red glow and rattling innards, that dominates the set, threatening to explode at any moment. The piece overlooks the entire production, almost becoming a character alongside Ernest and Ernestine and often reflecting their emotional states. Jonah Logan has created an extremely impressive visual piece which is also a very appropriate metaphor.

The ambient features of light and sound are also well done. The lighting effectively illuminates the soliloquies and monologues of the main characters, while the swing soundtrack - borrowing heavily from Cole Porter and Nelson Riddle - harkens to the opening credits of many Woody Allen films. This is appropriate, as with her floppy hat and awkward mannerisms, Baptist recalls Annie Hall, while Rosser, with his neuroses and puritanical attitudes towards sex seems to be an Alvie Singer type.

The Anger in Ernest and Ernestine is, in whole, a great play. Catto's production is accessible enough to entertain the infrequent drama patron, yet innovative and disturbing enough to showcase the talents - both in directing and acting - of the Queen's Drama Department.

The Importance of Ernest and Ernestine will be performed on September 16 & 18.

Beverly Hills 90210
Fox/Global
BY JANE MUNDELL
The Queen's Journal

It seemed like every time I turned on the TV this summer, Donna Martin was graduating. Tortured by reruns, I was anxious for the new season of Beverly Hills 90210 to start just so I could roll my eyes about a new and hopefully more exciting plot twist. What was going to happen to the gang? Would they survive their last summer together? Would Brenda (what a bitch!) be back on the show if she was going to be at school in Minneapolis? Would they get new wardrobes? What about their hairstyles? My questions had to be answered.

Luckily, with the arrival of this year's fresh came the 90210 season premiere. For those of you without TV's, here's the scoop on what happened... It's two weeks before school starts and Steve has been asked to look after a beach house in Malibu. He, of course, invites his good buddy Brandon along and the two of them go there to "see how the other half lives" (half of what I'm not quite sure). They also decide to throw a goodbye party there for Brenda (ugly brown elastic-like dress and chic Doc Martin black boots). Andrea has decided to attend California U instead of Yale. Kelly and Dylan are supposed to be in France for another two weeks, but all of a sudden, Kelly (now sporting the no bangs look) shows up at the house. Where's Dylan, you ask? Be patient.

The house gets trashed and when Brandon goes back in to start cleaning up the next morning, he is confronted by a gorgeous brunette brandishing a container of mace. Hearing the noise, Steve rushes in to help. The stranger is the houseowner's daughter, Jill, the older woman who taught Steve how to french kiss. Celeste, the current woman in Steve's life, is not too happy about the encounter. In a bit of jealousy, she warns, "You'd better just remember where your bagel's buttered, buddy!"

Meanwhile, back at the ranch... Brenda and her mother have just arrived in Minneapolis. They're touring the town with annoying cousin Lindsey and with Grandma, and talk is only of questions about life in Beverly Hills, the brutality of Minnesota weather, and the wealth of mosquitoes there. Brenda is none too happy. When the questions about celebrities continue at the dorm, this time from junior-high-best-friend and now roomie Darla Hanson, Brenda retorts, "It's not like I'm Brenda Walsh, I'm Brenda Beverly Hills!" Life sure is rough. Question: Why does school start two weeks earlier in Minneapolis? Something to ponder.

We go back to California, where Kelly is trying to help David (will probably become mouse king this season - short spiky hair in front of head) find an apartment. Melrose Place is suggested, but quickly axed. Kelly admits to Donna that - horror of all horrors - not only did Dylan not get admitted to Berkeley, but the two of them have broken up! (SHHH! No one else is supposed to know!) Meanwhile, they find a great place on the beach and since there's a 3-bedroom available upstairs, Donna, Kelly and David decide to move in together. Sounds great, right? Wrong! Donna's mother will let her live with Kelly, but not with the boyfriend. Will Donna go against Mom's wishes? We'll have to tune in next week to find out.

The show closes back in Minnesota. Brenda has just left to attend a big bash at the Kappa House when the phone starts to ring. We cut to a phone booth where Dylan (bushier hair, less mousse, but we don't really get a good look at the full 'do) is told by a woman with a broken accent that there is no answer. Once again, tune in next week to find out what happens.

For those of you who don't like this university-age version of Beverly, there's a new show out there for you. Madison, a program about "high school in the 90's" premieres on Global September 21 at 8pm. I guess I'll have to check it out.

Radio Daze

CFRC is the campus radio station located in the basement of Carruthers Hall. Some of this week's highlights to look for include:

- The CFRC CO and I Still giveaways at the ASUS Sidewalk Sale on Friday, September 10 in front of Ellis Hall.
 - Live coverage of the Queen's Golden Gaels Football vs. Ottawa U at Minto Field at 2 pm on Saturday, September 11.
 - Interviews with Sloan, Dig Circus, Lowest of the Low and Thrush Hermit at approximately 1:00 pm, Saturday, September 10.
 - Tryouts for anyone interested in doing play by play commentary of football, hockey and basketball on Wednesday, September 15 at 7:30 at the station.
- CFRC is also seeking correspondents for a forthcoming magazine show—apply now at the station, no experience necessary.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas on Friday to check listings.

MOVIES	Time
Benny and Joon	9:00
Sunday
Benny and Joon	7:00
El Mariachi	9:00
Monday
Benny and Joon	7:00
El Mariachi	9:00
Tuesday
Henry V	7:00
Benny and Joon	9:35
CLUBS
AJ's HANGAR
Friday	Leslie Spit Treo
Saturday	Leslie Spit Treo
THE TOUCAN
Friday	Dr. Teeth
Saturday	Imbrods & Uncle Remus
Sunday	Melting Pat Blues Jam
Monday	Masafa
BEN'S PUB
Friday	John Jude
WELLINGTON
Friday	Jerry O'Kane
Saturday	Jerry O'Kane
Monday	Blue Monday with The Shadows
GRAO CLUB
Friday	Masafa
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
394 Princess St. 546 FILM
Friday
El Mariachi	7:00
Benny and Joon	9:00
Saturday
El Mariachi	7:00

GET AN "A" FOR ORGANIZATION!

GET YOUR quo vadis DIARY

Textagenda diary with Magister cover. Available at all fine stationers and bookstores.

What's Up?

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

- The Arrogant Worms will be performing at Alfie's. Doors open at 1pm.
- The Kingston Chinese Christian Fellowship will be holding a Welcome Back gathering at 7:30pm in Mac-Corry Hall, Room D230.
- Queen's Muslim Student Association Joint Halaga/Islamic Study Circle, International Study Hall, JDUC, 7:00pm.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

- The Parkinson 10KM Run will be held at 11am starting at the St. Lawrence College Gym.
- Queen's Muslim Students Association will be holding the Kingston Muslim Youth Annual Tea in the McLaughlin Room, JDUC, at 1:30pm.
- AIESEC Orientation Leaders Meeting will be held today. AIESEC Orientation Leaders should call Melanie Muldoon at 547-9482 for details.

YOU'VE GOT A SHARE...

- Payment of your AMS fee guarantees you a vote and a voice at AMS general assemblies.
- gain valuable skills and experience.
- take advantage of events, services and publications.
- always at the lowest price.
- get involved in the largest organization on campus.

POSITIONS NOW AVAILABLE in the Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Communications and Education Commissions. Applications available at the AMS Office or by calling 545-2725. Deadline 12 Noon, Sept. 25. (Sept. 17 for Education Commission).

FEATURE — QSCSG

- QSCSG is a gathering of volunteer organizations who provide valuable services to Queen's and the Kingston community. The Student Affairs Center (better known as the Grey House) has lounge areas, meeting rooms and limited kitchen facilities available for student and community use at no charge. Please feel free to come by the Grey House or contact QSCSG co-ordinators at 545-2958.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

- Queen's Muslim Student Association will be holding a Welcome Back Dinner, 6:30pm at the International Study Hall, JDUC.
- Queen's versus McGill Rugby Game, Kingston Field, 1pm. Be there!
- Queen's Christian Fellowship is having a Worship Service at 7pm in the McLaughlin Room, JDUC, followed by the Coffee House at 9pm in the Lower Ceildh, JDUC.

UPCOMING EVENTS

- The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society is hosting an Eat and Greet at the Quiet Pub, Wednesday, Sept. 15 from 6pm to 8pm. All Arts and Science students are welcome.
- The 1st ASUS Assembly will be held Tuesday, Sept. 21 at 7:30pm in the McLaughlin Room, JDUC.
- Applications are now available for ASUS Buddies at the Core, 183 University. Join by filling out an application and dropping it in the box at the Core or in Victoria Hall.
- The First Annual ASUS Buddies Breakfast will be held Sunday, Sept. 26th at Upper Ban Righ Cafeteria.
- ASUS ELECTIONS will be held October 13th and 14th. Nominations will be open Monday, Sept. 20th through Thursday, Sept. 27th. Campaigning starts October 5th at 12:00am and ends October 12th at 8pm. For further information contact Stephanie Lane or Jason Markwell at 545-6278.

FILL US IN!

HI! I'M WITH THE AMS

This year look for your AMS Council walking around campus in red shirts with this writing on it. When you see one of us, why don't you Fill Us In! Ask for a "fill us in" form and let us know what you are thinking - your (anonymous) comments and criticisms, ideas and rambles are welcome! We can guarantee that your form will go to the people most directly responsible for the area of your concern. Then, turn to the What's Up Page to find out what's been done about it...

Remember: If you don't talk to us, we can't do our jobs right.

WAIT - PLEASE DON'T LEAVE

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission

What's up page forms available at the AMS office 545-2732

You could fill this space.

Entertainment needs contributors!

Come to the Journal House or Call 545-2800 and ask for Rob or one of his merry elves.

Letterman laughs on

Continued from page 29

friend) Tom Brokaw who confiscated two cue cards, citing them as "the intellectual property of NBC." In rebuttal, Letterman shamelessly remarked, "Who would have ever thought the words 'intellectual property' and 'NBC' would ever be in the same sentence?"

In all likelihood, the Late Show will remain successful in the late night arena. Letterman has already established himself as a talk show mainstay, and he has little to fear from the newcomers. His cult following will undoubtedly allow him to meet Leno head-on, and if he continues to book high profile guests like Billy Joel, Robin Williams, Demi Moore and Vice-President Al Gore, then he should have no problem in drawing a share of Leno's audience as well.

The real battle which Letterman needs to win is not with Leno, nor with the viewers, but rather with himself. As a recent article in Time reveals, Letterman is acutely insecure and suffers from an inferiority complex. Regardless of whether or not NBC slighted Letterman when it handed the Tonight Show to Leno, the experience has nonetheless depressed, if not traumatized, the gap-toothed host.

Letterman has always idolized Johnny Carson. His early stints as guest host of the Tonight Show were a dream come true for the Indiana native, and with a taste of the limelight, Letterman began salivating for the opportunity to succeed his mentor. His failure to do so, however, has made Letterman (in his mind at least) into a modern day Tantalus - no matter how brilliant, his best efforts are always frustrated.

Just look to a few of Letterman's jokes for hints of his anxiety about his CBS endeavour. Although the subjects for his Top 10 Lists are innocent by themselves, the contents are sometimes curiously self-deprecating. For instance, respective answers to "Signs that your new job isn't working out" and "Names for the new show" were "You see CBS president having lunch with Conan O'Brien" and "The million dollar mistake."

As much as Letterman adores his new employers, it is obvious that he is somewhat uncomfortable with the way in which they are advertising his show. The summer promos billed the Late Show's debut as if it were the Second Coming, much to Letterman's chagrin. Acknowledging CBS's "low key" approach to marketing, Letterman sarcastically explained, "This is not a promo. This is the real show! ... Ladies and gentlemen, the Gulf War didn't get this kind of coverage!"

In addition to competing with Leno and the Tonight Show, Letterman must also contend with the legacy of Ed Sullivan. That the Late Show broadcasts out of a refurbished Ed Sullivan Theatre is enough to establish the comparison between the two hosts. Indeed, by using clips of Ed Sullivan to introduce Paul Newman and Matt Love, plate spinner extraordinaire, the producers have unwittingly cast Sullivan's shadow over Letterman. As Letterman himself admits, Ed Sullivan is a touchstone of American TV culture, and to surpass (and even equal) his accomplishments, Letterman must not only be enduring, but also pretty damn innovative.

Out of all the current late night shows, Letterman's program is probably the closest thing to a "variety show." Letterman has always produced a hodge-podge of inane ideas (recent antics include making crank calls on his new car phone and taking pot shots at the production crew with a starter pistol). And with its improvisational spirit (from Paul Newman standing up in the audience and asking "Where the hell are the singing cats?" to Debra Winger tearing off her clothes and running out in a Wonder Girl outfit), the Late Show is truly the one hour of TV in which anything can happen.

As the kicker to the Time article states, "David Letterman is the man of the hour in late night. Now if he can only learn to enjoy it." If past performance and early ratings mean anything, then Letterman really has nothing to feel insecure about. He ought to be on TV for another eleven years, and he should have no difficulty outlasting Leno, Chevy Chase and O'Brien. The only thing he really needs to do is sit down and relax. The only thing Dave should worry about is unexpected house guests and Connecticut speeding tickets.

NEWMAN HOUSE

(Your Queen's Catholic Chaplaincy) and

ST. THOMAS MORE PARISH

Welcome new and returning faculty and students to join us for FELLOWSHIP and WORSHIP

SUNDAY LITURGY at DUNNING AUDITORIUM - 11 AM
DAILY MASSES AT NEWMAN HOUSE (192 FRONTENAC ST.)

Tuesday - 5:15pm
Wednesday - 12:30pm
Thursday - 5:15pm
Friday - 12:30pm

Thursday Night Suppers at Newman
5:45pm - only $3.00

Drop by 192 Frontenac or give us a call at 546-2495

TOMORROW'S ENERGY

BE A PART OF IT.

We look for it in the bright ideas, specialized knowledge and leading-edge skills of today's graduates.

It is the kind of energy that fuels PanCanadian's ongoing activities as a Canadian leader in the exploration, development and marketing of crude oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids.

It is the kind of energy we are proud to put to work - to meet today's needs, and those of tomorrow. To find out more, please visit our booth at the upcoming Career Fair.

PanCanadian Petroleum Limited

Human Resources
150 - 9th Avenue S.W.
Calgary, Alberta T2P 2S5
Telephone: (403) 290-3119

Bar-Room Blitz

The Shot

Location: Garfield at Division

Originally conceived as pool establishment, The Shot has quickly become a hot spot of Kingston nightlife. Filled with Queen's football players and frequented by the "in" crowd, The Shot is the place to make your future business connections and live a lifestyle of the rich and famous. If your nightly aspirations for a night on the town are less pragmatic, jazz bands such as Haskell and the Cleavers are featured occasionally, and the pool tables are in excellent condition which makes for a good game if your lucky enough to have the connections to get on a table. With art by Queen's Fine Arts Students hanging on the wall, the decor is a nice touch, but don't stare at the walls too long because that's just not "cool."

Linos

Location: Princess and Division

Located in a quiet corner of Kingston, Linos has long been offering the appeal of 24 hour dining to Queen's students. From allowing you to pull an all-nighter to issuing emergency poutine rations, Linos aims to please. Highlights of its colourful history include it being the location where a world record for consecutive hours waited took place, and of course there is the infamous peanut butter sandwich anecdote. The food is serviceable if you stay away from the royal burger, but most people stick to poutine anyway. Something to remember: if you are an obnoxious trouble maker stay away from Linos as it tends to attract its share of beely Kingston locals bent on destruction.

The Quiet Pub

Location: upstairs in the JQUC

The QP is the smallest campus bar, and is often packed as a result. With wood panelling, sofas, and even a fireplace, the atmosphere is decidedly homey. A small selection of beers on tap and a substantial drink menu provide the complements to the evening's entertainment, whether it be occasional folk performers, large screen TV or movies (the best place to catch 90210 on Wednesdays and The Simpsons and Seinfeld on Thursdays - get there early!), or simply conversation with friends. An antidote to the throng of Alfie's and the stickiness of Clark, the QP has a reputation for being an upper year hangout, though it promises a good night out for anyone.

Stages

Location: Princess and Division

Though the glory days of the leopard skin wall coverings are gone, Stages still boasts of being the "hub" of Kingston's night life. Live entertainment ranges from Canadian "name" bands such as Bootsauce, to Led Zeppelin and Seattle Sound cover bands, but Stages remains the home of dancing 'til 3 a.m. Put on your Playboy sportswear and shake your booty with the Kingston jet set, secure in the knowledge that the throbbing disco beat is driving the patrons of the neighbouring Princess Court Cinema to distraction. Classy features like "Ladies Night" and some sort of money dropping shtick add to the fun. A popular setting for smokers, it's always packed on weekend evenings. Enjoy!?

Toucan/Kirkpatrick's

Location: 76 Princess

Although outwardly labelled as two separate establishments, The Toucan and Kirkpatrick's are in fact the bar equivalent of Siamese twins, being two bars connected in one location. Upstairs

Kirkpatrick's offers a good menu at moderate prices within the setting of a low key British pub. The Toucan, while incorporating the same British style, features many upcoming local bands. The Mahones and J.O.Y.V. are two regular headliners, while growing bands like The Inbreds are frequently crowded onto the "micro-stage" (although the I-shaped room provides remarkably ill-suited sightlines). Go down, hoist a pint of Guinness, but watch your intake, 'cos you might be tempted if it's open mic night.

The Kingston Brewing Co. (a.k.a. The Brew Pub)

Location: 34 Clarence St. (between King and Ontario)

As its name suggests, the Brew Pub is a comfortable home for any aficionado of the amber nectar. Notable among its roster of beers are the Brew Pub's home-brewed Regal Lager and the aptly-named Dragon's Breath Ale (although the price of these pints isn't as cheap as it might be). The front patio affords a view of the inevitable drunken congregation at the back door of Dollar Bill's, and thus the back patio remains the locale of choice for those in the know (such as no less a personage than Mayor Helen Cooper, who has been seen more than once qualifying in the Pub's environs). Lunch and dinner are available, as well as the obligatory snacks. A handy location a mere spit away from the waterfront rounds out the attributes of this enjoyable spot.

Clark Hall Pub

Location: Above the Campus Bookstore

Clark Hall Pub is like your best friend's rec room with larger appliances. You don't have to dress up or bankrupt yourself since the atmosphere is casual and the prices are some of the lowest in town. Clark plays a wide range of music, but specializes in the stuff that the other pubs don't play - fans of Ministry, Public Enemy and Rage Against the Machine will love this place. The pub features a dance floor/mosh pit, a new raised "patio area", an new and even louder stereo system, a quick self-serve bar and little niceties like headrests in the washrooms. Clark is the home of Friday Afternoon Ritual, a pre-weekend evildrome of suds, subs and subwoofers, Mondays through Wednesdays are usually smoker nights, Thursdays feature the Science Formal Smoker and everyone loses their mind during Psycho Saturday. If you're looking for a break from cheese-filled Bitt-and-Mully establishments, this is it!

Robert's Club Vogue

Location: Princess and University

A popular spot for those practising alternative lifestyles, Robert's Club Vogue offers a dance-floor pulsing with the rhythms of heavy techno and acid rock. For those of you who pass by and see little going on in the front room, buck up and stroll in, because most of the action happens deep within the bowels of the building. The action doesn't get going until usually 11:00 or 12:00, but there is no cover before 10:00. The music is fairly loud and it is not recommended for those wanting to have a quiet conversation, but otherwise an interesting place with interesting people.

AJ's Hangar

Location: Princess & Division

One of Kingston's larger bars (like Stages, it occupies an old movie theatre) A.J.'s is in fact cavernous (we're still waiting for that plane mounted from the ceiling to crash on a platoon of unsuspecting RMC students) though frequently crowded. Beloved by some for promotions such as Friday afternoons' Ghetto Getaway, the bar remains a prime venue for catching some good Canadian bands (frequent performers include the Leslie Spit Tree-O, the Skydiggers, The Phantoms, and hometown cock-rockers The Pariahs). The bar's upstairs portion, shamelessly promoted as The Singing Frog, is surely one of the greatest marketing illusions since the New Coke. The upstairs is no different from the downstairs, just one flight up. Of course, at Princess and Division, A.J.'s greatest attribute remains: location, location, location.

The Chinese Laundry Cafe

Location: 291 Princess (at Clergy)

Despite its decidedly un-politically correct name, The Chinese Laundry Cafe remains one of the more popular student hangouts. It is well-known for a particularly vexing paradox: exceptionally fine products (delectable desserts, a wide range of coffees, other scrumptious food and drink fare) served by an alarmingly surly staff. Nevertheless, the attractive decor and crowded cosiness still make the Chinese Laundry a fine choice for a drink and some sweets after a movie or just about anytime.

Caribbean Club

Location: Ontario Street at Princess

Yrie! The Caribbean features ska, reggae and dancehall music every Friday, Saturday and Sunday. They serve good Jamaican fare from patties, to roti, to a very good jerk chicken platter. During the week, the Caribbean club has something for everyone. It has the only alternative music night in downtown Kingston every Monday night with Super Cool DJ Sinky Poo-Poo. Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays feature local bands. Keep an eye open for their cheap draft deals!

Dollar Bill's

Location: Market Street, just off Ontario Street

"Everybody, do the funky wah-wah... Shake your backyard..." Yes, it's Dollar Bill's, Kingston's favourite dance bar cum meat market. Fortunately, the fun doesn't stop with the oh-so-punny name! Join the Queen's and RMC hordes shoehorned onto the dance floor and gyrate to the all-hits music mix as you look for love and possibly antibiotics. A guaranteed hot spot on any weekend evening, and a frequent smoker host, Dollar Bill's is the perfect place if you're downtown and lookin' for a little of the old dance 'n' drool.

Alfie's

Location: Underneath the JQUC

When the good Scottish folk who founded this university came across the pond they brought more than just Chieftains and Oil Thighs; they brought a love and respect for their pubs and a local. Bearing the weight of this tradition for many years now has been Alfie's, where, through a complex process of naturalization, the esteemed British pub tradition has been cross-fertilized with the precocious hormones of Canadian university students in form a nasty brew of sweat, stale ale and assorted bodily fluids.

Alfie's is a pub where men who want one night stands meet women who are looking for something more substantial, all in an atmosphere conducive to clouded judgement. Located in a suitably damp and dark location, Alfie's not only serves the socializing needs of the Queen's community, it is an institution in itself.

Drawbacks of Alfie's include the beer: buying a pitcher is somewhat akin to playing Russian roulette - you may or may not survive the experience, but it is probably wiser just not to play. Of course you can always buy bottled beer. Week-day nights often see bands of all sorts of stature arriving to play. Last year Sloan garnered only a handful of the curious, while this year they are headlining the Frosh Week Show. One note of warning to Frosh - arrive early (and I mean early) for your Smoker and prepare to be crushed if you want to get in.

JJ's Bistro Bar

Location: 409 Johnson Street (at the corner of University Avenue)

Situated in the heart of the Ghetto, JJ's Bistro Bar is perhaps the most underrated of off-campus restaurants. With a diverse menu and a warm atmosphere, JJ's is a great eatery to either grab a quick dinner or to enjoy a relaxing cappuccino.

Whether you're in the mood for hearty serving of poutine or for a stuffy slice of turtle cheese cake, for a pint of Upper Canada Draft (and under $4 too!) or for a cafe au lait, JJ's offers a wide selection of food to please even the most finicky of patrons. All items are priced under $5.00, and for the cost a greasy McDonald's meal deal, you can enjoy anything from a delicious grilled steak sandwich in a generous serving of Alaskan crab salad.

Having an chic up-scale decor, JJ's is undoubtedly the cleanest spot in the Ghetto. And since it is an owner-operated establishment, the service is always friendly. Although they may be busy waiting table or cooking the next Philly Melt, the owners always manage to stop and chat. While sometimes a tad smoky, JJ's is nevertheless the perfect place to unwind. On most nights the TV is usually tuned to the ball-game, and the ed player can be spinning anything from Mile Davis to Cat Stevens.

So if you're looking to escape the rat race, and if you're interested in an impromptuous nook to dine, travel no further than Johnson and University - JJ's Bistro Bar is definitely for you.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN ATHLETIC ADMINISTRATION OR INTERUNIVERSITY ATHLETICS?

There are two positions open on both the WIAC and MIAC committees. For further information, contact the Internal Affairs Commission.

Only Scotiabank chalks up a no-fee* banking package for students.

If there's one thing we know about students, it's that sometimes they run on a tight budget.

And since we were the first Canadian bank to introduce a student package three years ago, it's something we've kept in mind.

If you're a full-time college* or university student, you're eligible for the Scotia Banking Advantage® package. This package includes a daily interest chequing account, an automated banking machine card, a Classic VISA card* and for qualified graduating students, an auto loan.

With Scotia Banking Advantage, you can also start establishing a good credit rating. Something that will be useful in the future.

So drop by your nearest Scotiabank branch and we'll show you all the ways we can help.

YOU COULD

-WIN $1,000 CASH-

IN THE SCOTIA BANKING ADVANTAGE SWEEPSTAKES!
 10 PRIZES OF $1,000 EACH TO BE AWARDED ON A REGIONAL BASIS
 Enrol in the Scotia Banking Advantage program by November 12, 1993, and you'll automatically be entered for a chance to win!

*The Bank of Nova Scotia registered user of mark. No monthly fee or minimum monthly balance. Community College, Technical Institute or Cegpp. *Registered Trade Mark of The Bank of Nova Scotia. (Subject to credit approval)

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUE ROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films.

Friendly Dartmarians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

WORDPROCESSING: $1.75 per page. Pick up and delivery. Essays, thesis, anything. Usually 24 hour service. Call Jennifer at 634-1151.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL group needs student with an interest in working with children - Call 389-1894 or attend Orientation at Sydenham United Church, September 13th or 16th at 6:30 p.m.

ALL NEW WOMEN to Queen's, welcome to Candlelighting '93, our 104th celebrations of women at Queen's!!! Sunday, September 26th, Grant Hall 4:30 p.m. Be there.

BOOKS! TEXTS! SHEET MUSIC! Annual Book Fair sponsored by the Women's Committee of the Kingston Symphony: Wednesday, September 15th 5 - 9 p.m.; Thursday and Friday 10 a.m. - 9 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. at the J.K. Lett Creativity Complex, 370 King St., W. (at Morton St. across from St. Mary's of the Lake Hospital).

ARE YOU A WICCAN? Willing to share in fellowship, spiritual growth and study? Contact The Stone Circle, c/o Chaplaincy Dept., Box 22, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V7 Attention: Aspen.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL GROUP: Returning tutors please call 389-1894 or come to Orientations September 13 or 16, 6:30 p.m. Sydenham United Church.

TRY THE SOAPBERRY SHOP minted loot balm, made with menthol to give a refreshed tingling feeling to tired feet. Peppermint oil and lanolin help it penetrate, deodorize and counteract swelling. 545-1028, 122 Princess Street.

ALL NEW WOMEN to Queen's, welcome to Candlelighting '93, our 104th celebrations of women at Queen's!!! Sunday, September 26th, Grant Hall 4:30 p.m. Be there.

EXPERIENCED caregiver needed for 1 and 3 year old in our home near Queen's, 1 to 3 days per week, call 542-7022.

DO YOU NEED a part-time job? Work for the Queen's Telethon - keeping in touch with and raising funds from alumni. Applications in Rm. 303, Old Medical Bldg, or in the AMS office.

DO YOU WANT to help Queen's? Earn $6.35 an hour raising money and information from our alumni. Queen's Telethon applications are available in Rm. 303, Old Medical Bldg, or in the AMS office.

DO YOU HAVE SPIRIT? Queen's Telethon needs your help to call alumni to raise funds and gather information. Earn $6.35 an hour. Applications are available in Rm. 303, Old Medical Bldg, or in the AMS office.

AJ'S needs some energetic part-time help for the school year! Bartenders, floor staff, door persons and D.J.s, Assistant Manager/Smoker Booker. Apply at AJ's 393 Princess Street.

FOR SALE: Refrigerator perfect for apt. or rez. Barely used. Call 544-8672.

FOR SALE: I arm chair, 1 basket chair, 1 picture - Reasonable. Please call 548-3215.

STUDENTS! BARGAIN HUNTERS! Queen's Alumni Garage Sale. Saturday, September 18th, Bews Gym, Queen's Phys Ed. Centre. Students only 10 - 11 a.m. (bring I.D.). After 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. everyone welcome!

GARAGE SALE to benefit Queen's Daycare. Saturday September 11th, 9 - 4. Not just kids' stuff. Corner of Union and Albert, To donate (with pick-up) call Trina at 548-8646.

ARTSCI '96 JACKET FOR SALE, size 40 - never worn $200.00 or best offer. Call Liz at 531-4249.

FURNITURE FOR SALE/RENT: good chests of drawers, nightstands, desks, desk chairs, book-cases, reading chairs, tables, chairs. Matched sets or single items available. Reasonable rates. Call 546-4534 (messages please).

STUDENT DESK $40.00, cheap drapes, chair, bedside stand and engineering texts $2 each, baseball card singles, 70 lb bar bells, travel posters, shelving, numerous student items, near Cataract Centre. Call 389-7720.

COMPUTER FOR SALE: Zenith 286 for sale with flat Zenith VGA monitor. Call 544-8672 for more details.

ENJOY SAVING 35% off your long distance calls. Call All Plus at 546-SAVE(7283) or 531-9782 to register.

YARD SALE - Alfred at Union, Saturday September 11th. Mammoth yard sale in school yard. furniture, housewares, bedding, books. We've got what you need! Bake table too!

SAVE 35 % off your long distance calls, on top of the already discounted rates! To register or for more information call All Plus at 546-SAVE(7283) or 531-9782.

WINDSURFING BOARDS 1) Mistral stinger, 1991 (bought new in 1993), 8'8" 85 lbs. Hyperform fin and board bag. $850. 2) Bic Presto, 1993, 9'2" 120 lbs., Course Slalom design. Includes Board bag and two fins. $875. Call Bill at 545-6452 (w) or 384-2385 (h).

INEXPENSIVE DATA ACQUISITION boards designed and manufactured by Canadians from $139. Call London Research and Development at (519) 438-1933 for details.

YOU CAN REACH Jody Flato (Comm 93) in Toronto at (416) 254-4725.

TIM WILSON: Your over-the-summer antics at Vids in the Hall made it into the AMS is Hell + Love, Joey.

DANNY: At two in the morn, it doesn't seem like this will get any easier. The best incentive is knowing that you'll be waiting when I get home.

CJV AND TAW: Here's to another zany, crazy year with lots of disco, kegs of rum and cock and a brand new vcr. AD.

net surfing: URBAN LEGENDS

Internet, the global computer network, contains vast stores of exciting and entertaining facts, figures, and myths about our world. Here are some urban legends pertaining to university life, culled mostly from an Internet discussion called alt.folklore, which lists urban legends. Those marked T are true, F means false, and U indicates "unknown". We even threw in some Queen's-specific stuff.

A professor lists a famous unsolved problem as homework. A student thought it was a joke and solved it!

Some students found a rolled-up carpet and decided to take it home, only to find it contained a corpse.

A student killed him/herself during an exam by putting 2 pencils up his/her nose and hitting desk.

Science class students take a swab from the inside of a student's cheek and examine it under microscope. One group sees odd organisms and calls the professor who looks at it and states that it's sperm.

People's lawn gnomeselves were being stolen in a neighbourhood. Later the owners were letters which included pictures of their ornaments in exotic locations.

Some students have taken to re-painting black lawn jockeys all over Kingston as caucasians.

A guy is alone at home with his trusted dog sound asleep. He is awakened by a noise and his dog is frightened and reaches out to where his dog usually sleeps, and leaps back. He is comforted and goes back to sleep. When he gets up in the morning he is horrified to find his dog hanging in shower and a note by his bed which reads "humans can lick too".

A professor gives "announced" quiz to surprised class after putting ad in paper advertising that he will give a quiz.

A professor allows students to "bring in what they can carry for exam." A wise and witty student carries in a grad student.

A philosophy class has a 1 word exam: "Why?" A student who replies "Why not?" gets an A.

A professor notorious for low grading winds up grading the same exam in successive semesters, but gives higher grades each time. The fourth time around (or so), he writes: "Like you each time."

A student paid his tuition fees by putting an ad in the newspaper asking people for a donation of cent each.

A certain restaurant no more than eight blocks away from campus will give you a very special treat if you ask for "a peanut butter and jelly sandwich."

After a professor lectures his class on the sugar content of ejaculate, a student asks "Why is it taste so salty then?"

A student tries to cheat by submitting a twenty-year old paper for a class. The prof. gives paper an "A", saying that he always liked it but he only got a "B" when he wrote it originally.

Professor Donald "Art of Computer Programming" Knuth's 1st published article was in MAD magazine (MAD #33, "The Patzbie system of weights and measures")

A hat holds blood drive. A surprisingly high percentage of frat donors are HIV positive.

A guy dumps his girlfriend and it's an acrimonious break-up. Just to rub it in, he sends his girlfriend pictures of him and his new girlfriend engaged in an assortment of illicit acts. His girlfriend, unfazed, mails the pictures to the guy's parents.

what every frosh should know

Ah, university life! The freedom, moving in with my best friends Kelly and Donna, saying goodbye to Brenda, the new haircuts... wait a sec - that was the 80210 season premiere. But that doesn't make your experience here less relevant. Here are some useful tips for the Queen's neophyte (that would you, frosh) that your folks, your guidance counsellor and Linda Fram failed to mention.

- Under no circumstances should you buy highlighter markers. Highlighters find you into thinking you've read your textbook when all you've actually done is made it soggy with fluorescent dye. Highlighting your textbook and saying you've read it is akin to covering your fries with ketchup and then claiming you've eaten them. Treat highlighters as if they were Satan's twin racial thermometers...because they are!
- When microwaving food in the ovens at the Mac-Corry vending machine area, stand well away. The ovens are mounted at butt-to-fly-level and are probably quite leaky from daily hard dove-slammung. Your children will thank you for keeping your distance.
- Speaking of protecting your privates, you can save 75% on condoms by purchasing them at the Birth Control Centre in the Grey House (located beside Victoria Hall in Queen's Crescent). Stay away from the non-lubricated ones, which I think were really meant for pulling over your head and impressing other party-goers.
- Always check the money slot of bank machines near bars, especially those in the John Deutsch University Centre. Oftentimes a drunken patron will leave the bar for a minute to get some cash but forget to take the money. If your conscience bothers you, you can wait by the machine for a few minutes to see if the poor drunkard comes back for the cash.
- Don't forget Kingston's three P's: precipitation, patriarchy and penal institutions. Take precautions for all three.
- The cafeteria in residence have this belief that salad (it is like nature) it should be changed every three months and "tipped off" if it's running low. Use the raisin test to determine the age of salad dressing. Drop a few raisins in the salad dressing tubs every few days. Keep checking the bottom of the dressing tubs to see if they accumulate; if this happens, you know that the stuff's been sitting around for some time.
- In order to keep embarrassing or uncomfortable situations to a minimum, make sure that the number of people at Queen's with whom you sleep can fit comfortably in a mini-van.
- Despite what your guys might tell you, Kingston Police officers don't appreciate being yelled at or otherwise abused - and they won't forgive you if you invite them to your party. In all likelihood, they'll invite you over to THEIR place to spend the night - behind bars. Be responsible, the fines for noise-by-law violations and alcohol violations are heavy.
- If you're in residence, flip the mattress over if you already haven't done so! Trust me, it's far better to sleep on the side that's had 16 months to air out rather than four. Don't forget to make a tape of "romantic music" for those noisy romantic interludes...

History 101: Frosh Week

Making love, winning hearts, eating cat food, hazing, hurling and greasing poles

Here are a few tidbits from the Queen's Journal archives on the development of frosh week:

- 1882: The freshman class of 1882 was greeted with the cheery rhyme: "Wait until you are upperclassman, before you commence to play your parts. In making love and winning hearts."
- 1889: The Journal published a List of Etiquette to be quite rigorously observed by all freshmen.
 - Always remove your hat on meeting a senior.
 - Never speak to an upperclassman without being spoken to first.
 - Always say 'sir' to senior students.
 - Never sneeze in the presence of anyone but your own classmates, sophomores and the janitor.
 - Do not swear audibly at the registrar while in his office.
 - Above all, do not perpetuate such stale jokes as tampering with the gongs in the bell, painting the names of your glorious class on the buildings, or any such, the whiskers of which may be seen to glimmer with silver.
- Further, dating of any kind was prohibited for the entire freshman class before Christmas. This restriction was not removed until 1934.
- 1929: Though records are unclear, it appears that 60 freshmen were paraded down Princess St. in pajamas and taken over to the Capitol where they were pummeled by oranges, tomatoes, eggs and water.
- 1979: Because frosh week antics reached new heights, the City passed bylaws, one restricting noise, the other restricting alcohol consumption.
- 1984: As the first year engineers attempted to climb the grease pole, they were pelted with molins, beer bottles and frozen tomatoes. At least 25 frosh were seen in hospital with injuries ranging from a broken foot to several concussions.
- 1987: The sexist and obscene language in some chants traditionally taught to first-year students in Tindall Field was targeted as a trouble spot. Many upper year students were surprised when Queen's Student Council members stopped them from singing such familiar songs as Gang Bang and even Queen's Screener during the traditional 'hazing' session on Tindall Field.
- 1988: In an attempt to infuse the same gang ho spirit found in both Commerce and Engineering faculties into Arts and Science, the gaelic craze their own hazing ritual. Dana Spain (Gaelic for "evil struggle") was an hour long ordeal during which ArtSci frosh were pelted with whipped cream and canned cat food. The event was never repeated.
- 1992: According to Suzie Heinrich, campus activities commissioner, "The '96's are great. They're really spirited but in a controlled way. Overall everyone's done so much work and have been so effective, everything has gone really smoothly."

Does fabulous wealth mean taking the empties back?

Day-to-day banking charges on your account can add up. So if you're trying to stretch every dollar, drop in to Bank of Montreal where you can get a package of handy banking services, at one low fee of $2.75 a month, only for students! You can use our Instabank[®] machines as often as you want, and other Interac[™] banking machines two times a month, at no extra charge. Plus there's unlimited free cheque writing and unlimited withdrawals from your Bank of Montreal accounts. To find out more, just drop by your nearest branch. And while you're there, ask us how else we can make your life easier - low-interest Student Loans, Bank of Montreal MasterCard[®] + cards, and more. You might not have to take the empties back so often.

Call our Queen's Student Hotline for more information 545-3022

*Available to full-time students. See your local branch for complete details. Registered trade-mark of Bank of Montreal. Interac and design are registered trade marks of Interac Inc. Bank of Montreal is a registered user. *MasterCard is a registered trade mark of MasterCard International Inc. Bank of Montreal is a registered user.

FREE WHOPPER
Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Expires Sept. 31, 1993

FREE WHOPPER
Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Expires Sept. 31, 1993

WELCOMES BACK ALL STUDENTS

PARTY! FAVOURITES

COLA or SOFT DRINKS President's Choice™ 750 mL. btl. 5.2¢/100 mL plus deposit .99 / .39 2 L. cont. 5¢/100 mL non returnable	TORTILLA CHIPS no name® Club Pack™ 1.99 500 g pkg.	SALSA PICANTE PRESIDENT'S CHOICE™ extro hot or mild 4.99 850 mL jar
---	--	---

DECADENT COOKIES PRESIDENT'S CHOICE™ chocolate chip 400 g pkg.	DECADENT COOKIES <small>PLU 4082</small> PRESIDENT'S CHOICE™ chocolate chip 400 g pkg. FREE <small>with this coupon & minimum $20 order excluding prescriptions, tobacco products and this item additional quantities pay regular retail</small> <small>Limit one pkg. per coupon. Limit one coupon per customer. Coupon valid Sunday, September 5 to Saturday, October 9, 1993 at Loblaws Kingston stores only.</small>
--	--

SAVE! WITH CLUB PACK™

MACARONI & CHEESE DINNER no name® Club Pack™ 12 x 225 g pkg. 3.96	BATHROOM TISSUE PRESIDENT'S CHOICE™ G.R.E.E.N.™ 100% recycled 2 ply white Club Pack™ 24 roll pkg. 5.99
--	---

- CATARAQUI TOWN CENTRE
945 GARDINERS ROAD
- KINGSTON SHOPPING CENTRE
1040 PRINCESS STREET

Prices effective Sunday, September 5 to Saturday October 9, 1993 at Kingston stores only. Stores reserve the right to limit quantities.

QUEEN'S Journal

TD BANK OPEN YOUR TD ACCOUNT
JOHN DEUTSCH UNIVERSITY CENTRE
SEPT 13-17
FROM 9:00 TO 4:00
TD STUDENT PLAN FEES CUT IN HALF

Volume 121, Number 5 Serving the Queen's Community since 1873 Tuesday, September 14, 1993

Trash week gets canned

BY KAREN HALL
and ADAM EMERY
The Queen's Journal

The Senate's orientation watchdog committee decided Friday to shut down Transfer Student Orientation Week, or trash week, because of unsanctioned events and reports of alcohol consumption by members of the trash executive and trash eaders.

The Senate Orientation Activities Review Board (SOARB), informed the trash executive committee Friday that the rest of trash week, including the semi-formal and the closing ceremonies, was cancelled.

Problems with trash week began with a trash pool tournament at The Shot on Tuesday night. "There were reliable reports that some members of the trash executive and some trash collectors were drinking" at the pool tournament, said Amin Punjani, SOARB co-chair.

Like FRECs and Gaels, trash collectors must sign a contract stating, among other things, that they will not drink during frosh week.

Members of the trash executive were unwilling to comment on any aspect of the situation. Farceda Shueb and Mary-Anne Weisenhal, both members of the trash executive, made this statement: "We've met as a committee and decided not to comment on the situation to anyone."

Punjani said that trash organizers "should have had [Alma Mater Society] constables at the Shot... this was a 'wet' event" which SOARB was not aware of, he said. He described the confusion about the event as a "mutual breakdown between SOARB and the trash executive."

Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell said Monday that the trash executive "signed a contract over the summer with a full and complete listing of all events." The executive was told at least two times that all events had to be sanctioned, she said.

SOARB Co-Chair Dr. Jim Bennett commented that "it was certainly well-known" to the trash executive that events had to occur in the manner the organizers said they would. The trash executive admitted to Mitchell that the reports of their conduct on Tuesday night were correct, and "were reminded of their agreement with the AMS and its implications," Mitchell said.

Problems continued on Thursday night, with a house party.

"We were told that their plans included dinner at various houses, that the evening would be over at eight o'clock, and that the trash frosh would be walked directly to their homes from the dinners," retorted Bennett.

Punjani said that the trash executive "did not inform SOARB of the party," and that they admitted "they might have erred in not ensuring that the trash frosh were walked home."

SOARB met with the trash executive on two different occasions on Friday to discuss the party and the decision to shut down the week. Breaking the news to the trash frosh was left up to the executive, to "see

Eng. frosh elbow-grease conquers the pole. More photos page 12.
Morika Glickman

Not exactly greased lightning

BY NICK SMITH
The Queen's Journal

It took 186 minutes, and help from all four engineering classes, but the Applied Science class of 1997 finally did manage to complete its rite of passage and scale the 33-foot-high lanolin-coated greasepole Saturday morning to retrieve a tam nailed to its top.

Six school buses transported this year's frosh to the pole's "secret" location, a plot of land north-west of Kingston near the town of Murvale.

A new alcohol ban was introduced this year to make the event safer, and, according to Director of Queen's Security and Parking Howard Pearce, things went off without a hitch.

U-Haul trailers were also not allowed on the site, according to Pearce.

"Things went very well," Pearce said. "EngSoc [The Engineering Society] did a very good job."

Pearce said that no major incidents were reported, and that "there was no alcohol to be found."

Engineers expressed mixed reactions to an alcohol-free greasepole.

Matt Stokes (Eng. '96) said that he is in favour of the ban because the greasepole is "almost gone, and if it helps us keep it... awesome."

Greasepole veteran Stephan Trepanier (Eng. '92) described the event as "much more civilized" than it has been in previous years.

Eric Brombacher (Eng. '95) said that "frosh aren't given enough credit. If frosh are smart enough to get into Queen's, they should be smart enough to not drink if they don't want to."

Brombacher felt that alcohol at the greasepole was "never really

Please see GREASEPOLE on page 9

Please see TRASH on page 7

Frosh week winds up

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

Saturday marked the end of a successful frosh week for the Class of '97, who have earned their tams and spent a busy week meeting new people, going to a full slate of events, and adjusting to university life.

With the exception of problems with the transfer students' orientation week, leaders considered the week a great success.

"It went exceptionally well," Arts and Science Orientation Committee member Marlo Palko said. "We foresaw some crises and they never came about."

Duncan Parker, Engineering FREC Committee member, concurred. "Everything was excellent... it was a complete success in our eyes."

Frosh were quick to compliment their group leaders. Claire Smece, a first-year science student, said "the Gael leaders were so amazing. They're fantastic, they have so much spirit, and they're so much fun."

Since appreciated the fact that her group had the chance to visit her Gaels' houses, and were helpful in guiding them through the academic side of the week.

New students listed various events as the highlight of their week. The greasepole, the Arts and Science semi-formal, and Boris the hypnotist were very popular.

First-year engineer Rachel Claus, however, claimed that the highlight of her week was making it to the detox centre. Her night at Cocoon's was sufficient to ensure that she missed the greasepole on Saturday.

Claus was surprised by her FRECs. "I didn't think they were for real when I was looking through my primer in the summer," she said.

Others were most impressed by Queen's spirit. Amit Khanna, a Science frosh, said, "I never expected the spirit to be as much as it was."

Silvia Lulka, AMS Orientation Committee Chair and a member of SOARB (the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board), had high praise for the week.

"From a logistical point of view, the week was incredible. We had very few problems, and those problems were solved fast. We were really prepared, and things ran like clockwork."

Lulka has heard good words from others. "Overall, and I was told this by a number of people including Dr. Williams [Vice-Principal (Operations / University Affairs)], it was the most successful week yet."

The success of the week should speak well to continuing frosh week in the future, according to Lulka. "Things went really well and that'll help a lot when orientation is evaluated."

The frosh week of old, with its drunkenness and initiation-like approach, has been transformed. "There's very little hazing, it's more welcoming, and more inclusive," Lulka said.

Frosh generally found that the week met their expectations. While some bemoaned the fact that it was "more tame" than before, most people interviewed were satisfied with the week.

Trevor Mornes, a first-year Arts student, said, "it's a little shorter than I thought it would be, but more fun than I expected."

Inside NEWS

- PUBS 8
- EDITORIALS
- TRASH 14
- ENTERTAINMENT
- SLOAN 26

Quote

"When you arrive here with culture shock and jet-lag, the last thing you want to do is chant."
— Carrie Engelbrecht, International Floor Don on frosh week.

HAVE YOU DEDICATED YOUR LIFE TO THE TIRELESS PURSUIT OF:

PHOTOGRAPHY? SPORTS? ART / LITERATURE? DESIGN?

THEN THE TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK

WANTS YOU!

We require editors and staff in the above areas and more. Even if you just want to get involved and learn something new, we'd love to teach you!

Cheap CHEQUING For students only THE BEST STUDENT CHEQUING ACCOUNT DEAL IN TOWN Only $2.00 a month and you get Unlimited Cheque Writing Your Cheques Back Monthly A Monthly Statement A Chequing and a Savings Account Your Member Card so you can use Almost Any Teller Machine Anywhere! Low Cost Cheques

MOONLIGHT MADNESS THURSDAY, SEPT. 16TH STOREWIDE SPECIALS AFTER 6:00PM

WE OFFER A SELECTION OF AEROBIC CLOTHING, SWIMWEAR, FUNCTIONAL RUNNING & WORKOUT CLOTHING

FOOTWEAR BY:

RUNNERS' CHOICE

THE ATHLETIC FOOTWEAR & CLOTHING SPECIALISTS

260 PRINCESS STREET 542-2410

GRECOS 'Kingston's only Authentic Greek Food' Dining out - August 5th 1992 Kingston's newest Greek restaurant opened its doors one month ago to offer customers a total dining experience with a taste of Greece.

Frosh enjoy Sex with Sue

BY MONA HYDER-KHAN The Queen's Journal

Sex is natural, sex is fun. This was author and talk-show host Sue Johansen's message to over 300 Queen's frosh Thursday night at Grant Hall.

Johansen's books include Sex Is Perfectly Natural and Talk Sex, and her radio and television shows are heard nationwide.

Johansen began her speech by focusing on society's negative attitudes toward sex.

She encouraged "honest talk" between parents and their kids, saying that it was essential to do away with dangerous taboos.

Johansen explained that self-discovery is essential to developing healthy and normal sexual attitudes and behaviour.

Accordingly, she said that masturbation is normal for both males and females, even though some cultures teach that masturbation is wrong and immoral.

Myths that say that only gay men masturbate and that female masturbation causes infection or a loss of virginity create negative attitudes towards the self in both men and women, Johansen said.

Johansen noted that "parental injunctions don't work" in preventing teenage sex, adding that the fear tactics used in schools to teach students about sex are equally ineffective.

Johansen sees between 30 and 35 young adults a night at her clinic. One-third of her patients are girls who fear they are pregnant.

Johansen encouraged audience members to "talk about birth control" and to "talk about sexually transmitted diseases."

She answered questions that were primarily concerned with disease, birth control and orgasms.

She emphasized that sexual partners must be comfortable with themselves and their partner if sex is to be mutually enjoyable.

Johansen also cleared up some common misconceptions about AIDS.

She told the crowd that the virus can only be contracted from three bodily fluids: menstrual blood, ejaculation and lubrication from male or female genital areas.

With regards to protection and birth control, Johansen encouraged the use of both the pill and condom together.

She said that it was important to get tested for chlamydia, a very common and dangerous disease that may lead to sterilization if left untreated.

Sue Johansen talks sex with frosh Thursday night.

Marika Glickman

The deadline for opting out of the Alma Mater Society/Green Shield health plan and optional student interest fees is Oct. 1. To opt out, go to the AMS office in the lower level of the John Deutsch University Centre between Sept. 20 and Oct. 1. To opt out of the health plan, students must have proof of alternate extended health coverage.

The first AMS Assembly will be held on Sept. 16 at 7 p.m. in the McLaughlin room of the John Deutsch University Centre.

AMS Clubs Night will be held on Sept. 21 from 7-10 p.m. in the Jock Hartly Arena. Students can browse through the selection of clubs and associations at Queen's.

Student Health Services offers students confidential testing for HIV. Doctors will provide counselling both before and after the test, and all fees are covered by OHIP.

Queen's University, in accord with the Ontario Human Rights Code, does not include HIV antibody status in the admission process. According to the Queen's University Policy on AIDS, persons with HIV will receive priority for single rooms in residences and enjoy unrestricted access to classrooms, libraries, recreational and food service facilities.

Questions for the Oct. 13 AMS referendum will be accepted until Sept. 24. Campaigning will run from Oct. 1 to Oct. 12. The spending limit for each campaign is currently $150.

Conscience Canada is circulating a petition to support a private member's bill to establish a peace trust fund.

Ray Funk, MP for Prince Albert/Churchill River, Saskatchewan, is supporting a bill that would allow individuals to redirect the amount of their taxes that would go to military expenditure toward a peace trust fund established by the bill (C-414).

Conscience Canada said that this legislation "would end the present unacceptable situation where otherwise law-abiding citizens are running afoul of Revenue Canada with serious consequences for themselves and their families merely for exercising their profoundest beliefs with regard to participation in war and military activities."

For further information, contact Dorothy Lele at 549-4290.

University tightening its belt

Labs, courses suffer under budget crunch

BY LAURIE NORTH The Queen's Journal

Faced with a tight financial situation due to budget cuts from the provincial government, many Queen's departments are struggling to make ends meet.

Professor Robert Malcolmson, chair of the history department, noted that it is "increasingly difficult to offer the required sections to meet student needs."

Students entering fourth-year are particularly affected by section shortages. "Seminar sections are so small, a lot of students won't get into the courses they want," said student Rebecca Dunn.

Dunn said she feels frustrated because academic advisors "told us earlier in the year that certain required courses would be nearly impossible to get into."

However, she added, "they continue to offer courses which students aren't interested in," instead of the more popular seminars.

Politics student Tina Maser remarked that "it is becoming more competitive, making it tough for students. There are less people getting into honours courses."

Consequently, "if you are a medial student, you may get your second choice or nothing."

Financial cuts contribute to the difficulties of hiring new staff. Malcolmson said that ideally the history department would prefer to hire "lively minds" whose enthusiasm would benefit student learning.

However, with a tight budget, Malcolmson said it is difficult to compete with other universities that offer more desirable salaries for beginning professorships.

Despite the bleak financial situation, Malcolmson remains optimistic. He suggested that "by 1994, the rate of retirement will start to grow and will result in more financial flexibility, freeing more money to be shuffled around."

However, he said the recovered money will probably be used to pay off debts. Science students have noticed alterations to 'lab format. Clamian Chu, a biochemistry student, noted that the university now provides noticeably less lab materials.

In the past, Chu said, students have had the opportunity to dissect a specific flower, for example, but now only "look at a picture or diagram in a lab manual." Chu also mentioned that the biology department has "cut out parts of experiments that are in the lab manuals."

Dale Kristensen, a biology lab instructor, estimated that the current lab budget is only 75 cents per student. He said that this amount hardly covers supplies. As a result, students will notice a reduced supply of dissectible specimen, he said.

Not only will the students notice a reduced supply of dissectible specimen, but, with increased enrolment, Kristensen said "double lectures must be given, which cut into the professor's time."

This means less time for the professors to spend with students. At the same time, Kristensen noted, the department has eliminated four out of the five contract lab instructor positions.

Crowded labs have 28 students, exceeding the 20 student capacity.

"With a shortage of day sections, more night labs have to be offered," said Kristensen, adding that night labs inconvenience students with extracurricular activities and part-time jobs.

Kristensen noted that financial shortages make it almost impossible to replace antiquated equipment. Not only do "students have to share amongst four or five other students," said Kristensen, but archaic equipment is rather disillusioning for first-year students coming out of high school with visions of a technically-advanced university laboratory.

The Faculty of Law set up a Faculty Strategic Planning Committee to deal with the demands of budgetary constraints. Associate Dean Virginia Bartley said that the committee "will be looking more closely at budget cuts, what will be taught and whether the present seminar course selection is reasonable."

Unfortunately, Bartley said she foresees the possibility of seminar courses turning into lectures, with more students in the class than there should be for an effective seminar.

Last year, first and second year law students were polled to discover what seminar courses they wanted. Bartley remarked that the poll results were taken into consideration in deciding which seminar courses to eliminate.

Queen's School of Medicine is experiencing financial tensions from both the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Education and Training. Dr. Robert Maudsley, vice-dean in the Faculty of Medicine, said that due to the faculty's close working relationship with hospitals, "their budget reduction has a direct impact on Queen's clinical research and clinical education."

Maudsley noted that a substantial part of the total funding of the faculty is dependent on earning of clinical faculty members such as physicians and surgeons.

He also said that medical students will no longer be rewarded a stipend, compensation given for their 56-week residency in community practices. As a result, students may have to obtain other loans or find additional work to supplement their residential term.

...it is "increasingly difficult to offer the required sections to meet student needs."

Robert Malcolmson, History department chair

A different pace for frosh week

BY BRAD ELDER
and LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

While hundreds of frosh thronged to major venues throughout orientation week, smaller numbers of first-year students took advantage of separate events offered by campus organizations.

The Lesbian and Gay Association (LGA), the Queen's University Muslim Student Association (QUMSA) and the International Centre all organized events designed to personally introduce their groups to new Queen's students.

Julia Lipinska, the Speaker's Bureau Coordinator for the LGA, said that an informal drop-in on Sept. 7 and a pot-luck dinner on the 9th brought out old and new faces alike.

"We put events like this into orientation to give old students a chance to re-acquaint themselves with campus and to see fresh faces that are brave enough to come out when lots of other people are around," she said.

Lipinska told The Journal that social events such as these "are important for frosh who can come and meet with others in a social setting that is not political and tense."

She said that special events such as those held by the LGA make frosh week more orienting and less disorienting. She added that LGA events were better attended this frosh week than they have been in the past.

Mona Rahman, the head of QUMSA this year, said that the goal of QUMSA frosh week events was to "try and get new Muslims here to know other Muslims" from the Queen's community.

"We don't go out drinking and partying in the Western sense of the word," said Rahman, adding that it is natural for most people to try to find people that are like themselves.

Rahman said that the week's events included an introductory meeting at the John Deutsch University Centre on Sept. 7, followed by a tour of Kingston on Wednesday and a Halqa on Thursday, which Rahman described as "basically picking a topic and having two people discuss it."

Saturday night featured a dinner for Muslim students and Kingston residents, and on Sunday, a speech entitled "How to maintain faith in a non-Islamic society," Rahman said.

Regular meetings for QUMSA begin at the end of the month in the International Centre, said Rahman.

Some female students took comfort in the sanctuary offered by the Women's Centre at the Grey

House.

Bobbi Spark, a volunteer at the Women's Centre, said that her group organized activities to give students a choice. "We wanted to be there if we were needed," said Spark, adding that the plans "were not diminished if the [events] weren't stacked full of people."

"Even if one person needed us," she said, "then that's enough."

Spark said because "[the Women's Centre] was up against stiff competition" from parties, sports and other orientation activities, each student who went to the centre "was a kind of mini-success."

The Women's Centre has suffered from "benign neglect" in the past, according to Spark, who added that this year's activities were designed to instill the Centre with "visibility and renewed vigour."

The first event of the week was a women-only drop-in held at the Women's Centre on Tuesday night. Though only "three or four new people" dropped in, Spark said that "visibility and opportunity are what counted for the group - not attendance."

On Wednesday, about 25 women took advantage of women-only space at the Women's Centre between noon and midnight. Spark said that while "no one articulated the need for women-only safe space, many did feel more comfortable in a place with only women."

Spark was particularly excited about the success of a spaghetti lunch which was attended by 35 women on Thursday and the sale of Women's Centre t-shirts, which reached almost $1,000.

She said that the sidewalk sale was also an effective forum "in terms of consciousness-raising," as alarms from the Ontario Anti-Harassment Committee triggered a "high amount of discussion."

A "Morning After" brunch designed to provide a place to recover from the effects of Orientation Week was organized on Sunday, explained Spark, and was attended by eight first-year students and 10 other women.

Spark said she was pleased that the Women's Centre attracted women of different cultures and ages. She explained that this year's posters included pictures of women from different cultures because "when someone sees themselves on the poster they feel more comfortable."

Spark concluded that this year's frosh week was an improvement over last year. "I noticed that the Gaels weren't drunk and they kept their groups together much better,"

she said.

However, Spark did confess that some problems still exist, such as the singing of offensive songs by frosh groups.

"I have a lot of problems with such ritualistic behaviour," she said.

Spark said the female frosh she encountered in the Women's Centre were "exhausted and overwhelmed," and added that some were disturbed about the sayings they read on the back of coveralls. She reported that "no one was terrorized, and there were no emergency calls about rape [to the Centre] ... though that doesn't mean it didn't happen."

The International Centre at Queen's offered an alternative to students who were new to both Queen's and Canada. The International Centre offered a week-long program before Orientation Week to inform students about issues of immigration, legal aid and even Kingston weather.

"A lot of international students aren't aware of how cold Kingston can get," said Stefan McCormack, an exchange student from Glasgow, Scotland.

McCormack attended the sessions before frosh week festivities began.

"It wasn't high key, it was more factual," McCormack said. The Rector, immigration officials, Kingston Mayor Helen Cooper and the police were among the speakers that the centre brought in to provide an orientation to Canadian society.

McCormack thought the International Centre was valuable to his orientation. "It is a place that you can always go with your needs," he said.

Carrie Engelbrecht, a residence don on the International Floor in Victoria Hall, said that many students on her floor have a different frosh week experience.

"It is often just too much. When you arrive here with culture shock and jet lag, the last thing you want to do is chant," she said.

Ji Sun Wong is a first year Engineering student from China. For him, the International Floor is a comfortable place that has helped him meet other students. Nevertheless, he seems to like the chants. "I liked the craziness ... it is good to keep this tradition," he said.

Wong said that it is important to get used to other customs in a new place. "Frosh week is a good time for me to get used to Queen's," he said.

Queen's University Food Services Campus Dining

Queens University offers a variety of meal plans to its' (non-resident) students. We would like to take this opportunity to introduce you to the programs and menus of the Optional Meal Plan.

When you sign up for the Campus Meal Plan, you are buying more than excellent food and courteous service at a reasonable price. You are buying:

Nutrition Your food not only tastes good, but every meal is nutritionally balanced.

Time You are buying yourself valuable extra time to pursue your education by letting us do the preparation and clean-up.

Security Your food dollars won't run out at mid-semester on any of our meals plans.

Flexibility You choose the meal plan that suits your needs.

Company You'll find this a great way to meet new friends and share new experiences. All of our dining halls are alive during meal hours!

Savings Single Meal Plans represent a 23% savings over cash meal prices but are subject of 7% GST.

Any combination of two Meal plans represent a 30% savings and are GST exempt.

See next two columns for additional savings from Pre-registering.

Jobs Available

Student workers are hired for a variety of jobs. If you are interested in applying, please contact one of the Food Services Offices at the following numbers:

Leonard Hall	545-2546
Ban Righ Hall	545-2536
University Centre	545-2953
Mackintosh-Corry Hall	545-2181
West Campus	545-2954
Bar Services	545-2954

Regular Meal Plans

Type 2
FULL YEAR MEAL PLANS
5 breakfasts	$ 500.78
5 lunches	$ 856.95
5 dinners	$ 996.15

Type 3
FIRST TERM ONLY MEAL PLANS
5 breakfasts	$ 260.68
5 lunches	$ 443.25
5 dinners	$ 515.25

Plans are valid Monday - Friday from 8 Sept. to 22 Dec., 1993 (First Term)
10 Jan. to 22 April, 1994 (Second Term)
excluding Reading Week 21-25 Feb., 1994

The purchase of any single Meal Plan from Type 2 and 3 is subject to 7% GST.

Bachelor of Education Meal Plans

Type 2
FULL YEAR MEAL PLANS
5 breakfasts	$353.29
5 lunches	$608.73
5 dinners	$707.61

Type 3
FIRST TERM ONLY MEAL PLANS
5 breakfasts	$198.94
5 lunches	$342.78
5 dinners	$398.46

Plans are valid Monday - Friday from 8 Sept. to 17 Dec., 1993 (First Term)
11 Jan. to 23 April, 1994 (Second Term)
excluding Practice Teaching and Reading Week periods: 18 Oct. - 5 Nov., 21 Feb. - 25 Feb., 1994; 28 Mar. - 15 Apr., 1994.

The purchase of any single Meal Plan from Type 2 and 3 is subject to 7% GST.

- Once purchased, Meal Plans are non-refundable and non-transferable with the exception of academic withdrawal.
- Cards are not valid on weekends.
- Separate student I.D. must be shown to validate weekend plans.

How to purchase your meal plan

Victoria Hall, Residence Business Office
7 Sept. to 22 Dec. 9:00am to 4:00 pm
Monday through Friday with valid student card
or
Food Services Office - JDUC
7 Sept. - 1 Oct. 9:00am to 4:00pm

Call Us

Our Food program is dynamic, varied and developed with your taste and convenience in mind. We realize these descriptions will not answer all your questions about our program, so please feel free to call the Food Service Office (613) 545-2953. We will be happy to provide you with further information about specific programs.

394 Princess Street
(at Division), 546-FILM

Showing this weekend:

AND

Call 546-FILM for screening times or pick up a copy of our free program at the Cinema.

CANADA ON SALE!

	TORONTO		MONTREAL
	OW Return		OW Return
FROM	199	339	229	359
Vancouver	169	299	189	349
Calgary	169	299	189	349
Edmonton	69	98	59	109
Kingston	179	299	179	329
Saskatoon	139	229	149	269
Winnipeg	149	289	129	229
St. John	159	269	129	209
Hallifax	199	379	169	329
St. John's

Low Season Midweek Fares!
Restriction Apply.

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

THE KITCHEN SINK

STUDENT ENTREPRENEURIAL CENTRE

COME CHECK IT OUT!

Located in the lower JDUC beside the bank machines, across from the sidewalk cafe. If you have anything to sell, or are interested in booking space, please call 545-2725.

Achieve immortality through the printed word.

Write for news!
Drop by The Journal, 272 Earl Street, or phone 545-2800.
Jeff, Lori, Brad and Brock are waiting.

KINGSTON AREA
RECYCLING
CORPORATION (KARC) WASTE DIVERSION PROGRAMS

• BLUE BOX RECYCLING
By following a few simple guidelines your contribution will be greatly appreciated. Please call the Hotline # for your blue box collection day.

RECYCLE	DO NOT RECYCLE
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ✓ Boxboard, which is packaging material used for cereal, toilet paper, detergent boxes etc. Remove food, liners, plastic tabs and handles. Flatten boxes, tie or place in a bag. ✓ Newspapers; place in a paper or plastic bag. ✓ Aluminum or steel cans, including pop cans, soup cans, vegetable cans. Wash out before placing in your blue box. ✓ Corrugated cardboard; grocery boxes, shipping boxes, bundles in 36" x 24" x 18" sections and place inside your blue box. ✓ Glass; wine, liquor, juice bottles and other glass jars. Please remove lids before placing in your blue box. ✓ P.E.T.E. bottles; plastic soft drink containers or any container with a #1 on the bottom of the bottle. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ✗ Frozen food boxes, boxes with plastic, milk cartons, soiled food boxes. ✗ Magazines, books, catalogues, or glossy paper. ✗ Paint cans, gas cans, scrap metal, aerosol cans. ✗ Wax coated boxes, oil or food stained boxes, drinking bottles. ✗ Frosted glass, window, drinking glasses, ceramics or light bulbs. ✗ Plastic tubs, such as margarine, cottage cheese, or yogurt containers. Any plastic other than P.E.T.E.

• HOUSEHOLD HAZARDOUS WASTE PROGRAM
This is a drop off service located at KARC, 70 Lappan's Lane which is designed to accept household hazardous wastes every Thursday and 2nd Saturday of the month from 8:30 a.m. - 1:00 p.m. during April 1, to November 30 of each year.

- We can accept:
- CORROSIVE: Battery acids, Cleaners, Oven Cleaners
 - TOXIC: Pesticides, Rat poison, Pharmaceuticals, Cleaning fluids
 - REACTIVE: Pool Chemicals, Ammonia, Bleach
 - FLAMMABLE: Gasoline, BBQ starter, Oil/Oil filters, Solvents

- We cannot accept:
- RADIOACTIVE - contact Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada Drain 1-416-821-7760
 - EXPLOSIVES (i.e.) Dynamite, Ammunition, nitroglycerine - contact City Police 549-4660 or O.P.P. 384-4700
 - BIOLOGICAL WASTES & PCB'S - contact the local office of the Ministry of Environment & Energy, 549-4000

Use it up. Use something else, or dispose of it safely.

• BACKYARD COMPOSTING PROGRAM
To eliminate 1/3 of your curbside waste, KARC is offering 3 types of composters at a subsidized price. Composters not only reduce curbside waste but they also produce a natural soil conditioner. Each of the pre-assembled units are constructed from 75% recycled plastic. Prices range from $20.00 - $40.00. For more information on which model is the best for you call the Hotline #.

• LEAF AND YARD WASTE FACILITY
We accept leaves, brush, tree trimmings and grass clippings. Materials can be dropped off Mon - Fri. 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Sat. 9:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m. The site is located at 70 Lappan's Lane next to the Recycling Centre.

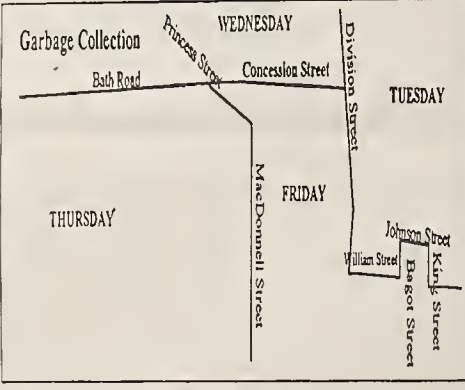

Help us Help you!
Hotline # 546-4988
70 Lappan's Lane, Kingston

NOTICE TO QUEEN'S STUDENTS

From The Corporation of the City of Kingston and The Kingston Area Recycling Corporation

Regarding Garbage Collection and Blue Box Recycling

Collection Schedule: Please note your collection day on the maps below.
Time: Prior to 6:00 a.m. for garbage. Prior to 7:00 a.m. for blue box material.
Tips: Place your blue box and garbage in a location that is accessible and visible for the drivers - at least 2 metres apart. Do not place out loose material for either collection. Please securely tie or bundle all material.
Further Information: KARC - 546-4988
CITY YARD - 542-7474

PLEASE NOTE THAT BLUE BOX COLLECTION AND GARBAGE PICK UP DO NOT ALWAYS FALL ON THE SAME DAY. CHECK EACH MAP CAREFULLY

"Zero tolerance" frosh week goes down smoothly

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

While the police found frosh week "the same" as previous years in terms of alcohol and noise problems, Queen's Security described the week as the best yet.

Kingston Police reported 45 alcohol violations during frosh week, and 11 noise bylaw infractions. The police followed a "zero tolerance" policy, whereby they gave no warnings, but simply ticketed those caught breaking the law.

Sergeant Bob Ritchie explained that issuing a warning "hasn't worked in the past, and it's not given out in any other cases. I don't know how everyone got this misconception that 'you've got to warn us first.'"

Other than open alcohol and noise problems, Ritchie noticed "mischievous" in relation to broken beer bottles on the roadway, and problems with pedestrians.

"There's a tendency not to use the sidewalks, and we don't want to see anyone scraped off the road," Ritchie said.

Ritchie found the student neighbourhood quiet "during the initial part of the week," but quite noisy Wednesday and Thursday. Much of the noise originated from groups walking home from bars and house parties, he said.

In general, Ritchie said he feels that frosh week has been "getting back to a tolerable level... I would say the last three or four years have been the same. It hasn't been that bad in comparison to previous years."

Recent frosh weeks are "nothing close" to the legendary chaos of the 1970's and 1980's, Ritchie said.

On campus, Queen's Security and Parking Director Howard Pearce found that "this has been our best year yet."

"There have been very few open alcohol problems, there have been a few noise problems with the after-hours and early-morning unauthorized wake-up calls and so on," Pearce said.

Pearce finds that frosh week seems to become quieter each year. "Five or six years ago, things were a lot different - a lot noisier, a lot messier, a lot more drinking," he said.

"Things have just steadily improved over the last four or five years, and we're at an all-time high as far as I'm concerned, in terms of behaviour, liquor violations, and respect for the orientation week itself," Pearce added.

Queen's Security issued warnings to a few groups for noisiness. Pearce described the noise as "just the cost of doing business - that's what orientation does, it creates noise."

The policy of campus security is different from that of the police. Typically, a student with open alcohol would be asked to hand over the drink, and would not be charged "unless they became a problem," Pearce said.

Trash week ends early

Continued from page one

"The manner they did it in," explained Bennett. "We left it up to the executive to tell the trash what was going on."

However, trash collectors said they were only vaguely aware of the reasons why Trash Week was cancelled. Catherine Dean, a trash collector, said they "were not told what was discussed between the executive [and SOARB]."

Collector Tania Pape echoed this statement when she stated that "no one was told any specifics."

The severity of SOARB's orders became evident at the rugby game on Saturday. The Alma Mater Society Orientation Committee (AMSOC) instructed Student Constables to ask the green-clad trash to leave the game.

AMSOC chair Sylvia Lulka said that the decision to ask trash to leave was made after a conference with campus security and Student Constables.

Lulka said that the trash at the game "were causing a disturbance." She said "they were very frustrated, very angry, and very drunk."

"It could've resulted in a problem situation," Lulka said.

However, she said, they were treated as any other "non-sanctioned" group, such as purple-painted "pseudo-FRECS" who are asked to leave AMSOC sanctioned events.

Bennett said that SOARB was just doing its job.

"The reason we have SOARB is to ensure that orientation goes well," said Bennett. "Our task is not to make up rules - it is to ensure that the policies of the university senate are carried out."

"SOARB must ensure that Orientation Week activities take place within a reasonable parameter of safety," explained Bennett. "SOARB is a team of volunteers charged with carrying out an orderly and safe orientation, ensuring that the policies of the Senate are followed, and helping the committees get their jobs done."

"An atmosphere of mutual trust and respect between the committees and SOARB is necessary for smooth operation of orientation activities," explained Bennett.

"The committee was very concerned about the violation and the apparent lack of a sense of trust or respect for SOARB. We were quite anguished, but in the end came to the conclusion that the Trash executive had not carried out their responsibility as orientation leaders and had actually violated their agreements to be responsible leaders for the frosh."

A "lack of attention to detail was apparent all week," Punjani continued, "and we felt that it wouldn't be responsible of us (SOARB) to let the rest of the events go through, based on the standard of conduct set earlier in the week."

Some trash said they felt they were left high and dry in the wake of the shut-down. "It's a huge let-down to have your introductory week to Queen's cancelled," said Keitha Robert, a transfer student.

"It's unfortunate that trash is in jeopardy. Present and future transfer students will suffer without it while this year's collectors can just go back to their lives unaffected," Robert said.

Robert, however, said that the trash didn't let the cancellation get them down. "Even when they cancelled everything, we tried not to let it dampen our spirits. Although it was disappointing to miss the semi-formal, at least we tried to stay together as a group."

Robert claims that "many trash are concerned about getting a refund. We all paid $85 and did not even go to all of the events. Members of the executive said that they would try to get some money back, but no promises were made."

The future of trash week remains to be seen, said Bennett. "It will be a committee decision which I am sure we will anguish over. We will not allow [trash week] to threaten everyone's Orientation Week."

The No dough Show

PRESENTING

The FABULOUS CROPDUSTERS
Wed. Sept. 15/10pm.

POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB • POP PUB

Growth of Dime 547-Real

Bla...Bla...Bla... Bla... Bla... Bla...

en français?
à Kingston?
POURQUOI PAS ?
au Centre français de Queen's
96 rue Albert
Kingston, K7L 3V2
545-2534

heures du Bla...Bla...
Les lundis, mardis, mercredis et jeudis de 13h à 17h

Cours de français
Accent mis sur la conversation. Petits groupes in-club

Tous les derniers mercredis du mois du mois de septembre à avril
Dupuis Hall, 19h. Entrée libre

Table française
Tous les mercredis à la cafétéria Ban Righ à partir de 17h

Voyage à Québec
lors du carnaval d'hiver

BIENVENUE À TOUS!

Social awareness training for Alfie's staff

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

Basil Girgrah from the Lesbian and Gay Speakers Bureau and Sara Nicklin from the AMS Women's Issues Committee take part in a training seminar Sunday for Alfie's staff.

Making Alfie's a bar for the entire Queen's community was the goal of an awareness seminar held Sunday for the bar staff.

The meeting focused on racism, sexism and homophobia.

Alfie's manager Pippa Stevenson said the purpose of the seminar was "to make Alfie's a safer place" and to make the bar inclusive for all people.

The staff sat in the basement bar and listened to suggestions, advice, and warnings from a four-person panel.

Juni Lagtapon, from the Alma Mater Society Racism and Ethnic Discrimination Committee, emphasized the importance of not tolerating any racism among patrons or staff and suggested ejecting any patrons who made racial slurs.

Sara Nicklin, chair of the Alma Mater Society Women's Issues Committee, encouraged discussion with the staff regarding sexual assault and harassment.

The staff was given hints on how to recognize harassment and potential fights. As Alfie's assistant manager Tim Welsh said,

"Pay attention to your section (of tables) and you can stop something before it happens."

The highlight of the seminar was a session led by Chris Veldhoven, an employee at the Career Planning and Placement Centre, and Basil Girgrah. Both are tireless activists for homosexual issues and represent the Lesbian and Gay Speakers Bureau.

Veldhoven and Girgrah had the staff perform an exercise designed to simulate the experiences of a homosexual who is apprehensive about "coming out" with their sexual orientation.

A lively discussion followed, with Veldhoven and Girgrah weaving humour into these serious issues.

Stevenson was pleased with the sessions. "I think Alfie's is one of the safest places to be because of this," she said.

In the past, the Alfie's managers had administered the awareness day themselves, but Stevenson found that it was "much more effective to have people who deal with these issues on a day-to-day basis."

John O'Brien, an Alfie's DJ, found the sessions effective. O'Brien said the things he learned from similar seminars have helped him deal with many situations beyond Alfie's, and that he feels richer for it.

"Some people just don't get the chance to sit down and talk like this," O'Brien said.

Girgrah said he was pleased to see the changes at Alfie's over the past three years. While two years ago Girgrah was tentative to enter the bar with fewer than fifteen supportive friends, he now feels comfortable to go with a friend or two.

"I commend Alfie's," he said. Robert's Club Vogue, he feels safest and most comfortable at Alfie's.

Stevenson considers the Alfie's staff racially representative of the campus and fair in employing women and men equally. She finds it significant that she is the first female head manager of Alfie's in several years and feels this should increase her approachability for female patrons.

Campus pubs make changes

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

While Clark Hall has a stage and the Quiet Pub its own television this year, your on-campus beer will likely be slightly more expensive at at least two bars.

Alfie's bought two new pool tables to keep its patrons amused. And, as manager Pippa Stevenson said, "there's also something new that's in the works right now... we just got approval to get a new satellite bar." The plan, however, awaits a secondary approval from Vice-Principal (Operations / University Affairs) Tom Williams.

Beer pitchers are up 20 cents to $9.35, and both doubles and cocktails will cost a dime more.

The QP has shifted its focus somewhat this year, moving away from its reputation as a fourth-year lounge toward an image of a lively pub with entertainment and good food, said Cameron.

Saturday nights will feature mostly student bands, and Cameron promises an occasional karaoke night as well. The bar is open seven days a week and hopes to attract a good crowd on Friday afternoons - "sort of an anti-frat thing," Cameron said.

At the Grad Club, prices are unchanged, while the bar has added a football game, and has opened a veranda for coffee and meals.

The prices for mixed drinks remain the same at Clark.

Creative writing commitment questioned

English department puts course on hold

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Some English students and faculty are frustrated by what they perceive as a case of systemic writer's block in the English department.

In interviews with The Journal, Joanna Hindle, a fourth-year English major, and Carolyn Smart, the only creative writing professor at Queen's, questioned the commitment of the English department to creative writing.

Smart said that while there are some English professors who support creative writing, "the department as a whole is not supportive of creative writing in the least." She said that most people in the department "don't recognize the need for creative writing and the validity of it."

Hindle feels the same. "The English department here is so negative about creative writing, period," she said.

"I don't regret coming to Queen's, but if I'd known how little creative writing there was my decision might've been different."

Presently, the only two writing courses in the English curriculum are Writ 295*, the introductory course, and Writ 296*, the advanced course. Neither course can be counted toward an English concentration.

Hindle is frustrated because 296* will once again not be offered this year.

Hindle said that she "was led to believe that Carolyn [Smart] would be able to teach 296* this year," but was subsequently shocked to learn that two sections of 295* would be run instead.

Dr. George Logan, head of the English department, explained the decision. He said that fiscal restraints limit the number of creative writing courses to two, and that he, in consultation with Chair of Undergraduate Studies, Dr. Phillip Rogers, decided that it would be better to run two sections of the introductory writer's course so that more students could get involved.

Smart confirmed that she was not part of the decision-making process, and said that she felt "disappointed that once again the advanced class would not be available."

To her knowledge, the 296* class has only been offered once, two years ago, when Smart "had the best class I've ever had in my life."

She described the class as a student-centred workshop which has the personal touch that is very important at the undergraduate level.

"It puts an emphasis on your own input and creative fulfilment which is important in terms of personal growth... and the growth of culture."

Logan called the department's inability to run 296* "a damn shame."

"We wish that we could afford to have 296* as well," he said. "It serves an important function."

Smart said that while she would "continue to encourage creative writing and push for it to become part of the core program," she felt that there was good reason to be concerned about the future of the program.

She pointed to the designation "Writ" before the course number (instead of "Engl") as an indication of the department trying to distance itself from creative writing. They've "sloshed it into something else," said Smart, and "that is a way of working it out of the English curriculum."

Logan admitted that "it is conceivable that times will get so desperate that we'll lose [creative writing at Queen's]," but said that "that is neither planned nor desirable."

"Even if we're in hard times we've got to protect them... precisely because they are the only creative writing courses," Logan said. "The last thing we want to do is drop things that are unique."

He pointed to the fact that while the English department "has closed six or seven courses, it continues to mount the same number of creative writing courses."

However, Logan could not say for sure that the future of creative writing at Queen's was secure.

"Of course, in five years it's possible that my predecessor will say that we can't afford noble sentiments such as these," he said.

Smart contested that writing courses cannot be dropped because the largest scholarship in English is offered as a creative writing scholarship.

Furthermore, she "would be very pleased to see a change in priorities" in the English department so that "the wishes and capability of students can be fulfilled in advanced [writing] courses."

Hindle said, "I think that Carolyn [Smart] is so exciting, it makes me sad that the school doesn't take more advantage [of her ability]."

Greasepole conquered

Continued from page one

that bad."

FREC Betsy Merry blamed the alcohol ban for the smaller turnout. "Last year we had hundreds more people." Merry also said that this year's frosh "are too nice, too quiet and too gentle."

FREC Sam Beaugrand agreed, saying that there are "too many rules and restrictions" on frosh week.

Colleen Aarts, also a FREC, predicted that too many rules will drive the greasepole "underground."

When asked why someone would wade in waist-deep muddy water only to wrap themselves around a disgusting, slimy, cold metal pole for 186 minutes, Maryann Seliga, (Eng. '97) said it is a "bonding experience" all about "cooperation."

Seliga was sharing a wet blanket with two other '97s huddling around a fire for warmth.

Merry said that frosh need to "prove themselves as engineers."

Stokes explained that Queen's engineers stole the pole from the University of Toronto football field in 1957.

According to Stokes, U of T switched from the old wooden goal posts to metal ones in an effort to thwart Queen's engineers from storming the field and stealing them.

But the Queen's engineers partially hacked through the new post the night before they rushed the field and claimed their prize, Stokes said.

According to Merry, the pole was at one point "cut up into 7 pieces and sent to each continent" to prevent it from being reclaimed by U of T.

ATTENTION ALL CLUBS

Pre-registration for Clubs Night will be held Sept. 14 from 4:00pm - 7:00pm in the McLaughlin Room (JDOC). You must be pre-registered to attend.

CLUBS NIGHT SEPT. 21, 1993

POSITIONS AVAILABLE AT THE

QUEEN'S JOURNAL

BUSINESS MANAGER:

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE JOURNAL HOUSE, 272 EARL STREET, AND ARE DUE SEPTEMBER 17 AT 5:30 PM.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is responsible for the long-term strategic planning and financial operations of the Journal and is accountable to the AMS.

ONE PROFESSOR:

OR OTHER QUALIFIED NON-STUDENT WITH A KNOWLEDGE OF QUEEN'S AND THE NATURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL; THIS SHALL NORMALLY BE A TWO-YEAR TERM.

ONE STUDENT:

INDIVIDUAL SHOULD PREFERABLY NOT HAVE ANY AFFILIATION WITH AMS SERVICES, CLUBS, COUNCILS, OR COMMITTEES.

To Do List

- Buy kitty litter
- Return videos
- Finish math assignment
- Do laundry
- Pick up Correspondence Course Notes

Arts and Science students: If you've registered in a correspondence course this fall-winter, don't forget to pick up your course materials from the Part-Time Studies Office starting 20 September. Bring a copy of your registration form to 5100 Mackintosh-Corry Hall.

Part-Time Studies
Faculty of Arts and Science
Telephone 545-2471

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994 GRADUATES

1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750 REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY FROM GENERAL MOTORS.

OR CALL 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO STUDENT VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS. THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

Cross Campus Briefs

University of Calgary

AUGUST 1993
Counterfeit diplomas from the University of Calgary have been showing up from Lebanon to Taiwan. The phoney diplomas were first discovered in Bangkok when police busted an operation that produced 1000 diplomas from various North American universities.

The latest fraud was discovered in Taiwan when a prospective employer phoned to confirm the educational record of a woman who claimed to be a graduate of the Faculty of Literature at the University of Calgary. The woman was caught—the University has no such faculty.

The University of Calgary Student Union is up in arms over a Masters of Accounting Program—and its tuition fee of $10 000 a semester. The program is a three year pilot project designed to recover all of its direct, indirect and overhead operating costs.

Students Union Vice-President (External), Chima Nkemdirim is concerned about potential violation of the province's tuition fee policy, which stipulates that post-secondary students pay 20 per cent of the full cost of their degree program.

"In my opinion, I think the university wants to get the principle of cost-recovery programs in place to get around the tuition fee cap," Nkemdirim said. The students union plans to lobby the provincial government to protest the program.

University of Manitoba

AUGUST 1993
The University of Manitoba plans to increase tuition fees for international students—by a stiff 75 per cent. A differential fee will be levied on top of regular tuition for international students after the '93-'94 school year.

University of Manitoba president Arnold Naimark said that the increase was in response to instructions from the University Grants Commission. Without the increase, he said, there was a risk of grants to the University being reduced.

—The Manitoban

University of Waterloo

AUGUST 1993
The University of Waterloo earned a general ecology award from the Kitchener—Waterloo chamber of commerce. The university earned this distinction following their WAfgreen project, which included waste auditing and recycling programs that decreased the amount of garbage generated on campus by 26 per cent.

—University Affairs

A chair-itable cause

BY KATHY GOLDBER
The Queen's Journal

University employee Ross Trethewey wants to make a difference and he needs your beverage can pull-tabs to do it.

Trethewey, an employee of the registrar's office at Queen's, heard of a local restaurant collecting beverage can pull-tabs in the summer to help with the unsubsidized part of the cost of buying wheelchairs, and decided he wanted to help.

Kingston Iron Metal Company, or KIMCO, buys the pull-tabs for 89 cents per kilogram as scrap metal. It takes approximately one million pull tabs to make up one tonne. Four tonnes, or four million tabs, translates into one wheelchair.

The money is sent directly from KIMCO to the Kingston Frontenac Lennox and Addington Health Unit. The wheelchairs will go to people in the Kingston area.

Trethewey recognizes the challenge involved in collecting such a large quantity of pull-tabs, but said that the Queen's campus seemed to be a great place to start.

Trethewey explained that there are many outlets on campus where beverages in cans are consumed, adding that he wants to tap into this resource.

Trethewey's goal is to get as many collection cans as possible on campus. "It would be nice to have them in all residence common rooms, lunch rooms and on all recycling bins and vending machines," he said. He also stressed that the cans are easily recognizable.

You will find the collection cans in various locations around campus, including the computer advising offices in both Mackintosh-Corry Hall and Jeffery Hall, near the vending machines in Mackintosh-Corry, Jackson Hall near the cluster, the Journal House, and the Golden Words office.

However, Trethewey said he can't monitor all of the cans himself. He needs volunteers willing to spend a little time identifying full cans and replacing them with empty ones.

So far, Trethewey said, he's found the people he has contacted at Queen's to be receptive to his idea and very helpful.

Still, Trethewey said, the more people who are willing to volunteer and the more people who deposit their pull-tabs in his collection cans, the more successful this program will be.

Trethewey said that similar programs in other areas are already in existence. The Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, a hospital in Ottawa, and a group of Royal Canadian Legion members in Fergus, Ontario, have made similar programs successful, he said.

Trethewey is confident that the will work, but said he needs support from everyone who drinks canned drinks. Volunteers can contact Trethewey at 542-7104. He asked people to make this "one second donation to charity."

"Everyone can spare one second," he said.

Marka Glick

STUDENTS

Start with the right personal Brewery and BE satisfied!

Look for our AD in the Welcome Back Magazine and save on our Deals Deals Deals coupon.

Come one out to 4-7, Counter Unit 160 (on Sir John A McDonald Blvd. side) Reservations - Directions - 542-2187

MOONLIGHT Madness

SHOP UNTIL 11 P.M.

Thursday, September 16, '93

STREET DANCE
Starting at 7 pm
between AJ's Hanger and Stages

Win a free
Ski Trip
courtesy of
ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Fill out ballots at local sponsors listed below

FREE GRAB BAGS will be given out to customers who shop in participating businesses of Moonlight Madness. Each Grab Bag has a Coupon and Savings for a Downtown Business

Participating Businesses

- Accessories Unlimited
- Army Surplus
- A & W
- Burger King
- City Sports
- Cookies By George
- Crossings
- Dairy Queen
- Dave Jones Sports
- Dollar Bill's
- Don Cherry's Grapevine

- Dover's Men's Wear
- Fancy That
- Hair Craft
- Hardy Har Har
- House of Sounds
- India Palace Restaurant
- Just Hi-Fi Audio Video
- Keirstead Gallery
- Kettle Creek Clothing Co.
- Lick's
- Mark-E-D's Old Fashion Ice Cream

- Mighty Dollar
- Modem Primitive Boutique
- Morning Star
- My Astonishing Self
- Neon Clothes Kingston
- Olden Green
- Olympic One Hour Photo
- Oriental Arts & Crafts
- Papa Pete's Subs & Such
- Phase 2
- Prime Mates

- Princess Court Cinema
- Quarry Guardian Drugs
- Rock of Ages Lapidary & Crafts
- Roots
- Rose & Crown II
- Runner's Choice
- S & R
- Send in the Clowns
- Silver Mind
- Sir Gawain
- Shakey's Landing

- Soap Berry Shop
- Socks & More
- Subway
- Superior Nautilus
- The Queen's Quarters
- This That & Everything To Your Health
- Videoland
- Wizard Arcade
- Zellers

Downtown Kingston!

ATTENTION ALL CLUBS

Pre-registration for Clubs Night will be held Sept. 14 from 4:00pm - 7:00pm in the McLaughlin Room (JDUC). You must be pre-registered to attend.

CLUBS NIGHT SEPT. 21, 1993

Life's map says: YOU ARE HERE

The question is :

WHERE DO YOU GO FROM HERE?

To help you find some alternatives:

CAREERS DAY '93

Tuesday, Sept. 21, 1993

10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.

JOCK HARTY ARENA

To make the most of Careers Day '93 attend the:

CAREERS DAY PREPARATION WORKSHOP

Thursday, September 16, 1993

7:00 p.m. Dupuis Auditorium

Hewlett Packard

Day

Thursday
September 23rd

calculators

The new line of HP calculators give you power enough for your education... and your career! The 48GX has 128 kB RAM built in with expansion ports to add up to 4 MB more memory. The full line of HP calculators is discounted for this one day only. Looking for just a regular calculator and don't need all that computing power, there are other models available. All at discounted prices!

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

QUEEN'S INTRAMURALS

SIGN-UP FOR FALL SPORTS

MEET YOUR FACULTY ATHLETIC REPS AND SIGN-UP FOR INTRAMURALS AT ATHLETIC INFORMATION NIGHT

TONIGHT! SEPTEMBER 14th
5 to 7pm IN BARTLETT GYM

OVER 30 SPORTS & ACTIVITIES IN THREE PROGRAM AREAS - MEN * WOMEN * COED

NOTE THESE EARLY STARTERS!

MEN'S SOFTBALL - SEPTEMBER 18/19
TRACK & FIELD MEET - SEPTEMBER 22
COED SOFTBALL - SEPTEMBER 25/26

INTRAMURALS ARE FUN! GET INVOLVED!

BEWS
WIC
INTRAMURALS

Editorials

Taking Out The Trash

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter
Managing Editor
Dave Parvati
News Editor
Jeff Gray
Production Manager
Colin Ho
Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse
Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor
Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland
Graphics Editors
Richard Dubois
Joey deVilla
Photography Editor
Manka Glickman
Literary Layout Editor
Megan Nichols
Features Editor
Alison Mascamann
Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis
Assistant News Editors
Brock Marland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorakson
Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down
Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petric
Ryan Chen
Sian Reddo-Stephens
Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn
Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yarnell
Assistant Literary Layouts
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Business Manager
Vacant
Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielsen
Creative Staff Manager
Alex Harner
Sales Representatives
Chris Ritchie
Fiona Macintyre
House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 3,000

Contributors

Sheldon Bradshaw, Dave Coleman, Dave Delcloo, Adam Emery, Karen Hall, Kathy Gohler, James Keast, Laurie North, Lee Petric, Chris Price, Deany Silverthorne, Nick Smith, Anne Young

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

When started out as a wicked party, equipped with kegs, The Mahones and lots of shining, happy people, ended in disappointment, anger and mass confusion.

The party, organized by trash collectors (transfer student orientation leaders) for trash (transfer student frosh equivalents), was broken up by the Kingston City Police at midnight, according to one ArtSci '94 partier.

The next morning, the trash collectors were called to a meeting by the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board. The meeting lasted two hours, and the outcome was clear: the rest of trash week was cancelled.

At 6 p.m. on Friday, all of the trash were called to a meeting by SOARB. According to trash collectors who refused to go on the record, SOARB did not attend their own meeting, and left it up to trash collectors to explain to the trash why their week had been cancelled.

The trash reaction was predictable. They stuck together, and tried to make the most of their situation. The next day they gathered at the rugby game, where they were asked to leave by student constables - under the direction of the Alumni Mater Society Orientation Committee.

The party, it seems, was a big mistake. The trash collectors knowingly violated their contracts, organizing and partaking in a keg party attended by trash. But, if that is the case, is the punishment appropriate?

And, if that is the case, why are the trash collectors refusing to speak to The Journal about what happened?

Many questions remain to be answered, as the trash situation remains shrouded in mystery.

Everybody knows that gael, bosses and froes drink - even at or for AMSOC sponsored parties. Most frosh have been to parties in the ghetto where at least one of their orientation leaders has suffered mysterious consequences due to the beverage contained in that can marked "Coke."

And if that Gael or FREC or boss is caught intoxicated with their frosh, then that gael can be degaeted or "defRECKed" or "debossed." But frosh week is not cancelled.

But is this the case with trash? Trash are not first year students. Trash have experienced at least one year of university and at least one frosh week. Chances are that their frosh week was a lot worse than what Queen's frosh experience.

These trash are not much younger, the university environment is not new to them, and they are probably not totally dependent on their collectors. (They also paid $85 for the week.) These differences need to be accounted for when rules are drawn up governing what is acceptable behaviour.

Furthermore, one must question the legitimacy of the contracts signed by Gael, FRECs, bosses and trash collectors. Are these contracts legal contracts or pledges of honour? And what affect does this rigidity have on Queen's spirit? Why does the number of students trying out to be Gael shrink every year?

By cancelling the week, SOARB gave the trash and their collectors the freedom to do whatever they desired. This doesn't seem like the smartest move. Unless there is more behind it.

It's unusual for a group that feels unjustly or severely punished to refuse to discuss its situation. Why won't anyone comment on this issue? Why are trash collectors afraid of being expelled? And why won't the trash executive tell The Journal how the party was paid for?

With all of these questions awaiting answers, one thing remains certain. If a group of FRECs organized a keg party and allowed some of their frosh to attend, EngWeek would not be cancelled. What remains uncertain however, is why trash week suffered the fate it did.

Were all of the trash collectors at the party? Is that why the rest of the week was cancelled? How many rules have to be broken and by how many people before an orientation week can be cancelled?

Furthermore, who decides if SOARB acted appropriately? Are they accountable to anyone, or are the decisions they make carved in stone?

The only rule that was obviously broken is the drinking rule. No drinking in front of your frosh. Frosh are younger, in a new environment, they rely on you and they are easily misled. That is the assumption underlying the no drinking rule.

Cross Campus Editorials

University of Waterloo

Insight, 3 September, 1993

The only real solution to university funding problems is to put universities back in the hands of the students, put researchers and corporate greedies back into the marketplace, away from government funding.

UW should take an excruciatingly hard look at where public funding ends up, and put it back into education. Calling for students to pay more than is possible on slightly over minimum wage is unfair and unrealistic.

Faculty associations should ask themselves why they have the jobs they do, why they receive upwards of $100,000 per year and still complain that they don't get paid their worth.

If professors aren't teaching, if universities aren't funding education over research, how can students expect to receive a decent education?

I've got an idea, maybe if we pay universities more money for our education perhaps they'll pay more attention to us. Well, no...

Universities are about education. Universities should put the students first and give us a break, for once.

Brock University

The Brock Free Press, 18 June, 1993

Oh! Irony can be so... ironic.

Just last issue the editorial addressed the question "Who is in your corner?" concerning the dedication (or lack thereof) of the government, administration and student union to student needs. Well, it would seem you in fact have someone in your corner, whether you like it or not.

...Here's the catch: In May... OUSA (Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance) was appointed to the NDP's Student Assistance Review Committee, a committee which will review the effects of recent OSAP changes and provide advice on an "income contingency loan repayment" pilot project. The pilot project involves setting students' repayment plan to their post-secondary income. OUSA is on a potentially influential committee which could drastically change the way students approach post-secondary education, and yet they represent no one.

...Certainly OUSA cannot consider the abandonment of OFS (Ontario Federation of Students) as a green light for them to actively lobby on students' behalf without proper backing. If I go to a doughnut store and order a delicious apple fritter only to find it stale and repulsive, chances are the manager isn't going to pin me down and force feeds me a cherry fritter screaming, "MY FRIEND I MUST INSIST THAT YOU ENJOY THIS CHERRY FRITTER!" Even more so because I'm paying for this doughnut.

University of Calgary

The Gauntlet, 22 July, 1993

Students and student governments have been forever blaming the provincial, occasionally the federal, government for their woes, for decreased accessibility, for budget cutbacks - even for increased tuition fees. But it has been this university's administration who, every time the government delivered a budget cut, raised tuition fees, while making feeble and tokenist cuts to their own bloated bureaucracy. Every time funding is decreased, it was the students who had to make up the difference. Every time.

...If the tuition cap is abolished, the administration no longer will have to look at budget cutbacks in their own departments when the government gets out its axe and slashes funds to post-secondary education - it can merely raise student fees to make up the difference.

University of Manitoba

Manitoban, 25 August, 1993

The federal government is also hinting at no longer guaranteeing repayment of student loans, so you can bet those future bank negotiations will be based on concrete repayment plans, not student need.

If all this sounds like buying a car instead of an education, get used to it. Remember that idea of "student market?" Well it fits: what is the collateral in the particular student? What is the pay-back? What is the profit?

We are fast approaching a future where we do not "get" educations and we are certainly not going to be "given" educations.

We will "buy" our educations. Cash up front.

Opinions

Neo-nazi threat coming to Canada

The Editor,

Many students will be aware of the growth of neo-nazi groups over the summer—growth not just in size but in confidence: Neo-Nazis in the Canadian Airborne Regiment, "infiltrating" the Reform Party, killing gay men in Montreal, brutally murdering and beating immigrants in Toronto, and instigating violence in Germany and elsewhere. Even in Kingston there has been controversy: the sale of swastika flags at two army surplus stores was the focus of protest in August. In none of these instances is the direct threat of fascism so great as it is in France.

The fascist Front National (FN) under Jean-Marie Le Pen has grown into a mass party claiming membership of over 100,000. In the 1986 French election the FN won 35 seats and polled over eleven per cent of the vote; this constituted a major breakthrough for the party because in their fourteen year existence they have never been able to exceed 0.74 per cent.

Jean-Marie Le Pen has had a long history in ultra-right politics; during WWII he was a student collaborator in Vichy France; during the early 1960's he was responsible for systematically torturing prisoners in Algiers; in 1965 he ran the campaign of an openly fascist French presidential candidate. In 1968 he was arrested for selling recordings of Hitler's speeches and Nazi marching songs. Le Pen's record is very clear—when he sued someone for calling him "the spiritual son of Mussolini and Hitler," a French court ruled against him on the grounds that it had been sufficiently proven to be true.

The electoral support for the Front National is scary, but the FN is not just an electoral party. In "What political issues would you like to see addressed during the 47 days preceding the election on October 25th?"

talking heads

"Child care and health care. And no 50% fee hikes for university!"
Anita Ross
Arts '97

"I'd like to see them address how they will renegotiate Canadian labour within a global economy...in terms of free trade and technological 'streamlining'."
Nicole Rabba
Law '95

"The budget for defense. They are spending a lot of money on helicopters, it's scary...they should spend it on some other thing like education."
Seishi Fujioka
Arts '95

"I don't think Kim Campbell changed much from Brian, she isn't doing anything really different. We're not looking for a woman necessarily, we're looking for changes."
Vanessa Timmer
Arts '96

"The unemployment and what they're going to do about it!"
Sahrina Lee
Life Sci '97

"The whole process is bullshit so it doesn't matter what you say anyways; they're not going to do anything."
Mike Craig
Mech Eng '95

Write for Opinions
Letters should not exceed 750 words and can be dropped off or mailed to 272 Earl St.

STUDENTS-FACULTY-STAFF

Enjoy singing? Why not join

Queen's Choral Ensemble
An 80-voice chorus

Rehearsals: Monday & Wednesday 5:30 - 7:00pm

Queen's Chamber Singers
A 30-voice ensemble

Rehearsals: Tuesday & Thursday 7:00 - 8:30pm

For additional information, contact School of Music
Harrison-LeCaine Hall
(545-2066)

Bruno's Place

574 Princess St
(in the Pizza Hut Plaza)
613-547-5458

Daily Specials

Fine Food and
Catering for all Occasions

Licensed by L.L.B.O.
Mon-Sat, 8am - 5pm

QUEEN'S TELETHON

JOB OPENINGS FOR SPIRITED QUEEN'S STUDENTS BEGINNING RIGHT AWAY

Wage:

Starts at $6.35 per hour

Jobs Available:

On Campus, two evenings per week, Sunday to Thursday, 6 - 10 pm.

If you're interested, please pick up an application at the Queen's Telethon Office, Room 303, Old Medical Building or outside the AMS Office.

Applications due Wed., Sept. 15, 4 pm.

NEW RELEASES FOREIGN FILMS ACTION / DRAMA COMEDY

WE'VE GOT ALL OF THESE AND MORE

Starting Sept. 13 -
OPEN 7 Days and Week
1pm - 11pm

Located across from the Infobank in JDUC

WALKHOME

CALL 545-2662
OR DROP BY THE INFOBANK
HOURS 8pm - 2pm

WALK-HOME SERVICE
545-2662

WE HAVE 10 positions available for 1st year students

RESCUE ME!

(...I Want a job.)

Help arm yourself against the recession through workshops:

- On Campus Recruiting
- Resume Writing
- Interview Survival
- Graduate Job Search

CAREER PLANNING AND PLACEMENT

Ground Floor, St-Lawrence Building
(underneath Student Health Services)

DON'T GO FOR SECOND BEST.

DELIVERY

It's easier than ever to enjoy your McDonald's favourites. Just give us a call at the number below, and your McDonald's meal will be delivered within 30 minutes!

And we guarantee it, or your choice of one Extra Value Meal is on us!
Delivery hours are 11:00 a.m. to closing.

For delivery, call today.
1-800-663-2233

Delivery available in the Kingston area.
Minimum order $7.50 (after coupon redemptions).
A service charge will apply to orders under $15.00.

SEPTEMBER 16TH

S&R DEPARTMENT STORE WILL BE OPEN

FROM 9:30 AM UNTIL 11:00 PM

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THESE AND MANY MORE

MAD BARGAINS

ALL DAY LONG!

MEXICAN HOODED

JERGAS

COTTON BLEND SLUB
YARN, STRIPES &
SOLIDS.

REG. DISCOUNT PRICE 24.98

ONE DAY ONLY!

$19.99

CAN YOU BELIEVE THESE PRICES?

MEN'S

6PACK

SPORT SOCKS

STRIPE TOPS,
COTTON BLEND

ONE DAY ONLY!

$4.99

/6pk.

MEN'S

WOOL AND THERMAL

SOCKS

BY HENSON MOHAWK

HUGE SELECTION!

ASSORTED STYLES

MIXED YARNS & SOLIDS

SIZE 10-13

$2.99

MEN'S

WORK PANTS

BY 'DICKIES'

ASSORTED STYLES

AND COLOURS

SIZES 32 TO 40

Slight irregulars - will not affect wear.

$12.99 ea or 2 for $25.00

MEN'S

CASUAL TWILL

PANTS

BY 'KODIAK'

ASSORTED

STYLES AND COLOURS.

SIZES 30 TO 40.

Slight irregulars. Will not affect wear.

$12.99 ea or 2 for $25.00

DISCOUNT DEPARTMENT STORE

There's nothing like it!

27 PRINCESS STREET

RIGHT IN THE HEART OF DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

STORE HOURS: MON-FRI 9:30-6:00, SAT 10:00-5:00, SUN 11:00-5:00

FROSH WEEK '93

Queens University

IBM LEADING EDGE and more...

Back to School LESSON #1: NEVER PASS UP A GREAT SALE

NO PAYMENTS UNTIL MARCH 1994

PACKAGE OF THE WEEK
LEADING EDGE 486
COMPUTER & MONITOR
Canon

EVERYTHING YOU NEED AT A RED HOT PRICE
486SLC computer, 4MB RAM, 10MB hard drive, 2 floppy, DOS, Windows 3.11, Word for Windows, Show, Stylus monitor, Canon BJ-5 bubble jet printer with their feeder and printer cable.

BUY NOW $1799

FUTURE SHOP
CANADA'S LARGEST VOLUME DISCOUNTER

PLUS ITEMS AT OUR GUARANTEED EVERYDAY REGULAR LOW PRICES.

COMPUTERS

STUDENT SAVER
IBM PS1 486 PRICE BREAKTHROUGH

WHY BUY A CLONE?
IBM PS1 486...
$1479

Macintosh

Save a Bundle
Macintosh LC III and Apple Stylewriter II

GO BACK TO SCHOOL WITH THE MOST POPULAR MAC...
$2154

PRINTERS

HEWLETT PACKARD
LASER STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE AT UNMATCHABLE FUTURE SHOP PRICE

8001800 DPI HIGH RESOLUTION...
$1799

HOME OFFICE

Canon
COMPACT FAX

COMPACT FAX...
$1179

ACCESSORIES

SPECIAL OF THE WEEK
FROM P.C. TO P.C. 3.5" DISK DRIVE...
$26

486 SUPER DEAL!
COMPAQ Prolinea 486SX

THE SWAP...
$1799

Save a Bundle
Apple Macintosh IIx with Stylewriter II

HIGH PERFORMANCE FOR HOME OFFICE...
$2354

OUR BEST BUY EVER
Canon BJ-5 Bubble Jet Printer

BETTER LASER-LIKE LETTER QUALITY...
$299 brother

BEST BUY FOR YOUR HOME OFFICE

THIS FANTASTIC FAX COMES WITH...
$499

CH PRODUCTS
3.5" DISK DRIVE

3.5" DISK DRIVE...
$48

LEADING EDGE
THE MOST FOR YOUR MONEY

IBM PS1 486...
$1849

Apple Macintosh IIx, Stylewriter II, Chrisworks Software Bundle

INCLUDES: Apple Macintosh IIx...
$2674

COMPUTER PACKAGE

IBM PS1 486...
$2299

Canon
COMPACT FAX

COMPACT FAX...
$269

SOFTWARE

PC SOFTWARE
FLASHBACK...
$48

LEADING EDGE
UNMATCHABLE VALUE

IBM PS1 486...
$2299

CALCULATORS

PRICE BREAKTHROUGH
ELECTRONIC CALCULATOR...
$47

ORGANIZERS

SHARP SCIENTIFIC
ALGEBRAIC LOGIC SYSTEM...
$13

MAC SOFTWARE

MS WORD/EXCEL...
$119

FOR UNDER $30.00

FLASHBACK...
$48

FUTURE SHOP DISCOUNT SUPERSTORES

REGULAR HOURS: MON.-FRI. 10-9 • SAT. 10-5 • SUN. 11-5

502 GARDINERS RD. KINGSTON, ONT. 634-7261

THE COMPULSORY STUDENT ASSISTANCE LEVY; WHAT DID THE AMS DO ON YOUR BEHALF?

- This spring, the province reduced its transfer payments to Queen's University by $11 million (7.4 million due to the Social Contract; $3.6 million from general transfer payments).
- Post-secondary institutions across Ontario began to examine the fees they charge to students as a means of revenue enhancement.
- In June, the administration was considering a 'tuition-like' fee of $250 to compensate for some of this lost revenue. The AMS, in association with the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, took the position that the imposition of ancillary fees or student levies undermined the government's attempts to control increases in tuition.
- At that time, University of Toronto had imposed a fee of $185 on all undergraduate students for a specific package of services and University of Western Ontario had imposed a similar omnibus ancillary fee of $200.
- Social Contract reductions at Queen's were allocated through assorted efficiency savings and rollbacks in the wage and salary bill of the faculty and staff. The university would have to find the rest of the transfer payment loss, $3.6 million, from other sources. We knew we would have to negotiate the best possible deal for students.
- We succeeded in reducing the contribution to $10 per half-course to a maximum of $100 per academic session. There would be a portion designated to adding new bursary support for those who would be overburdened by the new levy.
- We did not want to target money to specific services because: a) we were in no position to determine which services; and b) it would only create a dependency by those services on the levy that would prevent the revenue from ever being absorbed back into the budget.
- The one stipulation that was of greatest importance was that some measure of accountability to students be established for this levy. We presented a plan to the Board of Trustees whereby all future levies would have to be taken to a referendum among students. Even though the proposal would not bind the Board to the referendum decision, the members were opposed to being bound to a process.
- Though representatives of the AMS were present at all stakeholder meetings and were welcome to contribute ideas to the fiscal response, students need to be guaranteed that that decisions will be made while the majority of students are on campus and that they will have fair and appropriate consultation in University decision-making in the future.

The AMS will continue to pursue this matter! If you have any questions or comments, please address them to Katherine Philips, AMS President, in the AMS office (lower JDUC).

Incredible INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE

★★★ FUTURE SHOP ★★★
CANADA'S ABSOLUTE LOWEST PRICES

OUR BIGGEST SALE EVENT OF THE SEASON!
WE HAVE OVER $70 MILLION OF INVENTORY

TVs Emerson STEREO MONITOR RECEIVER $497	CAMCORDERS RED HOT 8mm CAMCORDER WITH SUPERVIEWER $578	VCRs SUPER BUY FOR A 4 HEAD VCR FROM CRAIG $218	STEREO JVC 200 WATT DOLBY PRO-LOGIC SURROUND RECEIVER $399	CAR STEREO ALPINE DETACHABLE FACE CD PLAYER $479	HOME APPLIANCE SPECTACULAR PRICE FOR A FAMILY SIZE FRONT FREE REFRIGERATOR $574
COMPUTERS PACKAGE OF THE WEEK LEADING EDGE 486 COMPUTER & MONITOR CANON $1799	MACINTOSH Save a Bundle on Macintosh IIx $2154	ACCESSORIES BACK-TO-SCHOOL SUPER SPECIAL $26	PRINTERS BUBBLEJET BLOWOUT CANON BJ-5 $299	TELEPHONES & ANSWERING MACHINES Panasonic SOUND CHARGER CORDLESS TELEPHONE $129	LAUNDRY WASHER & DRYER PAIR $649

FUTURE SHOP DISCOUNT SUPERSTORES

502 GARDINERS RD. KINGSTON, ONT. 634-7261

Literary Lapses

Ox-tail soup, anyone?

Like Water for Chocolate
Laura Esquivel
Doubleday
$23.95
246 pages

Tita De la Garza was born into the world upon "a great tide of tears," which drenched the floor of the kitchen in which she would spend most of her life.

Tears, love and cooking are some of the recurring elements in Laura Esquivel's novel Like Water for Chocolate, which was recently translated into English from the original Spanish version, and has also been made into a successful film. A simple novel that deals with truth and happiness, Esquivel has weaved a story that reads like a folk tale, incorporating everything from magic to ghosts to tradition.

The passing on of recipes in the De la Garza household is one of the more pleasant traditions in the novel, and Tita, the youngest daughter, is the recipient of these. She is also, however, the victim of a more gruesome family tradition: as the youngest daughter, she is obliged to remain unmarried and take care of her widowed mother until the day she dies.

This tradition, which at first only adds to Tita's dislike of her mother, soon becomes the main source of pain and destruction in her life and haunts her until the end of the novel. When Pedro Muzquiz asks for her hand, Tita's mother, Mama Elena, prevents their marriage and instead offers Pedro the hand of her eldest daughter. This leads, of course, to a series of events overflowing with heartache, hope, and passion (and tears), as the story of Tita's life is told.

Like Water for Chocolate has a wonderful cast of characters. They are portrayed very vividly, from Mama Elena, who is aptly described as being an expert at "dividing, dismantling, dismembering, desolating, detaching, dispossessing, destroying, or dominating;" to Pedro and his cowardly weakness; to Tita with her strong, passionate nature. Their interactions bring out the danger and tyranny bred by some traditions, as well as their uselessness.

One of the recurring magical elements of the novel is the inadvertent transmission of Tita's emotions through her cooking. While mixing the batter for her sister's wedding cake, her tears of sadness and lost love fall into the mixture. The next day at the wedding, strange events follow the serving of the cake. The moment [the guests] took their first bite of the cake, everyone was flooded with a great wave of longing. Even Pedro, usually so proper, was having trouble holding back his tears. Mama Elena, who hadn't shed a single tear over her husband's death, was sobbing silently. But the weeping was just the first symptom of a strange intoxication - an acute attack of pain and frustration - that seized the guests and scattered them across the patio and the grounds and in the bathrooms, all of them wailing ever last love. Everyone there, every last person, fell under this spell, and not very many of them made it to the bathrooms in time - those who didn't joined the collective vomiting that was going on all over the patio.

Similarly, when Pedro gives Tita a dozen red roses, she clasps them so firmly to her breast that the thorns draw blood. She cooks quail in rose petal sauce for dinner, and the lust in her blood, which is inspired by Pedro's gift and absorbed by the petals, has a most extraordinary effect on her family - in particular on her sister Gertrudis. Gertrudis so overcome by heat and lust that when she goes to take a shower to cool off, the water evaporates before reaching her skin; the wooden shower stall bursts into flames; and the scent she gives off is picked up by a soldier in the rebel troops miles away, who rides to the ranch and carries the naked Gertrudis off on his horse. Such are Tita's culinary talents.

As Tita's story unfolds, she continues to emerge as a strong figure who recognizes that tradition is not necessarily the highest truth. Like Water for Chocolate is an entertaining, fun read that combines humour and magic with the more serious themes of loyalty and love - overall, it makes for a great dish.

MEGAN NICHOLS would probably cook more often if she had a chance of being carried off by a rebel soldier.

The film Like Water for Chocolate will be playing at the Princess Court Cinema this weekend - call the theatre for showtimes. In addition, there will be a benefit screening of the film in October at the Princess Court Cinema. Following appetizers at the Court and a screening of Like Water for Chocolate, participants will attend a banquet based on the recipes in the book, held at Chez Piggy.

A review copy was provided courtesy of Printed Passage Books

After the Boom

13th Gen: Abort, Retry, Ignore, Fail?
Neil Howe & Bill Strauss, crashed by Ian Williams,
'oons by R.J. Matson
Vintage Books
$12.50
229 pages

For an allegedly ignored generation, the under-thirty set certainly has been getting a lot of press. This time, the attention comes from Neil Howe and Bill Strauss, whose work 13th Gen: Abort, Retry, Ignore, Fail? takes a look at those Americans born between 1961 and 1981 - a group identified by Howe and Strauss as America's thirteenth generation.

The entire project of trying to define a living generation is, as 13th Gen itself admits, "like trying to read the song title on a record that's spinning." Nonetheless, Howe and Strauss have an excellent feeling for what is relevant to a discussion of "13er" life. They deal with the much-lamented closing of post-war opportunity, but go on to consider dozens of other topics, including body image, urban violence, the stability of the family, political apathy and (as a recurring theme) the significance and sway of pop culture.

Howe and Strauss recognize that pop culture has had a legitimate and inescapable influence on 13er life. Their familiarity with youth culture is actually a little startling. Without blinking, these two self-confessed Boomers name-drop Morrissey, Ren and Stimpy, American Gladiators, "Baby's Got Back," Singles, They Might Be Giants, Bill and Ted, Dan and Dave, American Psycho, voice-tras, Jesus Jones, poetry slams, Lollapalooza, U2, morphing, Slacker, Say Anything, Buffy the Vampire Slayer and much (trust me) much more. These ultra-contemporary references will leave 13th Gen with the shelf life of yogurt, but right now they give the book a "live-on-the-scene" vibrancy. 13th Gen even provides some 13er nostalgia when it recalls Tales of a Fourth Grade Nothing, The Breakfast Club and even Risky Business (described as "The Cat in the Hat, only with whores"). Regrettably, Canada's own youth culture is ignored, but this snub itself is a representation of American 13ers. Canada is mentioned only twice in 13th Gen, once by way of the MTV game show category "Dead or Canadian?"

The hordes of pop references in 13th Gen could have choked the book's argument, but instead they remain unintrusive, thanks to 13th Gen's "screen-in-screen" layout. The main text of this book winds around charts, graphs, surveys and cartoons, and the margins of every page are lined with song lyrics, advertising copy, and quotations from films, novels and magazines. Even the main text is occasionally interrupted in mid-sentence by "crasher" (Ian Williams), a 23-year-old hacker supposedly reading 13th Gen on an electronic bulletin board. The overall effect is the sort of pleasant chaos for which MTV is known - content without continuity. No doubt, Howe and Strauss have cultivated this effect. Like many others, they identify 13ers as a soundbite generation, facing life with an attitude described in the book simply as "zoom-a-zoom-a-zoom-a-zoom."

13th Gen is not written in typical academic prose. Its language is casual, inventive, computer-savvy and media-literate. Be warned, however, that Howe and Strauss are unconcerned about the reader's ability to keep up. They use adjectives like "Sci-sorhandian" without explanation, and take concepts like up/downloading as given. While their prose is engagingly original, Howe and Strauss also have a tendency to value creativity over meaning. What does it mean to say that "[13ers'] musical taste is a combination of the centrifugal and the gravitational"? Does it mean anything at all?

This is the most serious problem with 13th Gen. Howe and Strauss seem satisfied with just sounding good. 13th Gen has no index, no footnotes, little evidence, and, frankly, few plausible arguments. The authors seem to rely on a simple formula by which Boomers are blamed for everything bad about America's 13th generation, while 13ers get the credit for everything good. Even the United States' quick victory in the Gulf War is traced to the "get-it-done" attitude of 13er soldiers. Williams's running critique could have been used to challenge

Howe and Strauss's analysis, but the many possibilities of "crashing" are wasted in 13th Gen. The limited dissent that Williams offers is never effectively pursued by Howe, Strauss or even Williams himself.

I doubt that a historian could define our generation to the degree that Howe and Strauss want to pin down the 13ers. 13th Gen takes a large and fairly arbitrary group and then proceeds to make absurdly specific generalizations. For example, Howe and Strauss write that one of the 13ers' least-favourite '70s era period pieces is the hippie classic, Alice Restaurant. What especially bothers them is the scene where young Boomers vent their rage on the establishment by dumping a truckload of garbage down a pristine hillside. To 13ers, the scene is a social and political metaphor for their entire life experience. To make a claim like this about every American between twelve and thirty-two years of age is ridiculous. Howe and Strauss are no longer describing a group but a stereotype.

As an informative study of the post-hippie generation, 13th Gen fails irredeemably. And yet, it is still an entertainingly clever book, full of well-chosen fragments of pop culture and 13er lore. Thus, 13th Gen does succeed, but only as pop history or infotainment. It is a collection of images and ideas, some intriguing, some fun, not working towards a grand conclusion, but simply complete in themselves. Quite appropriate, I suppose, for an MTV generation. Zoom-a-zoom-a-zoom-a-zoom.

TIM MITCHELL is Assistant Editor of Literary Lapses and has attention span even shorter than

HOUSE

A short story by Jason Heroux

In autumn, the cottage was surrounded by burning trees. Tiny mines caught in their explosions. Winter left them charred, extinguished; they reached into the air like upright rakes. At night the forest gradually disappeared into the rich, dark sky like roses angled through soil. In the distance were the lights on the ski hill. They spread over the darkness like spill salt.

Edward was twenty years old and he was my best friend. His family owned the cottage, they invited me there every New Year's Eve. I sat in the living room with Edward on one side, and his cousin Tina on the other. Edward's girlfriend sat next to him. His parents sat opposite us on a small sofa. Thin wafers of snow were scalloping around the porchlight like dreaming moths.

Edward turned to his girlfriend. "Where are the cigarettes, Mel?"

"I don't know."
"You had them last."
"I don't know where they are," she said, her voice cool, distant, sounding as if it emerged from the margins of her throat.

"Fuck, Mel."
Dinner was almost ready: a variety of raw herring and a few bottles of wine. Beverly was bringing the last of the plates from the kitchen, the rest of us sat at the table.

"Edward," Beverly said, "put some Christmas music on for us."

He got up and walked out of the room.

"That reminds me," his father said, looking at me, "Did Edward tell you how he tried to trick us a few days ago?"

"Timmy!" Beverly screamed. "I told you I didn't want to hear another word about any of that! Let's just forget it."

"I wasn't about to say anything about it, pet," he said. "I was just saying, that's all."

"Let's not ruin New Year's Eve."
Edward walked back to the table. He pulled at his jeans, scratching his ass, and then discreetly brought his fingers to his nose and smelled them. It was sort of a habit with him.

"Did you get a haircut, son?"
"Yeah. Yesterday."

"It looks nice. Your father was almost going bald when he was your age."

"Not really, Bev," Tim said. "It happened slowly."

"I know, Timmy, I know. But it started when you were younger. I'm only bringing it up because we were talking about hair, and Edward is at the age now when yours slowly started to fall out. That's all. You're still handsome, Timmy, don't worry."

She took a sip of wine. "Show Edward your teeth."
"Why?" Tim asked. "It's not important."
"Show him," she said. "The boys don't know."

Tim smiled, revealing his teeth.
"Those are all false," Beverly told us. "His teeth began falling out when he was nineteen."

"Really?" Edward said.
Tim nodded, closing his mouth. "It's true," he said.

The phone rang. Beverly answered it.
"That was my sister," she said, coming back to the table. "She wished us a Happy New Year."

"Is she still in the hospital?"
"Oh no, she's doing fine. It was nothing serious."
"What was it?"

"Nothing at all. Thank God. We just have to keep in mind that she's going to be turning sixty soon. We keep forgetting because she acts so young. The poor dear just wasn't feeling too well, a little out of breath, so she went to the hospital to relax and rest up a bit. After all, she's turning sixty. That's about twenty years older than me, and we keep forgetting."

"Fifteen," Tim said.
"It's almost midnight!" Beverly screamed.

She walked into the living room and turned on the television. Dick Clark's New Year's Eve Rock and Roll Bonanza in Stereo was on.

"Look at the big ball!" Beverly said. "It's about to drop!"

It dropped.
Beverly opened her arms out toward us. "Come on, come on," she said. We all got into a circle and swayed against each other. The crowd was cheering on the television. Beverly was crying out of joy.

"Look at me," she said. "I'm crying out of joy." We all hugged.

"I'm going to call our friends and wish them a Happy New Year," Beverly said. She picked up the phone in the kitchen. She listened. "There's no dial tone."

Tim walked into Edward's room. The phone was off its cradle. The receiver was dangling by its cord.

"Edward," Tim said, "your phone's off the hook."

"Hub?"
"Your phone."
"It was an accident."

"But it must have been like that since after your aunt called. That was hours ago. What if there had been an emergency somewhere?"

"Yeah, yeah, it's alright."
"It's not alright, Edward, it's not alright if..."
"Alright, dad."

"But Edward, what happens if..."
"I know!" he screamed.

Tim charged at him. His large hands turtle-necked around Edward's throat. Beverly screamed. She pulled them apart.

"Stop!" she said, then she turned to her son. "Your father will do anything to stop you from hurting me!" she screamed.

I was lying on the couch in the dark. I heard Edward's cousin approaching. She stopped and stood above me, and started rustling through her purse. I felt something brush against my cheek. Then something slid across my lips. It tasted like strawberries. I opened my eyes. She was putting her make-up on me, giggling.

Be wealthy, proud, and respected!
Or, be like real writers -
Poor, self-destructive and ignored.
Either way, write for LITERARY LAPSES.

Drop off your poetry, prose, or art at
The Journal House, 272 Earl Street.

Please include your name and phone number.
If you would like to review a book for Literary Lapses (they're free!) contact Megan or Tim at
The Journal House.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

invites you to a reading by NORMAN LEVINE
author of *From A Seaside Town
& Canada Made Me*
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16th, 8:00 pm
WINDMILLS CAFE, 184 PRINCESS ST.

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Open 7 Days a Week
Phone: 546-7650 Fax: 546-5638
Serving Kingston for over 15 years

FRENCH ORAL COMMUNICATION COURSES
(non-credit courses)
Starting September 27, 1993
at
LE CENTRE FRANÇAIS de QUEEN'S
96 Albert, 545-2534

FORMAT: 10 people per group, 11 weeks, 2 hours per week
REGISTRATION: Before September 23 at Le Centre Français
FEES: Payable at the registration, $100 (Tax deductible).
Sorry, no reimbursement after September 23.
SCHEDULE: Elementary 1: Thursdays 5:30 to 7:30
Elementary 2 & Intermediate 1: Tuesdays 5:30 to 7:30
Intermediate 2 & 3: Wednesdays 5:30 to 7:30
Advanced: Mondays 7:30 to 9:30

Sports

Mt. Robson Conquered!

Queen's is on top of the World.

BY E. HILARY
The Queen's Journal

On August 4, 1993 at 7:30pm, the highest mountain in the Canadian Rockies, Mt. Robson, was climbed successfully for the first time this year by a team made up of two climbers: an Irish gentleman and a Queen's University student. Mt. Robson towers 3,954 metres (12,972ft) above the ground with an incredible 2400m vertical. Due to the mountains height, there is a tendency for it to create its own weather, 80% of the time the weather is brutally harsh. This, together with the mountain's long and difficult routes, makes climbing Mt. Robson not an easy task.

The Queen's flag is flying high.

Rob Coco

Sixty percent of the climbers who attempt the mountain do not succeed. The route climbed by the Queen's student, Claudio Cocorochia, was the North ridge, also known as the Fuhrer ridge as it was first climbed in 1938 by a team led by Mr. Fuhrer. Since then, the ridge has been rarely climbed due to the close proximity of the easier Kain route. The flashy North Face route became the fad for climbers all over the world in the 70's.

Weatherwise, this particular two man team was extremely lucky in their ascent due to a high pressure front that covered the area in which Mt. Robson lies—causing a beautiful week of sunny weather. This was the first stable weather that the Rockies had received in six weeks.

It took the climbers five days (some days climbing 16 hours straight without food or water) to reach the peak and return to the base of Mt. Robson. Their diet for two straight days consisted only of chocolate, water and in the evenings hot tea. This sparse diet is due to the fact that a light load on a mountaineer's back is important when climbing and food is no exception for reducing weight.

The only problem arose on the fourth day while descending the mountain by the Kain route. The Irish climber was crossing a 100ft deep crevice on a snow bridge when it collapsed. Luckily nobody was hurt.

The first 1993 ascent of Mt. Robson was done in the University's name as the Queen's flag flaps in the wind atop the highest and most sought after peak in the Canadian Rockies.

Sports contributors wanted. Call 545-2800 Maintenan!

The Beer was a-Flowing

BY JOCKO LAMONTE
The Queen's Journal

The frosh were drunk and tired, but they saw, they were there. The opening game to what looks to be yet another successful season was won hands down by a score of 22-6. Ask anyone who was there, they'll tell you: "Yeah, we won. Hands down."

For the record, we played McGill University and, like in years past, we humiliated our Quebecois rivals. The usual scattered play on the part of McGill was evident, however, were it not for the stellar play of the Queen's squad, victory would not have been eminent.

For a rather new team, Queen's played surprisingly tight. Unfortunately,

McGill gets a good sound thrashing.

Jocko Lamonte

nately, the score was not indicative of the thrashing that McGill received. There were a few hard hits, I mean HARD hits labelled on the McGill pack-it seemed like industrial steamrollers.

The scoring breakdown was as follows: Steve Pettigrew kicked a penalty for Queen's to open the score. Added to this was a first try by John Coffeng. McGill managed to fluke a penalty in the second half and a drop goal in the second but that is life. Point is, they stepped in our end zone.

Second half action saw two tries scored by Drew McNaughton, one of which was converted. All told, it is always nice to see a frosh week in victory.

Gaels take hard-fought opener 17-11 over Gee-Gees

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

(OTTAWA) It wasn't easy, but national champion Queen's Golden Gaels prevailed 17-11 over the Ottawa Gee-Gees in the opening game of the OQIFC season at Minto Field in Ottawa last Saturday.

On a cool, blustery day, the Gaels built a 17-0 lead by halftime on the strength of touchdown passes from first-time starting pivot Steve Othen to Ed Kidd and Paul Kozan, and a 15-yard field goal by Rob Weir. Queen's held Ottawa to only three first downs before the break.

Gee-Gees get back into the game But the Gee-Gees got going in the second half as quarterback Steve Clarke completed five passes for 122 yards to flanker Warren Grant. Ottawa picked off an Othen pass, and slowed down the conservative Queen's offense. The Gee-Gees scored a touchdown, a field goal and a single to get back into the game. It took a key fumble recovery near midfield by Queen's linebacker Brent Pullen with 15 seconds left to seal the win.

Without doubt the story of the game was the continuation of All-Canadian slotback Brad Elberg by the Gee-Gees' defense. The last time these teams met in Ottawa, Elberg crashed the conference single-game rushing record with an incredible 284 yards. Clearly keying on Elberg, Ottawa held the fleet star to only 12 yards on eight carries, three yards receiving on one catch, and 55 yards on seven returns.

Gaels Have Other Weapons But the Gaels have other potent weapons, and on this day Othen, Kozan, Kidd and rookie fullback John Thelen really came through. High marks also go to the Queen's defense, which held Clarke to only four completions on 26 passing attempts. The Gaels were whittled fourteen times for 135 yards in penalties, assisting Ottawa's defense considerably.

In other conference games, rated Bishop's Gaeters needed a 28-yard touchdown pass with no time left on the clock to pull out a 28-20 home victory over Concordia while McGill Redmen held off the beat Carleton Ravens 22-17 in Ottawa.

Melee in the pool

Water polo action starts October 2nd

BY JOANNA HINDLE
The Queen's Journal

If you happened to be by the pool during the 4:30p.m. swim this past week, you might have noticed an unusual amount of congestion in the two far lanes. Not only were swim team veterans back in the water, but also members of the men's water polo team. As the first practice was set for this past Monday, many of the guys were out getting ready for a bright looking season.

New Head-coach Don Duffy is looking forward to the new year. "There is a good core team returning from last season," he remarked, "including OUA All Stars Mike Greenwood and Mark Bason." The dominating McMaster team that took the '92-93 title has lost a great many from its ranks, but Carleton and the University of Toronto still remain very formidable opponents. All in all, it should turn out to be a tough season for the Gaels.

Returning team co-captain, and winner of the 1993 Gaels Water Polo Trophy, Tim Carr is hopeful about the upcoming season. "With last year's young team all coming back we hope to have a promising year. The slight change in coaching and the loss of some of the team's elders, be it by injury or graduation, has me looking forward to a hard-working year. As a last remark... party on dude!"

The men start their season soon, with their first tournament on October 2nd. Good luck guys!

Yet another melee!

BY SUE KING-WETT
The Queen's Journal

After the best water polo season in Queen's history, the women's team is looking forward to a building year. Having lost more than half the team, including co-captains and Award of Merit winners Martha Wyatt and Heather Gow, the team is relying on last year's strong bench to pull them through the season.

To everyone's relief, all-star goalie and gold medal game MVP ShoeShine Malahoooski will be returning to the net (PHEW!). Unfortunately, goalie coach Dennis Stonchouse will be wandering around Europe instead of on deck. This leaves OVIWA Water Polo Coach of the Year Don Duffey alone in the saddle for the season, his revolutionary moving offence undoubtedly wreaking havoc for yet another year.

Jen "the machine" McCrea, the Gael leading scorer last season, is feeling particularly hurt by the traitorous activities of certain Kimster. The grooving wicketeer the rocket extraordinaire, has turned back on the team, choosing instead to concentrate solely on some wet thing called breaststroke. Though there have been rumours about guest appearances, the team only wait and hope.

With hard work and some new recruits, Gaels should be in top form before their tournament in mid-November. Both Malahoooski and skip-shooter in training E.T.T.P. 2.0 die are expecting a really fun season and that the upcoming Keg party will be as successful as last year's. See you there!

[Ed's Note: Where's the keg party?]

ATHLETIC INFORMATION NIGHT

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1993

5:00 - 7:00 pm

BARTLETT GYMNASIUM

INTERUNIVERSITY

- Meet the Coaches!
- Information on men's and women's 40 Interuniversity teams
- Practice times and try-outs!
- Manager positions open!
- 1993-94 competitive schedules

INTRAMURALS

- Fall sports sign-up: team and individual!
- Tournament details and entry information
- Over 30 sports for men (BEWS), women (WIC), co-ed (BEWIC)
- Meet athletic reps from your faculty
- Officials needed for all sports (earn some pocket money)
- 1993-1994 Intramural posters available

- FREE DOOR PRIZES -

RECREATION CLUBS

- Recreation Club information and sign-up
- Over 30 Clubs available
- Club activity displays
- Club brochures available
- Meet Representatives

INSTRUCTIONAL SPORT SKILLS

Thinking of modifying your lifestyle?

- Learn a new sport or skill
- Take a fitness course; over 200 programs from which to choose
- Instructional Sports Skills [I.S.S.] brochure available

WICKETS OPEN

4:00 - 7:15 pm

Physical Education Centre
Locker/Laundry Service

CANTEEN OPEN

4:00 - 8:30 pm

- Campus Kits - a great bargain for locker supplies
- Snacks/Drinks
- Golden Gaels Souvenirs, Tatoos

Entertainment

Two pairs (of bands) at Bartlett

Thrush Hermit/Dig Circus/Sloan/Lowest of the Low Bartlett Gym
BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

The unpredictability of live music is beyond compare: within any concert lies the possibility of brilliance or abysmal failure. Last Saturday's mercurial Frosh Week concert at Bartlett Gym gave a concrete example of this reality as the concert's bill containing Thrush Hermit, Dig Circus, Sloan and Lowest of the Low swung from moments of intense musical passion to depressions of mediocrity. Paid for completely by student interest fees, with only a $2 cover charge going to charity, the concert attracted most of Kingston's underground. As one of my friends put it so succinctly: "Blow up this place and that's it, you have homogeneity."

Taking the stage at around 8:00 p.m., Thrush Hermit observed that this was the first time they had played in a gym since grade nine, a seemingly long absence until you consider that the median age of the band is 17 years old. But like they say, rock 'n roll is a young man's game, and on this night Thrush Hermit were playing the game very well. Opening with "Hated It" the band quickly established their credentials, as the song pulsed and chugged to a hook-filled vocal climax. What was also immediately evident were the similarities to fellow-Haligonians Sloan. Not only did the band sound highly reminiscent of Sloan, they even looked and acted like them. Bassist Ian McGettigan bounced around the stage a la Chris Murphy while Joel Plaskett and Rob Benvie were prone to stage-wandering when they weren't singing.

"Quartermark," the second song of Thrush Hermit's set opened up new musical ground building on the foundations of Sonic Youth and Husker Du. Barrelling ahead in the standard two guitars, bass, drums and vocal mode, the only problem with the performance was the weak mix on the lead guitar; consequently, unless you strained for the melody lines, the sound tended to be the musical equivalent of a blast furnace.

Nevertheless, this was one blast furnace I could enjoy, as the problem lay more in the acoustics of Bartlett Gym than in the songs of Thrush Hermit, which were well conceived and executed.

On "Mariah," the "boys" flexed their musical muscles incorporating syncopation. By this time the band appeared completely comfortable with the audience, recklessly jumping and bouncing around the stage. They might have even been getting a little too comfortable...

Case in point: For the last song, bassist Ian somehow came to the conclusion that it would be wise to jump the chasm of photographers and cordon of Queen's Security and land on the three inch wide wooden crowd barrier. Unfortunately, this leap of faith was less than successful. After landing on the ledge, bass in hand, Mr. McGettigan pitched violently backwards and then forwards in a full fledged pratfall into the crowd. Resurfacing moments later after some apologies to individual members of the audience, our hero then tried to scale the barrier and retake the stage. In this case patience would have been a virtue, as Ian became entangled in his bass cord and ended up sprawled on the ground inside the photography and security pit. This time he was less quick to regain his feet and injury seemed a real possibility, but never fear, Ian made it back onto the stage just in time to unplug his bass and untangle himself from the mess he had created. It was a wonderfully disastrous end to a set that showcased all that is great about the band: energy and immaturity.

Of course after the high, comes the inevitable low and Dig Circus did not disappoint. Playing "good-time" party music with an accordion in their six person ensemble, Dig Circus provided the nadir of the night. Not that I have a bias against accordions, but when you play a polka rendition of the Violent Femmes "Blister in the Sun" and the most intriguing moment of your show occurs when the lead singer has his head shaved into a "Mr. T" Mohawk live onstage, you're treading in dangerous waters.

It should be said Dig Circus started out much better than they ended. A motley crew, the band had me confused initially. In the first few songs they melded a grunge guitar to Celtic pop melodies that reminded one of James. Later in the set, however, the Circus lost what little edge they once possessed.

I don't know how long Dig Circus has been playing together, but this tune gave some indication of possible future success. In all fairness, the band received a warm crowd reception after each one of their songs and a quick informal poll of the audience revealed little dissatisfaction with the product onstage. The moral: If you like middle of the road, no edges music, you would probably like Dig Circus. By the time Sloan came on to play, the crowd had swelled to about double the amount present for Thrush Hermit's set. It was obvious people were coming for Sloan — and Sloan alone.

Clothing and image wise, Sloan was tearing a page from Nirvana's book, as bassist Chris Murphy sported a Kurt Cobain sweater and had the short Cobain coil to match.

The first song of the set blasted off in a cacophony of sound — Sloan wasn't about to woo the audience, they were going to blow them out of the arena.

Not long after the music began, a mosh pit formed and bodies began sailing high above the crowd. But alas this is Queen's, and in the tricolour spirit of safety, Sloan was asked to tell the crowd not to body-surf on each other, but to merely jump up and down. Lead guitarist Patrick Pentland even gave a helpful demonstration of what would be appropriate behaviour, jumping and down and saying: "that's not that's cool." To which the crowd replied: "Go fucking nuts." O well.

The first few songs of Sloan's set were all fast paced blasts of distortion which I really didn't recognize. The first song to breakthrough was "Sugartune," from both the Peppermint EP and Smeared CD.

Shortly after "Sugartune" followed "Underwhelmed." Undoubtedly the climax of the concert, this one had the whole gang transformed into a dancefloor, even those on crutches were up and boogie-ing (I'm not kidding).

At the time Sloan came on to play, the crowd had swelled to about double the amount present for Thrush Hermit's set. It was obvious people were coming for Sloan — and Sloan alone.

Despite the epiphany of "Underwhelmed," such moments were infrequent. It seems Sloan forgot about great songs such as "Marcus Said," and "500 Up." It is possible that Sloan were road-testing new material, still, if they had played more recognizable songs their show would have improved remarkably.

The headliners of the night were Lowest of the Low, who took the stage at 11:30. Crowd attention was now evident, but there was still a sizable amount of faithful left over. Tunes such as "4 O'Clock," "Trees and Kites," and "Pistol" filled the first half of the Low's set; these were unfamiliar tunes that featured the common bond of having a sickly melodic "E-Z Cheez" of ruses. Nonetheless, these songs kept much of the remaining fans on their feet dancing and hiding their time they waited for the big hits such as "Eternal Fatalist."

Lowest of the Low songs often remind one of cotton candy. They are pleasant, but lack the intense characteristic of Sloan's or Thrush Hermit's songs. One of the band's strong points was its pacing. Despite having many similar sounding songs, the order in which the well-known songs were integrated into the set built the show up into a satisfying climax that culminated with the biggest song: "Henry Needs a New Pair of Shoes."

Overall, I can give Lowest of the Low the thumbs up for the performance. But, if the band had stuck to the Billy Bragg arrangement utilized in the first song, the encore they would have captured an honesty and directness that the rest of the set clouded over.

Appropriately, the show ended this long night with a cover of Billy Bragg's "New England," a rendition of a great song. After the roller coaster ride of a concert, Sloan was willing to accept this position and run for the border.

Keep your eye on the bass.

Derek Yarnell

Growing his hair.

Derek Yarnell

The Cemetery Club
Written by Ivan Menchell
Directed by Tim Picotte
Domino Theatre
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

Opening this year's season of Domino Theatre is The Cemetery Club, a sometimes boisterous, sometimes tearful (tragi)comedy which explores the problems of post-marriage relationships.

The play revolves around the lives of three widows who get together each month for tea, to reminisce, and to visit their husbands' graves. These widows, Ida (Jan DeBuriate), Lucille (Jane Adams-Roy) and Doris (Elizabeth Taylor) have been performing this ritual for years, and the play's conflict arises when Lucille and Ida begin to question the utility of this "cemetery club." As Lucille humorously indicates, their deceased husbands are always absent at their club meetings: "Haven't you ever noticed that half of this club is always missing?"

Lucille has always been a reluctant participant in the club. Preferring to "play the field," she seems to consider the monthly meetings as an opportunity to show off her new mink coat and to brag about her encounters with men, rather than as a time to brood over her promiscuous husband. Unlike Lucille, Doris looks forward to her graveyard visits. Disturbed by the lack of care which the groundskeeper exhibits, she brushes off her husband's grave and simultaneously resurrects his memory. Her dedication, though, ultimately imprisons her — she is a faithful, but hopeless slave to the past.

Somewhere between this Whore-Madonna dichotomy, between the stereotypes of the lusty wife and grieving wife, lies Ida. Although she cherishes the memory of her husband, she also yearns for the company of a new man. When she serendipitously meets Sam (Art Kraus), a widower, at the cemetery, she is suddenly flung into the heady experience of romance.

This somewhat tedious plot summary exposes some of the weaknesses of Ivan Menchell's comedy. Comedy should primarily be concerned with action, but Menchell seems bent on dramatizing Prufrock-like paralysis. He spends a disproportionate amount of time in exposition; the complication of the play (Lucille's and Doris's sabotage of Ida's relationship with Sam) doesn't occur until the play is half over. And when the action finally begins to happen, when the story starts to become engaging, Menchell suffocates the play by resolving the conflict via the horrendous technique of deus ex machina.

The Cemetery Club does bring up some intriguing questions. Is marriage for life or until "death do you part"? Can one be faithful to the memory of a beloved husband while marrying another man? At what point does it become too late to establish new relationships?

Unfortunately, these questions are linked to the main action of the play, and when Menchell cuts the action short, he leaves the issues unexplored. Menchell seems content to use carpe diem as the magic, universal answer to the problems of life, and by doing so, he sidesteps the questions which he has taken so long to develop. Indeed, Menchell takes two and a half hours to arrive at the same conclu-

Director Tim Picotte should also be commended for his debut effort. He makes the soliloquies of Act 1, scene ii, particularly effective through his use of lighting.

Although the scene is primarily in tableau, Picotte's technique allows the transition between speakers to be smooth and undisturbing. And by placing Ida in between Lucille and Doris, he makes it apparent that the whole scene is an elaborate dramatization of her thoughts.

In terms of its set, The Cemetery Club is beautifully constructed. Domino Theatre has been meticulous in fashioning both the interior of Ida's house (allowing the audience to see some of the action through the front window is ingeniously postmodern) and the grave sites (I was impressed that they actually had real autumn leaves strewn about the set).

For all the hard, thoughtful effort which Domino Theatre has spent on The Cemetery Club, it is a shame that they can't be better rewarded. The writing of Ivan Menchell simply lets them down.

The Cemetery Club runs Thursday to Saturday until September 25. Domino Theatre is located on 370 King St West (at Morton), in the old brewery row.

Director Tim Picotte should also be commended for his debut effort. He makes the soliloquies of Act 1, scene ii, particularly effective through his use of lighting.

Don't mark it on your calendar

Calendar Girl
Directed by John Whitesell
Catarqui Cineplex
BY SIAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS
The Queen's Journal

I had the painful experience of seeing the new "comedy" Calendar Girl—I think I'm seared for life. Before this movie, I didn't have any extreme animosity towards Beverly Hills 90210's Jason Priestly—I saved it all for Luke Perry. After seeing Calendar Girl, I think I've developed a precious hatred for the British Columbian hunklet (not to mention this movie).

Calendar Girl is easily predictable from its tell-all advertisements. It's set in the 1960's in a small town where three young men—Roy (Jason Priestly), "Dude," and another guy whose name I can't remember—have grown up together with infatuations for Marilyn Monroe. The three eighteen-year-olds are the typical eclectic set of best friends that exist only in lame movies: Roy is a studly bad-boy who collects mob money and has the most sexual experience, "Dude" is a freckle-faced shy-guy who is attached to the hip to his girlfriend, and the other guy is a clean-cut average Joe-Shmoe who dedicates his life to his father's toy store. Somehow these three teenagers are inseparable best friends.

The "action" begins when Roy dreams up a scheme to drive over to Hollywood to hang out with Marilyn (and maybe even have sex with her! Oh boy!) before Roy joins the army. The three eventually jump into a cute baby-blue convertible and hit the road to Hollywood, where Roy's Uncle Harvey will roller coaster ride of a concert house them while they track down Ms. Monroe (I suppose that would be Miss Monroe in those pre-Steinbeck times). The adventure has begun. Once in Hollywood the three eighteen-year-olds somehow locate Marilyn's house, only to find that they can't get past her bitchy housekeeper. They idiotically try all the Hollywood hotspots hoping to run into her. In the meantime, two mob money collectors somehow trace Roy to Hollywood for some money he stole to finance his trip. I think these guys were supposed to add a flare of suspense to the movie, but it's not surprising that they fail miserably.

To spare you all of the annoying details, Roy eventually sneaks past the housekeeper and actually give Harvey's phone number to Marilyn just in case she decides she wants some weenie adolescent company (or adolescent weenie, for that matter). Lo and behold, late that night she phones Harvey's house and one lucky boy gets to accompany Marilyn for a drive down the Pacific Coast Highway. She confesses that she has no friends and appears happy to have found one, regardless of the fact that he's only a eighteen-year-old dork that just wants to get under her skirt.

Despite all the offensive one-liners Roy comes up with to woo Ms. Monroe ("I just want to lay on top of you and see where it goes from there"), the three musketeers leave Hollywood without any steamy sexual experiences with her. Too bad. In the meantime, they return home much like the characters from The Wizard of Oz. After a long emotional talk with his buddies, Roy decides to make peace with his father before he boots off to the army. "Dude" gains some independence from his girlfriend from the experience of doing "manly" things with his friends, and the other guy had the sheer fun of having a heart-to-heart chat with Marilyn Monroe. Wow. Roy profoundly sums up the adventure: "It made us become men a little faster." Manhood really scares me sometimes.

There are far too many reasons not to see Calendar Girl—Jason Priestly is a good place to start. As if he's not horrible enough as squeaky-clean Brandon in 90210, now he's attempting to play the cancer fiend Evil Anti-Brandon in Calendar Girl to shake his teenybopper image. Sorry Jason, but the fifth-graders around me in the theatre didn't seem to mind one bit.

Come write for entertainment. It's better than bad, it's good.

INTRAMURALS

ENTRY DEADLINE FOR FALL TEAM SPORTS
4pm THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 16th

BEWS Bewball	BEWS Flag Football	BEWIC Innertube Waterpolo	BEWS Golf
WIC Dodgeball	WIC Flag Football	BEWS Indoor Soccer	BEWS Hockey
BEWIC Volleyball	BEWS Waterbasketball	WIC Floor Hockey	BEWS Soccer
BEWS Volleyball	WIC Waterbasketball	WIC Basketball	WIC Soccer
WIC Volleyball	BEWS Rugby

Entries are due for the softball tournaments at the managers meetings as follows:

Men's Softball - Wednesday SEPTEMBER 15th at 6pm PEC Rm 205
Coed Softball - Monday SEPTEMBER 22nd at 6pm PEC Rm 205

COMPLETED ENTRY FORMS SHOULD BE SUBMITTED TO THE I/M OFFICE

 IMPORTANT MANAGERS MEETINGS ***
WIC & BEWS FALL MANAGERS - Thursday SEPTEMBER 23rd at 5:30pm in PEC Rm 205
BEWIC FALL MANAGERS - Monday SEPTEMBER 27th at 6pm in PEC Rm 205

White Trash Romance

True Romance
Directed by Tony Scott
Capitol
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

"If I had to fuck a guy, if my life depended on it, I'd fuck Elvis."

Thus we are introduced to Clarence Worley (Christian Slater), cretinous - but way cool - hero of True Romance, a new action picture-cum-love story penned by Reservoir Dogs wunderkind Quentin Tarantino.

Clarence works in a Detroit comic book store and believes that Elvis and kung-fu movies represent the zenith of human cultural achievement. One night at a kung-fu triple bill he meets a bubbly blonde and sometime call girl, Alabama Whitman (Patricia Arquette) who, despite her vehement protests to the contrary, is clearly white trash. But that's O.K., since Clarence is too, even if he was born north of the Mason-Dixon line. Sure enough, before you can say "backlit saliva swap" the two are in love and, as all young lovers must, run off to city hall and the tattoo parlour.

Their newfound nuptial bliss is interrupted, however, when Clarence, in a touching gesture of chivalry, elects to kill Alabama's former pimp, Drexel (Gary Oldman). With his short, perpetually askew hair and army surplus jacket, Clarence looks more than a little like Travis Bickle (Robert DeNiro in Taxi Driver), making the scene even more derivative of the superior Scorsese work. In the aftermath, Clarence accidentally takes possession of a suitcase filled with cocaine belonging to the Mob, beginning a violent chase which climaxes in Los Angeles.

The Doomed-White-Trash-Lovers-Road-Movie is a genre typified by mindless misfit youth (is that anomic or jes' plain stupidity? You be the judge) who profess to be IN LOVE (even if you college egghead types think their characters are flat and lack motivation, they sure enough do have sex a lot, don't they, so it must be love). Through one set of circumstances or another, the young lovers are propelled on a journey marked by nihilistic violence and a plethora of menacing oddball characters who want nothing more than to do them wrong (can't they see that they're IN LOVE?).

The height (or depth, depending on your perspective) of recent White Trash cinema is David Lynch's Wild at Heart. Many aspects of True Romance are similar to Lynch's film, including the fact that, despite a promising cast and some sharp dialogue, it isn't very good.

True Romance only succeeds superficially in its attempt to recall two far superior films, Bonnie and Clyde and the lesser-known Badlands. The former, directed by Arthur Penn in 1967, was nothing short of a landmark, its critical and commercial success making stars of Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway, and, more importantly, enabling it to reclaim singlehandedly the mantle of the traditional American gangster film, which had been appropriated by the French New Wave. Badlands, the 1974 directorial debut of Terence Malick, which starred a young Martin Sheen and even younger Sissy Spacek, depicted the true story of a laconic ex-garbageman who, with his pubescent, star-struck girlfriend, went on a murderous rampage across Nebraska and Wyoming in the early 1960s. Spacek's chillas Clarence's father. Gary Oldman and Pitt make token appearances.

So that's where the Stages leopard skin went!

Quentin Tarantino's script was written before Reservoir Dogs, but only put into production after that film's tremendous success. And it shows. The script for Reservoir Dogs was much more assured, in its dialogue and characterization. This in turn enabled the violence in Reservoir Dogs to be more than gratuitous: because one could empathize with a number of the characters, it became complicit to their actions.

No such characters exist in True Romance. Although there are some intriguing characters on the fringes, such as Canadian Saul Rubinek's portrayal of a sleazy pimp (is that redundant?), the lead roles are devoid of any depth or any qualities which would inspire empathy, or even interest.

Thus, when violence enters the film (and there's plenty) it seems either pointless or offensive. More than a few Reservoir Dogs regulars at Toronto's Horseviewers were appalled by its scenes, and it is likely that True Romance will have the same effect. One scene in particular, a brutal beating of Alabama at the hands of a hit man, is very disturbing. The question of empowerment (a highlight of one of the recent ment dictates that such a scene is far less defensible than the all-male violence in Reservoir Dogs. Perversely, the aspect of True Romance which provoked controversy among American ratings board censors was not the violence of the attack on the woman, but the ferocity with which she fought back.

The subject which True Romance attempts to explore - the perseverance of some sort of light (be it love, faith or idealism) in the face of a dark and menacing world - is a subject which has been the basis of numerous provocative and powerful films, most recently, Abel Ferrara's Bad Lieutenant. The latter film surely was one of the most graphic and harrowing mainstream releases in recent years. What kept it from descending to exploitation was a magnetic and courageous performance by Harvey Keitel. True Romance commits the crime of featuring similar moments of excess, without the attributes necessary for redemption.

the Duke of Kingston
IAN PETRIE & LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

A typically boisterous packed house greeted The Mahones on Saturday night at the Duke.

Last month, The Mahones were hailed as Kingston's hottest band in a music survey which appeared in the Toronto Star and was syndicated nationally. And although die-hard fans of other rising local bands such as The Inbreds and the Stonecutters might contest the title, it is clear that, with in-demand recordings and a new cassette selling briskly locally, the Celtic rockers have something special to offer.

This summer saw the band play regularly at Toronto's Horseviewers Tavern, the venerable bar likely that True Romance will have the same effect. One scene in particular, a brutal beating of Alabama at the hands of a hit man, is very disturbing. The question of empowerment (a highlight of one of the recent ment dictates that such a scene is far less defensible than the all-male violence in Reservoir Dogs. Perversely, the aspect of True Romance which provoked controversy among American ratings board censors was not the violence of the attack on the woman, but the ferocity with which she fought back.

Pub gigs would seem to restrict the Mahones, as the audience expects a steady dose of traditional favourites and covers. The band's performance of such songs is by no means lacklustre, but word has it that their out of town shows at U.S.A." (perhaps better known by the one line everyone sings, "Clear the way!"), which was enough to trigger the usual amount of oddball head-bobbing and off-time clapping and pint glass pounding which constitute many audience members' misguided but heartfelt attempt to return to their Celtic roots.

Violinist John Berger, of the San Francisco band Tempest, joined the band for the first set. Berger was in town for the Celtic Festival which took place over the weekend at Fort Henry, featuring music, highland dancing, and a marketplace. The Mahones played two sets there Saturday afternoon, but displayed their usual vigour throughout the evening.

Berger's lilting violin joined Andrew Brown's tin whistle on the instrumental "Mason's Apron," which segued into another crowd favourite, an extended rendition of "County Down," driven by bassist Owen Warnica. The first set was rounded out with spirited performances of two Waterboys tunes: "A Bang on the Ear" and "Killing My Heart," a rousing version which surpasses the original.

Although The Mahones' traditional bent stands in contrast to the explorations of other young local fixtures, their energy and commitment suggests that their place in the burgeoning Kingston music scene is well-deserved.

larger venues, featuring tight single sets with a far greater proportion of original material, are even more dynamic. Sounds like grounds for a road trip.

The crowd moved to the front en masse when the second set came to the ever-popular "Fisherman's Blues," which highlights the pleasingly ragged vocals of Fintan McConnell and the mandolin of Gerry O'Sullivan.

"The Mahones Reel" further demonstrated the need for highland dancing instruction in Kingston (although given the pint-sized spice at the front of the Duke, perhaps it's best no one was cutting a rug).

The evening closed out strongly with the passionate anti-England polemic "Old England." The politics may ring a little hollow here - the song is so Scottish it hurts - but it still packs a punch.

An evening at one of The Mahones' pub gigs is undoubtedly a comfortably familiar good time, for band and audience alike. The widespread appeal of traditional Celtic folk is revealed by the composition of the crowds the band attracts, in which students mingle happily with pensioners.

Although The Mahones' traditional bent stands in contrast to the explorations of other young local fixtures, their energy and commitment suggests that their place in the burgeoning Kingston music scene is well-deserved.

Finny in fine form.

Marika Glickman

James KEELAGHAN Accompanied by Oscar Lopez

Sept. 16, 8 p.m.
Grand Theatre
Box Office: 530-2050
$15 (GST incl.)
A Shanero Production

The Olde Tuck Shoppe
In the John Deutsch Centre

546-2912
Candy · Stationary · Drugs
Photofinishing · Film · Grocery
Sundries · Cigarettes · Pop
Lottery Tickets · Ice Cream

Open Mon. - Fri. 8:15 - 9:00
Saturday 10:30 - 5:30
Sunday 11:00 - 4:00

MUSICIANS

An opportunity to perform in School of Music ensembles

Queen's Wind Ensemble: Tuesday and Thursday, 2:30 to 4:00pm. Opened to experienced brass, woodwind, and percussion players. Special need for double reeds, horns, trombones & horns.

Queen's Symphony Orchestra: Monday and Wednesday, 4:00 to 5:30pm. Special need for strings and double reeds, trombones & horns.

Queen's Jazz Ensemble: Tuesday and Thursday 4:00 to 5:30pm. Open to experienced jazz performers. Special need for jazz soloists and a vocalist.

Queen's Symphonic Band: Monday and Wednesday, 2:30 to 4:00pm. Open to all experienced players, all instruments.

Queen's Collegium Musicum: Monday and Wednesday, 2:30 to 4:00pm. Open to experienced musicians.

Queen's University
School of Music
Harrison-LeCaine Hall
(545-2066)

the Sunflower Restaurant
LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The Sunflower Restaurant's sophisticated and fresh combinations love that flavour and interest don't have to be sacrificed when meat is removed from the menu.

Vegetarians will delight at the restaurant's vast and varied menu, including non-dairy lasagna, fajitas, spinach crepes, sandwiches and numerous daily specials, and carnivores will scarcely notice the absence of meat from the hearty and generous portions.

Founded about four years ago by co-owners Terry Boswick, Tom

Webster, and chef Carolyn Rundle, the Sunflower has become a favourite dining spot for Queen's students and locals. However, the restaurant is increasingly becoming a victim of its own success. The floor is understaffed and the result is service which is erratic. The timing of the service was less than impeccable: my dining companions and I were not yet finished our appetizers when the main course arrived, and at the end of the meal our plates sat in front of us for an uncomfortably long time.

An appealing array of specials were offered on Saturday night, including an appetizer of tzatziki with vegetables, pita and French bread, and main courses of roasted red pepper and artichoke pizza on a semolina and rye crust, cauliflower and red lentil curry with coconut string beans served on rice with raita, and potato gnocchi with tomato basil sauce and blue cheese.

The meal started with promise - the tzatziki was flavourful without being frighteningly garlicky and included some extra flavours that set it apart from the traditional preparations offered by local Greek restaurants. Arranged on the plate were assorted foods for dipping - fresh vegetables, delicious warm pita and French bread slices. The bread lacked texture and the crust was disappointingly thin, but the problem of getting a good baguette is not unique to the Sunflower.

The bhel puri, also selected as an appetizer, wins high marks for both presentation and taste. The Sunflower's version of this salad included red cabbage, potato, cucumber, peanuts, tomato and chilies, topped with yogurt and tamarind mint chutney. The vegetables were wonderfully fresh, and the flavour combinations of hot and spicy, mild

Please see MORE! page 32

ATTENTION: ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS
Come and play the best ...
Queen's University Symphony Orchestra
requires
String Players (particularly violinists),
Trombones & Horns
Rehearsals: Monday & Wednesday 4:00-5:30pm

For more information, contact:
School of Music, General Office
545-2066

Variable Vegetarian Fare

NEWMAN HOUSE

(Your Queen's Catholic Chaplaincy)
and

ST. THOMAS MORE PARISH

Welcome new and returning faculty and students to join us for FELLOWSHIP and WORSHIP

SUNDAY LITURGY at DUNNING AUDITORIUM - 11 AM
DAILY MASSES AT NEWMAN HOUSE (192 FRONTENAC ST.)

Tuesday - 5:15pm
Wednesday - 12:30pm
Thursday - 5:15pm
Friday - 12:30pm

Thursday Night Suppers at Newman
5:45pm - only $3.00
Drop by 192 Frontenac or give us a call at 546-2495

Bob Dylan/Various Artists
Bob Dylan: 30th Anniversary Concert Celebration
Columbia

Before launching into a slow burn version of "All Along The Watchtower", Neil Young leaves no doubt as to which Bob he refers to by saying "This one's for you Bob, thanks for having BobFest."

The inevitable CD release of last year's all-star gala celebrates the thirtieth anniversary of Dylan's first recording, launching a career that changed the face of music.

But more than just your average tribute show, this one gathers the heaviest of the heavyweights to whip through some of Dylan's greatest hits.

For the most part, the two-and-a-half hours of music is well worth waiting for. Stevie Wonder, Tracy Chapman and Richie Havens put some fine new spins on classic rock station staples: "Blowing in the Wind," "The Times They Are A'Changin'," and "Just Like A Woman" respectively.

Old-timers strut their characteristic stuff through the material as well, with Young also doing "Just Like Tom Thumb's Blues," Eric Clapton giving "Don't Think Twice It's Alright" a great southern blues feel (both plugged by the way) and The Band steaming through "When I Paint My Masterpiece."

There are a few forgettable moments, such as John Mellencamp's version of "Like a Rolling Stone," Johnny Cash and June Carter's "It Ain't Me Babe," and Roger McGuinn of Byrds fame doing "Mr. Tamborine Man" (what else), but hey, that's why you bought the CD player with the remote control.

The greatest surprises, however, come from the oddest sources. Lou Reed's version of "Foot of Pride" (an obscure outtake) is a lyrical foot-stomp, and the fantastic Eddy Vedder and Mike McCready version of "Masters of War" makes the CD come alive.

Missing is Sinéad O'Conner getting booed off the stage for being too political and controversial (did these Yuppies forget where they were and why for a few seconds?) but otherwise the concert is intact.

Bobby Zimmerman himself of course brings his bagpipe whine to the show's finale and smokes versions of "It's Alright Ma (I'm Only Bleeding)" and "Girl of the North Country," just to prove that he was in fact the reason why everyone gathered, a fitting end to this tribute. Having broken all the other rules in rock and roll, Bob may just decide to groove for another thirty years.

B

—James Keast

Cracker
Kerosene Hat
Virgin/EMI

After listening to Cracker's latest offering, Kerosene Hat, I'm convinced that David Lowery and company must be full-fledged schizophrenics. They can't seem to decide if they want to be in a garage with R.E.M. or on stage doing the "Achy Breaky" with that Billy Ray Cyrus fellow.

Considering that the release was recorded live on a soundstage which was once a set for Westerns like High Noon and Shootout at the OK Corral, it appears that Cracker's country persona is the dominating influence. Whether or not they are jumping on the chuckwagon to cash in on country's current popularity I'm not sure. But I am sure that Kerosene Hat is a dismal, ear-aching failure.

The onslaught begins with the title track. A five and a half minute opus, "Kerosene Hat" is a rambling, gloomy piece full of country-western clichés. In a deep, coarse voice, David Lowery begins, How can I fly with old dark wings, while the magpie sings some chiny song. Not only is Lowery's alliteration bad, but his Texan accent is also completely contrived.

I wonder if it is any coincidence that the next song is entitled "Take Me Down to the Infirmary." Complete with slide guitar and complaints about too much whisky, "Take Me Down" is another country ditty lamenting a lover's sorrow. Ten minutes of poorly performed country is enough to make anyone feel sick. (I think I was getting stomach cramps when "Lonesome Johnny Blues" came on.)

"Low," the first single of Kerosene is somewhat more pop-oriented, but it nonetheless belies its origins — the tune continually repeats an annoying country guitar lick. The best thing about the song is perhaps its video. Featuring Sandra Bernhard and Lowery in a boxing ring, the video is a film noir parody of Raging Bull.

For those looking for the type of material which fuelled Cracker's first hit single, "Teen Angst," listen no further than track two. "Movie Star" is perhaps the most tolerable song on the entire album. With its racing guitar and drum rolls, "Movie Star" is a sharp contrast to the sit-down-and-relax-to-the-point-of-being-comatose-fare which plagues most of the release. Like "Teen Angst," "Movie Star" provides Lowery with subject matter to display his warped sense of humour. Well the movie star, well she crashed her car, but everybody said she was beautiful even without her head.

One mediocre song, however, is not enough to salvage an otherwise poor release. While, in his youth, Lowery was once content to take skinheads bowling, he, at his more mature and responsible age, now finds his thrills by taking line dancing lessons, and his music ultimately suffers for it.

F

—Ryan P. Chen

GOIN' ON!!!

King Apparatus
Marbles
Raw Energy Records

With their second full length release, Toronto skasters King Apparatus have once again disproved the notion that ska is anything but boring and repetitive. Coming two years after their successful self-titled debut, Marbles finds King A in an experimental mood. From funk to swing, from punk to pop, Marbles exemplifies the plethora of ways in which Jamaican off-beat can be played.

"Mother Told You" kicks off a string of catchy, skank inspiring tunes. While ostensibly describing the tumultuous, yet hilarious, relationship between a boy and his girlfriend's mother, "Mother Told You" is also a skilled piece of musical composition. With its leitmotif of a carnival-esque Hammond organ interrupted by piercing grunge-like guitar riffs, the song captures the essence of a young couple bent on fun struggling against an interfering, berserk parent.

In contrast to the complicated writing of "Mother Told You," "Hold Me Down" and "Strong Physical Urge" are straightforward numbers written in the traditional ska mode. In the past, King A has rarely included horns or a female vocalist in their work, and these two tracks surprisingly, but successfully, break with that tradition. Their liberal use of a horn section to provide both the rhythm and the melody is delightfully effective, and the soothing quality of Rique Franks's voice is a beautiful contrast to Chris Murphy's high-pitched, whiny voice.

Keeping with the 2-Tone tradition, "Stumbling" is a three minute anthem which bemoans societal problems. Reminiscent of The Specials' "Nite Klub," "Stumbling" uses the image of a bar and its inebriated inhabitants as a symptom of the poverty and hopelessness of the working class: "And I'm looking around this place and I see there's no farther to fall so I sigh and I say goodbye and forget it all."

Other highlights of Marbles include the giddy "Liars," the rambunctious "Michael & Anne" (which was a B-side on last year's EP, Hospital Waiting Room) and the gloomy "Street Corner." With so many strong numbers, played in so many different styles, Marbles is definitely a release which should be owned by all ska fans. This is a "must-buy" cd, and I stress "buy" — make King Apparatus rich so that they can pump out their loveable off-beat for years to come.

A —Ryan P. Chen

King Apparatus will be appearing at Alfié's on September 22.

The Boo Radleys
Giant Steps
Creation/Columbia

The title of The Boo Radleys newest, double-length CD, Giant Steps says more about it than any review could. Whereas last year's brilliant Everything's Alright Forever was a post-shoegazer wall of loud, fuzzed-up guitars, Giant Steps is a multi-faceted trip of enormous diversity. Cascading over 17 tracks and 64 minutes, there is truly something for everyone, including dub bass, Spanish trumpet, swirling organ, and distorted vocals all alongside crisp Beatlesque harmonies. This is one of those albums where each and every song has its own unique sound and feel.

The album opens with the first single, "I Hang Suspended," and as this song progresses, it becomes obvious that this straight-ahead rocker has enough pop hooks for several songs packed into its brisk four minutes. It is truly an uplifting track. From there it is into "Upon 9th and Fairchild," a song more noteworthy, in the context of this album, for its idiosyncrasies. Opening with guitar feedback over a dub bass line, it progresses through distorted vocals, funk guitar, then punk guitar, screeching wah-wah and finally climaxes with a full string orchestra.

The next track, "Wish I Was Skinny," is an optimistic, upbeat pop gem which comes as a total shock after the previous cut. It is funky surf, over-bright acoustic guitar and trumpet, and culminates in a cheese organ solo. As with the rest of the album, each of these tracks shows an incredible diversity which is strung together with beautiful melodies and lyrics.

Comparisons to the Beatles' White Album are inevitable, but as the song "Take the Time Around" explains, the Boo Radleys take what you know, break it up and re-arrange it into a sonic portrait for the nineties. On the downside, Giant Steps is a little self-indulgent at times, on songs such as "Spun Around" and "Run My Way Runway." Nevertheless, this is a great album which moves between extremes of musical styles within every track, an album of intricacy that begs to be listened to again and again.

A —Denny Silverthorne

Tim Finn
Before & After Capitol

This new album by veteran Australian popster Tim Finn raises the old chicken and egg debate; it sounds a lot like Crowded House in their mellower moments, and of course Tim Finn joined brother Neil in this band for their last album, 1991's Woodface. But then again, it was younger sibling Neil who joined Tim's band Split Enz in the early 1980's. So who's cribbing from who?

It really doesn't matter, as each of the brothers has proved himself to be a fine songwriter. It is sort of a shame to see the elder Finn on his own again, as Woodface was widely acknowledged to be the Crowded House's finest album (although their forthcoming release is rumoured to incorporate Maori rhythms to marvellous effect).

Although the elder Finn's contributions to Split Enz were inevitably more esoteric than those which typified his brother's spell in the band (such as the hit "I Got You"), this album is decidedly low-key and accessible, perhaps to its detriment. Nevertheless, Finn's unerring knack for melodies, his introspective lyrics, and the quality of his collaborators (Neil Finn, Hothouse Flowers, and the perpetually underappreciated Richard Thompson) makes for an album of subtle charms.

The opening track, "Hit the Ground Running," may be the weakest of the lot, sounding like little more than a television theme, and gaining nothing from some rather misplaced attempts at a soul sound. Fortunately, the next three songs, "Protected", "In Love With It All" and "Persuasion" are intelligent pop at its finest, with smooth melodic bass-lines complementing Finn's clear vocals.

"In Your Sway" is a compelling ballad as good as anything on the album, while "Walk You Home" features a surprisingly powerful chorus. The closing cut, "I Found It" reveals Finn's occasional affinity for gratuitous keyboard effects, yet also demonstrates his pleasing falsetto.

In all, Before & After is a fine album of well-written, if not particularly innovative, pop songs, which improves with each listening. It further illustrates that the brothers Finn, whether together or apart, remain among the best pop craftsmen of recent years.

B+ —Jan Petrie

Jane Sibery
When I Was A Boy
Reprise

The new album by one of Canada's most enigmatic artists is a stunning accomplishment. It portrays mystery and mood, it swirls and loops, and winds into your consciousness before slipping away, yet reveals little about its creator.

Intriguingly crafted, Jane Sibery's latest work — a couple of years and much travelling in the making, and aided by producer/weirdo Brian Eno — is the musical equivalent of champagne. The substance gets you drunk, but it's the bubbles that make you giggle.

More thickly layered and musically complex than some of her previous work, what makes it really great and interesting is... elusive. It demands that you listen, and it takes the usual, whether it be a dance groove, or a simple back-up vocal track, and twists it, making it fascinating and infectious.

The bare-bones strength of the album stems from Sibery's ethereal voice, which she uses to greater effect than she has to date. But the real promise of this album is actually aptly summed up by its advertising — this is not Jane Sibery's best album, it's merely her best album so far.

A —James Keast

The Windmill's Tradition Continues with all day breakfast, lunch and dinner. Now come and relax with us 'til midnight. Open at 7am for breakfast.

WINDMILLS CAFE
LOCATION @ 184 PRINCESS ST. 544-3948

Get off to a fast start, with breakfast at Windmills Cafe.

Why don't you try our:

- Dutch Pancakes
- Fresh fruit salad
- Best traditional fare
- or Design your own omelette

Open from 7am till 12am.

WINDMILLS CAFE 184 PRINCESS ST. 544-3948

Meet the small, un-silent type.

Presenting the ELERT from Quorum. The portable motion detector that does 10x the work of a motion detector.

It operates simply on batteries. And you can attach it to anything from your door to your car. Quorum provides you with the knowledge you need to secure your life.

Paul and Judy Cox - 384-8334

DO YOU POSSESS RUDIMENTARY EYE / HAND COORDINATION?
 THE JOURNAL NEEDS PRODUCTION STAFF, TYPESETTERS TO DESIGN ADS, AND LAYOUT STAFF. YOU DON'T NEED EXPERIENCE, BUT YOU WILL GET SOME. AND YOU ALSO GET TO PLAY WITH COOL EQUIPMENT.
 CALL 545-2800 OR COME TO 272 EARL

The Christian Life is an Adventure!

Be part of a worldwide movement ...

Meet with dynamic Christian students ...

Attend incredible conferences ...

Travel on international projects ...

Experience the Adventure with Us!

Opening Events

Introductory Night
 Fri. Sept 17, 7pm
 Watson Hall 517
 (Beside Vic Hall)

Beach V-ball & BBO
 Sun, Sept 19, 3pm
 (By the lake below Morris Hall)

Friday Night Live
 Every Friday, 7-9pm
 Watson Hall 517

Campus Crusade for Christ

For more information call 546-7973

More veggies

Continued from page 29

and creamy, contrasted and complemented each other, and made this starter a delight for the palate.

Three main courses were delivered to our table - falafel in pita from the regular menu, and two of the evening's specials: potato gnocchi and cauliflower and red lentil curry. The curry special was the highlight of the entrées. A frequent pitfall of Western interpretations of South Asian food is that subtlety is often sacrificed in favour of scorching spiciness, but the impact of the Sunflower's curry came from the complexity of its flavours and textures, rather than from overpowering spice-generated heat. Firm curried lentils and cauliflower were complemented by the smooth sweet and spicy coconut and red pepper mixture arranged on a bed of rice.

The potato gnocchi were not up to the usual standards of the restaurant. They were bland and overcooked, with an unappealing gluey texture. The situation was not improved by the sauce, which was surprisingly weak and devoid of any strong notes of spice.

The pitas were pleasingly stuffed with chick pea fritters, vegetable relish and tahini yoghurt sauce. My ordinarily carnivorous dining companion noted, only somewhat tongue-in-cheek, that it compared favourably with a meatball sub.

Chef Carolyn Rundle does not purport to be a master of Indian, Middle Eastern or Southeast Asian cooking. But the strength of Sunflower's menu lies in her ability to start with the foundation of a classic dish and quote from it, expand upon it, and add new elements or nuances of flavour. This, combined with consistent use of freshest ingredients, and delightful presentation, makes the Sunflower's food noteworthy.

The popularity of the Sunflower attests to the fact that the knowledgeable and friendly, if overworked, staff has discovered which basic elements work. It remains for the restaurant to get the little details right in order for it to offer a genuinely memorable dining experience.

The Sunflower Restaurant is located at 20 Montreal Street.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	PRINCESS COURT CINEMA
CATARAQUI CINPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442	394 Princess St. 546-FILM
Sleepless in Seattle 7:25	Tuesday
In the Line of Fire 9:25	Henry V 7:00
Jurassic Park 7:05 9:35	Benny and Joon 9:35
Needful Things 7:10 9:40	Wednesday
Raiders of the Lost Ark 2:15	Raise the Red Lantern 7:00
The Real McCoy 7:00 9:30	Road Kill 9:20
Hard Target 7:20 9:20	Thursday
Calendar Girl 7:15 9:45	Welcome to Canada 7:00
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395	Highway 61 9:00
The Secret Garden 7:00	CLUBS
Free Willy 2:15	AJ'S HANGAR Wednesday Bar/Party Band
Dennis the Menace 4:20	THE TOUCAN Wednesday The Mahones
Son of the Pink Panther 9:25	Thursday PF Record Show
True Romance 6:50 9:35	BEN'S PUB Thursday John Judo
Rabin Hood: Men In Tights 7:10	STAGES
The Fugitive 6:55 9:30	Tuesday Evenflow (Sounds of Seattle)
The Man Without a Face 6:45 9:15	Thursday The Tea Party
The Firm 6:30 9:20	THE WELLINGTON Thursday Blue Night
Undercover Blues 7:15 9:15

JJ's
Bistro Bar

Everything!!
 Poutine / Salads
 Steak & Chicken Sandwiches
 Draft / Cappuccino

When you think JJ's... think FOOD!

400 Johnson Street at University, Tele # 547 3771

What's Up?

Tuesday, September 14

- ASUS Poster Sale, Lower Ceilidh, 9am - 7pm.
- CFRC-FM Radio Club, New Members Meeting, Carruthers Hall, Room 102, 7pm.

Wednesday, September 15

- ASUS is hosting an Eat and Greet at the Quiet Pub from 6pm to 8pm. All Arts and Science students are welcome.
- La Table Francaise, every Wednesday from 5pm to 6:15pm at Ban Righ Cafeteria. For more information, call 545-2534.
- ASUS Poster Sale, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC, 9am - 7pm.
- Queen's Book Exchange, Wallace Hall, 8am - 6pm.

Thursday, September 16

- EngSoc Poster Sale, Lower and Upper Ceilidh, JDUC.
- Queen's Book Exchange, Wallace Hall, 9am - 4pm.

Friday, September 17

- Kingston Chinese Christian Fellowship Drama Dinner, 6pm, at the Kingston Chinese Alliance Church. For more information, contact Sharon Poon, 546-4937.
- EngSoc Poster Sale, Lower and Upper Ceilidh.

Saturday, September 18

- Live Concert at McArthur College Theatre Auditorium, West Campus, 7:30pm. Featuring Randy Thomas and Bob Carlisle with special guests, Stone By Stone.

Monday, September 20

- Nominations for the ASUS Elections open today. For further information, contact Stephanie Lane and Jason Markwell at 545-6278.
- AMS United Way Committee Plant Sale, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC.

Upcoming Events

- Queen's French Center is holding an Open House, Tuesday, Sept. 21 at 96 Albert St. Drop-in Hours are from 1pm - 5pm.
- The first ASUS Assembly will be held Tuesday, Sept. 21 at 7:30pm in the MacLaughlin Room, JDUC.
- AMS Clubs Night, Tuesday, Sept. 21, Jock Harty Arena.

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission

What's up page forms available at the AMS office 545-2732

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL group needs student with an interest in working with children - Call 389-1894 or attend Orientation at Sydenham United Church, September 13th or 16th at 6:30 p.m.

DON'T LET THE YEAR go by without doing some art. Livart Studios is situated close to campus and are accepting registration for life model classes, painting, and more. Call 546-6842. DAVE YOU P.F. Philippe ewe. Dev n

BOOKS! TEXTS! SHEET MUSIC! Annual Book Fair sponsored by the Women's Committee of the Kingston Symphony: Wednesday, September 15th 5 - 9 p.m.; Thursday and Friday 10 a.m. - 9 p.m. and Saturday 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. at the J.K. Lett Creativity Complex, 370 King St. W. (at Mount St. across from St. Mary's of the Lake Hospital).

ARE YOU A WICCAN? Willing to share in fellowship, spiritual growth and study? Contact The Stone Circle, c/o Châplaine Dept., Box 22, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V7 Attention: Aspen.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL GROUP. Returning tutors please call 389-1894 or come to Orientations September 13 or 16, 6:30 p.m. Sydenham United Church.

★ FUNDRAISERS? ★ ORIENTATION PARTIES?
DO IT ON THE WATER!
BAR - MUSIC - FOOD

The Island Queen & Island Belle
 Phone 549-5544 Fax 549-1608

AUDITIONS

Guys & Dolls

Tuesday, September 14th
THE GRAND THEATRE

Men Only - 6:00 - 7:30 pm.
Women Only - 7:30-9:00 pm.

* Must be able to both Sing and Dance
 For further information,
 Contact Moira Davies #389-1890

SOAPBERRY SHIP has a line of cruelty-free and affordable cosmetics. Water based foundation; blush and bronzing powders; mascara, lipstick and eye pencils. Watch for our sidewalk sales Frosh Week! 545-1028 122 Princess St.

ENJOY LISTENING? Telephone Aid Line Kingston is looking for volunteers for our fall training session. Look for us at clubs night or leave a message at 531-8529 for more information.

PRESTIDIGITATION, Iegerdemain, sleight-of-hand. Call it what you will, but if you're interested, call me at 545-6061.

EXPERIENCED caregiver needed for 1 and 3 year old in our home near Queen's, 1 to 3 days per week, call 542-7022.

DO YOU NEED a part-time job? Work for the Queen's telethon - raising funds from alumni. Applications in room 303, Old Medical Bldg. or in the AMS office are due tomorrow by 4 p.m.

DO YOU WANT to help Queen's? Raise money and information from our alumni. Queen's Telethon applications that are available in Rm. 303, Old Medical Bldg. or in the AMS office are due tomorrow by 4 p.m.

DO YOU HAVE SPIRIT? Queen's Telethon needs your help to call alumni to raise funds and gather information. Applications that are available in Rm. 303, Old Medical Bldg. or in the AMS office are due tomorrow by 4 p.m.

FURNITURE FOR SALE/RENT good chests of drawers, nightstands, desk chairs, book-cases, reading chairs, tables, chairs. Matched sets or single items. near Cataract Centre. Call 546-4444 (messages please).

STUDENT DESK $40.00, cheap desk chair, bedside stand and engineering table each, baseball card singles, 70 lb bar, travel posters, shelving, numerous small items. near Cataract Centre. Call 546-7720.

ENJOY SAVING 35% off your long distance calls. Call All Plus at SAVE(7283) or 531-9782 to register.

SAVE 35% off your long distance calls. top of the already discounted rates! Register or for more information call All Plus 546-SAVE(7283) or 531-9782.

INEXPENSIVE DATA ACQUISITION boards designed and manufactured by Canadians from $139. Call London Research Development at (519) 438-1933 for details.

FOR LEASE: Arabian mare 7 years old. Professionally trained. Would like an experienced rider, who loves horses. Private stable with indoor arena. $150.00 monthly. Call 546-7162.

LOST: A home made dark purple backpack was lost somewhere on campus, on Wednesday or Thursday of Frosh Week. It is made of jean like material and contains German money. Please call 531-3549.

YOU CAN REACH Jody Flaro (Contact in Toronto at (416) 254-4725.

KATE: Love the new hairnet, you look better than ever. I hope that soon I can tell that in the morning light.

SPECIAL PROJECTORS!!!! Collected Fiona can't wait to see you! Please drop your phone number at the AMS. How about a Tuesday 6 p.m. meeting.

CARI: my beloved discotic friends I can't tell you enough how much I am obsessed with you and how sorry I am that I took so long to write you a personal. You are the best. D.S.B Love AD

SIRI: Happy Birthday to the goddess of love, sex, and nurse everywhere!
 Love Sarah

Back Page

Carnivores rejoice! For what seems like an Old Testament lifetime, we've run nothing but vegetarian recipes and left our flesh-eating readership ignored...until now. This week's recipe for Veal Scalopini comes from AMS Vice President (University Affairs) Todd Miners, who is a disciple of mellow west coast TV chef James Barber, better known as the Urban Peasant. Carpe (Carne?) diem!

Ingredients:
 veal (three to four pieces per person)
 green onion (chopped)
 lemon
 one beef boullion cube dry mustard flour
 salt and pepper

For each person you're serving, cut about 4 slices. Pound the slices until they're about 1 cm thick. In a very hot pan with a little oil, cook the veal and green onions just until the veal is brown on both sides. Remove the veal and de-glaze the pan by using a little water to remove any residue. Dissolve the boullion cube in 1/2 cup hot water and pour the resulting liquid into the pan. Keep the pan over the heat, add juice from half the lemon and dry mustard, salt and pepper to taste. Over this mixture, add enough flour to turn it into a thick sauce. Pour the sauce over the veal and serve with pasta or rice.

SUBMIT TO US!
SUBMIT YOUR ARTWORK TO US!
 ACTUALLY, WE'RE INTERESTED IN ANYTHING YOU'VE GOT TO OFFER
 CALL JOEY OR DEREK AT 545-2800! NOW!

The Other Side
 Alumnus John Storey - Arts '88

...but who's counting?
 statistical trivia you can't live without

Many people, when saving up for University, often overlook the cost of books when setting aside money for school expenses. On the average, the cost of brand new books for an entire year is about one sixth to one fifth of tuition or about one month's rent. Coupled with tuition, rent, school supplies, stocking up on groceries and beer-sodden reunions at pubs, the expense of books makes September a financially crippling month.

For your perusal, we have compiled a list of the average price of books for various majors. We took the price of each textbook for a required course for each year in the program and averaged them out in order to arrive at the prices listed below. Keep in mind that some majors require the purchase of a large number of less expensive books while others require the purchase of a few very expensive ones. Also of note is the fact that some majors study material that doesn't change while others cover topics that change at an incredible rate. The following stats are averages of the required text costs of several courses in each field.

degree program	average book price
Biology	82
Chemistry	119
English	100
Film	52
Law	60
Mathematics	65
Mechanical Engineering	87
Politics	111
Public Administration	109
Sociology	90

This column, appearing in every second Journal issue is intended to give current Queen's students an impression of what lies in the "real world", from a first hand perspective. It is also intended for alumni interested in the whereabouts of their classmates and those who want to share their experiences with the young and inexperienced.

In this day and age, it seems virtually impossible for people start at the very bottom of the corporate ladder and expect to work their way up. But that's exactly what John Storey (Arts '88) did.

After graduating from Queen's with a degree in Political Science, John was in desperate need for a job.

"I heard they were hiring down at the employment centre and so I got a job telemarketing selling customer calling features [for Bell Canada]."

By working hard and seizing opportunities, John is now in Client Service, National Accounts managing large scale projects.

"I organize disparate elements of the large company and make sure they are all going the same way."

Storey spends much of his time doing research and helping to co-ordinate repairs. He also maintains existing programs.

Storey feels that his education has really aided his career.

"My education really helped. I learned a lot about research and staying with it. The company will buy something and then all of a sudden I'll have to know all about it."

Storey feels that the math courses he took have wound up being valuable in the long run. Further, he thinks that the courses in logic he took have helped him effectively evaluate business decisions and proposals. Storey believes that in business, one must be a very good communicator, and he feels that his Queen's education prepared him well in this respect for the business world.

Storey looks back on his time at Queen's with mixed feelings.

"It was an intense time in my life, not always a happy time. But I did a lot of growing up—a real coming of age for me. I really needed to get out of the house and grow up."

Also, as a gay man at Queen's, Storey found himself wanting to be more open about his sexuality.

"[Queen's] was a good place to come out, though the student body was not as nice as they could have been. I was extremely lucky to live with a guy who had already come out and he really helped me."

While at Queen's, Storey was involved in residence government and a variety of volunteer projects like Telephone Aid Line Kingston.

Looking back, Storey would have applied himself more to his studies, but nonetheless he looks back at his life at Queen's as "a wonderful, super time—and I ended up with a degree!"

FREE WHOPPER
 Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by guest. Valid only at participating Burger King restaurants. EXPIRES SEPT. 30, 1993

FREE WHOPPER
 Buy a Whopper and Regular Fries at the regular price and get a second Whopper Free!

Please present this coupon before ordering. Not valid with any other offer. No cash value. Applicable taxes payable by guest. Valid only at participating Burger King restaurants. EXPIRES SEPT. 30, 1993

City Sports Phone 542-4415
298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT.
RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

NEW ARRIVALS OF SHOES NIKE, ASICS HI TECH, ADIDAS, RYKA, CONVERSE	QUEEN'S HATS FROM $14.99
STUDENT CARD & GOLD CARD HONOURED HERE
EXERCISE EQUIPMENT WORKOUT CLOTHING	SPECIALS FOR MIDNIGHT MADNESS THURS. SEPT 16

TEAMS ○ FLOORS ○ CLUBS ○ FACULTIES
Jackets ○ T-shirts ○ Rugby Jerseys ○ Golf Shirts ○ Sweats
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ○ Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

Fill it up!

During the month of September, with the purchase of any three ring binder, fill it up with a free 200 sheet package of paper. (Only while quantities last)

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clerk Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess Street, Kingston
(corner of Montreal & Princess)
549-3553

JOURNAL

TUESDAY SEPT. 21
I MOTHER EARTH
$1 off admission with this coupon
Stages
"The #1 Campus Nightclub"

Volume 121, Number 6

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Friday, September 17, 1993

Education campaign underway

Student coalition launches federal election strategy

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

It's time for the federal candidates to fill in the blanks and sign on the dotted line. A national campaign being run by a coalition of student governments has compiled a survey to squeeze out candidates' views on education.

The Vote Education campaign, an association of over 19 university and college student governments across Canada, officially launched their non-partisan campaign Tuesday.

In Ontario, press conferences were held concurrently in Kingston, Toronto, London and Waterloo. Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips was the speaker at the Kingston press conference, attended only by the Queen's Journal. Meanwhile, Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed spoke to the press in Toronto.

Queen's is coordinating the Ontario leg of the campaign.

The Toronto press conference "went really well" said Pirmohamed. "There were 12 journalists and a couple of TV cameras. We had the CBC out."

"We had a really constructive debate (with the press)," Pirmohamed said. "The issues were the centre-stage of our press conference," she said.

The survey will be sent out to all the federal candidates in the Oct. 25 election to ascertain their position on post-secondary education in Canada. The answers will then be compiled and publicized to give voters an idea of the candidates' and parties' positions on education.

"We want to compile the results
Please see VOTE on page 5

Inside NEWS

- SOARB 3
- ENTERTAINMENT INBREDS 22
- MISC RED CHAMBER 27

Rebecca Johnston (centre) gets a walk home with Jenn Carr (left) and Luq Ahmad (right).

Walkhome streamlines

BY TUDOR CALDWELL
The Queen's Journal

The Walkhome service is up and running again this year, but will have to operate with one-third less staff.

According to Walkhome Co-ordinator Colleen Stuckey, service will not suffer as a result of the decrease in staff from 150 to 100.

"We are not shrinking services, we are just shrinking staff size," she explained.

Stuckey said the smaller staff will cover the same number of shifts as last year, and she anticipates that the staff will be better trained and more dedicated as a result.

Stuckey explained that the new philosophy of Walkhome is expressed in its motto - "fear eliminates choice."

"If people are afraid to walk alone at night, then their activities are limited," said Stuckey. The Walkhome service exists to combat this problem, she said.

However, in protecting people from the acts of aggressors, Walkhome does not wish to become too aggressive itself, in terms of making people aware of the service and encouraging them to make use of it. As Stuckey said, the aim of the organization is "not to be intimidating; not to scare people."

She explained that "respecting an individual means respecting the choices they make" and that "nobody should feel trapped into using the service."

This new approach is being developed by Walkhome's awareness and advertising committees, who are steering clear of using alarming statistics in their publicity. Instead, they are employing what Stuckey calls a "gentle advertising campaign" to ensure that people will feel free to use the service without feeling forced to by fear.

Another new approach is the targeting of Queen's staff and faculty

Please see WALKHOME on page 6

Quote

"I hope that this one step that was made turns into a long walk between both Palestinians and Jews from all over the world."

-student Tamara Howarth on the Middle East peace deal.

Work bursary coordinator resigns

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Mike O'Connor, who began the year as co-ordinator of the Alma Mater Society Work Bursary program, has resigned from his post.

According to AMS services director Jess Dutton, O'Connor, who was co-ordinator of the Work Bursary last year and all summer, tendered a letter of resignation on Wednesday which stated that he would relinquish the post on Oct. 8.

The Work Bursary program is designed to help students in financial need to find work on and off campus. It is funded jointly by the AMS, Queen's University and the Ministry Education and Training.

In an interview with The Journal, O'Connor said that the demands of third-year electrical engineering are the reason for his departure.

"I came to the conclusion that I couldn't continue to serve students in the way that I always had and excel at electrical engineering at the same time," he said.

"I'm not a disgruntled employee," O'Connor said.

Asked how he felt about O'Connor's resignation, Dutton responded that he is "disappointed because [O'Connor] has done a great job with the program...the AMS has lost a great manager."

Pat Bogstad, the Assistant Registrar, acts as the liaison between administration and the AMS and echoed Dutton's praise for O'Connor. "Mike brought a professionalism to the program which was badly needed," she said. "He initiated new procedures which benefit students and departments on campus."

Dutton is not certain how O'Connor's position will be filled. He said that the AMS could either give the position to the current Assistant Co-ordinator of the Work Bursary program, Lynne Watters, or open it up to applicants.

The AMS Employee Manual does not deal specifically with situations such as this, explained Dutton. The AMS is seeking legal advice on which avenue to take, Dutton said.

Dutton did concede that "it would be in the program's best interest to offer it to the Assistant Co-ordinator" so that the program wouldn't have to stall while a new individual learns the ropes.

It is important that the program

the COCAINO

178 ontario street, 544.6885

MON	TUE	WED	THUR	FRI	SAT	SUN
N.F.L MONDAY FREE ADMISSION 40 TV'S POOL TABLES LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALL REQUEST TUESDAY with ALL YOUR FAVOURITE TUNES AND THEN ? LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALLSTAR LITE NITE WOMEN ADMITTED FREE YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT YOU MIGHT WIN SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE	BUDGET BUSTERS INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE  THE BEST SALE IN K-TOWN DOORS OPEN AT 8	FRIDAY AFTERNOON GHETTO GETAWAYS FREE CHILI & PIG ROAST DOORS OPEN AT 1PM HURRICANE FRIDAYS SATURDAY NITE DANCE PARTY SUPER LITE NITE UNTIL 10 THE REAL DEAL AT 8 PM FRIDAY & SATURDAY NON STOP UNTIL 3AM		THE DAY MADE FOR RELAXING. COME ON DOWN AND HANG WITH THE STAFF OR JUST PLAY A GAME OF POOL. REMEMBER RELAX!

BOOK YOUR SCHOOL EVENTS WITH THE #1 NIGHTCLUB
CALL 544.6885 AND ASK FOR A MANAGER

SAVE $$$

WITH OUR COUPON IN THE
WHAT'S NEXT

HOURS OF OPERATION
1PM-11PM 7 DAYS A WEEK

Hewlett Packard Day

Thursday
September 23rd

Free
Software and cable,
plus games!

The new line of HP calculators give you power enough for your education... and your career! The 48GX has 128 KB RAM built in with expansion ports to add up to 4 MB more memory. The full line of HP calculators is discounted for this one day only. All HP 48G's or 48GX's sold can receive a free Serial Interface Kit (including games). Value and computing power, all from Hewlett Packard.

HEWLETT PACKARD
Authorized Dealer

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

calculators

Campus Bookstore

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

NEW

Cheap

CHEQUING

For students only

THE BEST STUDENT CHEQUING ACCOUNT DEAL IN TOWN

Only $2.00 a month

and you get

- ✓ Unlimited Cheque Writing
- ✓ Your Cheques Back Monthly
- ✓ A Monthly Statement
- ✓ A Chequing and a Savings Account
- ✓ Your Member Card so you can use Almost Any Teller Machine Anywhere!
- ✓ Low Cost Cheques

DOWNTOWN
18 Market Street
(Beside City Hall)
549-3901

IN THE TOWNSHIP
795 Gardiners Road
(Corner of Taylor Kidd)
384-5555

CREDIT UNION
KINGSTON COMMUNITY CREDIT UNION
Banking Where You Belong

City Sports

Phone 542-4415
298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT

RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

NEW ARRIVALS
OF SHOES
NIKE, ASICS
HI TECH, ADIDAS,
RYKA, CONVERSE

QUEEN'S
HATS
FROM $14.99

Graphite squash raquets reg.
to $119.99
SALE
from $49.99

EXERCISE EQUIPMENT

STUDENT
CARD
&
GOLD CARD HONOURED
HERE

WORKOUT
CLOTHING

TEAMS ○ FLOORS ○ CLUBS ○ FACULTIES
Jackets ○ T-shirts ○ Rugby Jerseys ○ Golf Shirts ○ Sweats
Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ○ Custom Creasing at Very Special Prices!

SOARB defends trash week cancellation

BY KAREN HALL
The Queen's Journal

The Senate Orientation Activities Review Board defended its decision to shut down the Transfer Student Orientation Week, arguing that they had both the authority and the mandate to act.

SOARB cut the transfer week short after frosh group leaders, known as trash collectors, broke their orientation contracts by drinking and holding an unsanctioned party with frosh.

In an interview Wednesday, SOARB co-chairs Dr. Jim Bennett and Arnein Punjani argued that the committee's strong measures were justified.

Since the party was not sanctioned by SOARB, legal liability fell on the trash executive. "The organizers are personally liable if the information [about an event] given to SOARB is incorrect. They [the executive] are left at risk, while if the event is approved, the university absorbs the liability," Bennett said.

Because of the risk of huge legal claims, "this sort of incident threatens the future of orientation" for all students, Bennett explained.

"SOARB is a Senate committee, and as such it is an agent of the university," explained Punjani, in response to questions about SOARB's authority to cancel trash week. "Our task is to carry out the policies of the Senate [and] to ensure that an orderly and safe orientation takes place," he said.

"We're not adversarial -- that's not what we're about. Our focus is not punitive. We're consultative, we help the faculty committees get their jobs done," Punjani added.

Bennett said SOARB considered changing the leadership of the executive, but they were not convinced that a new leadership would responsibly carry out the program.

The way the trash executive responded in a meeting with SOARB Friday morning "further reduced their credibility," Bennett said.

"Had we any inkling earlier last week that they would not fulfil their responsibilities, we would have effected a change in the executive," Bennett said.

After SOARB found out about a gathering at The Shot Tuesday, which involved trash collectors and their frosh, Bennett said, "[SOARB's] attitude was 'let's give them a chance to get this sorted out.' We decided to give them another chance."

However, after an unsanctioned house party occurred on Thursday night, the committee became very concerned, Bennett said, and met with the trash executive Friday.

"We were willing to accept a reasonable explanation" from the executive, said Punjani, reacting to complaints that SOARB had its mind made up to cancel the remainder of the week before meeting with the trash executive.

"We didn't have a preconceived decision to cancel the week. That's crazy. Why bother meeting with them if we already had our minds made up?" Punjani said.

Describing Friday as a "terrible morning," Punjani commented on the benefits of hindsight. "It was a 'real-time' situation, everything was happening so fast... The fact remains that the trash executives were not carrying out their responsibilities as charged."

Though many transfer students are of legal drinking age, and all have been through at least one year of university or college, "the age and experience of the students doesn't change the situation with regard to responsibility [to SOARB] and the integrity with which the events are carried out," Bennett said.

"The issue of age will be factored into the event approval process... but the Senate's policies apply to everyone equally. We must be consistent with the application of the rules," continued Punjani.

"There was a situation earlier in the week when contracts were violated, and for us to turn a blind eye because they're older would not be consistent or fair to the other groups."

Bennett and Punjani argued that following the rules still leaves room for a lot of fun. As an exam-

It's not easy being green, especially when you're trash.

Sheldon Bradshaw

ple, they spoke of a "rockin'" Commerce party on Thursday night, a sanctioned wet event.

When asked if the trash party could have been approved, Punjani replied, "if we were told and given a proper description, then of course they could have held the event. As long as the provisions of the Liquor Licence Act are met, it's fine."

As for the orientation leader contract, "everyone who comes in contact with the frosh during orientation week signs [it], including the Queen's Bands and the members of SOARB," Bennett explained.

The "no drinking" clause in the contract reads: "I will not drink alcohol or be under the influence of alcohol or any substances of abuse at any time I am in the presence of incoming students, during either formally planned events or informal, spontaneous events."

Both Bennett and Punjani were extremely positive about the rest of Orientation Week, calling it "the best Orientation Week ever," and commending the orientation leaders.

The leaders really got their act together and made the week a success, they said, adding that it was unfortunate that the trash week problems overshadowed the very successful weeks held by other faculty groups.

Trash executive members, who were initially unwilling to comment on the incident, could not be reached before The Journal went to press.

The International Socialists are organizing cars and buses to drive from Kingston to Montreal, where they plan to protest the arrival of France's National Front leader Jean-Marie Le Pen. The protest will take place on Sept. 22. For more information phone the Kingston branch at 531-8954.

This Saturday, the Kingston Branch of the Queen's University Alumni Association will hold its Second Annual Garage Sale in the Bews Gym of the Queen's Phys. Ed. Centre on Union Street. The sale will take place between 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., but only Queen's students will be admitted between the hours of 10:00 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. After 11:00 a.m., everybody is welcome.

Donations to the garage sale can be dropped off at the Bews Gym today between 7:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. Pick-up can be arranged by calling Stan at 389-6406.

This Sunday marks the official opening of the new Outdoor Centre at the Little Cataract Creek Conservation Area. Refreshments, entertainment, displays and guided walks will follow the opening ceremony, which begins at 2:00 p.m.

If it's in the Farmer's Almanac, it must be a fact, right? Here are a few interesting snippets from the Old Farmer's 1994 Almanac (and we're not just talking about weather predictions):

- American women initiate two thirds of all sexual encounters. Their best pick-up line: "Hi." It works 100 per cent of the time. (Sorry guys, men have only a 71 per cent success rate with the same line.)
- The hair on your head has a lifespan of between two and six years, and grows at a rate of 1/72 of an inch per day, or 1/2 an inch per month. Contrary to myth, hair does not grow after you're dead.
- Iqqaq lazikaqika kwaze kwaqhavaka uqhohqoha. Can you say this three times fast? It's the most difficult one-line foreign language tongue twister. According to the Almanac, it's from the South African dialect Xhosa and means: "The skunk rolled down and ruptured its larynx."
- Expect temperatures in eastern Ontario to be slightly higher than normal this winter and snowfall to be above normal.

Daycare still on hold

BY RUSSELL VANCE
The Queen's Journal

Despite labelling daycare a "top priority," the Alma Mater Society and Graduate Students Society executives appear to have made little progress in establishing a permanent and accessible daycare facility at Queen's.

The daycare feasibility report, prepared for last year's student executives, outlined three options for daycare at Queen's. The programs ranged in operating cost from $11,437 to $41,971 for an eight month pilot project.

Todd Minerson, AMS Vice President (University Affairs), said that realistically only the third, least expensive option "could have a fair chance of happening." Said Minerson, "there are a lot of good intentions, but money is short."

This option would provide an unlicensed evening daycare facility for five children from 6:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. in the current location of the Queen's Daycare Centre, at 169 Union St.

Michael Aregbesola, president of the GSS since April, said that while he considers daycare

Minerson: "Good intentions"

Minerson conceded that "there has been a breakdown of communication between the GSS and us."

According to a survey conducted last year, Aregbesola said, 25 per cent of graduate students are parents, and 85 per cent of international graduate students are parents.

These international students are particularly hurt by the lack of daycare since they do not quality for daycare subsidies.

Aregbesola added that "the Queen's Daycare Centre has limited room. A lot of students end up not getting daycare."

There is presently at least one daycare initiative at Queen's. The Flexible Childcare Pilot Program at 30 Colbourne St. is a resource centre for parents looking for daycare. This six month program, run by the AMS, Kingston General Hospital, and Queen's administration, will end at the end of September. At that time, the program will be evaluated to determine if funds are available to continue it.

Another project planned by the AMS is the Parent Resource Centre in the John Deutsch University Centre. Minerson said it is his "strong hope that it will open in early October," although the committee responsible for the centre has not yet met this school year.

The Parent Resource Centre would not provide actual daycare, but would be a resource centre for parents searching for daycare.

CANADA ON SALE!

	TORONTO OW Return		MONTREAL OW Return
FROM
Vancouver	199	339	229	359
Calgary	169	299	189	349
Edmonton	169	299	189	349
Kingston	69	98	59	109
Saskatoon	179	299	179	329
Winnipeg	139	229	149	269
St. John	149	289	129	229
Halifax	159	269	129	209
St. John's	199	379	169	329

Low Season Midweek Fares!
Restriction Apply.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

THE SPORTS BAR

"THE ORIGINAL SPORTS BAR"

SCHEDULE

Fri. Sept. 17	3:00 Mats vs. Cubs 6:00 Jays vs. Twins 10:10 White Sox vs. A's	Tue. Sept. 21	7:30 Red Sox vs. Jays 10:30 White Sox vs. Angels
Sat. Sept. 18	12:00 Jays vs. Twins 1:00 Yankees vs. Red Sox 4:00 White Sox vs. A's 8:00 B.C. vs. Samps	Wed. Sept. 22	3:00 Cards vs. Cubs 7:30 Red Sox vs. Jays 10:00 White Sox vs. Angels
Sun. Sept. 19	1:00 N.F.L. 2:00 Jays vs. Twins 4:00 N.F.L. 8:00 Cowboys vs. Cardinals	Thurs. Sept. 23	11:00 White Sox vs. Angels 4:00 White Sox vs. Angels 7:30 Red Sox vs. Jays
Mon. Sept. 20	1:00 Oilers vs. Canadiens 7:00 Bruins vs. Tigers 9:00 Broncos vs. Chiefs	Fri. Sept. 24	7:30 THE SHOWDOWN BROADCAST YANKEES vs. JAYS Padres vs. Giants

- * COLDEST PITCHERS AT THE BEST PRICES
- * EXCELLENT PUB MEALS
- * NFL SUNDAY BREAKFAST 11-4
- * 9 FOOT SPORTVISION SCREEN
- * 125 BROCK ST * 546-0429

BMG MUSIC CANADA is hiring a campus representative. This entry-level position is ideal for anyone interested in pursuing a career in the music business.

Reporting to the BMG Alternative Music Consultant in Toronto, you will be responsible for the development of BMG's alternative artists within your college radio / retail community, communicating with BMG and with the student body as to "what's hot" and "what's not" at your campus. Ideally, you'll have an active interest in Alternative Music, be creative, organized, possess strong interpersonal skills and initiative. You will be expected to work approximately 10 hrs per week. Starting date is mid-October, until mid-April. Send your resume / cover letter by Monday, Sept. 22 to:

BMG Music Canada
150 John St.,
6th floor,
Toronto, Ont.,
M5V 3C3
Attn: Nadine Gelineau
No Phone enquiries please!

Student reaction to Mid-East peace deal mixed

BY LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

On Monday, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Palestinian Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat signed the declaration of principles on Palestinian self-rule for the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

The deal came as a surprise for many Jewish and Palestinian students at Queen's, and although many students expressed a desire for peace in the Middle East, not all agreed that this deal can deliver it.

Under the deal, Palestinians will be given control of education, culture, health, social welfare, taxes and tourism in the Gaza strip and in Jericho, a city in the West Bank. Palestinian police will control security for Palestinians and Israelis will control external security and security for Jewish settlers in Jericho and Gaza.

The agreement also sets out time-lines for the withdrawal of Israeli troops and the start of negotiations on the future of the occupied territories.

"I think that it is unbelievably fortunate to have reached an agreement," said Alejandro Paz, a Jewish student at Queen's.

David Schlessinger, also a Jewish student, said "it is a giant leap toward peace in the Middle East."

This optimism, however, is not shared by all members of the Queen's Jewish community.

"I see it as a really small step," said Tamara Howarth. For Howarth, the questions of how the plan is to be implemented, and how it will last, remain unanswered.

"How are you going to make people make peace?" she said.

Hana Suleiman, a PhD student in statistics, is a Palestinian from the city of Qalqilia in the West Bank. For her, the deal is "the end of hope." Suleiman said that the agreement only gives Palestinians in the West Bank control over the city of Jericho, which she says is smaller than Kingston.

Suleiman believes that Jericho was given to the Palestinians because Hamas, an Islamic movement whose goal is to establish an Islamic state for Palestinians, is very active there and because the city is not surrounded by Jewish settlements. Jericho has little economic value, she added.

Bev Young, a Jewish student, agrees that the land affected by the agreement is not worth a lot. "It is obviously very symbolic," she said, "it symbolizes peace in the future."

For many students, the significance of the achievement depends on their optimism that negotiations will continue.

The time-line allows two months for the two sides to reach an agreement on the withdrawal of troops from the Palestinian areas of Gaza and Jericho. Also, negotiations to determine the permanent status of territories would begin before three years are up.

Paz is confident that the peace agreement will lead to further talks. "I think that the deal psychologically prepares the people for further negotiations," he said.

Suleiman is concerned that peace will be threatened by conflict within the Palestinian community. "Our people are not easy with each other. It is getting close to civil war," Suleiman said.

Raed Odex, a Palestinian student pursuing a PhD in electrical engineering, said that tension could rise to dangerous levels because Palestinians will now be policing those who oppose the occupation.

"I don't see peace," he said. "Israeli security forces will be replaced by joint Palestinian-PLO forces."

Suleiman and Odex are also concerned about the legitimacy of Yasser Arafat. Suleiman said that up to 75 per cent of Palestinians do not support Arafat, and instead back the fundamentalists and Hamas.

Odex questioned Arafat's support within the PLO. In the PLO executive committee, he said, only eight out of 18 members voted in support of the deal—six did not attend to protest the deal and four voted against it.

"What kind of democracy is that?" he said. Odex added that Arafat was never elected to his position.

In spite of their doubts, many expressed hope for peace.

"I hope that this one step that was made turns into a long walk between both Palestinians and Jews from all over the world," said Howarth.

Suleiman said that she is not happy about the deal, but she is still hoping for peace. "We don't need war. We need peace, but we need peace with satisfaction. I am worried," she said.

Young's optimism about the effect of the deal on relations between the Jewish and Palestinian communities at Queen's is cautious. "I don't think Queen's needs any more animosity between Arabs and Jews," she said. "It is so hard to say that this year at Queen's we will become best buddies, but yes, I hope that relations will improve."

Blue shirts and yellow jackets keep Queen's safe

BY DENNIS PAO
The Queen's Journal

So what's the difference between a yellow jacket and a blue shirt?

The roles of the two security forces at Queen's confuse many, especially since the yellow jackets of the Student Constables and the blue shirts of Campus Security are often seen at the same event.

But the two are not the same. Head Constable Sue Cameron told The Journal that the main objective for the Student Constables is peer supervision.

"The Student Constables are a 'student-oriented' group whose goal is to promote student safety. Their role at football games and at the pubs is strictly supervisory. Cameron said. Any act that borders on criminal activity is taken care of by Campus Security.

"Most of the time," Cameron said, "Campus Security is called in after the fact. To clean up after a fight, for instance."

Campus Security takes on a much larger role in maintaining safety. Their mandate, according to the head of Campus Security, Howard Pearce, is to provide a safe and secure campus for all individuals and not just students.

Pearce said Campus Security is just one step below the Kingston Police in terms of its authority.

"We deal with any matters of security, and enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code," said Pearce.

Campus Security is a university service department which reports to the AMS Judicial Committee and the Vice-Principal (Operations).

It also runs the 24-hour Emergency Report Centre, where any individual can report an emergency, using a regular phone or one of the yellow emergency phones located throughout campus.

Both groups employ students in their patrols but only the Student Constables are completely student-run; Campus Security employs other staff.

There are 73 constables and each spring new applicants are interviewed for employment in the following year. The constables have a 50/50 hiring policy,

Cameron said, where 50 per cent of the constables are new each year.

Campus Security hires about 75 students each March and sends them through a two-day training program before they start work the following year. They patrol the campus from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. every day of the week in addition to keeping an eye on the crowds at games and other events. The Student Constables are only on duty for special events and for security at Alfie's.

Pearce said Campus Security was created in 1985 because of a need for tighter security on the campus.

"Security is a concern on any campus and [Campus Security] is necessary to provide a safe and secure campus," Pearce said. However, he added, Campus Security is strictly an "eyes and ears" group. They are not trained for combat or self-defense and they are unarmed.

Queen's Campus Security is probably the "most civilian security force on any campus," said Pearce. "Other places have police officers, cruisers, flashing lights—the whole bit."

Wilson explains "break and enter"

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson got into a bit of hot water this week thanks to the Golden Words. The paper ran an article claiming he had broken into video store Vids in the Hall this summer to rent movies free of charge.

The article, entitled "The AMS is Heil," suggested that Wilson was "caught in the act breaking and entering into the AMS's video store, Vids in the Hall."

Wilson said that the incident happened in early July, and that he wasn't breaking in.

He had keys to the store, and said he "didn't expect the alarm to be on."

Wilson said he was going to the store to "check the title of a movie." He also said he couldn't remember what title he was looking for at the time.

The alarm, which was newly-installed and not yet hooked up to the Emergency Report Centre, prompted Wilson to call Campus Security.

But they didn't have a key to turn off the alarm, and it was several days before the alarm was finally turned off.

The Golden Words article also claimed that the store's manager was "righteously

Wilson: "I didn't expect the alarm to be on."

pissed off about the whole affair."

But Vids in the Hall manager Sue Munro told The Journal she wasn't upset at all.

"It was nothing," she said. "It's not a big scandal... it's a non-issue."

Vote Education

Continued from page one

and at least give out the position of the leaders," said Phillips. "We don't want information overload" by detailing every single candidate's position, Phillips said.

The survey asks for comments on access to post-secondary education, student aid financing, federal financing, research and development and student employment programs.

Phillips said it is important to address education at the federal level, despite the assumption that post-secondary education is wholly under the control of provincial governments. The federal government grants transfer payments of $8 billion to the provinces annually to be spent on education. This accounts for 60 per cent of post-secondary funding through Established Program Financing (EPF), she said.

"If they [the federal government] cut back transfer payments to the provinces, we'll feel it from the provincial government," Phillips said.

Pirmohamed believes that inter-provincial standards are necessary to ensure "equally adequate education across the country." This will not only allow for more meaningful degrees, but will increase the inter-university mobility of students, Pirmohamed said.

Mobility is personally relevant to Pirmohamed, who hopes to enter pharmacology at the University of British Columbia next year. She said that "only 10 per cent of students accepted are from out of province. Mobility is terrible in Canada."

Vote Education is keenly interested in the candidates' stand on Canadian research and development. According to Vote Education literature, Canada's spending on R & D is the lowest in the group of seven industrialized nations.

A crucial position of Vote Education revolves around their support of the Income Contingent Loan Repayment Plan (ICLRP), a proposal that would revamp the existing loan structure. ICLR would allow all students to defer payment of their tuition, and repay their fees through their taxes after graduation.

Under the plan, loan taxation is contingent upon income, such that no tuition is taxed back until the former student reaches a specified income level. If their income never reaches the determined economic bracket, they do not get taxed for their university tuition.

Phillips said that this could be a self-supporting system if balanced against floating bond investments. She conceded that there would be abuse in such a system, "but there is in any system."

Vote Education organizers are focused on the election campaign. They not only hope that the survey results will influence the electorate, but also that it will be a lobbying point after the election. As Phillips, speaking to a hypothetical politician, asked, "do you remember saying this on our questionnaire...?"

Achieve immortality through the printed word.

Write for news!
Drop by The Journal, 272 Earl Street, or phone 545-2800.
Jeff, Lori, Brad and Brock are waiting.

Bed Head Fridays
THE SHOT
POOL PUB
GET HERE EARLY

Deadhead says, "Wouldn't you like a Pepper too?"

SEGA Genesis & Super Nintendo
MC André
DJ Nipper 'T'
B.O.G.O. Drinks
Famous Dr. Pepper Promo
NEW 'Bedhead' shooter
Boat Race
On the big screen:
CADDYSHACK (starts at noon)
and...

50% FOOD
POOL & CENTURY CLUB
11am-6pm Fridays

WHAT'S COMING UP IN COED (ALIAS BEWIC) INTRAMURALS???

CHECK OUT THE COED INTRAMURAL NOTICE BOARDS IN THE PEC!!!

Introducing... INTRAMURAL ULTIMATE

We're trying something new in 1993!

INSTRUCTIONAL CLINICS to introduce the game of Ultimate. ULTIMATE TOURNAMENT OCTOBER 16th on TINDALL FIELD

PICK UP AN INFO FLYER AT THE PEC FOR MORE DETAILS!

JUST PLAY IT!

COED SOFTBALL TOURNAMENT

4 Pitch, Slow Pitch
SEPTEMBER 25 & 26
9am to 5pm

Entries due at the managers meeting at 6pm on Monday September 20, PEC. $40/team (refundable)

PICK UP ENTRY FORMS AND INFORMATION FLYERS AT THE PHYS ED CENTRE.

New student group fights illiteracy

BY LAURIE NORTH
The Queen's Journal

A group of Queen's students will dedicate themselves to helping the Kingston community this year — literally.

Volunteer members of the Queen's Students for Literacy participate in two programs — Prison Literacy and Reading Circle — designed to teach inmates and elementary school children reading and writing skills.

Monique Jilesen, co-chairperson of the organization, said that the group's purpose is not only to tutor those who struggle with reading, but also to educate people about the literacy campaign. "We plan on promoting awareness of the literacy issue in Kingston and the Queen's community," she said.

Before this year, the literacy program was operated by Frontier College, a non-profit, adult educational organization.

Although funding cuts have caused Frontier College to discontinue its work with Queen's, Jilesen noted that her group will preserve the same rigorous training methods used at the college to prepare volunteer students.

After completing the intensive, eight-hour Prison Literacy training program, each volunteer tutor is matched with a pupil from the prison. At their first meeting, Jilesen said, the pupil's needs and goals will be discussed to determine what to concentrate on. In addition to reading and writing skills, the tutors will teach grade 10 math skills.

Jilesen explained that not all pupils select the traditional academic route. Instead, she said, they may want "to do something completely different from the normal curriculum, such as learning how to read or write a letter, or read a menu."

She recalled one student who wanted to learn how to write cheques, so she picked up some deposit and withdrawal slips for him to practice with.

The tutors, who must make a minimum two-hour weekly commitment, will be working at Collins Bay Penitentiary, Kingston Penitentiary, the Prison for Women, and the minimum-security Isabel MacNeil House.

According to Jilesen, eagerness to learn on the part of the inmates has contributed to the success of the program. They know the program is there, and voluntarily ask for a tutor, she said.

Read Circle is a literacy program directed at elementary school children, said Jilesen, which is designed to make the children comfortable with literature. "We want children to enjoy reading and make it a good part of their life," said Jilesen.

By introducing the children to a wide spectrum of books, representative of Canada's diverse cultures, Jilesen hopes the program will "open up a lot of different worlds and new experiences of other people."

On Alumni Weekend, Queen's Students for Literacy will hold their first fundraising event. "Kick for Literacy" will be run in conjunction with Queen's football games as part of Frontier College's national charity campaign. For a dollar, spectators can try their punting abilities in a half-time competition.

Paul Malicki frets as he sees the high tally on the register for his books.

Marika Glickman

Walkhome

Continued from page one

as potential users of the service. Stuckey said many of these people use the parking lots and thought it would be a good idea for them to have a walk to and from their parked cars available.

Also new this year was the posting of Walkhome teams at certain frosh week events, such as the Arts and Science semi-formal, where, Stuckey said, students do not leave in groups. The presence of Walkhome employees eliminated delays in the service, Stuckey explained, ensuring that students had a safe trip home.

Asked how things have gone so far this year, Stuckey said that Walkhome demand has been consistent, and that the changes have been going well.

"This is great, I'm glad to see this," she said.

Right Now
you could be writing for news.

NO-CHARGE CHECKING ACCOUNT

CASHSTOP CARD LETS YOU MAKE WITHDRAWALS EVERYDAY

CLASSIC VISA CARD WITH $500 CREDIT LIMIT.

Only Scotiabank chalks up a no-fee[†] banking package for students.

If there's one thing we know about students, it's that sometimes they run on a tight budget.

And since we were the first Canadian bank to introduce a student package three years ago, it's something we've kept in mind.

If you're a full-time college[‡] or university student, you're eligible for the Scotia Banking Advantage[®] package. This package includes a daily interest chequing account, an automated banking machine card, a Classic VISA card[®] and for qualified graduating students, an auto loan.

With Scotia Banking Advantage, you can also start establishing a good credit rating. Something that will be useful in the future.

So drop by your nearest Scotiabank branch and we'll show you all the ways we can help.

YOU COULD

-WIN $1,000 CASH-

IN THE SCOTIA BANKING ADVANTAGE SWEEPSTAKES!
10 PRIZES OF $1,000 EACH TO BE AWARDED ON A REGIONAL BASIS

Enroll in the Scotia Banking Advantage program by November 12, 1993, and you'll automatically be entered for a chance to win!

Scotiabank

*The Bank of Nova Scotia registered user of mark. No monthly fee or min/monthly balance. [‡]Community College, Technical Institute or Cegep. [®]Registered Trade Mark of The Bank of Nova Scotia. [†]Subject to credit approval.

CITY OF KINGSTON NOTICE

DISPOSAL OF LARGE ARTICLES

Collection of large articles within the City of Kingston has been eliminated as a cost saving measure. As an alternative, large articles (i.e., furniture, appliances, etc.) can be disposed of at no charge at the Laidlaw Transfer Station, 398 Dalton Avenue for the dates and times shown below

Sept. 2 - Sept. 23, 1993	Monday - Friday 8:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.	Saturday 8:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
--------------------------	---------------------------------------	--------------------------------

Residents may be requested to provide proof of residency (i.e., driver's license)

Please note, however, that disposal fees will continue to be charged for tires or building materials.

There will also be a white goods collection (i.e., stoves, fridges, etc.) and a yard waste collection in the fall. Yard wastes and hazardous wastes may be dropped off without charge at the K.A.R.C. facility 70 Lappan's Lane at the times indicated below:

YARD WASTES (leaves, brush, etc.)	Monday - Friday 8:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.	Saturday 8:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
-----------------------------------	---------------------------------------	--------------------------------

HAZARDOUS WASTES (batteries, paint, oil, propane cylinders, etc.)	Thursday 9:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.	Second Saturday of each month
---	--------------------------------	-------------------------------

As a reminder, material can be placed out for regular garbage collection, provided the container or garbage bag used does not exceed either sixty (60 lb.) pounds.

The City of Kingston supports and encourages the concept of REUSE. Prior to disposal, please check with your family, friends or Social Service Agencies as to whether your unwanted household items may be of use to them. G. de Lugt, P. Eng. Acting Commissioner of Works

COMING SOON TO CAREER PLANNING AND PLACEMENT

Beginning this fall CPP will have the following functions computerised:

- the scheduling of appointments for on campus interviews
- the sign-up procedures to get a place in a workshop
- the scheduling of appointments for career and job search counselling

Located at the front of the Career Planning and Placement office is a cluster of computers for students to use in making these bookings. Instructions on how to sign on the network are available at each workstation.

To review permanent and summer on-campus recruiting postings, workshop dates and times, and interview lists, any time night or day, that you can access the mainframe, simply sign on and type <INFOQ>. Choose the item labelled <Employment Information> and follow the menus from there.

The AMS Internal Affairs Commission

The Internal Affairs Commission is located in room 040 of the AMS office in the JDUC. Our phone number is 545-2725, extension number 4815.

Opt-outs

You may choose whether or not to opt-out of the Tricolour Yearbook Fee (you won't receive a yearbook if you do) and any portion of the following opt-outable student interest fees:

- Concert Fee ($3.00)
- Ontario Public Interest Research Group Fee ($4.00)
- Queen's Challenge ($45.00)
- Queen's Engineering and Science Environmental Coalition ($0.25)
- Queen's Project on International Development ($0.25)
- Queen's International Students' Society Award Program ($0.50)
- Student Refugee Support ($2.75)
- United Way ($2.00)

Opt-outs will take place in the AMS office from Monday, September 20 to Friday, October 1 during business hours. In order to opt-out of the Health Plan ($86.11), you must provide us with a photocopy of proof of equivalent coverage. For more details, contact Chris Gilbert.

Referenda

The timetable for the 1993 fall referendum is: Nomination period from Sept. 13 to Sept. 24, Campaigning: Oct. 1 to Oct. 12, Polls open October 13th and 14th Spring 1994 referendum nominations are from February 28th to March 13th. The campaign is from March 18th to March 28th. Voting takes place on March 29th and 30th. Referendum results determine the student interest fees. Your vote is your input into the procedure. For more information on the referendum process, contact Darren Littlejohn or Michael Hawkins.

Elections

The timetable for the 1994 AMS executive election is: nomination period January 10-21, campaigning January 25 - February 7, voting takes place on February 8 and 9. Please exercise your right to vote; better still, run for office. For more details on election policy and procedure, contact Darren Littlejohn or Michael Hawkins. For more information on the executive positions talk to Kate Philips, Tim Wilson or Todd Minerson, your current AMS executive.

Judicial Committee

Judicial Committee: Room 040 JDUC, 545-2725 extension 5169. The AMS Judicial Committee handles non-academic discipline within the University community. Judicial Committee hearings are usually open to the public. Attend one or all of them for a first-hand view of peer discipline in action. For more information on their times and locations, please contact Dean Campbell.

Clubs

Clubs Night will take place Tuesday, September 21 at 7 p.m. in the Jock Harty Arena. Come out and find out about the 100 plus clubs at Queen's, new members are always welcome. There is literally something for everyone, even you! If not, why not start your own club? For more details, contact Clubs Managers Hayley Stephens and Rebecca Johnston.

AMS Positions

Hiring for the AMS commissioner positions, including the position of Internal Affairs Commissioner, will take place in February. Hiring of the Commission Deputies will take place in March. The following positions will be available through the Internal Affairs Commission: Deputy Operations, Chief Returning Officer, Deputy Returning Officer, two Clubs Managers, Chief Prosecutor, two Deputy Prosecutors, Prosecutors' Clerk, Judicial Committee Chair, Judicial Committee Deputy Chair, five Judicial Committee Members and a Judicial Committee Clerk. Come and discover the fascinating world of Internal Affairs. Feel free to contact anyone at the Internal Affairs Commission for more information.

Volunteers

During the course of the school year, all AMS Commissions require volunteers to help with various events and activities. Please come by the office and sign up to be an AMS volunteer. Contact anyone at the AMS for more information on becoming an AMS volunteer.

AMS Assembly

AMS Assemble takes place every second Thursday night at 7 pm in the McLaughlin Room of the JDUC. The dates for Assembly are September 16 and 30, October 14 and 28, November 11 and 25, January 13 and 27, February 10 and March 3. The AMS AGM will be March 15 and the new AMS Assembly members take over for March 17 and 31. All agenda items for Assembly must be submitted to the Internal Affairs Commissioner by 11 am, Monday of the week of Assembly. Electronic submissions (WP51, Generic or DOS text files) are preferred. Assembly packages will be available in the AMS office by 4 pm the Tuesday before Assembly.

A scribe is needed for AMS Assembly on the above dates. The scribe is responsible for taking and typing up minutes. Applications will be available at the AMS office September 18 and will be due by noon on September 25. This is a paid position. Contact Bob Adderley for further information.

It's your last year...

IT'S YOUR ONLY FORMAL!

THE ARTS & SCIENCE UNDERGRADUATE SOCIETY is looking for THE 1994 FORMAL CONVENOR

The Class of 94 needs you to plan the last and best night of your undergraduate life.

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE and must be received no later than September 24 at 4:30pm

Your formal will only be as good as you make it!

Released September 10 1993

Prices subject to change without notice

BACK TO SCHOOL COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Redwing Computers provides high quality computer systems at competitive prices with a high degree of service and support. Our qualified and experienced staff will be here to help you. Redwing Computers - for the best combination of Quality, Service and Price!

$1,249! Redwing System 1 - 386DX-33 486 Processor upgradeable! Intel 80386DX-33MHz microprocessor 288KB cache Mini-lower case, 220W power supply 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-lower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,349! Redwing System 2 - 486SX-25 Intel 80486SX-25MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-lower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	UPGRADES AND OPTIONS MS-DOS 6.0, Microsoft Windows 3.11, Serial Mouse $110 Microsoft DOS 6.0 Microsoft Windows 3.11 (w/ system) Serial mouse $25 IDE Hard Disk Upgrades 100MB to 130MB +$20 130MB to 170MB +$35 170MB to 210MB +$45 210MB to 250MB +$65 RAM Upgrades 2MB to 4MB (SX systems) 4MB to 8MB (all systems) $110 Printers Parsons 9-pin XZ PPI (Dot) Parsons 24-pin XZ P2123 (Dot) Parsons 24-pin XZ P2123 (Dot) HP Deskjet 500 printer Okidata OK-400 laser printer HP IVL laser printer $295 $285 $425 $445 $750 Additional: 5.25" 1.2MB floppy diskette drive GVX Internal 2400 baud Modem GVX 16 9600/2400 full-duplex card Logitech ScanMan 32 hand scanner Sound Blaster Pro Sony TRX CD-ROM drive Creative Labs Education 2 bit bit Creative Labs Education 16 bit bit Monitor Upgrades 14" SVGA to 14" SuperVGA $25 14" SuperVGA 25.8" to High-resolution SVGA $25 Video Adapter Card Upgrades 256KB VGA to 512KB SVGA $15 512KB SVGA to 1MB SVGA $25 1MB SVGA to ATI Wonder924 1MB $65 VLS-Box Upgrades Systems 4, 5 & 6 (C-Shell) 512K SVGA to VLS-Box Video Adapter 1MB $130 512K SVGA to ATI Graphics Ultra Pro 2MB $50 For other peripherals, accessories and software, please contact your sales representative.
$1,575! Redwing System 3 - 486DX-33 Intel 80486DX-33MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-lower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,695! Redwing System 4 - 486DX-50 Intel 80486DX-50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-lower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller
$1,825! Redwing System 5 - 486DX-50 Intel 80486DX-50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Desktop Case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,975! Redwing System 6 - 486DX-66 Intel 80486DX-66MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70ns, cap. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Medium Tower Case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller

REDWING COMPUTERS

Tel: (613) 984-9288 - 850 Bath Road (at Gardiners) - Kingston - Ontario - K7M 4X8 - Fax: (613) 984-9508

IF YOU HAVEN'T DISCOVERED IT YET ...

HERE'S THE SCOOP

WE CATER TO STUDENT TASTES

ON STUDENT BUDGETS

DISCOUNT PRICED BRAND NAME

CLOTHING AND FOOTWEAR (INCLUDING QUEEN'S AND LICENSED CLOTHING) AMAZING DISCOUNT AND SALE PRICES ON ...

HOUSEWARES ... GROCERY PRODUCTS ... LINENS ... HEALTH & BEAUTY ITEMS ... HARDWARE ... TOYS ... ODDS & ENDS

CHECK IT OUT!

STOCK UP THIS WEEK ON ... SALE PRICES IN EFFECT UNTIL SEPT. 23, 1993

- ★ SUPER DEAL ★
- ★ FINESSE ★
- ★ HAIR STYLING AIDS ★
- ★ -300ml Aerosol or non aerosol Hairspray
- ★ -150gm Mousse
- ★ YOUR $1.99
- ★ CHOICE $1.99 ea

- ★ PRINGLES $1.99
- ★ POTATO CHIPS 170-200gm
- ★ Buy 2 PRINGLES FREE!
- ★ and get a 2 litre POP (1.79 VALUE)
- ★ NESCAFE
- ★ INSTANT COFFEE
- ★ 200gm $2.99

AND MANY MORE IN STORE SPECIALS

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE IT!

WEEKDAYS 9:30-9:00
SATURDAYS 9:30-6:00
SUNDAYS 12:00-5:00

PRINCESS AT ONTARIO STREET

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter

Managing Editor
David Pavao

News Editor
Jeff Gray

Production Manager
Colin Ho

Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse

Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor

Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland

Photography Editor
Marika Glickman

Graphics Editors
Richard Dubois
Joey deVilla

Features Editor
Alison Masecman

Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis

Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols

Backpage/Misc. Editors
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla

Assistant News Editors
Brock Martland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson

Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down

Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petric
Ryan Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens

Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn

Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yarnell

Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielsen

Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer

Sales Representatives
Chris Ritchie
Fiona Macaulay

House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of the Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 10,000

Contributors
Sheldon Bradshaw, Tudor Caldwell, Dave Coleman, Molly Finlay, Karen Hall, Ian Morey, Laurie North, Dennis Pao, Lee Petric, Leroy Rodrigues, Jenny SanMartin, Jen Speer, David Ullmann, Russell Vance, Ty Webb, John Whytock

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

Writer's block in the English Department

Why does the school of English, the school engaged in the study of creative works, refuse to acknowledge the legitimacy of and need for creative writing? Why does the school of English refuse to take advantage of the educational opportunities provided by Carolyn Smart, one of the most renowned woman poets in Canada? And, why would the school of English, of all schools of study at Queen's, discourage English students from studying creative writing?

Unlike some other universities which offer creative writing degrees, the English department at Queen's offers only two creative writing courses. But, like so many other courses supposedly offered at Queen's, only one of those - the introductory course - is really available. The introductory course is scheduled in two slots so that more students could get involved, explained the English department. However, according to Carolyn Smart, the advanced course has only been offered once.

Students who have taken the introductory course are anxious to take the advanced course, and Carolyn Smart is anxious to teach it. While we all know we are being educated in an age of underfunding, budget cuts and belt-tightening, this could only be an illusory excuse for not offering the advanced course. If this were the case, would not a more appropriate solution be to offer one slot of each course?

Certainly the department cannot be worried about enrolment. The courses are always in high demand, and, shameful as it is, the only disincentive to taking the course is provided by the English department itself.

The creative writing courses, believe it or not, cannot be counted toward an English concentration. For a department devoted to the study of creative work, this is difficult to comprehend. Any concerns about low enrolment, which seem obviously unwarranted, would be completely dispelled if the course were allowed to count toward an English concentration.

Perhaps the English department worries that students would avoid the typically less interesting English courses taught by scholars as opposed to a practising poet. (This does not necessarily imply that a practising poet is better qualified to teach an English course.)

Or maybe the English department feels that creative writing should be an intensely personal experience to be enacted only in the privacy of

Furthermore, one who argues that creative writing should be limited to the realm of personal experience would have to argue that, so should painting, sculpting, drawing or other fine artistic endeavours be strictly individual. Clearly this is not the case. Queen's has a fine arts department which issues degrees every year. But creative writing is virtually ignored.

This is not a problem unique to Queen's. From secondary school on, the creative spirit is pounded out of students by teachers and professors who glorify the arts of theoretical writing and critical thinking. Admittedly, some secondary schools offer an OAC level course in creative writing. Queen's should take note of this partial commitment to creativity.

Many of us manage to get a grip on critical thinking. We learn to think in theoretical terms. We learn to look at the world in terms of dichotomies and paradigms. But how far does that take us? The best academic writers are those who are able to combine theoretical insight with creative flair.

Critical and creative writing/thinking are linked. Perhaps if more students were encouraged to explore their creative writing skills, they would be better equipped to think critically about creative works and creatively about critical works. Both styles of writing are two halves of an educating and entertaining whole. And the creative half plays an important part in defining the culture of our society: who we are, what we think and what values we hold. At the very least, the English department should make the credit count as part of an English concentration. Anything less would be a disgrace.

one's own creative hamlet. People who want to write will write whether they are taking a creative writing class or not. But, these same people may not take their own works seriously and may not have the confidence to attempt to be published without the feedback provided in the creative writing courses.

Don't Bogart that joint, my friend

How many of us, upon seeing, smelling or smoking marijuana, nonchalantly excuse it as a common occurrence? More than likely, there are many individuals who would.

Regardless of the frequency of marijuana use, it remains illegal to grow, possess or share pot.

But what if it wasn't a crime? What if the federal or provincial government of Canada decriminalized or legalized marijuana - put it, essentially, on the same par as liquor? The government would tax it, regulate it and would charge you with drug related fines, just like alcohol.

Let's face it, one of the only things preventing some people from smoking or ingesting marijuana is their inability to find it.

Instead of wandering down a dark alley hoping to score or talking to a "friend" of a friend, all that would be necessary is a trip to the local licensed retailer to pick up a pack of pre-rolled "joints".

Imagine walking in, asking for "Import A - green" and walking out without putting your future in peril. Gone would be the days of being paranoid while politely requesting Zig Zags at Freddie's.

Medically speaking, marijuana counters some of the side-effects of chemotherapy without the physically addictive properties of other painkillers such as morphine.

On a regional scale, the benefits could potentially be remarkable. The revenue created alone from the highly-taxed, government-regulated substance could provide much needed finances to our weakening social programs.

The agricultural community could once again be prosperous as farmers converted their operations to grow the hearty hemp plant. Students would happily apply for summer jobs at these new pot plantations - year, after year, after year.

Further economic benefits would be seen in the influx of American tourists coming to experience all that Canada has to offer.

Naturally, the bureaucracies at all levels of government would need to be expanded to provide the support necessary to regulate the marijuana. All those students who squeaked through their degrees due to pot-smoking would now be qualified for positions in the new department of Marijuana Control. Finally a government department which could justify its sloth-like quickness.

Hey, with this new atmosphere in Canada, maybe the Grateful Dead would consider playing more than just Hamilton. Maybe not.

Actually, perhaps the decriminalization of marijuana wouldn't translate into economic and personal well-being.

Would we really want to disturb the subterranean culture that lives and tokes in the bowels of our urban centres? A resurfacing underground would make new demands on society that this nation could not afford.

With the hallucinogenic properties of marijuana, the opportunities for driving accidents would increase significantly. We already have enough problems with drunk drivers. We certainly don't need stoned ones.

Short of road-side urine tests, the ability for a police officer to prove driving while under the influence of marijuana would be extremely difficult.

Because of the stereotypes connected with pot-smokers, Canada would no longer enjoy its lofty status among the global community. We would be quickly dropped from international trade negotiations and the United Nations wouldn't ask for our Peace Keepers.

Canada would sink into a lonely existence characterized by loss of appetite and inhibition. Not such a beautiful place any more, eh?

Marijuana use at Queen's is a common occurrence. If you haven't seen it, you're just not going to the right, or perhaps the wrong places. It is not likely that it will disappear.

It has been used in medical and religious applications as well as for personal indulgence for centuries. It has also been the subject of abuse and the cause of destruction for about the same length of time.

It is not much wonder why the debate over the decriminalization of marijuana has occurred repeatedly in party dialogue, scholarly discussions and political discourse.

When it comes to the decriminalization of marijuana, it is in the political arena where the ultimate decision will be made. With Kim Campbell as the resident baby boomer in the 1993 federal election (also enjoying the leading position in the polls), perhaps marijuana decriminalization will become a pivotal issue.

All we can do is wait and see, but not since Pierre Trudeau, do the pot-friends of the nation have something to be hopeful about.

Opinions

The Journal on Trial

The Editor,
I am a new student at Queen's University and recently I had the opportunity to read The Queen's Journal for the first time. The September 10th issue dealt with a number of very important decisions being made by the student government, our administration, and the various levels of government in Canada which will greatly affect us as students now, and in the future as Canadian citizens.

Although I am glad that Queen's students are being exposed to the fundamentals of these important decisions, I am very disappointed with the way our student representatives and writers for The Queen's Journal are handling them. My disappointment results from a demonstration of a complete lack of understanding from the president of the AMS, Katherine Philips, regarding financial issues facing students and a lack of effort from the reporters or editorial writers to determine what other student policies exist regarding these issues.

The Queen's Journal should act as a check on our student leaders not a place where they can spout meaningless rhetoric in order to give the impression that they are doing their job.

As an example, let me point to the article, "Students share burden with new $100 levy." Although Katherine Philips is right to be concerned with the process of the implementation of the levy (which is very perceptive of her) she gives no explanation regarding why it is bad. I think she does think it is bad, or at least she's "fighting" it. But, why? I doubt she knows, and strangely enough the reporter didn't feel it was important enough to ask. I think it's important so I'll tell you. It's because what our administration has decided to do is take from the poor to give to the poorer students are in no position to be funding a student aid program. These funds would more appropriately come from taxes which in theory (and only in theory) are supposed to balance out the finances of our country by asking those that benefit from living in our ideal country, both individuals and major corporations, to give some back so that others will also have the same opportunities.

Okay, maybe that particular example does not deserve the tone of my first couple of paragraphs, so lets move on a couple of pages to AMS Denounces 50 percent Tuition Hike." They better, or they'll lose their jobs. But, Ms. Philips does not even say that raising tuition is bad. She just doesn't think it's fair that we should not be allowed to go into even larger debt; "...tuition increases must be accompanied by an increase in money for student assistance." Of course, I see, debt load is not a barrier to accessibility, especially if you want to make a contribution back to the community which made an education possible. Social workers, nurses, academics will all have plenty of money at the end of their education to pay back their loans. But, Ms. Philips doesn't stop there, she also agrees that an income contingent plan would be good for students. In what paradise? If she did any research or really listened to what our government is saying she would know that income contingency is a way to increase fees, and results in an even larger debt load upon leaving university. It does nothing for accessibility! Anywhere! The prize must go to the authors of "Tuition Hike Proposal Endangers Accessibility." I know an editorial is an opinion, but in the past most editorials I read at least provide a logical argument for these opinions. I would even settle for an argument, logic can be left up to the reader. "Post secondary education is not a right, but a privilege to those who can afford it." What? Since when is having money a logical criteria for deciding who is entitled to an education? Somebody finally asked the right question, the problem was the way they came up with the answer. Simply accepting government rhetoric without any thought is the most disturbing and dangerous thing to the future of our country. Especially on an editorial page, and even worse, on the editorial page of a university paper.

—Fredrick Arno
Arts '94

—Nicole Morgan
Arts '96

—Hans Edstrand
Arts '96

—Genevieve Cote
Arts '95

—Jeff Waldman
Meds '97

Real-Live Slacker

talking heads

"What do you think of Queen's registration procedure(s)? How do you think it can be improved?"

"I'm so confused."
—Tzen Goh
Arts '96

"I'm trying to forget it."
—Fredrick Arno
Arts '94

"It was almost as fun as classes."
—Nicole Morgan
Arts '96

"It was orgasmic. Registration was fun but Leroy Rodrigues was exquisite, incomparable and completely and totally overwhelming."
—Hans Edstrand
Arts '96

"It's sweetie!"
—Genevieve Cote
Arts '95

"It was too long. They should provide some live entertainment."
—Bittu George
Arts '95

Joey deVilla

ATTENTION:

ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS

The 1st

ASUS

Assembly will be held
Tues. Sept. 21st at 7:30p.m. in the MacLaughlin
Room, John Deutsch
University Centre

Details about the agenda will be available at 'The Core'
183 University Ave.
or call 545-6278

VIDS IN THE HALL HAS AN OPENING FOR THE POSITION OF ASSISTANT MANAGER. APPLICATIONS CAN BE PICKED UP AT THE AMS OFFICE, AND ARE DUE BACK AT THE OFFICE FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, AT 12 NOON.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE AT THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

BUSINESS MANAGER:

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE JOURNAL HOUSE, 272 EARL STREET, AND ARE DUE SEPTEMBER 17 AT 5:30 P.M.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is responsible for the long-term strategic planning and financial operations of the Journal and is accountable to the AMS.

ONE PROFESSOR:

OR OTHER QUALIFIED NON-STUDENT WITH A KNOWLEDGE OF QUEEN'S AND THE NATURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL; THIS SHALL NORMALLY BE A TWO-YEAR TERM.

ONE STUDENT:

INDIVIDUALS SHOULD PREFERABLY NOT HAVE ANY AFFILIATION WITH AMS SERVICES, CLUBS, COUNCILS, OR COMMITTEES.

ASUS ELECTIONS

OCTOBER 13TH AND 14TH

AVAILABLE POSITIONS:

- 1 - YEAR ASUS REP TO AMS
- 1 - YEAR SENATOR

ARTS '97 EXECUTIVE
 PRESIDENT
 VICE PRESIDENT
 SECRETARY
 PUBLICITY - 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
 SOCIAL - 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
 WIC
 BEWS

NOMINATIONS OPEN MONDAY SEPT. 20TH
 THROUGH THURSDAY SEPT. 27
 CAMPAIGNING STARTS OCTOBER 6TH AT 12:00 A.M.
 AND ENDS OCTOBER 12TH AT 8 P.M.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT STEPHANIE LANE
 OR JASON MARKWELL AT 545-6278

Franco's Italian Cuisine

Treat yourself to our all you can eat Italian buffet.

featuring daily selections of soup, bread bar, salad bar, wide selection of pastas and sauces and dessert bar.

Just $6.50 (taxes and beverages extra)

Skylight Dining Room
 John Deutsch University Centre
 Monday-Thursday 5-6:30pm

GRAND OPENING 20 September 1993

Want to Join our Team...

STUDENT
TEAM ON ALUMNI RELATIONS

Student Team on Alumni Relations

Fall Recruitment
 September 20, 1993
 6:30
 McLaughlin Room, JDUC

Perhaps you'd like to join one of these committees:

- Career Buddy
- Alumni Children
- Alumni Weekend
- Cake Service
- Send-off
- A.S.A.P. Alumni Student
- Afternoon at the Pub

- Future Alumni
- Guess Who's Coming to Dinner
- Senior Alumni
- Parent Orientation Day
- Junior Homecoming
- Photography & Slide Bank

THE BEST BANDS - LOWEST COVERS

Monday nite Football
 Denver vs. K.C.
 20c Wings
 QB1

Coming Soon

- Bourbon One
- The Doughboys
- The Watchmen
- Bob Dylan
- The Beatles
- Dave Clark Five
- Abba
- Hopping Penguins

Great Food
 Specials!
 (look in your mail box)

Tonight!

Best of the Hip
 with Road Apples

Saturday,
Sept 18

The Tom Barlow Band
 Party Rock ('n' roll)

Every Sunday
 Wild Blues Yonder
 Great Party - no cover

Every Thursday
 Don't miss our
 Dipso Mania Party!
 All night long!
 Deals a go go!

We 'B' Smokers
 Book now ... avoid the rush
 Have we got a deal 4 U!
 531-5300

Features

Sexual Orientation Week

This feature is a primer for bisexuals, gay men, lesbians and their friends—new or returning to Queen's. While it's not exhaustive, we've tried to cram in a lot of information. We know that some of you will be familiar with cities and communities with larger, more "sophisticated" queer organizations and businesses... but we're sure that you'll be impressed at what wee Queen's and Kingston has to offer. Because of space restrictions, full listings for groups is not possible. Where no contact number is given, call the Lesbian and Gay Information Line 545-2960, Monday-Friday, 7-9pm.

Remember, the easiest way to make changes—positive changes for everyone—is to get educated and get involved.

"Errm. I'm not sure about this. I'm not sure if I should. No, I probably shouldn't. Maybe I'll go around the block again... Oh, there it is again. I should really go in. Oh, but someone might see me. I'll just walk around again, maybe next time there will be fewer people around... Here we are again. It's getting late; maybe there won't be anyone there any more. I should probably come back next week instead. Shit, there's Jonathan, I should go talk to him... Ok, he's gone, I'll walk back and go in... Ok, here goes nothing... That wasn't so hard. No one saw me. These people are nice. They're not as weird as I thought they'd be. They're just like all my other friends."

For those of you who don't recognize it, this is what goes through a person's mind (substitute any number of names for Jonathan) when they are attempting to attend their first lesbian, gay and bisexual event, drop-in, smoker, bar or whatever. We all go through it. We all have that fear of stepping through that door for the first time. Once we do, however, we quickly discover that the people on the other side of that door are just like us and that they're no different than the rest of our friends except for the fact that they had the same conversation with themselves the first time they wanted to walk through that door. They've also had to live most of their lives with the fear that someone is going to find out that they're queer and treat them with less respect or no respect at all.

This may seem to be directed at students, staff, faculty or alumni/ae of Queen's who think that they may be or know that they are lesbian, gay or bi, but that's not the intention. This is intended for everyone. I hope that it will raise a little awareness for queer people out there as well as the straits reading it as well.

It takes a lot of inner strength to be able to say to yourself, "Yes, I admit that I'm attracted to the same sex." It takes even more courage to do something about it. Decades ago, the only way gay and bi men could meet each other was to walk around parks or to go to public washrooms (among other places) for sex and encounters. Fortunately, homosexuality was decriminalized in Canada so people who are attracted to members of their own sex can now live freer (not entirely free) lives with the knowledge that if they are dating someone of the same sex, they won't be arrested for it. More recently, Ontario changed its Human Rights Code to say that gays and lesbians are protected from discrimination. This however doesn't make things any easier, especially at places like Queen's, the workplace, family homes, etc.

"All I ever learned about being gay, I learned from straight people."

You're going to be concerned about a few things in the process of coming out. I went through the same thing, and all of my friends did also. There's visibility (or the lack of it), confidentiality, stereotypes, promiscuity/sex, STD's and HIV and family and friends to name a few.

Visibility is a bit of a problem. You're not living in Toronto or Montreal any more. There are only two main streets to walk down to find a venue for entertainment. When I started coming out, I was terrified that people were going to see me with my boyfriend and assume I was gay, but people didn't really. A lot of straight people tend to be a little narrow in their scope so they don't necessarily think about two guys seeing each other when confronted by it. I would run away, very quickly, when my boyfriend came walking up to me on campus. I tried to keep our relationship quiet despite his actions, like kissing me in Mac-Corry cafeteria (we had a chat about that one). He did, however, keep his promise of confidentiality. So did every one else that I met who was gay or lesbian. I was afraid that people would go blabbing, but no one did. I was eternally grateful to them for not saying hi to me in the street unless I said hi first; that was the agreement.

"All I ever learned about being gay, I learned from straight people." That's what a gay friend of mine said to me once and it's very true. Everything I thought about gays before I started coming out, I'd learned from straight society because there was no gay community to tell me the truth. I thought that all gay men were hairdressers, interior decorators, models or chefs and lesbians were mechanics, truck drivers or bikers. Though some people fit into one of these categories, very few do. I am an engineer and always thought that I was weird for being gay. I have met many queer engineers in the past three years. Society also tells us and everyone else that gays and lesbians have sex all the time and that they are indiscriminate as to who they sleep with. Well, I'm not so thrilled to say that I've only slept with a couple of men in the past 4 months. I know many straights who have outdone that tenfold. STD's are a concern, but there's a lot of education about it. If you're safe, you can avoid them all, including HIV and AIDS.

Actually telling people is usually one of the final steps in your coming out process. I had the unfortunate disadvantage of having my parents find out before I intended on telling them. I came out to the Lesbian and Gay Association a year later. There is a lot of helpful literature about how to come out to your parents and what things you need to do to prepare for this, such as arranging for an alternate place to stay in case things get hairy at home. Arm yourself with lots of relevant information so that you can answer their questions. From my interaction with my friends, almost all of them got the same questions from their parents. I think there's a little checklist somewhere. You're also advised to find a queer-positive family friend (if one exists) that your parents can talk with about your news to them. Friends are sometimes the most difficult people to come out to because we're always striving to be accepted by them. Some friends that I consider very close I still haven't told and am angry with myself for not having done so.

"Friends are sometimes the most difficult people to come out to because we're always striving to be accepted by them."

So for those of you thinking of coming out, the first step really is the most difficult. Once you've jumped that hurdle, the rest is fairly straight forward... I can't believe I just said that... the rest is fairly standard for the community and there are lots of people willing to help along the way.

Basil Girgrah (aka Prom Queen Gate Bad), is a graduate student in Engineering.

Is anybody out there?

Lesbian Alternative Fertilization Support Group
Contact Anne, 531-0780

A self-help group for lesbians seeking alternative fertilization methods and support for lesbian mothers.

Lesbian and Gay Association-Kingston
51 Queen's Crescent (The Gray House)
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3H6
545-2960; staffed Monday-Friday 7-9pm; message at other times.

Confidential, non-judgemental information, peer-counselling, and referral service. Informal drop-ins provide a safe social space. Lending library and educational talks available. Also involved in political and social activities.

Inside Out
Phone: 531-8767, FAX: 531-8684

A monthly, not-for-profit publication produced by volunteers for the lesbian, gay and bisexual community/ies of Kingston and area.

Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays/PFLAG
Phone: 545-0267

A support group for parents and friends of lesbians, gays and bisexuals. Meets third Friday of the month, 8 pm, 32 Queen's Crescent.

W.I.S.E.R./Women in Sport, Entertainment and Recreation
Phone: 545-1130

Friendly, accepting, non/less competitive, participation, no-cost manner. Equipment provided. Fall events: Badminton, Tuesdays, 7pm; Basketball, Thursdays, 6:30 pm—both at Robert Meek Public School on Bagot Street. First Tuesday of each month is Women's Night at the Sunflower Restaurant. Fundraising dance November 20, Lion's Club Hall.

outright youth in kingston/oyink
Phone: 545-2960

A support and social group for lesbian, gay, bisexual or uncertain under the age of 27. Meets Wednesday, 7 pm, 51 Queen's Crescent (beside Vic Hall).

Kingston AIDS Project
113 Johnson Street
Office: 545-3698; info line: 545-1414

Information, support and counselling for people dealing with AIDS/HIV. Confidentiality stressed. Also: Injection Drug Use Community Outreach Needle Exchange Program.

Integrity/Kingston
Phone: 549-1179

An Anglican ministry by and for lesbians, gay men and their friends. Meets on 4th Monday of month at 7:30 pm.

Gentle Spirit
Metropolitan Community Church
Phone: 547-2107

A Christian, non-denominational church with a special ministry for lesbians, gays and bisexuals. Sunday service, 7:30 pm, William Street entrance of Sydenham Street United Church. Pastor: Rev. Art Griffin.

After Stonewall
CFRC 101.9 FM, Sunday evenings
Phone: 545-2121

A variety show by and for lesbian, gay and bisexual expression featuring music, news, interviews and lots of fun. Sept. 20: 6:30-8:30pm. Call for new time slot after Sept. 21.

Sisters In Struggle
Phone: 545-2950

Support, peer-counselling and safe environment for lesbian and bisexual women of any age who are at any stage of coming out. Meets Tuesdays, 8 pm.

AIDS/HIV Clinic
Kingston General Hospital
Phone: 548-7805

An out-patient clinic for people who have tested HIV positive and are referred by their family doctor. Comprehensive, coordinated approach to treatment with patient as active team member.

Standing Tall
Phone: Keith, 548-3968

A support group for male victims and survivors of sexual assault and abuse. Meets every other Tuesday, 8 pm, 99 York Street.

Men's Euchre Night
Robert's Club Vogue
477 Princess Street

Every Monday night, 7 pm at Kingston's lesbigay bar.

Queen's Low Lesbians Bisexuals & Gays
c/o Faculty of Law, Macdonald Hall

Information/resource centre regarding lesbian/bi/gay legal is-

Like a prayer

I want to thank the staff of The Queen's Theological College would be providing helpful information on resources for members of the Queen's Community who are dealing with gay, lesbian and bisexual issues. I have been asked to indicate some religious gay-positive resources. Let me make two points. First, this listing was prepared quickly by me, it is not exhaustive. There will be many other gay-positive religious resources. These are some, close by. Second, I am mostly aware of Christian-based resources. For members of other faith groups, I would be pleased to go looking for resources. Seekers of help should know that there are people in most faith groups who do not accept homosexual lifestyles. But they should also know that supportive and gay positive help can be found in most cases.

There is a Metropolitan Community Church in Kingston, a Christian gay-lesbian-bisexual positive Church that can be contacted through Sydenham United Church. On campus, the staff of my office and the Anglican chaplain, 90 Queen's Crescent can be contacted. I have a male assistant in my office who focuses specifically on gay-lesbian-bisexual positive counselling. The ministry staff of several local churches can be counted upon for a supportive approach. All these resources would not entail a fee.

Reverend Brian Yealland is the Queen's University Chaplain, and can be reached at his office at 545-2186.

Trading traditions

Queen's has a reputation as a conservative, toe the line and, if you're queer, be-mistaken-for-a-garment-bag-and-stay-in-the-closet place. Pockets are in evidence, but the bastion of critical thinking is not yet found at Queen's. (The singing and highkicks of the Oil Thigh is second to the better known, but less acknowledged, whining and arm-waving of "Is that going to be on the final?")

Be not dismayed, there is hope. Yes, like the classmate who not only completes the course readings before the first mid-term but shares her notes with you, or the parent who phones the night before a paper is due to encourage you in your studies, there are sincere folk in your midst determined to make some changes.

Change?! But Queen's is known for its traditions! Face it: "Tradition" would have this place full only of Presbyterian hymns being hummed by tartan-toting Presbyterian hims if certain traditions hadn't withered or been discarded. A tradition serves and upholds a purpose; when the purpose changes, the tradition either changes or dies.

Thousands of people working and studying on this campus, and living in the community surrounding it, are (deep breath, hold, exhale slowly) queer. Most of those thousands feel it necessary to play garment bag. And the reasons for that are many and you've heard them all and if you don't believe them or take them seriously you're probably already whining "Is this on the final?" and waving your

The Institute of Pastoral Care at Queen's Theological College would be a supportive resource, and their fees for counselling are on a sliding scale, depending on ability to pay. There are a number of counselling agencies and individuals in town who would be supportive. Two from the Catholic tradition, whose fees are reasonable, are available. You would be welcome to call my office for names and numbers of any of these resources and your call could be made anonymously.

For support for those who are Jewish, contact should be made with my office for referral. There is such support available.

There is also a Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays group in Kingston which, while not specifically religiously affiliated, is a source of good support. My office can make that referral, too.

Again, this is not an exhaustive listing but I would encourage anyone seeking such support to feel assured that positive support from a religious perspective is available to them.

I can also recommend a number of religious books that take a gay-positive position and I would welcome anyone to call or drop in for such a list.

Reverend Brian Yealland is the Queen's University Chaplain, and can be reached at his office at 545-2186.

arm into the worst case of bursitis imaginable and all your papers contain run-on sentences like this one. Point being, traditionally queers have not been welcomed on this—or other—campuses and so conceal our queerness. There have been attempts to discard this tradition but, like the millipede under the sink, some traditions have a nasty way of creeping back.

Back to that change thing. You can close your mind up into a dried pea and let in only information that may—some day—pave your way to a degree. Conversely, you can open your mind. (Look up the Latin root for the word "university" and discover that it refers to "the whole world") The world, not excepting our little corner, contains much unnecessary pain, much suffering, much discord, many viewpoints, many people, many colours, many abilities, many wonderful ways to express affection. As well, it provides many opportunities for change and for inclusive thought, talk and action.

Make the most of your time at Queen's—and while you'd better limber up your shoulder before class, limber up your mind up inside and outside of class—and give yourself the chance to discover university.

Nancy Tatham, Arts '86, rarely raised her arm in class. She did, however, pull a riotous Dopey impression in Dr. Lederman's class years ago and to this day is truly reworful.

This Features Section was compiled by Nancy Tatham and Basil Girgrah, to make up for the inadequacy of Frosh Week.

The B-word

My earliest recollection of my bisexuality was in the third grade. I had two crushes: one on the most handsome boy, and the other on the most beautiful girl in the school. I did not know anything about sex; I just remember being attracted and imagining being close to either of them. I was a very shy person, so I didn't even talk to either of my interests. I just dreamed—a lot!

This type of fantasizing was about all I did regarding romance. By the time I became aware of my sexual feelings in adolescence, I had been indoctrinated by society's attitude that any attraction to the same gender was wrong and bad. So I just ignored my feelings toward men and led a "proper" straight life. For the next fifteen years, I struggled with my feelings for men, direly wishing they would go away. I did not act on them and controlled my behaviour scrupulously so as not to "let on." I never told a soul, and it wasn't too surprising I didn't have a happy love life.

The first time I read the word bisexual, I knew instantly that that's what I was. I didn't go so far as to acknowledge my feelings, or do anything about it, because of my deep fear that I might really be gay.

When I was twenty-seven, I moved from southern California to attend graduate school at the University of California at Berkeley. Somewhere in the back of my mind I knew San Francisco's gay community was also a reason to move there. But it was the beginning of the AIDS epidemic, so I had another "reason" not to explore my gay side. After many years of thinking about it—usually staring at the ceiling at 1 a.m.—I had to begrudgingly accept that at least on an intellectual level I was bisexual. I had a lot of problems dealing with my feelings. There was no one to talk with about it. I didn't know of any bisexual groups and had a hard time finding any books. I even looked in the card catalogue at the University of California's main library under the "b" word and found nothing! This library is reputedly the fourth largest in the country!

A couple of years later, as I neared graduation, I had my first real relationship with a woman, or with anyone for that matter. At first, I did not tell her about my bisexuality for fear of being rejected. After four months, we were very much in love. I decided to come out to her. I had learned her sister was a lesbian and hoped for the best.

She was shocked at first, then supported me in dealing with my feelings, but told me that a long-term relationship was out of the question. I felt so guilty for not telling her from the beginning that I felt it was all right for her to reject me, but I hoped we would not break up. Being a counsellor herself, she encouraged me to seek counselling. The fact I had never talked about "it" was what upset her the most.

After a few false starts, I found a therapist and began talking about my bisexual feelings for the first time. In a little counselling office my therapist gently prodded me toward self-acceptance. Finally it all came pouring out: the lies to myself, the tears, the stifled desires, and many tears. The relationship with my girlfriend lasted two more rocky years.

By then I was going to a bisexual support group at the Pacific Centre in Berkeley. I started going to gay bars, which was both exciting and terrifying. Finally, I the second time, I felt a deep chord strike within me saying go! I went to a meeting and learned there was going to be a bisexual contingent. For me, going to the march was not only to demonstrate for our rights, but was also the last major step in my own personal coming out process.

I flew to Washington, DC, feeling that the march was going to be bigger than most people expected. I showed up at the eclipse on the morning of October 11. Over 600,000 men and women gathered to demand our civil rights as full human and sexual beings! I marched proudly with the National Bisexual Network contingent.

As each contingent joined the ever-growing crowd assembled on the Mall, we listened to Holly Near. We all joined hands and sang, "We are a gentle angry people, and we are fighting for our lives..." I was both moved and soothed by the sight and sounds of hundreds of thousands of people singing and swaying in unison. At that moment I accepted the person I am—and felt at peace with myself.

A month later, although very apprehensive, I came out to my parents. I was lucky to have their unqualified support. They told me they loved me for who I was. More tears helped wash away the pain of the many years of denial.

Since then I have become very active in the Bay Area Bisexual Network (BABN). Formed in May of 1987, BABN provides an umbrella group of resources, social activities, a speaker's bureau, and information for people in the San Francisco Bay Area. I was recently elected co-chair.

The best part of being in this new community is talking, socializing, and just hanging out with men and women who support bisexuality as a valid and healthy lifestyle. We are not going back into the closet, nor will we endure the ignorance of not knowing our personal and collective experiences. I feel we are building a new community of bisexuals drawing on the strides and prides made by the civil rights and women's movement, and the gay and lesbian struggles that went before us.

This article was written by Matthew LeGrand and was excerpted from a book called Bi Any Other Name: Bisexual People Speak Out which is available at the Lesbian and Gay Association library.

CAREERS DAY '93

RUNNING AROUND IN CIRCLES

NOT SURE WHERE TO GO FROM HERE?

FOR SOME OF THE ANSWERS

FOR A BETTER UNDERSTANDING OF WHICH QUESTIONS TO ASK

DROP IN TO

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

JOCK HARTY ARENA

10:00 AM TO 4:00 PM

ORGANISATIONS THAT HAVE BOOKED SPACE TO DATE INCLUDE:

3M, ANDERSEN CONSULTING, CAE ELECTRONICS, CHUBB, DOW, EDS, HOSTESS FRITO-LAY, IMPERIAL OIL, INCO, LEO BURNETT, MPR TELTECH, PANCANADIAN, PETER KIEWIT, POLYSAR, P & G, SCHLUMBERGER, SHL SYSTEMHOUSE, SYNCRUDE, TACO BELL, UNILEVER, UNUM, and WARNER LAMBERT.

ALSO BOOKED ARE:

7 C.A. FIRMS, plus ICAO, CGA and CMA; 3 BANKS, 3 LIFE INSURANCE FIRMS

AND SEVERAL OTHER PROFESSIONAL AND RESEARCH INSTITUTES... WITH MORE TO COME.

PICK UP YOUR COPY OF THE CAREER, AVAILABLE ACROSS CAMPUS MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 20 FOR A MORE DETAILED LISTING OF PARTICIPANTS.

This event is brought to you through the combined efforts of Career Planning and Placement and AIESEC - Queen's.

STUDENTS

THE BREWING EXPERIENCE
The place where YOU make great beer!

SUPERIOR BEER EXCELLENT WINE

Start with the right personal Brewery and BE satisfied!

Look for our AD in the Welcome Back Magazine and save on our Deals Deals Deals coupon.

Come on out to 407 Counter, Unit 160
(on Sir John A McDonald Blvd. side)
Reservations - Directions - 542-2187

Sports

Intramural Info

BY THE ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT
The Queen's Journal

Intramurals, Who Can Play And How?

All full-time students are entitled to participate in any activity in the Intramural programme upon registration and payment of their student interest fees, which include an athletic fee component. Part-time students must pay the athletic fee component to be eligible to participate. Interested part-time students should contact the Intramural Co-ordinator, Kathy Jackson. Persons competing on or in the process of trying out for Interuniversity or Varsity teams are ineligible for competition in that particular Intramural sport. Persons competing on organized teams receiving coaching outside the University must contact the Intramural Co-ordinator to determine eligibility status in that particular sport.

Getting involved in the Intramural programme is easy. Information and sign-up evenings are held in the fall and the winter, and there is always someone in the Intramural Office who can answer your questions.

Although the deadline for entering teams in many of the fall sports is passed, you can still get involved as an individual by showing up at the first scheduled game for your unit of the sports that interest you. Sports schedules are posted for the term on the bulletin boards in the men's and women's locker rooms in the Physical Education Centre.

There are also two Athletic Department documents which can help you sort and organize all the information and events in the Intramural schedule. These are 'Your Guide to Queen's Athletic and Recreation Programs' and the 'Intramural Poster Calendar'. Both are available in the main lobby of the Physical Education Centre.

The Differences Between Boys And Girls

The Women's programme at Queen's is referred to as the WIC programme. WIC sports are plentiful and as varied as the typical soccer and football sports to the more diverse innertube waterpolo and ringette activities. In WIC sports, women are expected to play with their unit, i.e. all female engineers will play together for all sports. Since sign-up has already passed if you wish to play any sports the schedules are posted on the way to the Women's change room. Find your unit, read the time of the first game and then just show up to play!

The Men's programme is known simply as BEWS. BEWS are similar to WIC sports in that there are a wide variety and people wishing to participate must do so within your unit, i.e. all male Comm'97's will play together. Once again schedules will be posted with game times but in this case on the way to the Men's changeroom. Again, anyone can feel free to show up and play for their unit, no skill necessary.

Lel's Talk Co-ed Sports

The Intramural program at Queen's provides opportunities for all students within the University to become involved in friendly competition in a wide variety of sports and physical activities. One section or category of sports is co-ed or BEWIC.

BEWIC events are extremely popular, which has resulted in a steady growth in the program over the years. Most BEWIC events are run in a one or meeting. Also on Monday are officials clinics in Soccer (7:30pm) and Flag Football (8:30) in room 205 of the PEC. Tuesday Sept. 21 is the start of both WIC Dodgeball and BEWS Tug-of-War. There are also officials clinics for Rugby (7:30) and Water Sports (8:30) in room 206 in the PEC.

Wednesday Sept. 22 Track and Field Meet (6:00) plus official clinics for Volleyball (7:30) and Basketball (8:30) in room 206.

Thursday Sept. 23 has a meeting for the managers of all FALL sports. Entry forms should already have been entered for the teams.

Sat. And Sun. Sept. 18 And 19 is the BEWS Softball Tournament.

Sat. And Sun. Sept. 25 & 26 is the BEWIC Softball Tournament. In order to play your team must have been represented at the managers' meeting on Monday.

Also on the Sunday (26th) is the ice hockey officials clinic. Managers are required to appear (1 rep. per team) as well and this clinic will take place on the ice (bring skates).

This is for Tuesday's edition.

The What's What Guide To Intramurals

If you caught last week's articles you are now familiar with the variety of sports offered through the Intramural program here at Queen's and how to get involved as a player. Most people assume that the opportunities for student participation end with playing—however there are many behind-the-scenes opportunities to become involved in the organizational aspects of Intramurals. The fact that the Intramural program at Queen's is dependent upon student involvement and participation cannot be stressed enough. All of the positions in Intramurals with the exception of the Intramural Coordinator post, are held by students. Players and non-players alike are encouraged to help organize

Please see INTRAMURALS / p.18

Courtesy of the Athletic Department

Terry Fox wants U

Do it for Cancer, and to feel great!

BY TY WEBB
The Queen's Journal

This is a quick reminder to everybody that the Terry Fox run is on the 19th.

The start of the race is located at Union St. between University and Division.

Here's a little information about Terry Fox, be at the race by 2:00pm, don't forget:

On April 12, 1980, Terry Fox (1958-81) of New Westminster, British Columbia, began his cross-country "Marathon of Hope" to raise money for cancer research. Fox had lost his right leg to cancer in 1977, but he resolved to run across Canada, with the blessings of the Canadian Cancer Society, on a fund-raising campaign. His goal was to raise one dollar for every Canadian. After extensive training, he set out from Cape Spear, Newfoundland and over the next five months he captivated the heart of the country.

Unfortunately, on September 1, 1980, Fox was forced to stop his run just east of Thunder Bay, Ontario when it was learned that cancer had spread to his lungs. He had run a total of 5,373 kilometres (3,331 miles) at an incredible pace of nearly 40 kilometres (24 miles) per day.

A nine-foot high statue of Fox at the Terry Fox Scenic Lookout marks the point at which he stopped his run. On September 7, a national television raised more than ten million dollars and not quite two weeks later, on September 19, Fox was invested as the youngest Companion of the Order of Canada. He reached his goal by raising a total of $24.7 million for cancer research.

Terry Fox died of cancer on June 28, 1981. His determination and courage inspire thousands to raise funds by running in the annual Terry Fox Run and inspired Steve Fonyo, who also lost a leg to cancer, to run across the country. Beginning in 1985, Fonyo retraced the steps of Fox, and continued right across the country. It took him fourteen months to complete his "Journey for Lives". He raised thirteen million dollars for cancer research.

If Terry Fox can do it, you can too.

Field hockey in full swing

BY JEN SPEER
The Queen's Journal

This past Friday while most of you were checking out the bargains at the sidewalk sale, the Queen's field hockey team journeyed to Toronto for a pre-season tournament. They spent fresh week practising twice a day to prepare to face the other teams in their league as well as a few visiting teams.

Friday morning the Gaels took the field against the Western Mustangs. Queen's dominated most of the play and Osha Kakaria scored the first goal of the season. Late in the second half, Western scored and the end result was a 1-1 tie.

That afternoon the Gaels were pitted against the University of Alberta Pandas. The Pandas are a strong team from the Western division and they won the game 2-0. Both goals were scored off penalty corners, but the play all over the field was evenly matched.

Saturday, the Gaels had two more games to play. The first was against The Selects, a club team from Toronto made up of many league reserves. Their years of skill overpowered the Gaels' stamina and the game ended in a 2-0 loss for the Gaels.

After this unfortunate loss, the Queen's field hockey team played against York University, York usually finishes first or second in Ontario. The game was evenly matched and the York team scored one goal late in the second half to win the game.

Sunday morning the Gaels had an 8:00am date with the Saint Mary's Huskies, another visiting team. The Gaels dominated the whole game and Jill Boyd scored the second goal of the weekend off a penalty corner, winning the game 1-0.

The weekend provided the team with a chance to assess this year's competition. The regular season starts this weekend when the Gaels host a tournament at North Field. They play Saturday at 3:00 & 6:00pm as well as Sunday at 10:30am. See YOU there.

QUEEN'S INTRAMURALS OFFICIALS NEEDED!!!

FOR ALL INTRAMURAL SPORTS WIC * BEWS * BEWIC

EARN SOME POCKET MONEY GET VALUABLE EXPERIENCE FOR RESUME
LEARN A NEW SKILL

Anyone interested in officiating Intramural sports during the 1993-94 season should pick up an application form from the main lobby of the Phys Ed Centre and return it to the Intramural Office as soon as possible. No previous experience as a referee is necessary - just a willingness to get involved. Training will be provided at one of our upcoming officials clinics.

1993 OFFICIALS CLINICS FOR FALL SPORTS

- MONDAY SEPTEMBER 20 AT 7:30pm - SOCCER
- MONDAY SEPTEMBER 20 AT 8:30pm - FLAG FOOTBALL
- TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 21 AT 7:30pm - RUGBY
- TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 21 AT 8:30pm - WATER SPORTS
- WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 22 AT 7:30pm - WIC FLOOR HOCKEY
- THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 23 AT 7:30pm - VOLLEYBALL
- THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 23 AT 8:30pm - BASKETBALL
- SUNDAY SEPTEMBER 26 AT 9:30pm - HOCKEY (on ice)

ALL CLINICS WILL BE HELD IN ROOM 205 OF THE PHYS ED CENTRE UNLESS OTHERWISE INDICATED.

PICK UP AN APPLICATION FORM AT
ATHLETIC INFORMATION NIGHT
OR FROM THE MAIN LOBBY OF THE PEC

INTRAMURALS IS WHERE THINGS HAPPEN!
COME OUT AND GET INVOLVED!!

WALKHOME

CALL 545-2662
OR DROP BY THE INFOBANK
HOURS 8pm - 2pm

WALK-HOME SERVICE
545-2662

We have 10 positions available for 1st year students. Applications can be picked up outside the AMS, and are due Sept. 24, 1993, at 12 p.m.

Coaches Corner

Queen's University Athletics appoints new coaches for 1993-94 season

BY THE ATHLETICS DEPARTMENT
The Queen's Journal

Rolf Lund, chair of Athletics and Recreation at Queen's University, is proud to announce the appointment of four head coaches for the current academic year.

He welcomes the return of Dr. Al Ferguson as the men's rugby coach, who left the program for one year to attend to family and academic concerns. Ferguson, a professor in Queen's department of physiology, previously coached the Gaels to five of their six Ontario Universities Athletic Association (O.U.A.A.) championships from 1987 to 1991.

According to Lund "Al is a model coach. The strength and depth of the Queen's program which continued on during his absence is a testimony to his leadership and commitment during the historic rugby championship years."

"His love for the game has kept his retirement short," adds Lund. "Al's contribution to Queen's Athletics, its students and to the institution is indeed significant and appreciated. His return to coaching has been well received by the rugby players. He is a formidable rugby coach and is well respected by his colleagues across the O.U.A.A."

In addition to Ferguson, three other coaches will lead Gaels teams this season. Lisa Eyles, Roy Ollier, and Connie Dwyer are new to Queen's.

Eyles will take over coaching the women's volleyball team. A native of Niagara Falls, she is no stranger to the Ontario Women's Interuniversity Athletic Association (O.W.I.A.A.) volleyball having played for York University from 1980-83 and was an O.W.I.A.A. all-star at Brock during her playing tenure there from 1990-91.

Prior to coming to Queen's, Eyles coached the Brock team for two seasons and has ten years experience as a YM-YWCA program director. Part of her duties at Queen's will be as assistant in Instructional Sports Skills program.

"Lisa brings the experience and maturity necessary for the women's volleyball program to develop," says athletic chair Lund. "We are fortunate to have been able to obtain a staff member and coach with the varied and complementary experience that Lisa brings to this position. I am confident her coaching impact will be significant this season and the women's volleyball team will enjoy success in 1993-94."

With the graduation of last season's coaches, Roy Ollier will assume the duties of head coach of the men's and women's squash teams. A native of Australia, Ollier acted as a special consultant to the Queen's squash program last year. As a player, he is well known in Kingston and eastern Ontario and he continues to play internationally.

"Roy brings a wealth of experience and knowledge to the Queen's squash program," says Lund. "As a special consultant to the squash program last year, Roy's overall training, athlete preparation and game strategy was acknowledged by several opposing teams last year."

"We are very fortunate Roy has shown his interest in our program and athletes. He is a welcomed addition to our coaching staff."

Queen's also welcomes Connie Dwyer as the head coach of the women's figure skating team.

According to Lund, Dwyer brings with her over six years of coaching and competitive experience in Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Labrador. In addition to her responsibilities with the Queen's figure skating program, she is also involved with the Kingston Figure Skating Club and the Women's Kingston Club.

"We're pleased to have Connie with us," says Lund, "and look forward to the leadership she brings to the team. In addition, she will be in contention for the O.W.I.A.A. championship as we are hosting the event this year."

Intramurals

Continued from page 17

and run events. There are ample opportunities for students interested in refereeing, convening or becoming athletic representatives.

An introduction to the organizational aspects of the Intramural program is outlined here along with a brief description of some of the positions available to students. If you are interested in any of these positions and want to learn more about what they entail bring your questions to the Intramural office in the P.E.C.

The Men's and Women's Intramural Committees are the governing bodies for Queen's Intramural Athletics. They report directly to the University Council on Athletics (UCA). The UCA, under the direction of the Senate, is the body responsible for all aspects of athletics at Queen's. The Council's main purpose is to provide opportunities for students to develop their total personalities through athletic and recreational pursuits and to provide a variety of meaningful educational experiences designed to help prepare students for community life. Responsibilities of the Council include the development of general policies that govern athletics at Queen's and the coordination of specific policies developed by its various athletics committees. That's where the WIC and BEWS committees come in.

The WIC and BEWS committees oversee the women's and men's programs respectively. These committees see that the Intramural program is carried out successfully in the best interests of the student participants. Each committee is represented at UCA level by one student and one non-student. The committees are composed of athletic representatives from each unit, the Convenors, the Chairperson, and the Intramural Coordinator. Most matters in men's and women's Intramurals are handled by separate committees, however joint meetings are also held to bring everyone together to discuss issues of common concern and BEWIC or co-educational program.

The Men's and Women's Intramural committees perform a variety of functions. Committee meetings provide a forum for athletic representatives from each unit to press any concerns they may have. The committees are responsible for all decisions related to the general operation of the Intramural program and making alterations as annual requirements dictate. As members of organizations of the UCA, the committees advise and make recommendations regarding Intramural matters.

Several subcommittees are formed from the WIC and BEWS committees. Composed of volunteers from various units, these subcommittees meet on a regular basis to handle issues such as protest and discipline, awards and banquet, rules, special events, and WIC review. For example, the BEWIC Review Subcommittee deals with concerns related to the co-educational program and brings comments and recommendations to the WIC and BEWS committees at joint meetings.

Please see INTRAMURALS / p.19

Intramurals

Continued from page 18

The structure of the WIC and BEWS committees allows for one vote per unit. Sticks from the same unit collaborate and make a decision as to which way their unit will vote. The positions of WIC Convenor of Convenors, BEWS Convenor of Convenors, BEWIC Convenor of Convenors, Awards, Publicity, and UCA are each allowed one vote. Sport convenors get one vote each during the term of their sport runs.

Three key positions in the Intramural program are the BEWS Convenor of Convenors, more commonly referred to as the C of C, WIC C of C, and the BEWIC C of C. The BEWS C of C for the 1993-94 Intramural season is Kevin Meldrum. Meredith Ash is his female counterpart holding the WIC Convenor post and Laura Zarowny is in charge of the BEWIC program. Together they coordinate all Intramural schedules and assist in specific sport convenors. Working closely with the Intramural Coordinator, they ensure that the program operates smoothly and to the satisfaction of all participants. Due to the nature and responsibility of these positions applicants are chosen through an interview process.

Each BEWS and WIC unit is represented by an Athletic Stick who sits on the Men's and Women's Intramural Committees. Athletic Sticks are elected in the spring or early fall by their respective faculties and act as a liaison between the organizational levels of the program and its participants.

In addition to representing their unit on the Intramural Committees the Athletic Sticks are responsible for keeping their units informed and encouraging students in their unit to participate in the various Intramural activities. There are two categories of Athletic Sticks: Faculty Sticks and Unit Sticks. Faculty Sticks are responsible for organizing and overseeing their respective Unit Sticks. They handle all matters related to the Faculty Unit, such as compiling points for Intramural letters. Unit Sticks organize the students within their unit for competition and appoint managers for all of the sports entered by their unit.

Team managers form a connecting link between the participants and the Intramural office. Their dedication and commitment is critical to the success of the Intramural program, particularly in BEWIC where teams are not necessarily faculty based. Managers act as a team captain of sorts and are responsible for ensuring that all participants are notified of upcoming games. All schedules and other pertinent information are forwarded to the managers by their Athletic Sticks.

Each sport offered by the Intramural program has a Sport Convenor who organizes the league or tournament and assumes all responsibilities related to the operation of the schedule, such as scheduling officials, maintaining game results and posting standings. Convenors play a vital role in the Intramural program and receive an honorarium for their work. Aside from specific sports there are approximately 12 additional convenor positions which contribute to the success of the total program: Officials Convenors, Publicity Convenors, WIC Awards Convenors, BEWS Independent Convenor and First Year Advisors. Convenors are usually selected in the spring for the following year. Interested individuals should watch the Queen's Journal for application deadlines or drop by the Intramural Office in the P.E.C.

If your interests lie in the area of a particular sport you might consider becoming an official. Due to the extensive nature of the program there are countless opportunities to get involved as a referee. Previous officiating experience is not necessary, however a working knowledge of the particular sport you apply for would be helpful. All officials are expected to attend any instructional clinics offered for their sport. Officials are paid as per the rates established by the Intramural Committees. Anyone who is interested should drop by the Intramural office and fill out an application form.

Hopefully by now you have a broader appreciation of the network of individuals who work behind the scenes and on the lines to deliver a successful program to the participants. As you can see, participation in the Intramural program here at Queen's can take many forms. Whether you are an avid player or an armchair quarterback, as long as you have enthusiasm, we have a place for you!!!

Is your idea of luxury macaroni and cheese?

There's nothing wrong with a hearty serving of "Student Helper," but you should be able to afford some variety on your plate. That's why you should check out Bank of Montreal's new Student Loan.

You can apply for a loan of up to $5,000 for each year of 5 years of undergraduate study, up to $20,000 in total, and up to $10,000 for 2 years of post-graduate studies* You'll be taking advantage of special student interest rates, and you just have to make interest payments while you're still in school. You'll also get a quick answer to your loan request.

To find out more, just drop by your nearest Bank of Montreal branch. And while you're there, ask us how else we can ease the pressure—a discount on day-to-day banking, special Bank of Montreal MasterCard® cards, and more. You might find it easier to balance your account and your meals.

Call our Queen's Student Hotline for more information
545-3022

*Available to full-time students, entering any year of post-secondary education at a recognized Canadian community college university, or polytechnical school. Bank of Montreal eligibility and credit requirements must be met. See your branch for complete details. MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International Inc. Bank of Montreal is a registered user.

Bank of Montreal
We're Paying Attention

CAREERS DAY '93.

JOCK HARTY ARENA

TUES. SEPT. 21 10:00 - 4:00

Entertainment

Fables of the Deconstruction

Rock Hudson's Home Movies
Directed by Mark Rappaport
Princess Court Cinema

BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The AIDS-related death of Rock Hudson in 1985 shocked the world. That Hudson was the first of an ever-increasing number of leading actors to die is claimed by the HIV virus seemed particularly incongruous: the quintessential movie hunk and ladies' man revealed in death to have been homosexual in life.

A flurry of lurid tabloid press accompanied Hudson's passing. More importantly, his death served as a catalyst to bring AIDS into the forefront of the North American consciousness. The on-going loss of beloved and talented people from the world of entertainment continues to have this effect (although AIDS has provided its own version of an age-old problem: ask a virologist what constitutes an epidemic and he'll tell you "The first dead white person." Today, many people remain fixated on the deaths of Western celebrities, while ignoring the fact that the epidemic intensity of the disease continues to increase in Africa).

An innovative response to Hudson's life and death can be found in a new film by veteran New York independent filmmaker Mark Rappaport. The premise of Rock Hudson's Home Movies is simple, though controversial: if one looks closely enough, film invariably reveals the soul. Thus, by re-evaluating Hudson's films, we can see that the closeted homosexual was in fact coming out in many films, if anyone cared to notice.

Rappaport's narrative voice ostensibly speaks through Rock himself (played by Eric Farr), who introduces and comments on the clips which he has compiled as "home movies" for the amusement of he and his friends. What follows is a sixty-minute sequence of various scenes which, through dialogue and body language, seek not only to demonstrate Hudson's celluloid openness but also to foreshadow his death.

Like statistics, film clips taken out of context can be manipulated shamelessly. Thus, several times we see Tony Randall look Hudson in the eye and say "Do me." What is cut out, of course, is the rest of the sentence: "...a favour." In a scene on a boat, Hudson's male Hudson's off-camera life. First, it is arguable (some would say it is obvious) that such film clips are removed so completely from their context as to be utterly meaningless. Second, even if one accepts that a tiny scrap of dialogue has meaning, neither Hudson, nor any of the other performers featured, wrote any of their lines: they simply delivered them. Is anything truly revealed about Hudson through this exercise?

Admittedly, most of the clips are vidually suspect, seen together they are given a new context outside of the original films. What pressures were exerted upon the homosexual actor whose career was predicated upon his very embodiment of the heterosexual male ideal? Hudson's homosexuality was, if anything, an open secret in Hollywood, and certainly was known to studio heads. Consequently, to preserve the bankability of their leading man, Hudson was encouraged to marry, an arrangement which was leading man, plays a straight ladies' man who, rather perversely, affects stereotypical gay mannerisms in order to woo Doris Day - clearly enough mindfuck material to make The Crying Game seem pedestrian.

Rock Hudson's Home Movies is therefore a provocative and creative exploration of the absurd, perhaps distressing, manufacture of a heterosexual icon in keeping with 1950's and 1960's morality, despite the homosexuality of the manipulated actor. Although the film's attempt to establish a cinematic foreshadowing of Hudson's death is its most morbid and least intellectually defensible moment, otherwise is surprisingly successful. Even if one does not accept Rappaport's arguments about Hudson himself, the film stands as an indictment of the social mores and stereotypes which shaped filmmaking during the heyday of Hudson's career. (Mincing bundles of gay stereotypes abound in the romantic comedies, all harmless eunuchs cloaked in thinly-veiled euphemism. This, of course, remains a favourite comedic device today.)

Rock Hudson's Home Movies effectively suggests the poignancy which must surround the celebrity's donning of masks to fulfill the expectations of a narrow-minded public.

Canadian director Laurie Lynd's short film, The Fairy Who Didn't Want to be a Fairy Anywhere is showing with Rock Hudson's Home Movies. Daniel McIvor stars in this stylish and humorous exploration of the pressures of sexual conformity, which climaxes in a musical number featuring jazz chanteuse Holly Cole. This is a justifiably popular short which was produced last year during Lynd's residence at the Canadian Film Centre.

The Queen's Journal Staff
The Queen's Performing Arts Office has scheduled a season of splendid classical and jazz performances, with a variety guaranteed to please the most discriminating music lover. The concerts are divided into two strands: the Grant Hall Series, with evening performances, and Music for a Sunday Afternoon, also in Grant, at 2:30 p.m.

Will the real Rock Hudson please stand up?

co-star asks, "Do you want to pump before or after we sail?" Rock replies, "If I thought we should pump, I'd ask for it." Cowboy Rock shoots Kirk Douglas a come-hither glance and tells him "I'll come for you at sundown." The smiling Douglas replies, "I'll be waiting for you." Amusing? Definitely. Problematic? Almost certainly.

There are two possible reasons for dismissing Rock Hudson's Home Movies as a smartass montage with no bearing whatsoever on absurd when considered individually. Rappaport is as aware of this as any viewer, as his tongue-in-cheek narration makes implicitly clear. He explicitly acknowledges the problematic fact that these are not Hudson's own words, and that to deconstruct a director in such a fashion is a relatively more concrete activity. Indeed, Rappaport does so briefly and effectively with Douglas Sirk, who directed Hudson in nine films.

If Rappaport's clips are indi-shortlived. Rock Hudson's Home Movies is at its strongest when it dissects the various roles that Hudson was given over the years, which, Rappaport suggests, went so far as to virtually force Hudson to out himself cinematically. The most striking example of a role which compromised the actor comes from one of Hudson's most famous romantic comedies, Pillow Talk. In this picture, Rock Hudson, the gay actor pretending to be a straight

A perfectly good release

John Hiatt
Perfectly Good Guitar
A&M Records

BY JOHN WHYTOCK
The Queen's Journal

"Who's John Hiatt?"

To people who know the answer, the ignorance of the question is on par with a fourth-year student asking, "Where's Morrison's?" John Hiatt has been quite justifiably a critic's favourite for years, but most people have only heard his music from other peoples' mouths, most notably Bonnie Raitt's cover of "Thing Called Love" and Suzie Boguss' countrified "Drive South."

But Hiatt sounds best when sung by Hiatt himself. His sound cuts through the dust in a manner as quenching as the best beer you've ever tasted on the hottest day of your life. He surrounds himself with exceptional musicians, the kind who can play with both sparsity and depth, and completely overshadows them with a voice that's equal parts angel and sandpaper.

Even greater than the voice, however, are the words it produces. More than anything else, John Hiatt is a poet, a wordsmith of such clarity that Michael Stipe seems artificial and contrived by comparison. His lyrics are instantly sensual, often visual. On 1986's Slow Turning album, you are in the room with him as he sings our lips could turn blue just shooting the breeze. Discovering Hiatt's lyrics can be much like discovering your house is built on a landmark site; what you thought was familiar suddenly becomes exciting.

Well, now John Hiatt's got a new album out, Perfectly Good Guitar, and it is a side of him we haven't seen before. First of all, on the cover photo, he is smiling, looking healthy, something you couldn't have said about him ten gin-soaked years ago. The album is a little more crisp, certainly a nice departure from the near-excessive production on 1992's Little Village. It's a little more rock 'n' roll than previous albums, in fact enough so that old fans may need two listens to get comfortable with it. But as usual, it's more enjoyable as a full listen rather than as a collection of singles. Most notable, though unique, among the twelve new songs is the title song, "Perfectly Good Guitar." Pumping out a gritty, restless

Please see HIATT / p. 24

I wuz robbed

The Real McCoy
Directed by Russell Mulcahy
Calaraq Cineplex
BY DAVID ULLMANN
The Queen's Journal

Some enthusiasts think bank robbery movies should be about the art of robbing a bank. Others believe bank robbery movies should be about the type of person who robs a bank. I don't know what The Real McCoy was about, except it was about an hour and half too long.

The Real McCoy begins by introducing us to famed catburglar/bank robber Karen McCoy, played without distinction by a tired looking Kim Basinger. Now while I can't think why a catburglar would be breaking into a bank (jewellery is usually their meow), it is, nonetheless, her trade. The problem is that for a movie about a burglar, the seventh commandment (Thou shalt not steal) remains surprisingly unbroken for the first seventy minutes or so.

What fills up this time instead? An irrelevant, trite and altogether flat family issues story that wouldn't merit discussion at the Quayle lunch table. Karen has a young son, Patrik (Zach English) who has been kept from her for the six years of her imprisonment. When Karen gets out and contacts her now remarried ex, she finds that her son has been told that his mother is dead. The pseudo-angst created by this maternal dilemma is amplified by Karen's search for gainful employment. Not surprisingly no one will trust her, and no one will hire her.

If this sixty-minute sequence was supposed to tug at the heart wantonly criminal. Karen McCoy robs banks for a living, and no, I wouldn't trust her, nor would I feel sorry for her. The question of what drove her to rob banks is never explored. (I suppose the premise is that bank robbers are people too.)

By this point of the movie people were more interested in trying to break out of the theatre than seeing how Wonder-Kim broke into the bank. But while I saw one person scale a wall and escape through an air vent, the rest of us served our time.

Of course, she is eventually driven by the uncaring world back to a life of crime where she must work for the very man (Terence Stamp) who was the cause of her previous imprisonment, and who has incidentally kidnapped her son. It does all lead up to ten fascinating minutes of HOW TO BREAK exceptions, such as an appearance in Stephen Frears's debut The Hit, his recent work has entailed supporting parts in substandard Hollywood fare (you might remember him as the mentor from Young Guns or the bad guy without hair from Alien Nation). Here, he attempts to affect a Georgian accent, but succeeds only in accenting his own inabilities and the director's stupidity. Stamp has a savagely cold British stage voice which is muted and wasted by his attempt to be the evil twin to the sheriff from The Dukes of Hazard. Stamp recently wrote a novel, and by the looks of this film, diversification isn't a bad idea.

If the story had stuck to the robberies and the gadgets it might have been fine. And, begrudgingly, I'll admit that if it had stuck to the ex-con's hard luck story, with the help of a real actress, it might have evoked some emotion. However, the plot's inability to decide between these two, results in a movie that is slow, uninteresting and pitched to no particular audience. In short, a flop. If Kim intends to pay back the eight million she owes (due to her Boxing Helena debacle) with movies like this, it's going to take a while.

If for some reason you still want to make the hike out to Catarqui to see this, you'd better hurry, as it won't be there for long.

Kim Basinger ensures a captive audience for her new film. But who's that guy on the left?

INTO A BANK 101, but it doesn't save the film from being what William Shatner once called, "A colossal waste of time!"

As a young man, Stamp played intriguing roles in interesting films (the title characters in Billy Budd and The Collector) but with few plenty were more interested in trying to break out of the theatre than seeing how Wonder-Kim broke into the bank. But while I saw one person scale a wall and escape through an air vent, the rest of us served our time.

Of course, she is eventually

Performing Arts Season Opens

The Queen's Journal Staff

The Queen's Performing Arts Office has scheduled a season of splendid classical and jazz performances, with a variety guaranteed to please the most discriminating music lover.

The concerts are divided into two strands: the Grant Hall Series, with evening performances, and Music for a Sunday Afternoon, also in Grant, at 2:30 p.m.

The inaugural concert next Tuesday features the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama Chamber Orchestra performing works by Tchaikovsky, Britten and Mozart. The Sunday series begins on October 10, with a performance by Montreal baroque instrumentalists L'ensemble Arion.

Acclaimed Canadian pianist Louis Lortie returns to Queen's on Thursday, October 28 in a special free performance to commemorate the centennial of the Queen's Quarters.

Upcoming performers will include the Colorado String Quartet, violin prodigy Corey Cerovsek and Nexus, one of the world's foremost percussion ensembles.

Student prices are available for all shows. Drop by the Performing Arts Office in the Upper Ceildh of the John Deutsch University Centre for more details.

What can you get at JJ's for under $5.00 you ask?

EVERYTHING!

(Pontine, Salads, Stk & Chk Sandwiches, Draft, Cappuccino)

WARNING: EATING AT JJ'S CAN BE HABIT FORMING!

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

394 Princess Street (at Division) 546-FILM

COOL LOONIE

Under New Management!

Corner of Frontenac and Princess
Look for our Loonie Specials:
Ice cream cone $1.00
Baked goods and coffee $1.00
Hot dog and soft drink $1.50

Kingston's only repertory-style Cinema features:
Great films at Great prices!
Much more than just popcorn at our concession!
Movie posters and Cinema T-shirts!
A better attitude!

OPEN HOUSE: On Saturday, September 18th, from noon until 4 p.m., the Cinema will be serving up popcorn and pop, and running reels of trailers, all for free. Come check us out!

CAREERS DAY '93.

JOCK HARTY ARENA

TUES. SEPT. 21 10:00 - 4:00

A Noseworthy New Release

Inbreds/Shermans
 Proboscis Funkstone Records
 BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

Billed as Kingston's smallest band, the Inbreds really sell themselves short — they may also be Kingston's best band. Formed in early 1992, they have quickly built up a cult following in Kingston and have already played in Toronto to favourable reviews.

Formed in February of 1993, The Sherms by comparison are a younger band. Nonetheless, they, too, are making their mark in Kingston having already played numerous shows all over Kingston, including Alfie's.

An integral part of the local PF Records label, the Inbreds and The Sherms have issued their latest single eponymously.

The Inbreds side contains the songs "Tell the Truth" and "He Never", while The Sherms contribute "Spot on the Shark" and "Crusading."

Not to play favourites, but I will begin with the Inbreds. The band is comprised of Dave Ulrich on drums and Mike O'Neill on bass, with both members doing vocal duties. Those unfamiliar with the Inbreds may be sceptical about the sonic possibilities of such a limited line up, but the amazing variety of sounds the Inbreds can produce is only one of the many ways in which they will surprise.

The first Inbreds song is "Tell the Truth", which starts off with a hypnotic vocal sung over an equally circular and compelling bass riff. The sound is uncharacteristically clean compared to the Inbreds live show with little distortion on the bass.

"Tell the Truth" has some clever couplets and opens with the

Why must you lie everytime Your answer rarely satisfies. The song seems to deal with a betrayal within a relationship, but the lyrics are sufficiently vague enough to have a universal application.

The second Inbreds song is "He Never" and broadens the sonic scope of the single as Mike O'Neill's bass sounds more like a guitar in the opening. Like "Tell the Truth", "He Never" also relies on monotone vocals and you have a recipe for cliché. All this without even mentioning the lyrics. With the opening lines White looking Jesus in the dark/Crusading through the middle of the park/Cutting through the surf like a shark/Spot on the shark It sets one to wondering where The Sherms buy their rhyme schemes.

"Crusading" starts off sounding like very early Cult with a less on a hooky repetitive bass line.

What really separates this single from the Inbreds show are the rich harmonies. Dave Ulrich provides a strong harmony base for Mike O'Neill to build upon. Unfortunately at this point the Inbreds haven't managed to translate their harmonies to their live show.

And now with just a quick flip on the turntable — we have The Sherms. "Spot on the Shark" opens the side with a good guitar riff which quickly mutates into a chugging metal groove. Add spit-melodic vocal line. Later in the song one is reminded of a certain early period of The Cure.

The Sherms' problem is that they are not heavy enough to be considered heavy metal, while they are not melodic enough to be considered pop. The band's strength lies in their guitar riffs and progressions which are above average; however, more tempo changes and attention to melody would greatly improve The Sherms' music.

Pulling Tunes From Their Heads

The Stonecutters
 Amazing Discoveries
 Proboscis Funkstone Records
 BY IAN MORAY
The Queen's Journal

Morrissey once said that the beauty of pop music was that it could contain volcanic emotion in two minutes and thirty seconds. This is the entire basis of the Stonecutters' sound. Once a loose folk-rock outfit, it was producer Ian Blurton (of Change of Heart fame), who turned them into a hard-rocking foursome that specializes in melody and heart-tugging vocal harmonies. The end product of this work is Amazing Discoveries, the band's first full-length album.

The Cutters are most effective singing about human emotion in and outside of relationships. This is evident in tracks like "Mothlight" and "I Can Change." The lyrics to these songs are pretty standard — Never been this way/torn apart/let's get together again (from "I Can Change"). But there are songs which are much more bizarre in content elsewhere: Pulling weeds from my head, as I roll off your bed (from "Speak to me").

The highlight of the album is the title track. Blurton laces the song with disturbing sound effects. Guitarist/vocalist Chris Grismer ends the song with the lament, Don't let it go, sounding as if his innocence just fell apart around his ears. This is a band which knows how to reach your heartstrings and pull.

Blurton and engineer Grant Ethier (from 13 Engines) do a lot of experiments with sound. They stuff the mix with reverb on "Follow Your Bliss", but dry up the sound for "Limelight" and "I Can Change." Both methods are effective and necessary for the variety of songs the Cutters write.

If Amazing Discoveries is any indication of what is to come, Kingston may well have another national success to brag about. The cassette is available at selected downtown record stores for $8.00.

Precocious Hermits Come Out of Their Cave

Thrush Hermit
 John Boomer
 Cinnamon Toast Records
 BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

Anyone who caught Thrush Hermit's set at last Saturday's Frosh Week concert understands at least one thing about the group — they are young (young is not even the word, prepubescent is perhaps more accurate). With an average age of 17, these boys have barely kicked off their training wheels. But enough cheap shots; although the band can't drink the case of beer they have in their contract rider ("Beer? That's my dad's drink!"), they have more than enough musical maturity. As they hail from Halifax, it might be thought that the band is riding on the coat-tails of their current tour-mates Sloan. Not so. Thrush Hermit one-upped Sloan last Saturday with an explosion of youthful energy and musical prowess and now announce themselves as a real musical presence with their newly released EP John Boomer.

This first EP captures the raw power of their live set, sacrificing none of the passion and bringing the benefit of production values better than the acoustics at Bartlett Gym. Filled with grinding guitar hooks, muted, distorted vocals and thoughtful lyrics, the six song cassette not only shows the band's potential, but is a respectable effort in itself.

The EP features strong vocal hooks throughout. Standout tracks in this department include the lead track "Marya" and "Rosebody." "Marya" utilizes some excellent minor chord guitar work, while "Rosebody" incorporates some sparse understated guitar around an ethereal and aching vocal style.

The song structure of Thrush Hermit showcases an understanding of basic songwriting that they vary from the standard three chord progressions of most basement bands. The band includes bridge in almost all of their songs, not a rarity, but it demonstrates certain amount of technical ability.

The influences that shine through on this EP are primarily those which are evident in the live show: Sonic Youth, et al. But sounds evocative of bands such as Ned's Atomic Dustbin are heard through certain lead guitar lines.

Also, currently in release is a 7-inch single, with the songs "Pink is the Colour", "Cookie" and "Rosebody." The best of these, and in fact the best of anything Thrush Hermit has released, is "Pink is the Colour."

With the quintessential "drinking" beat, this song would be great to hit the open road with the stereo blaring. Rife with gritty filtered vocals sounding as if they were sung over the phone line, the song points the way for bigger and better things for Thrush Hermit. And, no doubt inspired by Sloan's signing to Cinnamon Toast Records, Thrush Hermit may not be far behind their elders.

The Windmills Cafe
 BY LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The winds of change have been blowing at Windmills Cafe. No, not that dreadful Scorpions' power ballad, just a new look in a new location. Formerly occupying the site was the National System of Baking, and happily, not a trace of it remains in either the decor or the culinary offerings.

Windmills ambitiously serves breakfast, lunch, and dinner, and by staying open until midnight, seeks to gain a share of the post-Princess Court dessert crowd.

For those who find the early morning fry-up at Morrison's unappealing, breakfast at Windmills may be a welcome alternative. For the not-so-hungry, an assortment of muffins is baked fresh daily, but the best breakfast items are designed for those who come with an appetite. The house specialty is Dutch pancakes, but four other pancakes grace the menu: the classics blueberry and plain, and two healthy-sounding variations, banana and oatmeal. The variety of fillings available in the custom-made omelettes will appeal to both vegetarians and meat-eaters. Traditionalists will approve of the two eggs any style, meat, and toast platter.

What's for lunch? Sandwiches dominate the menu, and are served on thick slices of hearty bread with tortilla chips on the side. At $2.50, the egg salad sandwich is a tasty bargain, especially if you opt for toppings such as lettuce, onions, sprouts, and tomatoes. The hummus plate, however, fulfils a greater number of those pesky Canada Food Guide recommendations, as it features raw vegetables, fresh fruit, bread and crackers arranged around a dish of smooth chick pea, tahini, and garlic spread. The hummus lunch is filling without being heavy and the varied platter is pleasing both aesthetically and gastronomically.

Not Run of the Mill

Notable amongst the hot lunch items are vegetarian versions of old favourites — veggie lasagna and chili, quiche of the day, and a vegetable burger.

Although the dinner menu was rumoured to be expanding, it remains the same as the lunch offerings.

Windmills will surely satisfy a late-evening craving for coffee and dessert. Chocolate is the dominant flavour, and aficonados will bypass the brownies, chocolate amaretto cheesecake, and chocolate raspberry pie and head straight for the rich, dark chocolate suicide cake. This cake is not complicated for those who laugh in the face of the fifth deadly sin. The seven layer cheesecake is admirably excessive, but the presence of a peculiarly unidentifiable flavour amongst the layers calls for the adage "less is more" to be invoked. Those who are daunted by the "wall of chocolate" school of desserts may favour the less intimidating pecan pie. The crust is bland and dry, but the filling is loaded with pecans and manages to avoid the cloying sweetness that characterizes many a pecan pie.

The desserts are home-made and they look home-made. A little too much so. The ragged edges on the cheesecakes make them look like they put up a fight when they were removed from the pans. This is a small detail, but attention to presentation improves the appeal of any food.

Service poses a problem: the combination of counter and table service is awkward and inefficient, particularly during busy periods.

Windmills scores highly for atmosphere, with the exception of the ill-advised decision to place the smoking area closest to the food prep area. The new interior is spacious and hip, hip, hip. High ceilings with exposed pipes, brick walls, bright paint, and groovy light fixtures make the cafe supra-cal. This has attracted a new type of clientele: Windmills' previous incarnation at Princess and Division drew a cross-section of customers, and while vestiges of this remain, now many of the patrons are younger, trendier, louder, and travel in packs. However, for those who prefer to dine without a posse, the cafe provides a stack of daily newspapers for customers to read while eating or drinking that first cup of java.

The varied and appealing breakfast and lunch menus make Windmills a welcome break from the mediocre and heavy fare found at many of the restaurants nearby. If the cafe is able to fine tune its service and dessert presentation, that bastion of coolness, The Chinese Laundry Cafe, should be prepared for some stiff competition.

Windmills Cafe is located at 184 Princess Street.

Seattle Slop Flows Like Molasses

Even Flow
 Stages
 BY MOLLY FINLAY
The Queen's Journal

[Ed's intro.] Altyes, the tribute band. The Blushing Brides, Toys in the Attic, Mama Kin, Rag Doll, Forever Young, The White — these "classic" cover bands have long been a staple on the bar circuit, offering a bundle of hits from as many as twenty-five years of an act's career, and, in some cases, giving the die-hard fan the opportunity to "see" long-gone heroes. But there is a new generation of rather more bogus acts, offering "tributes" to bands with as little as one-album to their name. What are we to make of Road Apples or Rums 'n Your Hoses? The life of the tribute band can be hard. Consider the Journey tribute band Escape. When Journey, your favourite party time songs (and Journey too!). Now they've re-surfaced as Foreign Journey to Boston — the ultimate bad late 70s rock tribute. But in fairness, what are or- chestras if not the world's largest tribute bands?

Spending a Tuesday night listening to cheesy music is not an event for which I had spent many noons longing. But when I considered that Even Flow is evidently a cover band of solely Seattle sound songs, I felt slightly more optimistic.

"Even Flow" is one of Pearl Jam's more famous songs, and this namesake is perhaps an indication of the cover band's total dedication to keeping the spirit of Pearl Jam alive and well in Eastern Ontario. There are five members in this troupe, all hailing from the greater Belleville region. These young men are quite the assorted collection of characters — ranging in age from seventeen to twenty-four.

I had the fabulous treat of speaking to Jeff Vandertogt, Kris Tischbein, Jake Bergeron, Sean Wells, and DESI (yes, in case you're wondering, DESI goes only by his first name — similar to Moses, Cher, Madonna, or Prince, but wait, he's just that squiggle now, isn't he). Even Flow have been together for two months, thanks to the lead singer Vandertogt, who models himself after Eddie Vedder. He felt that the band would be a fun way to raise extra funding for an original group in the future. All of the members of Even Flow admire Pearl Jam's energy and lyrics, claiming that the Seattle band "created a musical stir" which made listeners re-evaluate the quality of previous hard rock. And, although Pearl Jam may have helped influence the spread of a grunge lifestyle, the band would not use the word to label their genre.

On the other hand, Even Flow realize the lead o'lucere to be had in ripping off Pearl Jam, Alice in Chains, and Soundgarden, ignoring the lack of originality in the endeavour. Playing in Kingston, Sarnia, Windsor, and London, Even Flow has experienced a variety of audiences, but as long as they're pleasing somebody, they're happy.

The crowd at Stages on Tuesday night certainly was spartan, but there were a few diehard slamdancers and a couple of other basic bar-goers. Nevertheless, at one point Jeff Vandertogt attempted a stage dive, which could have led to a crippling spinal injury due to the lack of support beneath him. Perhaps Vandertogt should put a hold on the stage stunts until at least sixty people flow through those club doors.

Between performing spastic hand gestures and climbing on various pieces of stage equipment, Vandertogt sang several family favourites — including "Crazy Mary", "State of Love and Trust", "Alive", and (quelle surprise) "Even Flow." I must say, however, they performed with quite a likeness to the demi-gods Pearl Jam themselves. The sound quality was a little muffled and the lyrics were not as clear as on the recording (but I admit that I haven't heard Pearl Jam live in such an intimate venue, so I'm guessing...). Still, I think that I would rather listen to Pearl Jam in the comfort of my own room, where I can be personally responsible for my own dives off various pieces of furniture, instead of listening to a lip sync style performance. Until Evenflow creates some original music, they could be less than alive and going nowhere.

FRENCH ORAL COMMUNICATION COURSES

(non-credit courses)

Starting September 27, 1993

at

LE CENTRE FRANÇAIS de QUEEN'S
 96 Albert, 545-2534

FORMAT: 10 people per group, 11 weeks, 2 hours per week
 REGISTRATION: Before September 23 at Le Centre Français
 FEES: Payable at the registration, $100 (Tax deductible).
 Sorry, no reimbursement after September 23.
 SCHEDULE: Elementary 1: Thursdays 5:30 to 7:30
 Elementary 2 & Intermediate 1: Tuesdays 5:30 to 7:30
 Intermediate 2 & 3: Wednesdays 5:30 to 7:30
 Advanced: Mandays 7:30 to 9:30

The Queen's Journal Photo Service

Seen any photos you like? Buy them from The Journal.

Call 545-2800

The Windmill's Tradition Continues with all day breakfast, lunch and dinner. Now come and relax with us 'til midnight. Open at 7am for breakfast.

WINDMILLS CAFE
 LOCATION @

Get off to a fast start, with breakfast at Windmills Cafe.

Why don't you try ours:

- Dutch Pancakes
- Fresh fruit salad
- Best traditional fare
- or, Design your own omelette

Open from 7am 'til 12am.

WINDMILLS CAFE

184 PRINCESS ST., 544-3948

Hiatt? Try it

continued from p. 20
tempo resembling vintage Neil Young and Crazy Horse, the chorus laments: It breaks my heart to see those stars/smashing those perfectly good guitars. The irony is cute; the song was inspired by the music Hiatt's son was listening to, which itself originally drew heavily from people like Hiatt and Young.

Once again Hiatt demonstrates that he is the only man in the music business who understands the clear distinction between ballads and love songs. Numbers like "Permanent Hurt" and "When You Hold Me Tight" hide their sorrow and just behind windows-down-on-the-highway rhythms. When Hiatt does slow down, in "Blue Telescope", he uses percussion and a dusting of strings and organ to perfectly frame the lilted lyrics: Blue breath on my windshield I came to a frozen place/She shivered when I said goodbye/I wish I didn't have to faceliner in that rear-view mirror.

Hiatt also wanders into new ground with "The Wreck Of Barbic Ferrari", a song as interesting as its name. Upbeat roadhouse rhythms and an intentionally unbalanced yet catchy chorus tell the happy, bouncy story of a man blowing his brains out with a shotgun while his family is at church. Go figure.

Colour me blasphemous, but it's about time the ghetto rang with the music of someone other than the Tragically Hip or R.E.M. Why not make it John Hiatt? Those of you not clever enough to catch his lyrical analogies will still have a fine rock n' roll guitar album. Frankly, if you're going to wake me up with your stereos at three a.m., at least you could play something worth listening to.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442

Sleepless in Seattle	7:25
In the Line of Fire	9:25
Jurassic Park	7:05 9:35
Needful Things	7:10 9:40
Rookie of the Year	2:15
Hard Target	7:20 9:20
Calendar Girl	7:15 9:45

CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395

The Secret Garden	7:00
Son of the Pink Panther	9:25
True Romance	6:50 9:35
Robin Hood: Men in Tights	7:10
The Fugitive	6:55 9:30
Man Without a Face	6:45 9:15
The Firm	6:30 9:20
Undercover Blues	7:15 9:15

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-FILM

Rock Hudson's Home Movies	7:00
Like Water For Chocolate	9:30
Saturday
Rock Hudson's Home Movies	7:00
Like Water For Chocolate	9:00
Sunday
Like Water For Chocolate	7:00
Rock Hudson's Home Movies	9:20

CLUBS

AJ's HANGAR

Friday	Rood Apples (Best of the Hip)
Saturday	Tom Borlow Band
Sunday	Wild Blues Yonder

THE TOUCAN

Friday	The In City Dreams
Saturday	The In City Dreams
Sunday	The Bottom Dwellers

BEN'S PUB

Friday	John Jude (vocalist/guitar)
--------	-----------------------------

THE WELLINGTON

Friday	Michael Kelly (Celtic Folk)
Saturday	Andrew MacDonold (East Coast Folk)
Sunday	The Kingston Folk Club (Feature Night)

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE

12 Sept. to 21 Nov.
The Art of Christiane Plug (1936-1972)
19 Sept. to 31 Oct.
Spirit Archives: an installation by Julie Winthrow

QUEEN'S WEST CAMPUS (McArthur Hall Theatre Aud.)

7:30 Saturday
The Allies with The Kingston Bond

THE GRAND THEATRE

Saturday 10 Am to 4 PM
6th Annual "Have an Affair With the Arts" (artists' displays, exhibitions, childrens' activities, live guest performances)

Book Portraits Early and Save Money!

Book sittings by Oct. 15th and SAVE!

reg. $24.95 NOW $19.95

Order package by Oct. 30th and SAVE!

Classic Package B - 2x8" x 10", 4x5" x 7" prints

reg. $125.75 NOW $99.95

Quality & Service for 18 years as an official Tri Colour photographer
330 Princess St. 549-6560

546-2912
Candy · Stationary · Drugs
Photofinishing · Film · Grocery
Sundries · Cigarettes · Pop
Lottery Tickets · Ice Cream

Open Mon. - Fri. 8:15 - 9:00
Saturday 10:30 - 5:30
Sunday 11:00 - 4:00

Radio Daze

CFRC 101.9/Cable 90.9 YOUR campus-community alternative in Kingston.

Program Guides are available FREE of charge on campus at the station in the basement of Carruthers Hall and the Infobank in the JDUC.

- Special events this coming week include:
- The start of the new fall schedule on September 20th
- CFRC Call-in 545-2121: New call in show - have your say! Mon - Thurs. 10-11.
- Tue - Orientation Week
- Wed - King Apparatus Live From Allie's
- Thu - Weekly Trivia Prizes
- CFRC-FM at Club's Night, Jack Hardy Arena 7pm
- 100% new releases NIGHTLY on NEW NOYZ 11pm-12 midnight
- The new PEEL SESSIONS on ASCENSIONS Fri 9-11pm

The station is seeking correspondents for a forthcoming magazine show. Apply now at the station, no experience necessary.

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

WORDPROCESSING: $1.75 per page. Pick up and delivery. Essays, thesis, anything. Usually 24 hour service. Call Jennifer at 634-1151.

SELF DEFENCE AWARENESS COURSE at Holiday Inn Kingston beginning Sept. 30th. 7-8:30 p.m. 8 weeks long. Phone 549-8400 ext 625 to register or for more information.

THE WHO'S WHERE/WHAT'S NEXT would like to apologize for the misprint in the 1993 - 94 What's Next. The correct hours for the Quiet Pub and Student Health Services are as follows: QUIET PUB Mon - Wed 12:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m., 8:30 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Thursday and Friday 12:00 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Saturday 8:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. STUDENT HEALTH Services: Monday - Friday 9:00 - 4:30, Wednesday 10:00 - 4:30.

TOMORROW! Queen's Alumni Garage sale. Saturday, September 18th, Bews Gym, Queen's Phys. Ed. Centre. Students only 10-11 a.m. (bring I.D.). After 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. everyone welcome!

ARTSCL '96 Show your '96 spirit and get pledges for Sunday's Terry Fox Run. Pledge books in library, bookstore. Bring them to '96 table at Jock Hartly on Sunday at 1 p.m.

COME CELEBRATE - New women at Queen's are welcomed at our 104th Candlelighting ceremony at Grant Hall on Sunday, September 26th, 1993 at 4:30. Come on out for something special!

THE REAL TIBETS: Slide show and talk presented by Crossroads and Canada Tibet committee, September 23rd, 7:30 p.m. at the Kingston Global Community Centre, 461 Princess, lower level - Everyone welcome!

IT'S SPECIAL - Candlelighting '93. Women welcoming women, new to Queen's. It's our 104th and we'd love to see you there, Grant Hall, Sunday September 26th at 4:30 p.m.!

SOAPBERRY SHOP'S Bath and shower gels are coconut oil based and come in a wide variety of fragrances; citrus, fresh fruits, florals, and a woody sandalwood for men. They'll leave skin soft and lightly scented. 545-1028 122 Princess St.

JOB OPENING AT THE AMS Assistant manager needed for Vids in the Hall. Applications can be picked up and dropped off at the AMS office. Due Friday September 24th at 12 noon.

HEY WOMEN! If you are new to Queen's, then Candlelighting is for you! Come on out to Grant Hall, Sunday, September 26th at 4:30. It's just for you!!

DON'T LET THE YEAR go by without doing some art. LIVART STUDIOS is situated close to campus and are accepting registration for life model classes, painting and more. Call 546-6842.

ARE YOU A WICCAN? Willing to share in Fellowship, spiritual growth and study? Contact The Stone Circle, c/o Chaplaincy Dept., Box 22, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V7 Attention: Aspen.

JOB OPENING AT THE AMS Assistant manager needed for Vids in the Hall. Applications can be picked up and dropped off at the AMS office. Due Friday September 24th at 12 noon!

QUEEN'S SCHOOL OF ENGLISH needs tutors to help students who are learning English. Two hours a week. Call 545-2472 or visit the school at 11 St. Lawrence Ave.

OCCASIONAL BABYSITTER wanted evenings. Must have own means of transportation. Ten minute drive from Queen's. Call 389-8122 or 541-6095.

YOUNG DISABLED female needs assistance in home. 10 - 15 hours per week. Occasional weekend, evenings required. Job can be shared. Pay depending on experience. Please call 545-9144. Leave a message.

ENJOY LISTENING? Telephone Aid Line Kingston is looking for volunteers for our fall training session. Look for us at clubs night or leave a message at 531-8529 for more information.

FOR SALE: Big couch, big lay-z-boy chair, stereo and stand in great condition and must sell. Prices are negotiable. Stereo is very loud, CD compatible. Please call Ted at 531-3549.

FOR SALE: 1986 VOLKSWAGEN CABRIOLET Black on black, 5 speed, new clutch, exhaust, and CV joints. One owner, 94000km, mint condition, certified - $6900. CALL JONATHAN - 547-9876

FOR SALE: Canon BJ5 Bubble Jet printer plus auto-feed unit. One year old. Hardly used. Feed unit still shrink-wrapped. Portable. Excellent quality. Cost $600. Sell $195. Microsoft "Word for Windows" IBM word processing program. Unused. Still shrink-wrapped. Cost $500. Sell $95. Microsoft Windows Operating System Version 3.1. Unused. Cost $125. Sell $25. Call 384-8125.

FOR SALE: Buy in bulk and save! Keep your food in this 20 cu. ft. Moffatt chest freezer. $250. Call 384-7749.

FOR SALE: One '96 Artsci jacket, size 46, like new. NB. froshies: it's cheaper than a new one - just change the crest! Call Chris at 531-5447. Now! (great deal!!!)

FOR SALE: Classic black tails - tux with pants, bow-tie, and cummerbund. Formal Attire in great shape. $250. Call 544-4311.

FOR SALE: Crombie (Made in Scotland), cashmere and wool, long black overcoat. A classic coat in excellent shape. $120. Call 544-4311.

FOR SALE: Buy my furniture: 1 double futon; 1 Ikea type bureau. Great shape. Best offer. Call 545-3324.

MOVING SALE: September 17th (1 - 6), September 18th (9 - 2), 251 Barrie Street.

FOR SALE: 1986 blue Ford Tempo, only 70,000 km, excellent condition, $3700 (negotiable). Call 531-9365.

PARKING AVAILABLE: minutes from campus and University/Union Street corner. Please call Catherine at 548-1768, calls welcome to 11 p.m. Please keep trying FURNITURE FOR SALE/FOR RENT: good chests of drawers, nightstands, desks, desk chairs, book-cases, reading chairs, tables, chairs. Matched sets or single items available. Reasonable rates. Call 546-4534 (messages please).

INEXPENSIVE DATA ACQUISITION boards designed and manufactured by Canadians from $139. Call London Research and Development at (519) 438-1933 for details.

Lonely?
Desperate?
Desirous?
Submit a personal today!

TO THE LONELIEST: There exists within certain living souls a quality of loneliness unspeakable so great that it must be shared as company is shared by other creatures.

SUCH LONELINESS is mine. So know by this, that in all of existence, there is one lonelier than you. The loneliest.

SNOOGLE: Happy now? You're not cute, you're roughly, devastatingly handsome and I respect you more than anything. Love from Twit Twoodle.

PHILTHY: PHIPPER: PHILERAMA: PHILMEISTER: SOFT-SPOT PHIL: I thought I should put down all of your names so you would know I meant you... seeing as you've been waiting for a personal for over three years now. If you worked on your intro skills you might have more friends and maybe you wouldn't have had to wait so long!!! Don't forget our deal. I am SERIOUSLY in love with you. XXXXXXXXXX. Your secret admirer.

TO OUR DIFFERENTLY BRAINED COLIN: If you think you're going to pass all of your courses this year...you're sadly mistaken. Just don't do what Dave did. Keep smiling! XO Sarah and Adrienne TOMMY: Take me sailing.

TO THE MONKEY HOUSE: Looking forward to partying with you tonight - as long as we don't forget the downstairs rule! Keep me sane! I'm looking forward to seeing that black panther again!

POLLY: Happy B-day! Ryan.

ANNIE-BEAR: My love for you is longer than the extended dance mix. Joey.

DO YOU LIKE Intellectual well-bred gentlemen who wear those dashing tweed blazers with the suede patches on the elbows? Perhaps "Ian" is the man for you! Please submit a postcard with poem in jambic pentameter to this paper.

CHRIS: Have you found it yet??

Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Summer Showcase

The Fairy Who Didn't Want To Be A Fairy Anymore
A FILM BY LAURIE LYND
STARRING HOLLY COLE

The Fairy Who Didn't Want to Be A Fairy Any More, Warm and Rock Hudson's Home Movies

Fri Sept 17 & Sat Sept 18 @ 7pm
Sun Sept 19 & Mon Sept 20 @ 9:15pm

A DIFFERENT KIND OF PILLOW TALK...
"ORIGINAL" - Chicago Tribune
"BRILLIANT" - Village Voice
"FUNNY" - NY Times

Rock Hudson's HOME MOVIES
A FILM BY MARK RAPPAPORT
A LUNA FILMS RELEASE

This weekend at Clark

An evildrome of subs, suds and subwoofers every Friday at noon

Tonight: DJ Lisa and the alternative adventure

PSYCHO PSATURDAY with DJ Archie piloting the mosh pit

clark hall pub

The Original Student Pub

Located above the Campus Bookstore - phone 545-6195
Open Mon - Fri 8pm - 1am and Fri Ritual 12noon - 6pm

BORED? LONELY? ENERGETIC?

Do you want to get involved?
Find out more about the ...

- African & Caribbean Association
- Animal Rights Association
- Debating Union
- Baha'i Studies
- Scuba Club
- Queen's Musical Theater
- Hillel
- Mature Students' Association
- Political Organizations
- Juggling Club

- South East Asian Club
- Camera Club
- Star Trek Club
- Entrepreneur Society
- Queen's Marketing
- Chinese Christian Fellowship
- Ski Club
- Lacrosse
- Queen's Players
- Tae Kwan Do

- Pistol Club
- Red Cross
- International Affairs Association
- Environmental Groups
- T.A.L.K.
- Ukrainian Club

and many more organisations at ...

CLUBS NIGHT 93

Tuesday, September 21
Jock Hardy Arena
7-10 pm

CompuShoppe

Computer Systems

486 66DX2	128K	$1738
486 50DX	128K	$1658
486 50DX2	128K	$1589
486 33DX	128K	$1458
486 33DXC	64K	$1244
486 33SX	128K	$1269
386 40DX	64K	$1125
386 40SX		$ 927

Monitors

MAGNUM
17" Non-Int $599

TTX
41 mono VGA/135 15" 3FGF $ 831
35dp SVGA 3284 15" 4FGF $ 986
28dp SVGA 3294 17" 5FGF $1778
28dp SVGA NI355 21" 6FGF $3346

Video

Edge 256K $ 42
Charger 512K $ 65
VGA 16.2M $1549
Lite 1M $326
Lite Plus 3M $294
Lite Pro 2M $460
Ultra Pro V 2M $465

Coprocessors

Cyrix
20MHz 288 SX $ 96
33MHz 386 SX $ 95
40MHz 386 DX $111

Software

Dos & Upgrade $ 59
Windows 3.1 $110
plus many more titles that can be custom ordered!

Books

"Dummies Series" $21.98
"Quick Reference" $25.98
plus 40 more titles starting at just $ 9.98

Miscellaneous

1.2M Floppy $ 62
1.44M Floppy $ 61
1.2 Disk (10) $ 5
Disk Form $ 10
AT Battery $ 16

Printers

OKidata
OK400 $699

EPSON
NX 2420 R $ 349
NX 1020 R $ 219

Keyboards

Lite-on French $ 44
Keytronics $ 51
Honeywell $ 52
Maxswitch $ 53
Focus 6000 $ 76

Mouse

Logitech
Serial Trackball $ 40
Mouse $ 29
Microsoft Serial $115
Logitech Trackball $125
Serial Trackball $130

Modem/Fax

Zenith
4800/2400 $ 36
9600/2400 SPTS $1
14400 SPT $225

Scanners

SWANSON
Model 32 $141
Model 258 $251
Colour $597

Hand Drives

50M IDE 28ms $175
120M IDE 16ms $217
130M IDE 16ms $231
170M IDE 17ms $297
210M IDE 14ms $268
250M IDE 16ms $214
340M IDE 16ms $414
64M SCSI 24ms $265
24M SCSI 12ms $421

CD ROM

Annual CD ROM
Basis with 4 CD's
MS Works
MS Bookshelf
Range Quest V
Member Goose Mat

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

Printers

OKidata
OK400 $699

EPSON
NX 2420 R $ 349
NX 1020 R $ 219

Keyboards

Lite-on French $ 44
Keytronics $ 51
Honeywell $ 52
Maxswitch $ 53
Focus 6000 $ 76

Mouse

Logitech
Serial Trackball $ 40
Mouse $ 29
Microsoft Serial $115
Logitech Trackball $125
Serial Trackball $130

Modem/Fax

Zenith
4800/2400 $ 36
9600/2400 SPTS $1
14400 SPT $225

Scanners

SWANSON
Model 32 $141
Model 258 $251
Colour $597

Hand Drives

50M IDE 28ms $175
120M IDE 16ms $217
130M IDE 16ms $231
170M IDE 17ms $297
210M IDE 14ms $268
250M IDE 16ms $214
340M IDE 16ms $414
64M SCSI 24ms $265
24M SCSI 12ms $421

CD ROM

Annual CD ROM
Basis with 4 CD's
MS Works
MS Bookshelf
Range Quest V
Member Goose Mat

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

CD ROM

350ms 700ms
$330 $279

Once relegated to low-budget heavy metal videos, the SM (Sodism-Masochism) lifestyle has found its way to the quiet city of chokly rock (guess). We paid a visit to Kingston's very own Red Chamber, a store whose sedate outward appearance belies the studded leather playpen within...

Behind the Red Door

Sex Type Things by Joey deVilla & Ian Petrie

Quit your giggling and gawking - The Red Chamber means business. Since its grand opening last Valentine's Day, the unique boutique has been catering to a steadily growing clientele. According to owner Ingrid Tiffe, the range of the store's hardware has expanded from the initial stock of SM paraphernalia to include all manner of sex accessories.

Like any good SM session, the store builds in levels. The first floor serves as an introduction to Tiffe's conception of the trinity of sex, religion and death. A popular item is the custom-made Indonesian shirt emblazoned with skeletons and skulls, a staple of any Goth wardrobe. Other fashions include an exquisite collection of sequined and leather bustiers, those oversized-beret-like-hat-things, hip-hop inspired toques, scarves and a large selection of alternative jewelry.

The Red Chamber also stocks a diverse selection of body oils, Betty Page-inspired postcards and trading cards (sorry, no gum), and hard-to-find - if somewhat expensive - reading materials, such as the clever-clever British publication Skin Two ($35), the presumably less clever German magazine O ($39), and the recently resurrected Toronto effort Boudoir Noir. As well, the store publishes its own 'zine, Redemption, a relative steal at only one dollar (the next issue comes out on Monday).

"You're probably saying 'Enough of the vanilla sex, Joey and Ian - I want to motor-boop!'" Thus, follow your SM Woodward and Bernstein past the chain that separates the first level from the second level, the pretenders from the contenders. Go up, up, way up to the infamous second floor...

If not for the dungeon gear (and even with it), this might simply be an artist's loft, or Mrs. Dalloway's (the feminist bookstore that previously occupied the space). A selection of charming cock-and-ball harnesses immediately caught our eye - a whimsical and inexpensive way to ease into the SM scene, and an accordingly popular item. Next up were a variety of studded leather masks and ball gags (a leather strap straddling a rubber ball which is placed in the mouth). Joey fell in love with his adorable Robin-style mask during our visit and has it on his birthday wish list.

Ian's preference, however, was for the extensive selection of paddles and riding crops, especially the one with the built-in clacker (for all you film buffs). Our introit duo remains unsure about the nipple clamps, which range in price from $19.50 to $36.95. "Hey - those aren't padded!", said we of one pair, with serrated edges. "Those are for the more serious types," noted Ingrid, though we had already figured that out.

The west wall is dominated (arf arf!) by slave harnesses, what we could only call a studded leather Speedo, the dreaded arm-binder, and "replicur" dungeon shackles made of either plastic (for weenies) or cast iron (for players).

Rounding out the goodies are a collection of vibrators and dildoes, ranging from "The Pinkie" to "The Mighty Redwood". Boy, did we feel inadequate! (Well, not that inadequate. We have our pride.)

Like any sex act, SM is something that requires mutual trust, communication and respect. It is often used as an exploration of power-role reversal, especially amongst straight couples, where the woman usually is dominant, and the man is submissive. Role-playing is often an important element and couples should take care to employ Brechtian alienation to keep the act from getting out of hand (i.e., a code word, such as "Hossenpfeffer" that implies "Stop, this has gone far enough").

Although Kingston is a town that last year found falafel vending controversial, Tiffe reported no organized protest against her store. While some of the curious find its premise offensive, even those who have breezed up expecting Mrs. Dalloway's have remarked on the tasteful arrangement.

Whatever one's proclivities, The Red Chamber is apparently fulfilling a need in the Kingston community. As Pierre Trudeau said, the state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. Free-thinkers of Kingston unite - you have nothing to gain but your chains!

sun, clouds and precipitate by Joey deVilla

Your leather weather boys predict the following...

Today: SM (as in Sunny and Mildly chilly, high 14, low 7)
Saturday: Overcast. High 13, low 5. Good weather for you and your dominant partner to snuggle in your cozy dungeon.
Sunday: The same!

The second-last page section you should always read first

MISC

MISC is whatever the other sections in this paper are not. MISC is style. MISC has the inside dirt. MISC is always within striking distance. MISC is Details meets Sassy meets Popular Mechanics. MISC is wet and biological. MISC is hard and cybernetic. MISC appears every Friday and is edited by a second-year technophile and a seventh-year slacker.

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

Everyone knows that wine is a cultured, refined sort of drink, consumed by gourmets and scribbled about in the world's finest newspapers. Caesar drank wine - so too did Elizabeth I. By the same token, common opinion would label beer as the pickup truck of beverages: a utilitarian workhorse, existing to serve a purpose, pleasant in its own right, but certainly not a liquid for connoisseurs.

This is where common opinion goes wrong. There is unexceptional beer just as there is unexceptional wine. But beer well-made can be magnificent; a nectar to thrill the palate and delight the soul. Fortunately for us all, Kingston is extraordinarily rich with superb beers.

This week: for those who already know the pleasure of a really fine beer, and for those interested in discovering more: Where To Get it.

The Beer Store. The Beer Store in Kingston is quite a fine one. It is located at 500 Princess St., at University (548-7493). Unfortunately the "Mix Six" fridge, whereby one could buy individual bottles of beer, met its end over the summer. It is now necessary to buy entire cases. This is not a problem if one knows what one is drinking, but some premium beer can be a bit of an acquired or personal taste, and is nice to sample a particular brew before shelling out for a case. Fortunately, the store at 290 Concession St. (546-9632) still has "Mix Six."

The stores have all the regular beers, of course, but they also have a fine selection of Ontario premium beers, by major and micro-breweries. Being domestic, the beers are mostly lagers and light ales. (For reference: Canadian is a lager; Export is an ale.) Sleeman's, Upper Canada, Algonquin, and Connor's all produce very fine beers that are well worth consideration. Especially recommended is Connor's Best Bitter, which for my money is the best beer brewed in Ontario today.

The Liquor Store. The Liquor Store always has a good selection of premium beers from around the world. At various times it is possible to get Chimay, Kronenberg, DAB, Pub Draught Guinness, Corona, Sapporo, Smithwick's, Bass, Castlemaine XXXX, Newcastle Brown Ale, Pilsner Urquell, Heineken, Grolsch...you get the picture. Most of these are good beers, and it is worth your while to try any of them. Stock changes on an almost weekly basis, however. There is no guarantee that your favourite brew will be in stock from one visit to the next, so it is best to visit or phone fairly often to see what is in stock. The liquor store is at 34 Barrack St., across from the downtown A&P.

Pubs. This is a rather sticky one to deal with because there are so many good pubs in Kingston. Most pubs are vaguely Irish or British in theme and thus serve Irish and British beers. Being British is not a guarantee of quality by any means, but most of the usual suspects are good beers. Guinness, Harp, Smithwick's, Bass, Rickard's Red and Fuller's are all good bets, although not all will appeal to every palate. Sometimes, it's best to try a half-pint first if you are unsure. Most of the pubs in Kingston will serve some or all of the beers listed above.

In the next Cervisophile - Beer: How to actually drink the stuff.
Next MISC: We put one foot in the RAVE! See ya Friday!

Test the limits. Think evil thoughts. Taste the rapture. Write for MISC.

YOUR WAY RIGHT AWAY

$1.00 OFF HOMESTYLE BREAKFAST

INCLUDES:
2 Eggs your way
Sausage or bacon
Toaster tenders
Homestyle Toast
Coffee or juice

Valid during Breakfast hours only. Not valid with any other coupons. Limit one per customer.

EXPIRES Oct. 3, 1993

Bore People To Death At Your High School Reunion.

(Or Get a Job in Advertising.)

Drop in to see Leo Burnett on Career Day, Tuesday September 21st at Jock Hartly Arena. Attend our Information Session, Friday October 1st from 5:30 p.m. - 7:30 p.m. Faculty Club, Queen's University.

LEO BURNETT

AJ'S HANGAR
RESTAURANT & BAR

AJ'S LIVE
Wed: Yuk Yuk's
Thurs-Fri: The Bourbon
Sat: Mahones

QUEEN'S Journal

McDonald's

DELIVERY
1-800-663-2233

Volume 121, Number 67

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Tuesday, September 21, 1993

Chretien speaks to full house

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

Liberal leader Jean Chretien brought his campaign bus to Queen's Friday, addressing an overflowing crowd of students at the School of Policy Studies.

The school's conference room was filled to twice its capacity of 100, and the speech was amplified to another hundred students who listened outside.

Promoting his party's policy booklet, Creating Opportunity, Chretien spoke of his policies for governing the country and attacked Prime Minister Kim Campbell.

Of his booklet, Chretien said it was "very risky to put it all on paper, at the beginning of a campaign." He criticized the Progressive Conservatives for failing to offer such a plan.

"Everybody will know where we made promises...you will have a checklist," he said.

Chretien focused on job creation as the Liberals' "priority number one." He vowed that the Liberals would do "everything that's possible to create jobs and opportunity," and drew a parallel between his platform and that of Wilfred Laurier at the turn of the century.

Describing his goal of creating "the best prepared people in the world," Chretien presented his plans for an infrastructure program, training, and research and development.

In defence of his plan to "kick start the economy" with government spending on infrastructure and job creation programs, Chretien said, "we're saving more money than we're spending...[and] in terms of taxation, it's neutral." The new jobs will foster optimism, he said, and "the economy will function well when the people are in a good frame of mind."

Chretien said that while he intends to confront the deficit problem, he does not want to attempt too much too quickly. If the deficit were fully taken care of in one year, Chretien said, unemployment

Please see CHRETIEN on page 5

Inside

- NEWS
- BLACK HISTORY . . . 4
- LITERARY LAPSES
- NORMAN LEVINE . 16
- ENTERTAINMENT
- ARRÖGANT WORMS 21

Jean Chretien sells his economic plan to students at the School of Policy Studies on Friday.

Marika Glickman

Carleton ducks Maclean's survey

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Carleton University has decided to duck out of participating in Maclean's Magazine's annual university rankings this year.

Despite a critical lead editorial entitled "Last Chance U. Wimps Out" which appeared in Friday's Ottawa Citizen, Carleton University President Robin Farquar maintained that the decision not to take part, actually made by administration in late August, was the right one for his institution.

The decision was "anything but wimpy, under the circumstances," said Farquar in an interview with The Journal on Friday. "Some people may feel it was a cop-out," he said, but "we made up our own minds, in the interests of our own university."

"I don't think [the survey] is a particularly useful or valid exercise to begin with," Farquar said.

Last year Maclean's ranked Carleton sixth in a category of 12 schools that offer a wide variety of degree programs. But in 1991, when all Canadian schools were ranked in one category, it placed 44th out of 46 schools.

Farquar said that the ratings haven't affected applications to Carleton: "[applications] have gone up steadily for the past two years."

"People don't use [the survey] to choose a university," said Farquar.

He called the move to bow out "a matter of staff limitations," saying that he couldn't afford to spare two full-time professionals for the two months required to prepare the numbers Maclean's needs for its analysis which will appear in the November issue of the magazine.

"There are better ways to be accountable," said Farquar, adding that the staff that would have been working on the Maclean's stats are now compiling "output-based" information to evaluate Carleton's performance.

Farquar said that employment success, graduate satisfaction, and "research impact - measured in results, not dollars," will be used by the university in an internal review, which will be made public. This process, he said, will be much more fair, as opposed to "this junk with magical calculations in Toronto."

Farquar said that Maclean's has "made some threats to include us [in the survey] anyway," and to deduct points from Carleton's score for not participating.

Maclean's Assistant Managing Editor Ann Dowsett Johnston said that the magazine "may rank Carleton anyway, with last year's information" adding that the "other universities deserve some sort of bonus for participating."

"The survey will go on," said Johnston.

"It's a real shame," she said. "I have trouble seeing Carleton as the only Ontario university who couldn't afford to participate."

Johnston said that Carleton's reasons for bowing out, outlined in a letter to the magazine from Farquar, included the strains on his staff from the social contract negotiations this summer.

But this excuse didn't wash with Johnston. "All of the Ontario universities faced the same crunches this year," she said.

Ultimately, said Johnston, "the student is being short-changed here."

Carleton University Student Union President Lucy Watson could not be reached for comment.

Caf workers unionize

Marriott a "shrewd, tough outfit"

BY RUSSELL VANCE
The Queen's Journal

Confrontation looms at Marriott Food Services, as part-time workers in campus cafeterias, recently organized into a union, begin to press management for a new contract this fall.

Negotiations have yet to begin, but Bruce Dodds, 42, the founder of a bargaining unit representing the interests of part-time cafeteria workers on campus, foresees a tough battle.

"Marriott didn't get to be where they are without being a shrewd, tough outfit," Dodds said.

Dodds was reluctant to rule out the possibility of strikes, and added, "we will work really hard to get that contract. We are well organized, and we are prepared to meet [Marriott Management] in any way we have to."

The unit, officially formed and certified by the Ontario Labour Relations Board this summer, represents 175 part-time workers in various cafeterias throughout Queen's. About one fourth are students.

Dodds said that the unit's primary concern is that part-timers are often paid $4 to $5 less per hour than full-time workers for the same work. "Equal pay for equal work is a basic premise of our contract campaign," he said.

When asked if he believed workers should be paid equally for equal work, Marriott Food Services Director Jim Fougere said that he had "no comment" on any matter pertaining to labour negotiations.

Marriott full-time workers are currently in the midst of contract negotiations.

Morale is reportedly low among Marriott staff. One student that has

Please see MARRIOTT on page B

Quote

"I could write a cheque to my friend and say it was a Kids-For-Kids expense, and no one would be the wiser."

—Heath Grant, ASUS vice-president, on financial accountability.

ANTI-HOMOPHOBIA AND ANTI-HETEROSEXISM CO-ORDINATOR

The Human Rights Office at Queen's University is hiring a Anti-Homophobia and Anti-Heterosexism Co-ordinator on a contract fee-for-service basis. This requires a half time commitment until April 30, 1994. The Co-ordinator reports to the Director of the Human Rights Office and the Anti-Homophobia and Anti-Heterosexism Council.

Anti-Homophobia and Anti-Heterosexism Co-ordinator will collaborate with the Human Rights Office in the development and implementation of proactive educational strategies which seek to raise awareness and sensitivity on campus with respect to homophobia and heterosexism; act as the official contact for receiving and investigating allegations of discrimination and harassment on the basis of sexual orientation; offer involved parties a confidential and impartial advisory service including referral to other agencies or services on and off campus, and interim counselling and mediation to facilitate resolution of cases where advisable; assist with the development of anti-homophobic and anti-heterosexist policies on campus; provide outreach on issues of homophobia and heterosexism to the community at large; develop and maintain a records management policy and a policy and procedures manual; submit an annual report to be included in the Human Rights Office's report.

Skills required: are experience with lesbian, gay and bisexual organizations and issues; familiarity a post-secondary environment, ideally within a university setting; completion of a university degree is preferred, but other combinations of work and educational experience may be considered equivalent; proven ability to work effectively within a diversified setting of people including students, staff and faculty; strong communication skills; experience in dealing with difficult situations and confrontations while having the ability to secure the trust and confidence of clients; ability to work independently and effective time management skills are essential; demonstrated skills in making public presentations, developing educational materials; proficiency in computer skills (preference is Word Perfect) a background in either counselling, conflict resolution or mediation would be helpful; working knowledge of relevant legislation in the area is desirable.

PLEASE FORWARD RESUMES TO:

Irene Bujara, Director
Human Rights Office
Old Medical Building
Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6

The deadline for submission for this position is October 1, 1993

STILL AVAILABLE! TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS

AT An Clachan
(Queen's University Housing Service)

2 Bedroom - $602 per month, utilities included
1-year lease required
Free parking available

For details please enquire at the Housing Office,
169 University Avenue
545-2501

ASUS ELECTIONS

OCTOBER 13TH AND 14TH

Available Positions:

1 YEAR ASUS REP TO AMS
1 YEAR SENATOR

ARTSCI 97 YEAR EXECUTIVE
PRESIDENT
VICE PRESIDENT
SECRETARY
PUBLICITY- 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
SOCIAL- 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
WIC
BEWS

NOMINATIONS OPEN MONDAY SEPT. 20TH
THROUGH THURSDAY SEPT. 27
CAMPAIGNING STARTS OCT. 5TH AT 12:00 A.M.
AND ENDS OCTOBER 12TH AT 8 P.M.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT STEPHANIE
LANE OR JASON MARKWELL AT 545-6278.

Want More?

*Of course you want more ... that's why you're here.
More education for more opportunities for more of the good things in life. But along the way, you're sure to encounter more stress, more crises, more questions.*

The Christian Reformed Campus Ministry called Geneva Fellowship can help you deal with all the "more" you'll experience this year at Queen's, and help you tie it all together into a meaningful whole. We focus on how to integrate the Christian faith with academic living, in Bible studies, group discussions, special lectures and a cross-denominational Sunday Evening Worship on campus.

We also help keep body and soul together with a drop-in student supper every Wednesday evening.

Please join us ... at Geneva House, 104 Queen's Crescent or call Campus Pastor Bill Van Groningen at 545-2962. We'll show you Christ's approach to living with "more".

New Look for Studio Q

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

Don't touch that dial - Studio Q is back and this year's program promises to be impressive.

Executive Producer Michael Wise has been working with Studio Q's team of directors to "completely revamp" the look and format of the student television show.

The key to the show's development is its increased editing capabilities, Wise said. Last season, Studio Q acquired an editing room on campus which allowed the crew to "edit up to the deadline" said Wise.

"There will be a night and day difference from last year's quality," Wise said.

Wise, who has been with Studio Q since 1990 and has worked as an editorial assistant with CBC's Prime Time News, is excited about the new look of Studio Q.

Before they had the editing suite, Studio Q edited at Cablenet on Tuesdays which meant there were "two dead days" before Thursday's air time. "Queen's could have burned down on Wednesday and we wouldn't have been able to get it on the Thursday show," Wise joked.

This summer Studio Q purchased a video "toaster," a computer which is capable of adding computer graphics, character generation and digital video effects to the show's video format.

"This will give us MuchMusic type effects ... [and] allow us to package the show in a more professional way," explained Wise.

Wise said that the toaster gives Studio Q technological capabilities that "far surpass Cablenet" and will allow the show to evolve.

Studio Q has added a new logo and theme song (composed by Queen's students Jason Agouris and Tim Hughes) in hopes of increasing recognizability.

As Wise explained, "if [a viewer] is channel-surfing, they Stephanie Wilson in action for Studio Q.

Marika Gluckman

will have the music they recognize, the logo they recognize and people will say 'hey it's our student show.'"

And a student show is what they aim to be. Wise plans to "narrow-cast" the show's format, a move he hopes will legitimize Studio Q as a campus medium.

The toaster, and the move to high resolution Super-VHS master cassettes, are the first stage in Studio Q's revamped image, said Wise.

Money was needed for the new hardware, and out of necessity Studio Q attracted commercial support.

After losing a referendum appeal for a 25 cent increase in the student activity fee for the program last year, the show developed methods of expanding their budget.

"What's on Where," a section of the broadcast which lists the week's events in Kingston bars, provided the studio with the purchasing power to upgrade their equipment, said production director Teza Lawrence.

The show is looking to expand into corporate sponsorship, and plans to maintain the "What's on Where" section.

A new marketing director position, held by Commerce student John Mackay, indicates Studio Q's seriousness in this venture.

Other new positions include a news director and a sports producer. A documentary unit is being added, a monthly feature which will "tackle" issues that take longer to develop" and will be a cornerstone of the slick new show, said Lawrence.

This year's team "wants to be known as a reliable news source" said Lawrence. "In the past it was a bunch of kooky students playing with cameras, but there was no real focus," said Wise. As such they have developed a new format strategy.

Wise said he is aiming for a "news magazine focus" of headline stories, lighter news and the week in sports. The popular "street-wise" segment, similar to the Queen's Journal's "Talking Heads," will remain.

With the new equipment and format, Wise hopes to shed Studio Q's nemesis. "We won't look like cheap cable," he said.

Studio Q still feels the pressures of its youth. "We are only five years old ... [and] we are still having a hard time getting on media lists," Wise said.

The show has been somewhat stymied by student "Journal-centrism" in which the students turn primarily to the Queen's Journal for their campus news, Wise said. "[Studio Q] is not competing with The Journal directly, we are a complementary news format," said Wise.

Studio Q is aired Thursdays and Fridays at 6:00 pm on Channel 13. To celebrate its fifth year on the air, Studio Q has planned a birthday party for Friday afternoon in the lower cellidh of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Police release details of recent prowling

BY BROCK MANTLAND
The Queen's Journal

Kingston Police have released information about recent prowler incidents in the student housing area, including a composite sketch of a man who sexually assaulted a Queen's student in her home.

The sexual assault, reported in the Queen's Journal on Sept. 10, occurred at 4 a.m. on Sept. 9, in the 200 block of William Street. The victim awoke to find a man fondling her and then masturbating. The man is believed to have fled through the back door.

The suspect is described as a male, between 25 and 35 years of age, six feet, 195 lbs., with dark complexion, athletic build, round face, wide-set eyes, and a day's growth of beard. He was wearing a flannel shirt tied around his head.

Police also provided details on two prowler calls.

On Sept. 13, a man was observed masturbating outside a rear window at 10:45 p.m. in the 200 block of William Street. The man was described as being in his 30's, under six feet, with a muscular build and short brown hair. He was wearing jeans and a black t-shirt.

On Sept. 15, a prowler was reported at 11:04 p.m. in the 400 block of Earl Street. A male in his twenties, between five feet ten inches and six feet, heavy-set with collar-length brown hair, and wearing jeans and a white t-shirt, was seen prowling around a residence. When confronted, the man fled through the backyard.

The police are requesting the public's help in solving these cases.

Anyone with information about these incidents can contact the Kingston City Police at 549-4660, or Crimestoppers at 634-8477.

Composite sketch released by Kingston police of William Street sex-offender.

The Elizabeth Fry Society of Kingston, a volunteer-based, non-profit organization that assists women in conflict with the law, needs volunteers for Wednesday evenings at the Prison for Women, and for other programs. Volunteer training starts soon. Please contact Lori at 544-1744 for more information.

The Kingston Environmental Action Project (KEAP) launched an awareness campaign on September 18 to promote cycling in Kingston. The campaign is called "Cycle for Life." KEAP's bicycle education staff will be in community centres during the fall to educate people about the benefits of cycling. They will also be working to persuade the City of Kingston to improve facilities for cyclists.

National recruitment for the 1994 Parliamentary Guide Program is underway. Thirty bilingual, full-time university students from across Canada will be chosen for the program. Guides greet visitors from all over the world and introduce them to the Canadian system of government.

Eligible students take a general knowledge exam and will be tested for fluency in French and English. Guides are reimbursed for the cost of travel to and from Ottawa at the beginning and end of the work term, which runs from Victoria Day to Labour Day. Guides are paid $11.67 per hour for a 35-hour week.

Applications are available at Career Planning and Placement and must be submitted by Oct. 22, 1993.

Are you experienced?

You don't need to be
to write for news.

Come by 272 Earl Street, or phone 545-2800

Canada Computer
350 Princess St.
542-8467

Computers
386DX-40MB	128k	$1195	120MB	$215
486SX-33MB	128k	$1245	130MB	$225
486DX-33MB	128k	$1429	170MB	$245
386DX-50MB	128k	$1615	230MB	$299
486DX-66MB	128k	$1709	340MB	$389
*All systems come with 48.8 RAM, 120MB HD, 1.44MB, 39mm SVGA monitor, 512k video board, 101 keyboard, mouse & pad
Printers
OKidata		$689
HP-400c (HPW)
Hewlett Packard
Laserjet 4i (HPW)		$875
Laserjet 4		$1780
Deskjet 500		$378
Deskjet 500C		$510
Deskjet 550C		$780
Peripherals
KeyP123		$189
KeyP123		$247
Speakers
486/486		$C.A.L.L.
Modems
Mega Image SVGA 29mm		$269
Mega Image SVGA 28mm		$299
Mega Image SVGA 28mm		$329
Visionaire 4E		$420
Visionaire 5E		$510
Visionaire 6ES		$699
Visionaire 15		$750
Call for tape backups, keyboards, scanning machines, stereos, TV's, VCR's, and much more!!!!

New group to promote black history and unity

BY SHARON TROFIMUK

The Queen's Journal "If you do not know your past, you cannot plan for your future." Gamal Gulaid, a representative of Queen's Black Law Student Caucus, chose these words to mark the creation of the Queen's Black History Collective (BHC).

The group's purpose is to promote the study of black history, and to foster unity among blacks in Kingston and Queen's. The BHC includes members from the Association for Bah'ai Studies, the Southern African Solidarity Group, the African Caribbean Students' Association, and the African Students' Association.

Members gathered at the Caribbean Club Saturday night, to celebrate the Alma Mater Society's approval of their constitution and their official submission of a 10-part project proposal to Ontario's Anti-Racism Secretariat.

The BHC, first started in March, aims to unite the black community in Kingston and Queen's, according to co-ordinating chair Stephanie Simpson.

"We didn't want another black splinter group," said Simpson. "Instead we wanted to bring groups together to fulfill a common goal."

For the BHC, history is the unifying factor, Simpson explained. One of the main aims in the BHC's proposal to the OARS is to promote the study of black history on campus and in the Kingston community.

The BHC will seek research grants for black studies and for a black history journal.

"It's pretty evident that there isn't much on Queen's campus in recognition of what black people have contributed [in terms of] courses, and [library] resource material," said Simpson.

Simpson added that she "didn't think that the small number of black students at Queen's should have an effect on whether there are black [studies] programs at Queen's."

Promoting black history month in February will be another objective of the BHC. The month, said Simpson, is "barely recognized in Kingston and on campus."

The BHC hopes to hold a conference in February, Simpson said, with speakers from Canada and the United States, pending approval of funding from the OARS.

The proceeds from Saturday's festivities at the Caribbean Club will go toward recognizing black youth for academic excellence in Kingston public schools, said Simpson.

Kingston dignitaries were out to show support for the new group on Saturday.

Mayor Helen Cooper recalled

her experience living in Tanzania in her early twenties. She admitted she now needed a refresher course in Swahili, which is another project on the BHC horizon.

Peter Milliken, MP for Kingston and the Islands, said the community is badly in need of the services planned by the BHC. Said Milliken, "ignorance builds walls between peoples which knowledge breaks down."

Local MPP Gary Wilson described the BHC as "an example of how voices are represented." In support of the group's aims, he said that "the oppression of blacks must be recognized and ended."

Neena Chahal of OARS, who will now forward the proposal for government approval and funding, expressed optimism. "I will promise you that this report will go forward. The Ministry of Immigration has been very supportive."

Simpson said that while she has no idea how much funding the collective will receive, she too is optimistic. "We hope that the effect on Kingston and the Queen's community will become more extensive as we gain strength [financially] and in members ... black history is a vast area of study that is hardly recognized here, and this shouldn't be," she said.

Socialists to protest Le Pen

French National Front Leader to speak in Montreal

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

The Kingston chapter of the International Socialists will make an Alma Mater Society-endorsed trip to Montreal tomorrow to protest the arrival of Jean-Marie Le Pen, the leader of France's National Front party.

In a pamphlet distributed by the International Socialists, Dan Shoom, a Queen's student and member of the group, refers to Le Pen as "Europe's leading Nazi."

In an interview with The Journal, Shoom said that the Kingston group will participate in a demonstration that has been organized by anti-fascist groups in Montreal.

"We hope to prevent Le Pen from speaking and show Nazis that they're not welcome," said Shoom.

Harry Pilfold, a second-year history major and member of the International Socialists, said that he was surprised and encouraged by the AMS's decision to endorse the trip.

The AMS voted to endorse the protest last Thursday at the first Assembly of the school year.

"The AMS doesn't have a long history of endorsing anything political," said Pilfold.

Pilfold noted that a motion to endorse the trip was passed by the McGill Student Society, and said that the support given by the AMS shows that "Queen's is not behind the times."

"It's a moral support thing that will help draw people's attention to [the protest] so it doesn't just pass by," Pilfold explained.

Pilfold said that the goal of the trip is to "expose Le Pen publicly for what he is and make him understand that he is not welcome here."

The demonstration is being organized by a Quebecois anti-fascism group called La Coalition Contre le Presence du Front National et la Montee de l'Extreme Droite, and will take place at Berri Park at 6:00 p.m.

Shoom said that Le Pen's arrival in Montreal coincides with the International Conference of Mayors, which will be attended by French mayors, some of whom are members of the National Front.

But Shoom hopes that Le Pen won't even make it to Montreal.

"A lot of protestors will go to the airport so that he'll hopefully turn around and leave," he explained. "That's happened in Europe."

While Shoom could not say when exactly Le Pen arrives or what his Montreal itinerary consists of, he did speculate on his intentions.

"He will use the opportunity to organize fascists in Montreal," he said.

Shoom said that even if there was a counter-demonstration by right-wing groups, a violent confrontation is "not really in the range of possibility."

However, he said, if the right-wing supporters outnumber the socialists on hand, "we'd be in trouble."

Since "fascist groups depend on using violence and terror to organize," Shoom contended, "we have to outnumber them considerably."

He expressed confidence that this would be the case in Montreal. "I've never seen more than a handful of fascists together at any one time," he said.

Shoom added he has heard rumours that the Heritage Front, a white-supremacist organization, has planned a rally in another part of the city to avoid a clash with anti-fascists.

On Sunday, Shoom said that 20 to 25 people had signed up for the excursion to Montreal, a number that he hopes will double so that a full bus can make the trip.

Buses leave at 1:00 p.m. from the County Courthouse and return to Kingston at about midnight, he said.

Faculty societies improve accountability

BY TANIS ROBINSON and THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL STAFF
The Queen's Journal

Your student dollars will be easier to track down this year, as Queen's undergraduate societies make changes to improve their financial accountability. Both the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society and the Engineering Society are taking a look at their cheque-writing policies.

In an interview with The Journal, ASUS Vice-President Heath Grant referred to inadequate cheque-writing policies within ASUS.

"I could write a cheque to my friend and say it was a Kids-Fork-Kids expense," admitted Grant, "and no one would be the wiser." Up until now, Grant said, there has been no co-signing process on cheques, and vice-presidents have had no limit on their cheque-writing power.

Grant wants to increase the accountability of his own position and that of all the ASUS committees. He has proposed a new policy which mandates that financial records be published monthly so that ASUS Assembly can review them.

"I'm making my life more difficult, but I'm willing to do that," he said. Currently, the ASUS budget is passed at the first Assembly in April, but is seen only by the vice-president afterwards, Grant said.

Like ASUS, the Engineering Society elected to implement accountability checks into their policy. According to EngSoc Treasurer Tina Smith, a double-signing authority on cheques will come into effect for this year's executive as a measure of financial control.

This move comes in addition to changes made by EngSoc two years ago, when it created a Board of Directors comprised of an Operations Committee and a Financial Committee, said Smith. The Financial Committee approves the treasurer's budget, which is revised halfway through the year.

The president also makes a cursory examination of the treasurer's financial statements, but does not check the receipts, said Smith.

Chretien speaks at Policy Studies

Continued from page one

would skyrocket.

"With 25 per cent unemployment, you don't have to worry about the deficit, you have a revolution," he said.

The Liberal leader defended his goal of lowering the deficit to three per cent of the Gross National Product, "the same as European countries," calling it a "realistic" endeavour.

Chretien expressed his belief in an interventionist government, arguing that "government can be a force of good in society," and promising that his would not be an administration of "laissez-faire a la Thatcher [or] a la Reagan."

During a question period, an angry student at the back yelled at Chretien and demanded he promise there would be no tax increases if he were elected. "You want me to say 'read my lips,'" Chretien quipped back, saying he could make no such promise.

Chretien promised that health care would be "free for everybody, no user fee," unlike some plans which, he joked, would be "free after you pay the fee." Chretien said the issue was one of maintaining "dignity for every Canadian."

The Liberal leader levelled partisan attacks at Campbell, saying "I wait and hear what the prime minister says, and then I have a speech."

Chretien ridiculed Campbell for a statement he made Thursday in Calgary, in which, according to The Globe and Mail, he said spending cuts would be difficult to make because "there is no one consistent set of [financial] reporting standards within the federal government."

Campbell ought to have taken care of this "bookkeeping" over the summer, Chretien said, rather than "just dancing, going to barbecues and photo-ops."

Chretien added that Campbell could not deny her role in the Mulroney administration, asking "where was she over the last four years?"

Addressing Campbell's purchase of 43 "cadillac" helicopters to chase Soviet submarines, Chretien suggested that the collapse of the Soviet Union had eliminated any need for such a purchase.

In response to a question from Frank DesRosiers, a graduate student in economics, Chretien said he would exert influence on the governor of the Bank of Canada, who he said is "independent, but at the same time in consultation with the government." Chretien said that such involvement in monetary policy would be constitutionally acceptable.

Chretien spoke highly of Queen's, describing it as "one of the great national institutions" with "a tradition of public service here [that] has been a great one."

However, he could not remember the name of the School of Policy Studies, referring to it as "the school of policy and politics or whatever it is called." He excused this omission by saying "I learned [politics] the hard way. I got elected."

Chretien lamented the fact that many people see politics as a corrupt profession, and defended its importance. He recalled his introduction to politics, and his favourite slogans: "tell it as it is," and "I will do my best."

FRENCH ORAL COMMUNICATION COURSES

(non-credit courses)

Starting September 27, 1993

at
LE CENTRE FRANÇAIS de QUEEN'S
96 Albert, 545-2534

FORMAT: 10 people per group, 11 weeks, 2 hours per week
REGISTRATION: Before September 23 of Le Centre Français
FEES: Payable of the registration, $100 (Tax deductible).
Sorry, no reimbursement after September 23
SCHEDULE: Elementary 1: Thursdays 5:30 to 7:30
Elementary 2 & Intermediote 1: Tuesdays 5:30 to 7:30
Intermediote 2 & 3: Wednesdays 5:30 to 7:30
Advanced: Mondays 7:30 to 9:30

Book Portraits Early and Save Money!

GRADUATION PORTRAITS

Book sittings by
Oct. 15th and SAVE!
reg. $24.95 NOW $19.95

Order package by
Oct. 30th and SAVE!
Classic Package B - 2 x 8" x 10", 4 x 5" x 7" prints
reg. $125.75 NOW $99.95

Quality & Service for 18 years as an official Tri Colour photographer
330 Princess St. 549-6560

Fashion of the PAST
*recombined / reconstructed / resurrected fashions at ...

RÉCOUP TOTAL (recycled)

Presented by
March and Madison of Dimes Centre

Thursday September 23rd
8:30 p.m. at STAGES

Advance tickets $4.99 Door $5.99
In Support of United Way and March of Dimes

*fashions created from recycled clothing from the MOD SHOPS
*for information or to purchase tickets for the FASHION SHOP
please call 549-4141 or 531-9090
For Quality Womens, Mens & Children's Clothing SHOP at the MOD SHOPS located at:
39 Montreal St. or 342 Patrick St.

FALL REGISTRATION '93
10% Discount for Queen's Students

KIDS TO ADULTS
Beginners to Advanced
- Classical Ballet R.A.D.
- Modern Jazz, Tap
- Creative Movement (Ages 3 to 7)
- Ballroom
- AEROBICS
- Pro Instructors

5678
Come dance with us ...
See the difference!
"NEW LOCATION"
259 QUEEN STREET
DOWNTOWN
547-5678

APPLICATIONS NOW AVAILABLE FOR:

Tricolour Yearbook

Layout Editor, Business Manager, Dorkroom Assistant, Desktop Publishing Editor, News Editor, Art/Literature Editor, Graduate Section Editor, Clubs Section Coordinator, Other Staff Members

Campus Activities Commission

First year students for:

Alumni Weekend, United Way, Charity Ball, Undergrad Games, Welcome Back Week, Grand Events, Kaleidoscope, Coffee House, Model U.N., Model Parliament, Advertising Committee, Special Projects

Upper year students for:

Model U.N.
Grand Events
Coffee House
Coffee House

One co-chair for:

Communications Commission

Members and volunteers for:

Queen's Enquirer, Housing Issues, Community Interaction, High School Liaison, InfoBnk, Electronic Signboard, What's Up Page, Housing Issues Committee

2 Chairs for:

VPUA ESOS Committee

Video Store Assistant Manager

Walkhome Staff members

A.M.S. Fall 1993 Referendum Important Dates:

SEPTEMBER 1993

Monday, September 13 - Nominations open
Thursday, September 16 - A.M.S. Assembly
Friday, September 24 - Nominations close
Thursday, September 30 - A.M.S. Assembly

OCTOBER 1993

Friday, October 1 - Campaign opens
Tuesday, October 12 (Midnight) - Campaign closes
Wednesday, October 13 - Voting
Thursday, October 14 - Voting

For further information come to the A.M.S. Office in the JDUC, or contact Darrin Littlejohn at the Internal Affairs Commission (Phone 545-2725 ext. 4815) Remember, this is your vote; come out on October 13 & 14.

THE INTERNAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION

requires a Clubs Manager immediately. Applications will be available at the A.M.S. office in the JDUC starting Friday, September 24, 1993. They will be due at noon Friday, October 1, 1993. This is a unique opportunity to become involved through a dynamic position dealing with the members of the hundred plus Queen's Clubs.

ASSEMBLY REPORT

BY LORI THORLAKSON
The Queen's Journal

The Alma Mater Society Assembly meets every other Thursday evening in the McLaughlin Room of the John Deutsch University Centre. Sitting on Assembly are representatives from each faculty's student government, along with representatives from the residence governments and the elected executive of the AMS. AMS commissioners also attend Assembly as non-voting members.

Assembly is the highest student government body on campus, and can take stands on various issues, decide on all election and referendum procedures, authorize grants and examine budgets. Assembly also elects the AMS Board of Directors, and each member also acts as a corporate shareholder in the AMS.

Assembly meetings are open to the public.

The first Alma Mater Society Assembly finished in a relatively short four hours and thirty-eight minutes Thursday night, with Assembly approving a controversial AMS confidentiality policy and reaching agreement on the composition of an AMS streamlining task force.

Confidentiality Motion Passed
Assembly approved the AMS

Policy on Confidentiality and Privacy after some debate. The policy is intended to prevent the release of private information about AMS volunteers, such as the names and home phone numbers of deputy commissioners and committee chairs.

The preamble of the motion states that the purpose of the policy is to balance the responsibility to protect the privacy of volunteers with the obligation to remain accessible.

Clare Fielding, AMS Education Commissioner and one of the sponsors of the motion, said that the new procedure of having those requesting information leave their names with the commission, and then having the committee contact them, gives the committees time to research answers to questions and "gives them the option and choice" in communication.

When asked by Rector David Baar how this policy would affect accountability, Fielding said, "so far we have had no problem with it."

Todd Minerson, AMS vice-president (university affairs) explained that the committees are accountable through the commissioners.

Baar asked if every AMS inquiry had to go through the commissioner.

At this point, Chris Doering, the speaker of the Assembly, announced that debate was closed because they were in the summation stage. "That's how it is done, that is how summation is done. Unfortunately, sometimes new information does come up," he said.

Pete Stuart, Concurrent Education Society president, disagreed with following the rules strictly. "Why don't we just talk some more, and piss on this," Stuart said. "This is just silly."

Assembly then went to committee-as-a-whole, a mode in which Robert's Rules of Order allows debate, and Baar continued his criticism of the motion. "I don't know why a governmental body, which is essentially what the AMS is, is keeping the composition and the nature of committees secret," he said. Baar questioned how students could find out if the committees were "representative on various grounds of diversity" and how committees were to be held accountable.

Mike Henry of the Law Students' Society agreed with Baar. "The whole idea of secret committees is totally inappropriate," he said.

ASUS President Jen Steeves defended the motion, asserting that the confidentiality policy was intended to protect the volunteers.

"Unfortunately, their safety is endangered," she said. Steeves mentioned that last year, writers for Surface received threatening phone calls.

Under the new policy, Steeves continued, "complaints can be addressed to the chair and the committee will get back to them. That is the mode of being accountable."

In support of his motion, Minerson said "if we subject [volunteers] as has been the case, numerous times, to personal harassment by some very creepy characters, we won't have volunteers to do very important jobs."

The motion was carried.

Frosh Week Successful
The faculty societies reported successful orientation weeks. The Theological Society's orientation was "not too wild" according to president Greg Smith.

The Law Students' Society reported, however, that the Senate made one oversight in their orientation week. When calculating the liability for orientation week, the Senate included the Faculty of Law in the AMS orientation week contract. LSS President Mal Moorthy commented that "it was hard to tell people whose average age is close to 30 that they can't drink or have sex."

Financial Accountability Stressed

In the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS) report, Vice-President Heath Grant announced plans for improving ASUS financial accountability.

Assembly also approved a motion which is designed to increase the financial accountability of AMS committees. The reforms include striking an Assembly Finance Committee which will review committee budgets. Also, committee requests for additional funds will now require approval by a two-thirds Assembly majority.

AMS Plans Self-examination

The AMS executive announced plans to form a committee to study the internal structures of the AMS. Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson introduced the AMS Re-engineering Project which he said would "re-examine the Corporation and the Society with a view to the long term structure of the organization."

Final recommendations are to be brought to AMS Assembly and the AMS Board of Directors for acceptance and approval by the end of the fall term, a deadline which AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin called "unrealistic."

Steeves questioned why members-at-large of the Queen's Community were not included in the committee, which is composed of the vice-president (university affairs), the president, three members of the AMS Assembly and the AMS commissioners.

Baar also questioned the com-

Please see Assembly on page 8

SPECIAL EVENT
REGGAE SUPERSTARS
SPICE
THURS. SEPT. 30TH

178 ontario street, 544.6885

MON	TUE	WED	THUR	FRI	SAT	SUN
N.F.L MONDAY FREE ADMISSION 40 TV'S POOL TABLES LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALL REQUEST TUESDAY with ALL YOUR FAVOURITE TUNES AND THEN ? LITE NITE ALL NITE	★ ALLSTAR LITE NITE WOMEN ADMITTED FREE YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT YOU MIGHT WIN SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE	BUDGET BUSTERS INVENTORY CLEARANCE SALE  THE BEST SALE IN K-TOWN DOORS OPEN AT 8	FRIDAY AFTERNOON GHETTO GETAWAYS FREE CHILI & PIG ROAST DOORS OPEN AT 1PM HURRICANE FRIDAYS SATURDAY NITE DANCE PARTY SUPER LITE NITE UNTIL 10 THE REAL DEAL AT 8 PM FRIDAY & SATURDAY NON STOP UNTIL 3AM	THE DAY MADE FOR RELAXING. COME ON DOWN AND HANG WITH THE STAFF OR JUST PLAY A GAME OF POOL. REMEMBER RELAX!

BOOK YOUR SCHOOL EVENTS WITH THE #1 NIGHTCLUB
CALL 544.6885 AND ASK FOR A MANAGER

Assembly Report

Continued from page 7

position of the committee. "The committee might be trying to get rid of a few commissioners. How are you going to do that if the committee is composed of commissioners," he asked.

Wilson said that adding members-at-large on the committee would increase the budget and increase delay by at least two weeks.

Commerce Society president John Wilkin challenged Wilson, stating that "when making internal changes, it is essential to get outside advice."

Wilson said that including three members of the AMS Assembly would provide sufficient outside advice. He told Assembly, "you are external members of the AMS. You do not have a stake in it... you are external to a degree."

However, an amendment to include two members-at-large of the Queen's community was accepted by Wilson, Phillips and Minerson, with the stipulation that the committee could begin meeting before the two extra members were chosen.

AMS Endorses Le Pen Protest Trip

Before adjourning, Assembly made a rare political endorsement when they voted to endorse the International Socialists' trip to Montreal to protest the arrival of Jean-Marie Le Pen, the leader of France's National Front party.

Queen's TAEKWON-DO Club

FREE DEMONSTRATION by our 6th degree black belt instructor

Thursday, September 23rd, 7:30 pm. Projectile Range, Phys. Ed. Centre
Membership information and registration to follow.

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL STEVE AT 547-4793, OR VICTORIA AT 549-0189

Marriott workers to negotiate

Continued from page one

worked at Marriott in the recent past spoke to The Journal on the condition of anonymity.

"I was being treated by the managers as a young child. I felt like a child the way they treated me and every one else - it wasn't pleasant, to say the least."

"I didn't feel my job was secure. I had a lot of problems with one of the managers. There was really no way of addressing it without a union," he said.

The student said that he had to work for Marriott in order to earn enough money to buy food. He is afraid that Marriott won't re-hire him if his identity is released. Another part-time student worker said that she was "tired of everybody treating us [part-time workers] like slaves." In her opinion, most workers "probably hate working [for Marriott]."

Dodds alleged that last spring Marriott fired several full-time workers, and then re-hired them as part-time workers, for lower pay. Fougere dismissed the charges, labelling them as "misleading, if anything." He added that "seasonal layoffs are a matter of history and practice."

Dodds responded by adding that he did not feel these particular workers could be considered part of the seasonal layoffs, since they were fired prior to the traditional round of seasonal layoffs. Dodds also noted that Marriott part-time workers at Trent and Brock are paid the same wages as their full-time counterparts. Pay schedules are, however, often difficult to compare between universities, since, for example, the full time wage at Trent is less than it is at Queen's, he said.

RIGHT NOW!

You could be writing for news. Phone 545-2800.

Public Lecture: Dr Albie Sachs

The Southern Africa Education Trust Fund, the Department of External Affairs and the Faculty of Law present a lecture by Dr Albie Sachs:

"Towards a Non-Racial Constitution in a Racist Society"

Wednesday, September 22, 4pm
Macdonald Hall, Theatres D and E

Dr Sachs is a senior member of the African National Congress's delegation to the South African Constitutional Talks. He is the author of The Soft Vengeance of a Freedom Fighter, The Jail Diary of Albie Sachs, Justice in South Africa and other works.

Teaching the Educated to Read!

The main cause of student drop-out is stress — stress over not having assignments finished, stress over not staying "caught-up" with the class, and stress over the realization that just staying "caught-up" isn't going to be good enough.

1993 was the worst year in history for students getting jobs right out of college, and this next year looks even worse.

It isn't always the smartest students who get the best grades, but it is always the best readers — the ones who can get the most out of their books on their own.

Simply getting through your reading assignments will only give you the minimum that your professor requires to pass you. Just passing your courses isn't going to be good enough anymore.

In fact, having a diploma or a degree only allows you the opportunities of furthering your education with a more competitive group of fellow graduates.

The '90s will continue to be a decade filled with the most rapid change ever seen in history. Only those who are able to adapt to those changes will be able to remain competitive.

Being able to read all your reading assignments and additional reading selections with increased comprehension and recall will be a pre-requisite for anything you plan to do in the future.

The difference between a good mark and a great one will depend on your ability to read and learn on your own.

Power Reading is the Solution!

Power Reading is an eight-step video course that was developed on a college campus and initially designed for college students. With recent developments in video and computer graphics technologies, this course can now be offered on video, allowing you to learn in the privacy of your own home — at your own pace.

This course will absolutely at least double your reading speed with increased comprehension.

CALL NOW FOR YOUR "FREE" 30-MINUTE INFORMATION VIDEO
1-800-361-1222
TOLL-FREE IN CANADA AND U.S. (24 HOURS)
($9.95 shipping and handling fee applies)

Bachelor of Education at Queen's University

Information Meeting
Location STIRLING HALL THEATRE D
Date Mon. Sept. 27 Time 5:30-7:00 p.m.

LEARN TO DIVE WITH QUEEN'S SCUBA CLUB

STARTS This Friday at 6:00 in Room 206 PHYS ED Centre. Bring your bathing suit or call Tyler at 546-5300

BACK TO SCHOOL COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Redwing Computers provides high quality computer systems at competitive prices with a high degree of service and support. Our qualified and experienced staff are here to help you. Redwing Computers - for the best combination of Quality, Service and Price!

$1,249! Redwing System 1 - 386DX-33 486 Processor upgradeable Intel 80386DX 33MHz microprocessor 256KB cache Mini tower case, 220W power supply 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,349! Redwing System 2 - 486SX-25 Intel 80486SX 25MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	UPGRADES AND OPTIONS MS-DOS 6.0 & Microsoft Windows 3.1 & Social Media bundle $120 Microsoft DOS 6.0 $45 Microsoft Windows 3.1 (w/ system) $45 Serial mouse $25 IDE Hard Disk Upgrades 170MB to 130MB $20 130MB to 170MB $25 170MB to 210MB $45 210MB to 250MB $45 RAM Upgrades 2MB to 4MB (311 systems) $150 4MB to 8MB (all systems) $200 Printers Parsons 2-pin HP P210 (Quiet) $205 Parsons 2-pin HP P223 (Quiet) $215 Fujitsu 24 pin DL1150 w/ colour $425 HP DesignJet 500 printer $445 Obolax DL400 laser printer $750 HP 10C laser printer $675 Additions 5.25" 1.2MB floppy diskette drive $10 GVIC Internal 2400 baud Modem $15 GVIC Int. 9600/2400 Fax/Modem card $185 Logitech ScanMan 32 hand scanner $115 Sound Blaster Pro $340 Sony 31A CD-ROM drive $499 Creative Labs Expansion II kit w/ Creative Labs Expansion II kit $199 Monitor Upgrades 14" VGA to 14" SuperVGA $41 14" SVGA to SuperVGA 28 dp $25 14" SuperVGA 28 dp to Non-Intel SVGA $25 Video Adapter Card Upgrades 256KB VGA to 512KB SVGA $105 512KB SVGA to 1MB SVGA $115 1MB SVGA to ATI WonderXL24 1MB $115 VL-Bus Upgrades Systems 4, 5 & 6 (2 Slot) $20 512K SVGA to VL-Bus Video Adapter (MS) $100 512K SVGA to ATI Graphics Ultra Pro 2MB $50 For other peripherals, accessories and software, please consult your sales representative.
$1,575! Redwing System 3 - 486DX-33 Intel 80486DX 33MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,695! Redwing System 4 - 486DX2-50 Intel 80486DX 50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller
$1,825! Redwing System 5 - 486DX-50 Intel 80486DX 50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB exp. 1MB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Desktop Case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,975! Redwing System 6 - 486DX2-66 Intel 80486DX2-66MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Medium Tower Case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller

REDWING COMPUTERS

Tel: (613) 584-8388 - 650 Bath Road (at Gardiners) - Kingston - Ontario - K7M 1X6 - Fax: (613) 584-8508

Science is Cool!

SCIENCE DISCOVERY, the Arts & Science Summer Day Camp for High School students, is accepting applications for the following positions: Camp Director Assistant Camp Director

These two full-time paid positions are responsible for the planning and coordination of a series of fun-filled two week Science Camps.

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University, and must be submitted no later than September 30th at 4:30.

Show these students what you've known for years...

ASUS BUDDIES

APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE AT THE CORE, 183 UNIVERSITY TO JOIN BUDDIES. ASUS BUDDIES PAIRS FIRST YEARS WITH UPPER YEARS FOR SOCIAL ACTIVITIES AND SHARING OF EXPERIENCES.

ALL ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS ARE WELCOME.

JOIN BY FILLING OUT AN APPLICATION AND DROPPING IN THE BOX AT THE CORE OR IN VICTORIA HALL. FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-6278

THE FIRST ANNUAL BUDDIES BREAKFAST

WILL BE HELD

SUN. SEPT 26TH AT UPPER BAN RIGH

ALL BUDDIES WILL BE CONTACTED WITH MORE INFORMATION.

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

- Editor-in-Chief: Sarah MacWhirter
- Managing Editor: David Pavao
- News Editor: Jeff Gray
- Production Manager: Colin Ho
- Entertainment Editor: Rob Furse
- Editorial Page Editor: Douglas MacGregor
- Sports Editor: Joel Sutherland
- Photography Editor: Marika Glickman
- Graphics Editors: Richard Dubois, Joey deVilla
- Features Editor: Alison Masmann
- Opinions Editor: Tara Hillis
- Literary Lapses Editor: Megan Nichols
- Backpage/Misc. Editors: Derek Walker, Joey deVilla
- Assistant News Editors: Brock Martland, Brad Elder, Lori Thorlakson
- Assistant Production Manager: Adrienne Down
- Assistant Entertainment Editors: Ian Petrie, Ryan Chen, Sian Beddoe-Stephens
- Assistant Sports Editor: Jen Flynn
- Assistant Photography Editor: Derek Yarnell
- Assistant Literary Lapses: Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

- Advertising Manager: Andrew Nielsen
- Creative Staff Manager: Alex Hamer
- Sales Representatives: Chris Ritchie, Fiona Macauley
- House & Systems Manager: Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

- Ash Baker, Steve Cain, Dave Coleman, Christian deBruijn, Frank Dixon, Goran, Heather Grace, Jason Kenney, Rob Kittridge, Jason Lewis, Sandy MacMinnish, Dan McNair, Rob McRae, Julie Molnar, Ian Morey, Sandro Pasquall, Lee Petrie, Tanis Robinson, Mag Smith, Sharon Trofimuk, Russell Vance, Josey Wales

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

The Demise of Truth?

Recent weeks have been uncharacteristically fertile for those concerned with the issue of media veracity, as there have been a number of instances which illustrate the elusive nature of written truth and prompt an evaluation of notions of truth in all media.

First, consider the recent publication of Joc McGinniss's "biography" of Senator Edward Kennedy, The Last Brother. When McGinniss, a best-selling "true crime" author, and recipient of a million-dollar advance from Simon & Schuster, found himself denied access to Kennedy and those close to him, he resorted to decidedly unethical techniques. First, it would appear that he extensively plagiarized William Manchester's 1967 best-seller The Death of a President. Second, and most alarmingly, McGinniss elected to simply make up thoughts, dialogue, and actions to ascribe to the various personalities in the book. This he labels "free form journalism." The response to the book has been encouraging in one sense: it has been roundly condemned. That the book could even make it into print, however, testifies to the suspension of disbelief which is all too frequently induced by the lure of profit. Unfortunately, the furor surrounding The Last Brother may be the exception that proves the rule of complacency.

This controversy provided a timely context for Janet Malcolm's much-discussed article on Sylvia Plath and the nature of biography, "The Silent Woman", which appeared in The New Yorker late last month. Malcolm explores the perils which befall even the most well-intentioned biographer of Plath, as they become caught between the dogma which has fueled a thousand lectures at liberal arts colleges - Plath as feminist martyr, a brief candle snuffed by her monstrous husband, Ted Hughes - and the equally intransigent force of Hughes and his protective sister Olwyn. Malcolm's experience illustrates that in some cases, the truth may be an unattainable ideal.

Last month, Harper's published a document offering provocative, though not conclusive, evidence that, as a pilot during World War II, George Bush strafed a life-boat - a war crime. A Naval archivist had the document sent to various media outlets during the 1992 election, none of whom would publish it. The pursuit of the truth requires a will which is all too often lacking in the mass media.

What do these episodes tell us about the nature of truth? In different ways, each affirms that what is perceived as truth is manufactured on a daily basis by a variety of people with diverse abilities and motives.

In a bizarrely self-referential twist, we are now treated to stories in the press bemoaning "soundbyte" election coverage, while such reductionist journalism is practiced on the same page. Even the acclaimed documentary on Noam Chomsky's well-known views on media politics, Manufacturing Consent, is justifiably criticised in the current issue of Cineaste for reducing Chomsky to a series of soundbytes, thus presenting his ideas in the very fashion he seeks to counteract.

The New York Times boasts of presenting "all the news that's fit to print." The fatuity of this claim, and others like it, is well-documented. Every instrument of the news media selects which stories will run and which topics will receive editorial attention. Despite goals of objectivity, bias, both conscious and unconscious, plays a role. The unquestioning public consumption of carefully circumscribed, if not patently bogus, "truth" would appear to be on the rise. The spectre of "infotainment" heralds the ever-increasing commercialization of the news media, which reduces the public to consumers (or worse, passive receptors) and demands that so-called news be marketed on the same terms as Hollywood films (repositories of illusory images themselves, as the pseudo-historical works Mississippi Burning and JFK revealed).

Is truth a chimera? Perhaps. Yet it appears that, even as an ideal, however unattainable, truth is increasingly a casualty in the media. It remains to be seen how many people will mourn its loss.

Putting education on the ballot

In thirty-four days, almost all of the students at Queen's will be asked to play their part in participative democracy by casting a ballot in the 35th federal election.

For many, the decision will not be easy. Caught in the turmoil of mid-terms and the celebrations of homecoming weekend, federal policy issues will, at best, be difficult to follow.

Students often have trouble relating to many of the policy issues put forward by federal politicians for a number of reasons. Parties offer little variety in policy proposals, and often end up doing the same things once in office anyway.

The political situation in Ontario has made us even more cynical about who to trust. Who would have thought the New Democratic Party would have taken on labour?

Although employment positions are disappearing left, right and centre, many of us still feel a sense of security - a security that separates us from the fray of NAFTA, the deficit and the dreaded economy.

Hopefully, this time around, students will feel directly involved in the election process. Nineteen university and college student governments from across Canada are trying to make this happen.

The student governments are launching a Vote Education campaign, of which Queen's is responsible for Ontario. The crux of the campaign is a federal election candidate survey. The survey is designed to assess what the candidates think about access to post-secondary education, student aid financing, long and short term solutions, federal financing of post-secondary education, research and development and taxation.

The Vote Education survey is modelled after a University of Alberta survey which succeeded in generating media attention for students. The survey forced politicians to state their views and take a stand on education.

Does it make sense to focus on federal politicians when trying to make gains for post-secondary education? Although post-secondary education is a provincial matter, the federal government provides $8 billion to the provinces in transfer payments to be spent on education.

Unfortunately, it appears that the old theory/practice conundrum may be in play here. The Vote Education survey has marked on the front: "Please return to... no later than September 17, 1993." As of September 15, the surveys had not been sent out. The survey is a great idea, we just hope it gets done. Chances are politicians will not respond to a survey received after the return date - especially when they're hot on the campaign trail.

The campaign is supposed to be non-partisan. But, if the student governments really want to make a difference in student voting behaviour, wouldn't they take the results and advocate candidates according to their views on post-secondary education? A campaign isn't a campaign unless it advocates something, and this could be done without touching on other issues.

Any move to put education on the electoral map is a good move - but first it has to happen. The Queen's Journal hopes that Queen's will be at the forefront of any campaign to make education an election issue. Political candidates need to be made aware of the importance of post-secondary education as an issue affecting not just students, but the future of Canada itself.

Opinions

Grey Area

The Editor,
As Public Relations Coordinator of the Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG), of which the Queen's Women's Centre is a member group, it is necessary for me to write a short letter in order to make a correction to information published in the September 10 Queen's Journal ("safe space for women"). At this time, the Grey House, (a.k.a. the Student Affairs Centre), located at 51 Queen's Crescent, is not womyn's-only space on Monday nights as was conveyed to Journal reporter Lori Thorlakson by members of the Queen's Women's Centre. I wish to make very clear that Lori is in no way to be held responsible for the inaccuracy in the article. It seems that it is, instead, the result of a small (but repairable) break-down in communication between myself

(one of the QSCSG Coordinators) and the QWC.

Though the Queen's Women's Centre has meeting space booked in the house every Monday night, and the QWC has the right to make that particular space womyn-only (as well as their office and library, if they so wish), the rest of the building, including the offices of the Lesbian and Gay Association - Kingston, the Birth Control Centre, Ontario Public Interest Research Group (OPIRG), and other groups and services are open to be staffed and used by both women and men.

If any member of the Queen's or Kingston community wishes to know more about the QSCSG, or The Grey House, I, or the other coordinator Bill Holder are happy to answer any questions.

—Julia S. Lipinska
QSCSG Coordinator

Comm-ittedly Responsible

The Editor,
As members of the Commerce Orientation Committee, we closely monitored the actions of the first-year students, as well as the forty-one Bosses. The committee's role was not only to administer the rules of the contract and the initiatives of SOARB, but were also to build a trust between the committee and the Bosses. No Bosses at any time consumed alcohol, or were intoxicated in the responsible presence of frosh. The Commerce Orientation Committee went to great lengths to insure the week was a success in every respect. We feel that the unfounded editorial published in the Tuesday September 15 Journal only serves to increase the misconceptions and pessimism surrounding the week itself. It is unfortunate that the incredible commitment and effort of six committee members and forty one Bosses could be slandered through misinformation.

—The Commerce Orientation Committee

talking heads

"Which university services would you like to see improved?"

"Academic counselling and student health always have long line ups; this makes them very inaccessible."

Tanya Trinkaus
Arts '96

"There should be more awareness of which services are being offered."

Melanie Melyuk
Arts '96

"The programs that we have are good, the challenge is to promote their accessibility to the students."

Craig Ingram
Comm '96

"We would like to see the weight room improved and they need more air down there, it stinks."

Carina Blotfield
Kirsten Quorbak
Judy Elhassy
Arts '96

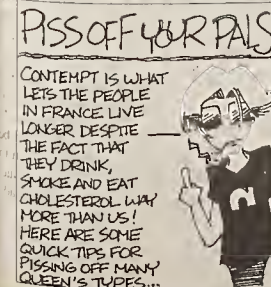

"I don't like the fact that to pay library fines you must pay at Douglas or Bracken, but you can return all your books at these places."

Lianne Gendron
Arts '92

Send your Opinions to the Journal

Real Live Slacker

Joey deVilla

ASUS

needs
Dynamic, energetic, and enthusiastic people to fill the positions of Future Link Co-ordinator

Tutor/Tuttee Co-ordinator
Undergrad Review Editor
Ballroom-dance Chair
Society Affairs members
Queen's Challenge volunteers
Lavanna Designs managers

GET INVOLVED IN YOUR SOCIETY

For more information or for an application come by the Arts & Science
Undergraduate Society
CORE, 183 University, or call Sue at 545-6278.

"Early to rise and early to bed makes a person healthy, wealthy and dead." At least that was Bentley's version of the quote. Whether it was in class, at the movies or in the comfort of his home, Bentley was in a constant state of sleep. He was not necessarily a narcoleptic, he simply had a profound love for the horizontal (in fact, every year Bentley slept through so many exams that he spent most of May and June struggling to finish his year). So one can imagine that when Bentley's bed mysteriously broke after a late night house party his stress level rose considerably. Deprived of his major form of entertainment, Bentley went searching for a solution. It seems that at one time he had heard someone mention the existence of a BED fund through the Engineering Society. Surely, he thought, it was set up for emergencies like this one. However, upon arriving at Clark Hall to make inquiries, he discovered, much to his surprise, that it was something entirely different.

The BED fund is actually an acronym for Better Equipment Donation. This fund was set up by the Engineering Society in the 1989-90 year to purchase badly needed equipment for a wide range of courses within the Faculty. This monumental initiative by the Engineering students has also been supplemented by the Queen's Challenge Campaign which has earmarked the BED fund for $250,000 to be directed towards an endowment. This is just one more example of our student Challenge campaign helping other students. Please-

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

Literary Lapses

Hitchens' Guide to the Galaxy

For the Sake of Argument
Christopher Hitchens
Verso
$27.95
339 pages

An instructor of mine at the University of Edinburgh last year was, to my mind, the very model of his generation of British academics: a New Left man with some sympathy but little respect for waffling liberals; gruff, indeed coarse, at times, thoroughly charming at others; a frankly astonishing capacity and affinity for learning matched only by that for drink and cigarettes.

I couldn't help but think of this lecturer as I read For the Sake of Argument, a simply marvellous collection of essays by British journalist Christopher Hitchens. Published this summer amidst the usual stream of pulp fiction, the book merits mention now as it is no exaggeration to suggest that it ought to be mandatory reading for any student of politics, culture or the art of writing.

Hitchens posits that "for the sake of argument, one must never let a euphemism or a false consolation pass uncontested. The truth seldom lies, but when it does lie it lies somewhere in between." This serves to unify a diverse collection of Hitchens' work of recent years, from such publications as Granta, the Times Literary Supplement and The London Review of Books. Many of the best pieces represent Hitchens' work in Washington, where he was a columnist for Harper's, and his work as the continuing author of the "Minority Reports" column in The Nation.

Hitchens was educated at both Oxford and Cambridge, and it shows. He writes about George Eliot, the Gulf War, Trotsky and Andy Warhol with equal aplomb and insight. In an era when bad writing is increasingly the norm, Hitchens is a consummate stylist.

Like his sometime collaborator Edward Said, Hitchens would appear to be a bit of a bon vivant - not everyone's book cover features a photo by Annie Leibovitz. And is there not some contradiction in being both a confirmed advocate of the downtrodden and a regular contributor to magazines published by the Conde Nast empire? (Hitchens writes the regular "Cultural Elite" column in Vanity Fair, and, in a recent issue, wrote the salivating paragraph that accompanied a cheese-cake photo spread featuring the latest Guess jeans nymph.)

Admittedly, one couldn't imagine Noam Chomsky doing the same thing, but that's really neither here nor there. Hitchens' love for the good things in life - be they curvaceous young women, or the substances celebrated in the piece entitled "Booze and Fags" - reflects his disdain for political correctness, which he quite rightly brands as "a room temperature, pseudo-intellectual fad." Ultimately Hitchens pities the advocates of PC, whose perpetuation of a culture of euphemism unwittingly plays into the hands of those who hold power. The fact that PC is attacked by both the left and the right reveals it to be the progeny of 1960's liberalism, with the same superficial attribute (some nice sentiments) and the same glaring weakness (complete uselessness as an intellectual approach).

In assessing Hitchens, a veritable polymath for whom there are no sacred cows (Mother Teresa is one eminent personage debunked by his pen, in the essay "The Ghoul of Calcutta"), one is tempted to quote Whitman: "Do I contradict myself? Very well then I contradict myself. (I am large, I contain multitudes.) ... I too am not a bit tamed, I too am untranslatable, / I sound my barbaric yawp over the roofs of the world."

This is an exaggeration. Hitchens' "yawp" is anything but barbaric. To read him is to be reminded that the left has always boasted better writers than the right (contrast Hitchens with, say, Newsweek's George Will and you'll see my point - there's a reason Will resorts to writing about baseball so often).

favourable and thoughtful review of Norman Mailer's Harlot's Ghost despite the fact that, in response to a perceived slight of his manhood, the legendary literary tough guy complained in a now-famous interview of being the victim of "a London faggot literary coterie" consisting of Hitchens, Martin Amis and Ian Hamilton.

Ever since de Tocqueville, foreigners have proved to be the most astute observers of American life, and Hitchens is no exception. He perfectly captures the tenor of this land of CNN and solipsism: "an isolationist and insular culture, combined with a global and invidious posture ... [a] highly dangerous and febrile mix which greatly facilitates the task of fear-mongers and chauvinists." This should not be mistaken for mere "colonial-bashing" (although there is more than a trace of that in his dissection of our own Conrad Black). While the U.S. is remarkably fertile ground for a critic like Hitchens - where else could one find such grotesques as Richard Nixon, Henry Kissinger, Marion Barry and David Duke? - he by no means neglects his native land (the Royals provide particularly vulnerable targets), or the rest of the world, for that matter (insights abound on Eastern Europe and the Middle East).

For the Sake of Argument is a clarion of dissenting thought in an age of alarming homogeneity (recall that this is the decade in which Francis Fukuyama could publish an essay entitled "The End of History"). Irrespective of one's political stripe, Hitchens' work deserves to be widely read, indeed savoured, for it embodies the promise of journalism.

IANPETRIE loves a good argument, but only if he can win.

BORED? LONELY? ENERGETIC?

Do you want to get involved?
Find out more about the ...

African & Caribbean Association
Animal Rights Association
Debating Union
Baha'i Studies
Scuba Club
Queen's Musical Theater
Hillel
Mature Students' Association
Political Organizations
Juggling Club

South East Asian Club
Camera Club
Star Trek Club
Entrepreneur Society
Queen's Marketing
Chinese Christian Fellowship
Ski Club
Lacrosse
Queen's Players
Tae Kwan Do

Pistol Club
Red Cross
International Affairs Association
Environmental Groups
T.A.L.K.
Ukrainian Club

and many more organisations at ...

CLUBS NIGHT 93

Tuesday, September 21
Jock Hardy Arena
7-10 pm

Love Letters

The Golden Mean
Nick Bantock
Raincoast Books
$22.95
40 pages

Griffin Moss and Sabine Strohm are in love, though they have never met. Knowing each other only by what they reveal through their letters and art, the two have tried to unite, but as yet, have found only deeper separation. In The Golden Mean, their journey ends. Vancouver artist Nick Bantock is moving on to other projects, but he has given his readers one last glimpse into the linked worlds of Griffin and Sabine.

The Golden Mean is the third volume in a series which began with 1991's Griffin & Sabine. The original book told the story of an English artist, Griffin, who receives a postcard from a woman living on the other side of the world. Although she locates him only by chance, Sabine has had a mystic tie to Griffin ever since she was fifteen; his artwork appears in her mind. As the two write to each other, Griffin's buried loneliness is exposed. By her epistolary presence alone, Sabine begins to heal Griffin, restoring his faith in himself and in his art. Griffin & Sabine had the look and feel of a quality children's book, but it dealt with adult themes of disappointment and desire. The book deservedly became a bestseller, as did its sequel, Sabine's Notebook.

The charm of Bantock's trilogy is that it consists entirely of Griffin and Sabine's correspondence. The front of each page depicts a richly decorated postcard or envelope, while overleaf is either a handwritten message or an ornamented letter folded into an actual envelope. The artwork which Griffin and Sabine mail to each other is given an edge of surrealism and believability by the "found art" of postmarks and postage stamps. The language of the missives is equally authentic: compact and full of non-sequiturs. As every word becomes precious, bare phrases like "I love you" and "I miss you" gain a potency that would be missing in a novel.

Although it maintains the format of the earlier books, The Golden Mean introduces a far more dramatic story. Soon after discovering that they might be physically unable to meet, Sabine's second-sight begins to fade, and postcards from a third person intrude into Griffin's life. Griffin fears that he and Sabine will be "lost to one another forever." The two cling to the letters that are their only connection. Their journey finally concludes with a move that even Griffin believes is "crazy, simplistic and impossible."

The stronger storyline of The Golden Mean is matched by art which is equally mature. In the first book, Griffin writes, "I crave an art that passionately transcends the mundane." Although his earlier works were too random and absurd to fulfill this ideal, Griffin finally reveals his passion in The Golden Mean. His pieces are emotional works in which figures and places emerge from dark washes of colour. Sabine's art is more settled, as if to compensate for Griffin's new intensity. In both art and language, Bantock is able to keep the personalities of his characters distinct. Even the intruder's postcards are revealing. His purchased landscapes are beautiful but clearly from outside the dreamy world of Griffin and Sabine.

The Golden Mean is a work of surprising depth. Easily missed details hide considerable meaning. For example, Griffin's first postcard shows a pensive king surveying a map of the stars. Pasted into the constellations is a tiny chess piece: a misplaced queen. Sabine is no less subtle. She tells a story about an issue of stamps that parallels her relationship with Griffin; as a result of a printing error, the stamps were "perforated through the heart."

The last postcard in The Golden Mean hides the most important secret of all: the fate of Griffin and Sabine. Although it takes only seconds to read, the card bristles with significant and ambiguous details. My own belief is that Bantock has finally granted his readers a happy ending, one that is neither sugary nor banal. But the mystery of Griffin and Sabine drifts deeper as we leave them. This book is a wonderful conclusion to a memorable series.

TIM MITCHELL could fall in love with a woman on the other side of the world, if his landlord would just fix his mailbox.

A review copy of Nick Bantock's novel was provided courtesy of Printed Passage Books

Carmina...

Consequences

Afterwards I couldn't catch my breath
My face in the crook of your neck and the warmth of our skin erasing the lines;

And then I knew you were absorbing me
(but not on purpose), and that was why
I felt so depthless

mdn

Falling Back

From the other end of the lake
the sun hesitates
then falls behind each lonely cottage and reluctantly shuts his eyes casts sombre shadows amongst little rippled circles of water and light:
thought pools expanding far into the evening as my playful feet
draw out these final breaths of summer ...

Heather Katherine Grace

Morning

Sunshine beams through splashing yellow everywhere, lingering in the lust of the frost that clings to the grass

Reaching out with wandering arms for every heart, wakening the realities and feelings of yesterday that have slept through the night.

Hitting the glass and warming the beds
It holds a mysterious face.

Like an intense, inner passion from within that swells in silence
and is soaked with a kiss.

Julie Molnar

Under a Streetlamp

Do you remember crying in the dark
Before you left,
As we choked out laughter
Between our hot tears?
I saw ravens on your doorstep.
Hurry, run through the snow
With your open jacket taking wind
And bury your face in my sweater
Let's see the world
In our jeans and wet sneakers.
Have I ever told you how good
You look
When you have tears in your eyes?

JBG

A Dead Wind

A short story by Sandro Pasquali

He was always a picture of summer, warm and bright, his heart having been born and bred on a farm in southern Ontario. He told me once that during those young days, while standing in the shade of an apple tree, he had watched a cat climb slowly up and kill two baby birds nested there – perhaps robins. He said that the cat carried them down between its jaws and stopped and looked at him for a moment. Then it moved on out behind an old grey barn and disappeared. He said that he looked up again, saw the empty nest and how the wind died against the leaves, and was sick against the tree.

I have tried many times to understand why I fell in love with him that day.

Michael told me this story the day we met, in the Toronto bus depot, early in the last week of my first summer away from home. He was wearing old jeans and a t-shirt that might once have had something written on it. He carried only an old canvas knapsack, decorated quietly with his name in three colours. His hair was sun-dyed and thin, and the way it wisped against his dark eyes made me think of California. He seemed like one who had always occupied the blind side of a scene. Why I was drawn to his soft eyes and sprawled look is something that to this day remains lost somewhere deep in memory. It is like a man who cannot remember the name of his first lover, seeing only the flesh. I have tried many times to understand why I fell in love with him that day, but these details, these moments, are the only things that I can recover. It was perhaps the pain that he knew and I felt; it might have been simply his eyes.

That day in the depot I was waiting for the 9:00 bus to Kingston, returning to university with only thoughts of course loads and decisions. The summer had been enjoyable, with some good moments and some bad, and I was proud of the tan that I had acquired. My suitcases were stuffed with clothes and some books. I was not necessarily looking forward to going back, and felt nervous and withdrawn. I think that this angst was what Michael saw when he came over. With a quiet movement he sat down beside me, offering a flask. His smile at that moment was the most delicate thing that I have ever encountered. "You look thirsty. Like a drink?" "No, thanks. Thanks a lot." "Go ahead, take it. I'm finished with it anyway. Where you going?" "Kingston." "Never been there."

"You don't want to leave here, do you? Nobody who likes to travel carries that many suitcases."

"It's a nice place. Quiet." In the corner a man was talking very loudly about how bad a shape the country was in.

"I like quiet places." His smile was absolutely vivid. The bus to London was pulling out, and I took in the acrid air just to clear my head. Never before had I felt in another person such a strong need for conversation, for recognition. A soft wind carried through the depot and the smell of exhaust was gone. It was replaced with a faint scent that I did not recognize.

"You don't want to leave here, do you? Nobody who likes to travel carries that many suitcases – spoils the mood, right?"

"I suppose so."

"Sometimes it's good to just take off on a whim."

"Sure."

"Want a smoke?" Michael pulled a small packet of cigarettes from his knapsack, Marlboros.

"Sure, if you don't mind."

"Of course I don't. We'll smoke and dream of fantastic places and distant depots. How old are you?"

The suddenness of this question was jarring. For an instant the temptation to lie was strong. But it passed away into the softness of his eyes.

"Nineteen."

"Stay with me in the city for a few days. I need someone to talk to. I don't think you are in too much of a hurry."

"What?"

"Come home with me. I think you want to come home with me. Please."

The moment when one realizes that control is impossible is often a terribly frightening one. The sense of helplessness that one feels when a situation arises out of nowhere is something intimidating, often painfully so. That moment had come and I felt nothing but release and anticipation. I had given myself over.

I stayed with him in Toronto for two days, his apartment small and unfurnished. The walls were bare, with only peeled paint to break the monotony. A piece of the floor by the window, a desk of sorts, was covered with what appeared to be poetry. Michael was sitting in the corner having a cigarette. The window was open. It was a hot day and we were both sweating.

"Michael, what is all of that writing on the floor?"

"Poetry. I write poetry in my spare time."

"Read some to me."

The urge to hear him speak the rhymes of his soul was heavy. I lit another cigarette and watched him reach over and pick up one sheet delicately, laying it on his knees when he sat back again. A wind came in through the window and rustled his light hair and the paper in his lap. He began to read in a low

The urge to hear him speak the rhymes of his soul was heavy.

voice.

*I met Prince in his borrowed eyes
In the clothes I had given him over his nakedness
In his castle beside the gutters
At the crossroads of piety
We went to where his throne-bed reclined
Punched and pulled
From riding the night across its back*

*He spun at the great wheel above his head
And when it was whirling so fast as to blur
our eyes
He declared time was dead and we were forever alone*

*But the knock at the door
At the timelessness of our moment:
"Someone is in here with me"*

*The wheel stopped
Prince wept like a mortal
"No one believes in us"*

"Why did you stop? Go on, please Michael."

"It hurts too much to read this. It hurts." "I love the sound of your voice. Do this for me."

"Will you come to Leamington with me?" "For a couple of days."

"Promise?" "Yes."

"Okay."

His poetry was beautiful, flowing, with images and cadences that were both soft and strong. As he read, the pain that had stopped him seemed to wither and die, and he read with passion. When he was done Michael carefully laid the sheet down again and placed a stone on it so as to protect against the wind. We sat for a while, smoking, in a very quiet and warm room.

We arrived in Leamington early Thursday morning. It was a small, unpretentious place. He took me out to the farm where he had grown up. I asked if we might walk through the orchard.

"My parents are dead. There are new owners."

"I'm sorry."

"It's alright, I'm over that now."

"I should have realized."

"How? You didn't know."

The air was very still and hot. The old road leading to the farmhouse was dry, and I could see where rivulets of water once passed, perhaps still do. An old produce truck passed on the road behind us, raising a light film of dust. It was loaded with apples.

Michael suggested that we spend the afternoon in a nearby park. He said that he used to go there as a child and climb an old oak tree that stood by a playground.

He moved gracefully, and at that moment seemed more child than man.

"We could go swimming, too. There's a lake."

"That would be nice."

"Really want to go?"

"Yes."

"It's not far. We'll walk."

"Sure."

We arrived in the park at about two o'clock. In a little while we had reached the playground. There were some children playing on the swings. A small boy, perhaps seven years old, sat apart from the others and was playing in the sand by the slide. I could not see what he was doing. Off to the right of the children were two dogs frolicking in the grass. The place was cool. We walked to the old tree and sat down.

"I love this place. I spent hours and hours playing here when I was a kid."

"It's very nice."

"Want to climb the tree?"

"I've never done it before. I grew up in the city."

"C'mon – it's easy. Follow me."

"Sure."

Michael climbed as nimbly as a cat. I followed, but was much slower than he. The bark was coarse, and by the time we reached the top my hands were scratched and bleeding.

"Wasn't that fun?"

"My hands are bleeding."

"Aw, it won't kill ya."

"I guess. It's beautiful up here."

"I know. Look, a bird's nest! I'm going to go see if there are any babies inside."

He began to move along a thick branch which moved out close to that which the nest was on. He moved gracefully, and at that moment seemed more child than man. When he had moved out far enough, now very close to the nest, he reached out slowly and from it lifted a small blue egg. He touched it slowly and carefully. The beauty of the moment was so strong that I called out to him.

"I love you, Michael."

He turned quickly. In that instant before he fell I saw on his face an expression that I did not recognize, and one that I could never forget. He did not cry out. There was an unnatural sound as his body crashed to the ground below. In the distance I heard the cry of children, and the sound of wind moving through the leaves.

The poem fragment is from Daniel Sloat's "Dead Shadows."

Levine opens the literary scene at Windmills Cafe

BY HEATHER KATHERINE GRACE
The Queen's Journal

I wondered why I felt so bitter about Canada ... It was foolish to believe that you can take the throwouts, the rejects, the human kickabouts from Europe and tell them: Here you have a second chance. Here you can start a new life. But no one ever mentioned the price one had to pay; how much of oneself you had to betray.

Ardent applause filled Windmills Cafe late Thursday evening as Norman Levine read the concluding paragraph of his 1958 novel, Canada Made Me. After a brief intermission he gave the audience another taste of his craft, offering to them what he called "strands" of From A Seaside Town. But listeners had not yet heard enough from the critically-acclaimed author. People stayed behind, mingling about the room well after Levine had finished reading. Many did not leave until they had an opportunity to speak with him themselves.

Norman Levine

Heather Grace

The evening reading was a first for Windmills Cafe. Organized by The Canada Council, The Porcupine's Quill, Printed Passage Books and Quarry Press Magazine editor and writer Steven Heighton (Queen's MA '86), it was also the first in a series of readings that promise to bring other celebrated authors to Kingston.

Heighton set the evening in motion, providing a brief background on Levine and his work. Quoting from the British publication The Sunday Times and The Montrealer, he described Levine as "a true artist" who "sees with a clear eye a good deal of the tragic comedy of human life."

Levine soon proved the latter observations correct, explaining to his audience: I often wondered why Canada Made Me was such a subversive book. I never knew why. Now that I have been away from Canada, I have more of an understanding [of why it was at first well-received overseas but not here] ... I grew up in Ottawa, and at the time everyone was told that Canada will belong to the 21st century, both politically and economically.

Excerpts from both books demonstrated the unique sincerity and sound perception found in Levine's poetry and prose. Once he sat down and chatted privately with members of his audience, it became increasingly evident that these qualities have shaped not only the man's writing, but also the man himself.

In person, Levine is amiable and refined; a true gentleman and a skilled conversationalist. He possesses a rare charm and quick sense of humour that perhaps can only come from having survived the Canadian hardships of the 1920's.

Although he has seen and written about most of Canada, this was Levine's first visit to Kingston. He said he was delighted with the large turnout, and that he felt that the variety in age and background of audience members made for a better reading. "Kingston seems to me to be like a little oasis. I only wish that I had come here sooner."

Always a writer, Levine admitted to never even wanting to try journalism or teaching. And, much like the devoted readers who came out to see him, he said that he is truly glad that he followed his instincts.

*New editions of Norman Levine's books are available at Printed Passage Books, 50 Princess St.

The Beat and the Still

The beat and the still
And the beat, caught, lift,
Of the rook
And the gull
Over sea, roof, hill:
Disturb this place from sleep.

With the snow of the moon
Make a flaming lane
For the wind
And the owl
Through the hungry moon:
Disturb this place from sleep.

With the blood of the heart
Heat a landscape up
Tip the sea
And the land
Through the suburb town,
and
Disturb this place from sleep.

Norman Levine

ASUS JACKETS

Hey Artsci 97's (and 96's, 95's, 94's too!)

Get you Arts and Science Leather Jacket!

Orders will be taken in the JDUC Upper Ceilidh, 7-10pm,
Tuesday, Wednesday & Thursday ONLY

You must bring a sweater/sweatshirt for sizing, along with a $160 deposit in
CASH, CERTIFIED
CHEQUE or MONEY ORDER

ASUS JACKETS

WANTED!

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

BUSINESS MANAGER:

APPLICATIONS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE JOURNAL HOUSE, THE AMS, AND THE GREY HOUSE, AND ARE DUE SEPTEMBER 22 AT 5:30 PM.

Please include resume and cover letter.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is responsible for the long-term strategic planning and financial operations of the Journal and is accountable to the AMS.

ONE PROFESSOR:

OR OTHER QUALIFIED NON-STUDENT WITH A KNOWLEDGE OF QUEEN'S AND THE NATURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL; THIS SHALL NORMALLY BE A TWO-YEAR TERM.

The Queen's Journal, 272 Earl St., 545-2800

"Writing is a hard way to make a living, but a good way to make a life." -Doris Betts

Write for Literary Lapses! Drop off your poetry and prose at The Journal House, 272 Earl Street. Please include your name and phone number. If you're interested in either writing a book review or helping ornament our section, then drop by or call 545-2800 and leave a message for Megan or Tim.

Attention aspiring poets!

The National Library of Poetry will be awarding $12,000 in prizes to over 250 poets in the North American Open Poetry Contest this year.

To enter, send ONE original poem to The National Library of Poetry, 11419 Cronridge Dr., P.O. Box 704-ZI, Owings Mills, MD 21117. Poems should be no more than 20 lines, and the poet's name and address should appear on the top of the page. Entries must be postmarked by September 30, 1993.

Printed Passage Books Ltd

Fall Authors' Series 1993

We are very proud and excited to present you with our schedule of Author Evenings for the 1993 season. All of the evenings will be held at the Grand Theatre and begin at 8:00 p.m., except for the readings specified.

Tickets are free of charge, but must be picked up at the store beforehand. You may call us at 546-7650 and we will be happy to reserve tickets to any or all of the evenings for you, to be picked up at your convenience.

Major-General Lewis MacKenzie

Wednesday, September 22nd

Arthur Black & Thomas King

Tuesday, September 28th

Jeffrey Simpson & Ben Wicks

Monday, October 4th

Ken Dryden

Saturday, October 16th

12:00 to 1:00 p.m.

Printed Passage Books,

50 Princess Street

Dryden will be signing copies of his latest book.

Ian Brown & David Phillips

Monday, October 18th

Matt Cohen & Graeme Gibson

Tuesday, October 26th

Ronald Wright & Michael Yates

Wednesday, November 3rd

Margaret Atwood

Wednesday, November 10th

8:00 p.m.

Ambassador Hotel,

1550 Princess Street

Jane Urquhart

Wednesday, November 17th

7:00 p.m.

Queen's University, Room T.B.A.

Walter Stewart & Diane Francis

Monday, November 22nd

Dick Irvin & Ross Brewitt

Tuesday, November 30th

50 Princess Street

at the corner of Princess & King

Open 7 Days a Week

Phone: 546-7650 Fax: 546-5638

Serving Kingston for over 15 years

Bentley pulled open the refrigerator door to find nothing but disappointment. Unfortunately, it had become a sight that was all too familiar; one lone pickle marinating at the bottom of a murky jar, eight containers of yet another batch of his mother's jam and something of unknown origin lurking in the vegetable drawer. But like most students, Bentley continued to peer into the refrigerator for several minutes as if a clubhouse sandwich was about to materialize. Once he realized this was an exercise in futility, he closed the door to come face to face with another unpleasant reminder of his financial predicament - the phone, cable and P.U.C. bills magnetized to the door. What was Bentley to do? There was no money in his account and his credit rating was so abysmal that he couldn't even qualify for a Bandito Video card. Luckily, however, Queen's students have been contributing to a bursary endowment fund through the Queen's Challenge to help students in Bentley's position.

With the cost of post-secondary education on the rise, there is an even greater number of students who are in need of financial assistance. In order to ensure the availability of such assistance, additional monies are being funnelled into the endowment fund to aid financially strapped scholarship and bursary programs. The student contribution to the endowment fund is targeted at $200,000. Without students helping students, Bentley and many others like him would be unable to attend Queen's. Don't let Bentley down.

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

MOTHER NATURE IS CALLING.

LIGHT HIKERS FROM

Caldera 3/4 Plus

MERRELL FOOTWEAR

Reebok

NOW IN STOCK

Runners' Choice

THE SERIOUS CHOICE FOR ATHLETIC FOOTWEAR
260 PRINCESS ST. 542-2410

BIKE SALE

up to 300 BICYCLES ON DISPLAY

RALEIGH "QUANTUM"
18 sp. MTB
INDEX GEARS
Reg. $269.00. $239.00
32 only

RENEGADE "DURANGO"
10 sp. MTB
INDEX GEARS
Reg. 249.99. $219.00
24 only

NISHIKI "ROCKHOUND"
21 sp. MTB
ALTUS AID GROUP
Reg. $589.99. $569.00
6 only

SCHWINN "CRISSCROSS"
21 sp. HYBRID
Reg. $479.99. $399.00
4 only

SCHWINN "HURRICANE"
18 sp. HYBRID
INDEX GEARS
Reg. $379.99. $299.00
3 only

CANNONDALE "M700"
21 sp. MTB
ALUMINUM FRAME
Reg. $1199.00. $1049.00
4 only

NISHIKI 'BARBARIAN' BIKE

21 SPEED MTB w/ FRONT SUSPENSION
REG $649.99. $599.00 - 8 only

HEADLIGHT HELMET approved built-in flasher
Reg. $79.95. $59.68

COMPUTER CAT-EYE MIGHTY
Reg. $49.99. $29.99

LOCK NORCO U-LOCK GUARD II
(white only)
Reg. $24.99. $17.04

REAR RACK by NORCO
(yellow, green, red)
Reg. $35.00. $19.22

RACK BAG by LUGGER
CORDUROY nylon
w/ shoulder strap
Reg. $39.99. $18.46

BIKE LIGHT "KRYPTON" detachable
Reg. $21.99. $16.46

SOURCE FOR SPORTS

121 PRINCESS ST.
DOWNTOWN, 542-2892

OPEN HOUSE

at

LE CENTRE FRANÇAIS de QUEEN'S

96 rue Albert, 545-2534

Tuesday, September 21

12:00: Brown bag lunch
1:00 - 5:00: Drop-in hours
8:00 pm: Launching of 1993-94's activities

YOU ARE WELCOME

MONITOR COMPANY
A Strategy Consulting Firm

CONSULTANT POSITIONS

Available for Highly Qualified Queen's University Undergraduates of All Academic Disciplines

Monitor Company is a rapidly growing strategy consulting firm based in Cambridge, Massachusetts, with offices in Toronto, Los Angeles, Milan, Amsterdam, Madrid, Seoul, Tokyo, New York, and London, England.

- Our international client base is composed primarily of Fortune 100 companies and their international equivalents
- We utilize a team based, collaborative approach in order to help our clients formulate and implement business strategy
- Our environment is high energy and provides an exceptional opportunity for continual learning and challenge

If you would like to know more about career opportunities for dynamic, highly motivated Queen's students, please attend our information session.

Information session to be held on Wednesday September 22, 1993 starting at 5:30pm, at the Quiet Pub

For more information, please inquire about our Job and Company description at the Career Planning & Placement Office

Monitor Company
The Monitor Building
152 King Street East, Toronto, Ontario
M5A 1J3
(416) 941-9199, fax (416) 941-9166

Sports

Avenging Gaiters wax outclassed Gaels 34-7

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

(LENNOXVILLE, P.Q.) A first-class team never forgets a playoff drubbing, especially when it occurs on national television. The Bishop's Gaiters proved to have excellent memories on Saturday, and when they added near-perfect execution, it was more than enough to avenge last November's 32-6 Dunsmore Cup loss to the Queen's Golden Gaels.

The fifth-ranked Gaiters (2-0) dominated the sixth-ranked Gaels (1-1) from start to finish in front of a packed Homecoming crowd of 2,500 at Coulter Field. Bishop's combined a balanced ground and air attack with a ravenous defense which applied relentless pressure. Bishop's recorded six quarterback sacks and consistently saddled the Gaels with terrible field position.

A few days before the game, Gaels' offensive lineman Bryce Ivanchuk commented, "We won't have any problem getting jacked up for Bishop's." Alas, that was not the case, as the Gaiters simply beat up the Gaels all day with their sharper intensity and execution.

Bishop's used their no-huddle offense and outstanding field position (their average starting position was the Queen's 45 in the first half) to keep the Gaels' defense on the field for nearly 40 minutes, eventually tiring out Queen's defenders. The Gaiters paid particular attention to All-Canadian tailback Brad Elberg, and allowed few long returns or big plays by the Gaels. Bishop's took a page out of the Gaels' playbook by blitzing effectively and often, keeping quarterback Steve Othen under pressure most of the game. Othen took several hard hits.

The Gaiters have a veteran-laden team which has played well for several seasons, but has fallen short in key playoff games. In both those respects, Bishop's is similar to last year's Gaels.

Gaiters 21-0 at halftime

The Gaiters led 21-0 at halftime on short TD runs by backs Greg Sargent and Charlie Orchison, and a third-down TD pass from All-Canadian quarterback Jim Murphy to receiver Val Amigo. In the second half, Murphy reached the end zone himself on a short sneak, and Greg Hiscox rounded out Gaiter scoring with two field goals. Bishop's offense drove very efficiently down the short fields they were presented with.

When Queen's had the ball, they had to drive long fields to score, and could not mount the necessary sustained drives. In the first half, the Gaels' average starting position was their own 18. The Gaels were done in by interceptions, fumbles, excellent plays by Gaiter defenders, and their own sloppy execution and slipshod tackling.

"Thunder and Lightning"

Bishop's appropriately named "Thunder and Lightning" offense had its day, and then the rain began to fall. With the Gaiters' dominance complete, the only question was whether the Gaels could avoid their first shut-out since 1975. In Doug Hargreaves' 18 seasons as head coach, Queen's has never been bagelled. With eight minutes left, Rob Weir came in at quarterback, and directed the Gaels to their only scoring march of the day. Weir, putting more mustard on his throws than Othen, completed three passes to half-back Paul Kozan for first downs, hit receiver Tyler Kudar for a 33-yard gain when Kudar got in behind the Gaiter defender, and finished the drive himself on a one-yard sneak with a minute to go. Weir then converted the Gaels' first score in over six quarters, since the first half of the Ottawa win.

Although it's still early, this loss probably means that the Gaels' playoff road will run through Lennoxville for the fourth straight year. Queen's has not beaten Bishop's in a regular-season game since 1989's perfect season.

In other OQIFC games, Carleton Ravens (1-1) recorded their first win in what seems like decades, edging the 0-2 Ottawa Gee-Gees 19-18, while McGill Redmen (2-0) got a nervous win on the road, and a hammering from Bishop's. The 1992 Gaels did not lose another game, rolling off nine straight wins culminating with the Vanier Cup. If this year's team has similar aspirations, there's no better time to raise their game than this coming Saturday. After spending four straight weekends on the road, the Gaels at last get a home game against Carleton. Help them lift their intensity by coming to Richardson Stadium at 1 p.m. Admission is free with your student card. If you can't make it, CFRK (101.9 FM) has live coverage starting at 12:30, with Bill Miklas and Mark Bischoff providing play-by-play.

Repeat of '92

So the 1993 Queen's season has begun the same as 1992 did—an exhibition loss, a nervous win on the road, and a hammering from Bishop's. The 1992 Gaels did not lose another game, rolling off nine straight wins culminating with the Vanier Cup. If this year's team has similar aspirations, there's no better time to raise their game than this coming Saturday. After spending four straight weekends on the road, the Gaels at last get a home game against Carleton. Help them lift their intensity by coming to Richardson Stadium at 1 p.m. Admission is free with your student card. If you can't make it, CFRK (101.9 FM) has live coverage starting at 12:30, with Bill Miklas and Mark Bischoff providing play-by-play.

Cross Country

Gaels finish strong at Western Invitational

BY JASON LEWIS
The Queen's Journal

Sunny skies and mild weather greeted over 250 athletes from 15 teams at Western's 19th Annual Invitational Cross-Country Meet. This meet is the premiere meet of Ontario's cross-country season, drawing competition from as far away as Michigan and Quebec. The races, 5k for women and 10k, for men were held on the rolling fairways of the Thames Valley Golf Club making it one of the most challenging courses of the season. This, however, did not daunt the Gaels as they went on to place third out of fifteen teams in the women's category and fifth out of fifteen in the men's. Even more promising is the fact that the women were the first place Ontario team and the men third which bodes extremely well for the upcoming OUAA's and the OWIAA's in late October. These strong team finishes will likely move the Gaels up in the national rankings. The men are currently ranked eighth in the country and will likely move up to sixth or seventh, where the currently unranked women will rocket to fifth or sixth. Coaches Dave and Jeff are very pleased with the results and expect even more significant success in upcoming meets.

Rookie Suzanne Garret led the Queen's women with a 13th place finish in a smoking time of 19:08. Close on her heels was Judy Elrassy with another of her patented finishing kicks and Sophie Kenward, the women's captain, placing 15th and 20th. Guaranteeing the Gaels success were Jen Drynan, 30th, and Melissa Buchan, 33th, putting in standout performances in a field of over 120 women.

The men's team was lead, as usual, by captain Todd Jones who placed 23rd with a time of 33:49 on the legendary course. The dynamic Derek Hackshaw and Al Pribaz supported that with 26th and 27th place finishes respectively, while Paul "Brain-freeze" Green was 31st. Chris Minns rounded out the top five with an exciting performance and 44th place.

These performances come close on the heels of last week's success at the Guelph Open meet. Though the women did not field a team, Queen's was made proud by the men's team handily winning the early season meet. The team had coalesced at their pre-season training camp at a highly secret location in the Ottawa valley and immediately proved the depth and strength of their team at Guelph.

The men's race was won by Olympian Brendan Matthias, although, the U of T team could not hold back the Gaels led by Todd Jones in 4th, Derek Hackshaw 7th, Al Pribaz 10th, Grant Strachan 12th and Paul Green in 13th.

These early season success are making the Gaels a force to be reckoned with in the racing community. Upcoming events include our very own Queen's invitational next weekend. There will be road trips to Sudbury the following week and a big adventure to Lehigh University in Pennsylvania to compete against high calibre NCAA teams. Following that is a pre-OUAA/OWIAA meet at Waterloo with the championships being held on the same course two weeks later. Based on recent results, you can expect to see high quality performances from both the women's and men's teams throughout this exciting season.

men's soccer

Queen's opens season with win against Trent

BY DAN McNAIR
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Varsity men's soccer team opened their '93 campaign on a positive note with encouraging results in pre-season action. The Golden Gaels defeated Jefferson College 5-0 in their first pre-season test, and they reached the final of the annual Old Four Tournament with a convincing 4-0 win over Bishop's University. In the final of the Old Four Queen's suffered a narrow loss in a well-contested battle to the University of Toronto.

As the Gaels embarked on their journey to Peterborough to face Trent for their regular season opener, the complexion of the team looked markedly different from last year's squad. The new blend of rookies and veterans promised to deliver a fresh and exciting brand of soccer that would combine the eagerness and enthusiasm of new blood, with the composure and confidence of experienced veterans.

The game opened in a rather disorderly fashion as both teams fought to exert control over one another. During much of the first half Queen's struggled to find their form against a Trent team that lacked structure and focus. Trent applied some pressure on the Gaels' defence through a series of long balls played into the Trent forwards. However, Gaels captain Marc Labrom maintained strict control over his defence as each threat at the long-ball game presented was subsequently quashed. Late in the first half, Queen's utilized the counterattack and a probing through ball by Rick Boomgardt allowed striker Jonathan Soler to break the nil-nil deadlock.

At the onset of the second half it was clear that the half time instructions administered by coach Dr. John Walker called for greater composure, as the Gaels began playing with a more definite sense of purpose, contrasting highly with the chaotic style of play witnessed in the first half. Shortly after the kick-off Trent conceded their second goal as Queen's pressure continued to mount. Rookie Lionel Neves was allowed to capitalize on some haphazard defending errors and put the Gaels ahead 2-0. About 10 minutes later Queen's again found the back of the Trent goal as Rick Boomgardt pounced on a loose ball that resulted from rookie Brendon Johnson's powerful shot. As it began to seem as though Queen's would have their way with Trent, a lapse in concentration allowed a Trent free kick just outside of the Gaels 18 yard box. The free kick was extremely well-executed and Trent cheers resounded as the ball reached the back of the net. However, their jubilation soon subsided when a timely tackle on the Trent goalkeeper by rookie Erik Igel provided occasion for a deft chip from Jonathan Soler that left the entire Trent defence helpless as they watched goal number 4 drop into the back of the net.

At this point it seemed inevitable that the Trent defence would again concede to the relentless pressure provided primarily from the Queen's forwards. As Trent struggled to contain the Gaels forwards, their marking of other players began to deteriorate rapidly. Rookie Vineet Ganju exploited the Trent weakness and found an open net in which to place goal number 5.

At the end of the day the score stood 5-1 and Queen's returned to Kingston triumphant and confident as they begin to prepare for their weekend matchup with the Universities of York and Toronto at Richardson.

SPORTS shorts

TENNIS TANGO

The men's tennis team travelled to St. Catharines on Saturday to take on both Brock and Waterloo in a season opening double-header. Travelling members were veterans Pete Walker, Richard Thomson, Mike Harris, Chris Birtwhistle, Dave McCullum, and Mark Shinozaki, accompanied by rookies Jason Christie and John Beckman.

The format for the tennis is singles play from #1 through #5, and doubles #1 and #2. The Gaels, considered by many to have the strongest team in the O.U.A.A. this year, pounded their opponents by a score of 6-1 to finish the weekend with a 12-2 league record. Notable performances came from Richard Thomson and Mike Harris, who went undefeated with two singles and two doubles victories each. Peter Walker, playing #1 in both singles and doubles, came off two difficult singles matches to rebound and sweep the doubles for the Gaels.

Play continues next Saturday at home (West Campus courts adjacent to Richardson stadium) against the McMaster Marauders. Play starts at 12:00pm, and any fan support would be greatly appreciated.

—GORAN

RUGBY RUMBLE

A brief note to let everyone know that Queen's thrashed Guelph 22-0. Gareth Pettigrew opened the scoring on a penalty kick, then a try by John Parker (converted), followed by a Sebastian Orsee (don't confuse him with the museum), and this was followed by the following: a try by Drew MacNaughton. Highlights: Guelph's fly half dropped the ball on the first try to give us a turnover (right out of the oven), there was a light pack and the Guelph backs hit hard. Rumour has it that they were fast as individuals, but evidently not fast enough for the collective.

In other Rugby action, the seconds waltzed around Guelph seconds and won 34-10.

—JOSEY WALES

WHAT'S ON

Upcoming Home Events:
Cross Country:

- September 25 Cross-Country
- September 25 Football vs. Carleton @ Richardson Stadium
- September 25 Rugby vs. McMaster @ Kingston Field
- September 25 Men's Tennis Tournament @ Richardson Courts

—SANJOY MACMINNISH

Golfing Gaels take third at home opener

Gaels fail to defend title at Queen's Invitational

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Golden Gaels golf team began their 1993 season with a third-place finish in their own Queen's Invitational on Sunday at Glen Lawrence Golf Club north of Kingston. Queen's was unable to defend the title it won last year.

The Gaels' 'A' team posted a 317 total, counting the best four 18-hole scores from five players. The Queen's 'B' team, with only four players, still finished with 324, good for fifth place among eight teams.

On a sunny, gusty day, Universite de Quebec a Montreal emerged as team champions with a solid 305 score. University of Ottawa claimed second, four shots back. Both UQAM and Ottawa had all four counting scores under 80, an impressive feat under challenging conditions on the poorly-conditioned course.

Francis Graveline of UQAM captured individual medalist honours with an excellent score of 72, one over par over the hilly 6,500 yard layout.

The best Queen's score was turned in by Chris

Seitz, who toured the Glen in '76, good for fifth place in the 39-player field. Derrick Dupuis (79), Gordon Percy (80), Darrin Parker (82), and Robin Hutchinson (83) rounded out Queen's 'A'. On Queen's 'B', both Sam Byrd and Chad Gregory impressed with 78's, good for an eighth-place tie, while Jeremy Blumer shot 83 and Jason Alexander had 85.

Ed Deans is coaching the Queen's team again this year. Deans is happy to see the return of veterans Seitz, Dupuis, Hutchinson and especially Percy, who missed last year with a separated shoulder. In 1990 Percy was the silver medalist in the OUAA finals, when Queen's captured the team championship.

In a busy upcoming week, the Gaels will travel to the Trent Invitational at Kawartha Lakes on Wednesday, and to the Waterloo Invitational at Conestoga on Friday. The final team lineup for the two-day OUAA championship is still being determined. Players' performance at Kawartha, Conestoga, and in further qualifying rounds on Kingston courses will all count as coach Deans endeavors to select the strongest possible five-man squad.

Trent suckers soccered

Women's soccer hammers Trent 6-1

BY MAG SMITH
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Women's Soccer team opened their season last Wednesday with a resounding victory over Trent. A confident Queen's squad came on strong from the start, securing three unchallenged goals by the end of the first half. Rookie Paula Williams scored Queen's first goal, which was followed by goals from Deb Cancian and Laurie Thompson.

The second half was no less exciting as the Queen's squad came out on the offensive prepared to make their first league game a decisive victory. A strong defense led by vets Monica Howard, Leanne Lawetz and Laurie Thompson provided the confidence needed to allow the forwards to attack at full throttle. Deb Cancian scored another goal this half and Joanne Richardson hammered yet another one past the Trent goalie on an outside shot. Paula Williams scored a spectacular diving header to bring the final score to 6-1 for Queen's.

This past weekend, the team defeated the U of Blues 2-0 and lost to York 3-2. On Wednesday, the team travels to challenge Carleton. This young squad is certainly capable of playing the calibre of ball that could make them the leaders of the Eastern division.

IMPORTANT

Information concerning all home football games.

- No alcoholic beverages are permitted in Richardson Stadium.
- No person will be admitted to Richardson stadium who is apparently under the influence of alcohol. Persons entering the stadium may be subject to a personal search.
- Spectators entering onto the playing field, or running track area prior to, during the game, at half-time or at the conclusion of the game will be removed from the Stadium and charged by the University with trespassing.
- Thank you for your cooperation!

LOOKING FOR THE GOOD STUFF?

DROP INTO SEPP'S SKI SHOP

WE'VE GOT IT

GERB

VOLKL, LANGE
MARKER, K2, ROSSIGNOL,
NORDICA, KASTLE,
SALOMON,
ROLLERBLADE, MERRELL, AND MORE!

GOODS

PATAGONIA, SIERRA DESIGNS,
NORTH FACE,
OAKLEY, RAYBAN,
COULOIR, SUNICE,
CHLOROPHYLLE,
ROYAL ROBINS,
AND MORE!

SEPP'S SKI SHOP - 131 MONTREAL ST. DOWNTOWN
542-4558 OR 542-5224

P.S. THE SUMMER SKI SALE CONTINUES!

Entertainment

Diggin' the Worms

Marika Glickman

Who un-earthed them?

The obvious reference points for what they do (spoken and musical comedy, basically) are Meryn Cadell (for whom they opened last year) and Corky and the Juice Pigs. However, they lack Cadell's mild, arty, pretension and the Juice Pigs' air of smug self-satisfaction with their own cleverness. The Arrogant Worms are just three educated, witty guys relaxing and being extremely funny.

After a bit of juggling to warm the crowd up, the Worms set about the task at hand. They performed unamplified, just the three of them on the Grad Club's little "stage". Trevor Strong did a lot of singing and general hamming, Mike McCormick did a lot of guitar-playing and general hamming, and John Whytock did a lot of everything else, covering bass, bodhran, glockenspiel, hamming, silly-puttty-egg shakers, trumpet... There was even a Jew's-harp in there somewhere. Everyone sang and played guitar at one time or another.

The atmosphere was great. The Grad Club is a pretty intimate place, and with the audience packed in, sitting cross-legged on the floor, it felt a little like a dimly-lit, adult, funkier version of Romper Room. There was a very good, warm, human vibe to the whole thing. When it was over, the crowd clamoured for an encore just like they would at Wembley Arena.

It makes you feel like a pop star, a bit, to quote Neil Tennant. I can only attribute this to the Worms themselves. They are so funny and engaging that only a curmudgeon of the highest order could fail to like them.

They played two sets, the first one mixing their songs with little comic sketches, the second all songs. The sketches are mostly wickedly funny and frequently disgusting parodies of commercials: Lipton Poodles 'n' Sauce, for example, or Captain Cannibal's Restaurant ("Bring your own kid or pick one from our tank!" and something about "country-fried bowels" that had the audience perfecting their simultaneous groan-of-disgust-and-howl-of-maniacal-laugh-ter).

The songs were a mix of album favourites like "Jesus' Brother Bob" and "The Last Saskatchewan Pirate", along with unrecorded stuff that is equally good, if not better than what's on the album. There lies the only real problem with the Arrogant Worms. To be entirely frank, their album isn't as good as it might be. It doesn't do them justice at all. Songs like "Let's Go Bowling" and "Don't Go Into Politics", which are fantastic live, sound dry and repetitive on disc. The solution, therefore, is to see them live as often as you can, and maybe pass on the record. Their album is now out on CD, with new artwork, but even the most pristine recording cannot reproduce the virtual epiphany that is the Arrogant Worms in person. Maybe the solution is for them to record their next record live. In any case, if you have ten bucks to spend on them, I'd see them live three or four times, rather than buying the tape.

Anyway, here's the bottom line: the Arrogant Worms are great, even if there are only three of them, and the Grad Club was the place to be last Thursday night. "Kingston's best-kept secret?" Maybe. A must-see concert? Definitely.

Rising Dough

Doughboys
Crush
A&M - finally!
BY STEVE CAIN
The Queen's Journal

So... Soul Asylum finally made the cover of Rolling Stone.

When my favourite underdogs make it big I never know whether to be pleased or pissed. On one hand there's not much fun lauding a band that no one's ever heard of but, on the other, a popular band tends to saturate the airwaves and test the endurance of even fans.

"Runaway Train" is at that stage currently, and now the Doughboys' "Shine" is fast approaching.

Hey punk, my chronic generation...

But will our favourite Montreal post-punks' new release be their Grave Dancer's Union or just their Hang Time? Well, with the success of "Shine" and an album's worth of possible follow-up singles, as well as John Kastner's as yet untapped potential to follow Dave Pirner's long-haired-heart-throb posterboy success, Crush may very well do it for the boys.

You make the decisions or leave it up for modern science...

A new record label is also a big help. Kastner and company have never made it a secret that they were unhappy with their relationship with Restless Records and the label's inability to get their first three albums into the stores. A truly unkind cut, for all three - but especially 1990's Happy Accidents - were fantastic releases and deserving more public access than an occasional video on CityLimits and a single overpriced copy in a small alternative record store.

You speak to me in my clock radio, and if pinball leads to heroin then all paths lead home...

Along with a label change, the boys took a personnel change and an interesting choice of producer. The departure of John Bondhead, in favour of Peter Arsenault, hasn't made too much difference in sound (although it has reduced the John count in the band from three to two) but the choice of producer Daniel Rey has had some impact. While Stephen Egerton and Bill Stevenson (of the band ALL) gave the Doughboys a California hardcore sound on Home Again and Michael-Philip Wojewoda gave Happy Accidents certain acoustic and, dare I say, Beatles-esque touches, with Rey - along with mixing by Dave Ogilvie (both known for work with industrial bands) - the Doughboys have a sharper and cleaner sound and even some of the vocal distortion commonly used by those other Canuck underdogs Skinny Puppy. (Oh, the puns!)

Dull and dark is how I feel and to shine would be unreal but it's really no big deal...

Crush starts on the strongest possible note with "Shine", two minutes and forty seconds of pure bliss moving from restrained claustrophobic strumming to explosions of pop power leaving the listener begging for just one more verse to sing along to. It also features the best uses of the word chapeau within an English song.

Co-writing credits go to the U.K.'s Wiz (leader of Mega City Four, and also apparently the Doughboys' guitar roadie when touring Europe!).

Another soapbox has been made for presidential motorcades... Wiz also lends a hand to the band's other pop success, "Fix Me", clocking in at 3:06. Thus, while Kastner has found a worthy collaborator in his not inconsiderable musical genius, the credits claim that the whole band pitched in on the rest of the tunes. This fact hasn't caused too much of a departure as tunes like "Tearing Away" (3:29) and "Everything" (3:22) harken strongly to Doughboys circa Happy Accidents (when Kastner was the sole songwriter) with their catchy guitar, soaring vocals and clever lyrics.

Nine out of ten dentists disagree, statistics talk for you not me...

"Melt" (2:55) and "End of the Hall" (3:55) are notable for the above-mentioned synthesized vocals but Kastner has, as always, a pop-heart and can't keep it up for long, bursting into his characteristic vox stylings before the first chorus.

She's just a toothpaste cap fallin' down my bathroom sink...

You might be wondering about the attention being paid to the song length on Crush, the reason being that the rule of thumb on the album is "the longer the song, the worse the song." A true gauge, for "Dis-

Please see MORE / p.24

Van Damme drives Woo wide of mark

Hard Target
Directed by John Woo
Capitol Theatre
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

Yes, this movie's been out for a while, but it was playing out at Catarqui, which qualifies as deepest boondock for those of us with neither a car nor sufficient inclination to determine how to get out there via Kingston Transit. So really we can consider Hard Target's move downtown to be its true Kingston opening. (Besides, I've got space to fill damnit, and it was either this or Airborne and now that I'm in fourth year I don't do no skateboard movies.)

First, a tale of two screenings from last year's Festival of Festivals. Two consecutive press screenings in a downtown Toronto theatre. Two foreign films: Tout les matins du monde, a lavish French period piece featuring Gerard Depardieu, and Hardboiled, a frenzied cops versus gangsters bullet-fest from Hong Kong. One screening attracted only a handful of critics, and afterward some conceded that they felt obliged to like the film, though most simply grumbled about having wasted their time so early in the morning. The other screening was standing room only, and the sense of anticipation was little short of electric. Spontaneous applause broke out several times, and everyone left happy.

The film shown at the latter screening was, if you haven't already guessed, Hardboiled, from director John Woo. Woo enjoys the unusual distinction of being a critics' darling for making action movies, a genre often regarded as odious by the intellectual press.

What is all the fuss about? Woo's films, particularly 1989's The Killer (which first brought him international prominence and is now available on video) and Hardboiled demonstrate an enormous appreciation of American and French film noir. Their action sequences are wildly inventive and nothing short of spectacular; only Woo would have the audacity to locate a final shoot-out in a hospital maternity ward (as he did in Hardboiled; don't worry, the babies all made it through). Most importantly, Woo creates intriguing characters whose complexities transcend the often cartoon-ish events around them. The title character in The Killer is a guilt-stricken hitman who agrees to take on one last job to pay for the cornea transplant of a woman he accidentally blinded. On his trail is an unorthodox cop who becomes little less than infatuated with his quarry and ultimately fights beside him. The success of these films is also attributable to the quality of the actors Woo attracts, such as Chow Yun-fat (the lead in both these films and Hong Kong's biggest star) and Tony Leung.

Don't pull a groin Jean-Claude!

Which brings us to Hard Target, Woo's Hollywood debut, starring Jean-Claude Van Damme. The move across the Pacific has yielded mixed results: Woo's renowned sense for action direction remains (at times, gloriously) intact, but the curled beefcake who saved her from a nasty mugging. After her father's body is found, they discover that he was the victim of an organization which offers rich sickos the chance to hunt human prey. (Homeless veterans are selected, the rationale being that they have the skills to offer a challenge.

What of the action? It is, needless to say, dynamic and increasingly improbable. Bullets and explosions abound, climaxing in a protracted twenty-versus-one battle in an abandoned factory. One of its best scenes is cribbed directly from Hardboiled, as Van Damme and a villain run the length of the building with nothing but windows between them, each firing his guns, neither, of course, suffering so much as a scratch.

Woo definitely pushes things over the top. The playfulness begins with old-fashioned wipes between scenes and the repeated slow motion replay of even the most consequential actions. Lance Henriksen hams it up as the chief force of evil, and indeed, the only one who doesn't seem to be in on the gag is Van Damme, but that's not too surprising.

If it lacks the characterisation of Woo's early works, Hard Target does succeed in taking the piss out of the American action film, subverting its clichés by embracing them so wholeheartedly and the decisively upping the ante in action department.

Of course this is what Woo has been doing all along — and doing better — in Hong Kong. Although his upcoming collaboration with Quentin Tarantino could be dynamic, it remains to be seen whether Woo's foray into Hollywood will be the beginning or the end of something good.

gumbo from Gumby. Interestingly, the film boasts a person even less convincing than van Damme as Cajun, namely Wilford Brimley (the lovably crusty geezer from Cocoon and those Quaker Oats commercials, who plays Van Damme's uncle).

It was a confluence of Kingston's musical vanguard and it brought together some of the most intriguing songs and sounds to be heard in the limestone city. It was PF night at the Toucan.

Sharing the common bond of having new releases on Proboscis Funkstone records, the Inbreds, The Shermans, Los Seamonsters and The Stonecutters all performed sets at this event. And for only four dollars this show was a value that rivalled Papa Pete's two for one burgers (but without the fat content).

Opening the night's festivities were the Inbreds, who quickly generated a standing room only audience near the front of the stage. Playing "He Never" and "Tell the Truth" from their recently released single, the band managed to improve upon on both songs, infusing them with a sense of immediacy missing from the album.

As a visual presence the Inbreds are genuine and unaffected, but somewhat limited: Dave Ullich being confined behind a wall of skins and Mike O'Neill usually having pressing vocal duties which prohibit any serious shenanigans from occurring on stage.

On a note of musical criticism, the band still lacks the ability to execute the musical harmonies which add an extra dimension to their recordings, a fact gratefully conceded by Dave Ullich, and one which will hopefully change in the near future.

PF Night
Inbreds/Shermans/Los Seamonsters/Stonecutters
Toucan
BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

It was a confluence of Kingston's musical vanguard and it brought together some of the most intriguing songs and sounds to be heard in the limestone city. It was PF night at the Toucan.

Sharing the common bond of having new releases on Proboscis Funkstone records, the Inbreds, The Shermans, Los Seamonsters and The Stonecutters all performed sets at this event. And for only four dollars this show was a value that rivalled Papa Pete's two for one burgers (but without the fat content).

Opening the night's festivities were the Inbreds, who quickly generated a standing room only audience near the front of the stage. Playing "He Never" and "Tell the Truth" from their recently released single, the band managed to improve upon on both songs, infusing them with a sense of immediacy missing from the album.

As a visual presence the Inbreds are genuine and unaffected, but somewhat limited: Dave Ullich being confined behind a wall of skins and Mike O'Neill usually having pressing vocal duties which prohibit any serious shenanigans from occurring on stage.

On a note of musical criticism, the band still lacks the ability to execute the musical harmonies which add an extra dimension to their recordings, a fact gratefully conceded by Dave Ullich, and one which will hopefully change in the near future.

Of course, there is much more to like about the band's music than there is to criticize. Mike O'Neill's bass ranged from the typical to the bizarre in customary Inbreds fashion. And the band's quality songs were as usual the backbone of the show.

For anyone who has not yet caught the Inbreds act, please be advised, your time may be running out: the Inbreds are soon to release their own full length album which could send them on an inexorable journey towards bigger and better things.

Next up were The Shermans. Relying on a standard three person rock set-up, the Shermans were a step back to the conventional. Issuing good, but standard guitar riffs, the Shermans are a band sorely in need of new lead singer. This is not saying the Shermans' singing is completely inadequate, but with some melodic twists, the group could rise above the monotony of their power riffs.

Perhaps what is most frustrating about The Shermans is the potential they exhibit, but refuse to tap. I can recall seeing the band at Alfie's last year and really enjoying their show, an experience that seems foreign to me now.

The best track of the night was "Crusading." This one lost the slightly pretentious air it possessed on the single and showed itself to be a quality song.

Putting the nose to the funk stone

Moments like these indicate that the Shermans have the tools to succeed, they are just misusing them. I can only hope this is a period of readjustment for the band, and that they will develop into a new and better incarnation.

Supporting their EP AndyFoot, Los Seamonsters opened the third set with a bang and kept the pace up throughout their set. It was obvious PF night was not the place to be if you were looking for ballads. Fronted by Derek Chambers, a.k.a. Billy Death (yes the one with the Pebbles hairdo), Los Seamonsters blasted through their set playing numbers such as "Only a Car" and "Wine". One interesting selection the band elected to play was a cover of the The Boxtops "The Letter." I don't know if this was nod to any particular influences, but it was nice to hear a familiar melody on a night filled with so many new and unfamiliar songs.

Los Seamonsters' sound can be described as conventional guitar-oriented-garage-band fare. Thankfully they perform this sound well, but Los Seamonsters are not threatening to break new ground in the avant garde community.

One of the best elements of the band is their compelling bass-lines which are melodic and drive the chord changes of many of Los Seamonsters' songs.

Overall, Los Seamonsters fit in seamlessly with the other bands.

They hit neither a high nor a low, but simply maintained the night's momentum.

The final band of the night was The Stonecutters. Being the band with the latest full-length album release, the Cutters seemed the logical headliners. But a quick talk with The Stonecutters drummer Goff Ward revealed the band order was predicated on more mundane concerns such as next morning 8:30 classes.

Nevertheless, The Stonecutters played a set worthy of headlining including almost the entire Amazing Discoveries album. Standout tracks included "Glowing Red," "Pyrotexas" and the title track "Amazing Discoveries." The band also played newer numbers not included on the album such as "True Crime" and "Jetstream."

Once billed as a folk-rock outfit, The Stonecutters have mutated to a grittier, tougher sound. Yet, residues of their folk influence remain and are most evident in the singing and guitar playing of Chris Grismer, which reflects a sensitivity and intensity not found in most bands.

At the end of the night enough pints had been consumed to placate most members of the audience. And despite being cramped onto the Toucan's postage-stamp size stage all night, there was little evidence of interecine rivalry between any of the bands. Dave Ullich summed up the simple philosophy of PF Records by saying: "It began as a group of good friends and it still is."

Chris Grismer "Cuts a fine figure."

Derek Yarnell

Having an affair with the arts

BY LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

Festivity was in the air at the Grand Theatre on Saturday as the Kingston Regional Arts Council presented the Sixth Annual "Have an Affair with the Arts". The event is designed to showcase the work of various regional artists and introduce or re-acquaint visitors to the fair with Kingston's numerous arts-oriented organizations.

Visiting the booths and talking to the representatives of the arts groups about upcoming events suggests that the future of the arts is bright in Kingston. Among the exhibitors were the Princess Court Cinema. The repertory cinema is in the midst of the Access to Enjoyment fund-raising campaign, the goal of which is to raise $44,000 to install a platform lift to help people with mobility impairments get to the second floor theatre. On October 1, an infra-red hearing assistive system will be in place, and this marks the first step towards the Princess Court's commitment to making the theatre accessible to everyone. Gourmet film buffs are eagerly anticipating the Princess Court-Chez Piggy gala on November 1, featuring a screening of Like Water for Chocolate followed by dinner at Chez Piggy with a menu based on food from the film.

By offering reduced ticket and subscription prices, the Kingston Symphony hopes to attract more students to its performances. The varied programme includes well-known selections by Beethoven, Mozart, and Tchaikovsky as well as a world premiere of a John Burge choral work. Free lunch-time concerts at City Hall and pre-concert lectures before each Masterworks and Friday Night Classics Concert increase the appeal of the Kingston Symphony's programme and make it easy to gain an introduction to the world of classical music.

An enticing array of titles was displayed by Quarry Press, Kingston's publishing house devoted to showcasing the best of Canadian writing. In addition to fiction and non-fiction adult and children's books, Quarry publishes three periodicals known for their intelligent and innovative content: Quarry Magazine, Poetry Canada, and Canadian Fiction Magazine.

A representative from Queen's own Agnes Etherington Art Centre was on hand to discuss upcoming shows and reinforce the gallery's mandate to serve both Queen's and the larger Kingston community.

Amongst these booths and many others were demonstrations of pottery making, spinning, water-colour painting, and wood-working, plus a special children's activity centre that included face-painting and singalongs.

The structure of "Have an Affair with the Arts" was designed to appeal to people of all ages and backgrounds and to be fun; however, two more important messages could be found beneath the surface. First, the arts are alive and well in Kingston. Although Kingston is a relatively small city, it is refreshingly urbane in its support of the arts, which is attested to by the number of arts organizations that it is able to sponsor.

The second critical message is that the arts are accessible. Events such as this contribute to the demystification of the arts, or the process of making it possible for the average person to appreciate, enjoy, and learn about the arts. Regrettably, many art writers and critics perpetuate the idea that art is not for everyone and that it is justifiable to enclose the arts within walls and allow access to only those armed with relevant university degrees, suave dark clothing, and pretentiously exclusive vocabularies.

This type of snobbery permeates the writing of The Globe and Mail's sanctimonious art critic John Bentley Mays. In August, Mr. Mays expressed profound chagrin at having to share gallery space with patrons, apparently less enlightened than him, who were unable to make sense of certain modern works from the permanent collection of the Art Gallery of Ontario. Mays wrote that there was no point in trying to explain these complex works because these silly people just wouldn't understand. Wake up and smell the turpentine, Mr. Mays. Why are people alienated by the arts? Very simply, it is because many of those who have the background and opportunity to explain the broad themes and subtleties of the arts choose not to, and prefer to keep adding bricks to the wall that often surrounds the arts. Eliminating obscure and elitist vocabulary from discussion about the arts, and making it relevant and the way to educate the average person and build up his or her critical vocabulary.

"Have an Affair with the Arts" therefore deserves applause for making the arts accessible.

Write for Entertainment.
It's the Krustiest section on Earth

To Do List

- Buy Kitty litter
- Return videos
- Finish math assignment
- Do laundry
- Pick up Correspondence Course Notes

QUEEN'S
Part-Time Studies

Part-Time Studies
Faculty of Arts and Science
Telephone 545-2471

RECYCLER SPORTS

- Repairs to all bicycle makes
- Only $9.99, parts extra
- Free pick-up and delivery
- New & used bicycle sales
- Trade-ins accepted
- Bicycle rentals
- Summer & winter sporting goods
- New & used hockey equipment

368
Main St.
Bath
(The Loyalist Centre)

352-1170

Good Breeding makes for a big Splash

The Breeders
Last Splash
4AD/Polygram
BY CHRISTIAN deBRUJN
The Queen's Journal

Spitting in a wishing well. Blown to hell... crash. I'm the last splash.

Last Splash is the second full album release from The Breeders, the band fronted by ex-Pixies bassist (and limited vocalist) Kim Deal.

The Pixies, one of the more interesting (if not unique) American bands of the late 1980's, ended their five-album career in early 1993. Various rumours plagued the band's demise. It was no secret that Deal and (as he was then-known) Black Francis did not get along. The Pixies were Francis' band and Deal unfortunately played a limited role in both the song-writing and singing. Deal only wrote one Pixies song, "Gigantic", from 1988's Surfer Rosa (that album with the great cover!) and sang lead on the group's cover of Neil Young's "I've Been Waiting For You". Ironically, "Gigantic", the Pixies' first "hit", became arguably their most popular song and left fans and critics alike wondering: What to do with Kim? Why won't Francis let her write/sing? Is the man also known as Charles Thompson a chauvinist or, as Chris Mars might say, an "Ego Maniac"? The release of the first Breeders album in 1990, Pod, answered some of these questions. First, Kim can do her own thing quite well. Second, she can indeed write/sing. Third, perhaps old Francis was indeed jealous of Deal's musical talent.

The Breeders first release featured an all-female line-up including ex-Throwing Muses member Tanya Donnelly on guitar/vocals and Josephine Wiggs on bass. The combination of the soft yet powerful Beatles-esque vocals, heavy bass lines and Deal's grinding guitars gave the album a murky feel and surpassed Kim's "other" band's release of that year, Bosanova.

Shortly after the Pixies last release, 1991's Trompe Le Monde, the Breeders released an E.P. entitled Safari. Joining the band for this trip back to the surf-punk/pop tradition of the Pixies was Kim's sister Kelley on guitar/vocals and Mike Hunt on drums, breaking the all female line-up. Deal's continuing concentration on The Breeders, combined with (as he is now known) Frank Black's solo gigs in the U.K., plus the announcement of a soon-to-be-released solo album meant the break-up of the Pixies was inevitable.

Deal, with the break-up official, was now left to pursue The Breeders full time, and her first post-Pixies offering shows that Pod and Safari were only appetizers to the main course. Donnelly's departure to form her own band Belly did not pose a problem, as Kelley Deal took Donnelly's place full time on guitar/vocals. Last Splash contains fifteen tracks which are almost all in line with the Pixies surf-punk/pop style. The first single, "Cannonball", surely one of the more catchier pop songs released this year, is the album's "hit". Kim's vocals combined with the bass/guitar mixes and the slight pause before the final chorus makes the song (although I hate to say it) danceable... even at the peak hours in Alfie's or Clark.

Other standout tracks include "I Just Want To Get Along", with Kelley Deal on lead vocals, the opening track "New Year", and the slightly reworked "Do You Love Me Now?", which originally appeared on the Safari E.P. The album carries on another Pixies tradition with two instrumental tracks, "S.O.S." and "Flip Side", which also follow into the surf-punk/pop sound. One of the more interesting tracks, which shows the potential diversity of the band, is the song "Drivin' On", which has a country feel to it with the added cello and violin. For the truly devoted fan, the Cannonball E.P. is recommended, with its excellent cover of Aerosmith's "Lord of the Thighs" featuring bassist Josephine Wiggs on vocals, plus two other tracks unavailable on the album.

In comparison, the other post-Pixies release, Frank Black's self-titled album, while good, does not come close to matching this woman's talent. Last Splash is one of the better releases so far this year and is an album that gets better with every listen. If you loved the Pixies as much as I do, The Breeders latest offering will not disappoint you.

So look out Frank Black, "Hang On To Your Own Ego"... this woman has you beat.

More Dough

Continued from page 21

possible" (5:14), "Fall" (4:15) and "Neighbourhood Villain" (4:33) are generally failures. These are high-concept, low melody songs that often proceed at a dirge and rarely break into any characteristic poppy moments. It's not as if the Doughboys can't pull off long songs ("The Apprenticeship of Lenny Kravitz" on Happy Accidents was wonderful) it's just that they are so much better when they write short, smart rockers. Perhaps this is what made 1992's When Up Comes Down—a six song EP—such a pure blast of adrenalin.

Liquor and guns and mace refills in convenience stores, blue for boys and pink for girls is all we'll stand up for...

Which I guess brings me back to my original question—will Crush be the Doughboys' "breakthrough album"?

On the strength of "Shine" alone the Doughboys will be a household name in Canada—at the very least in the college radio/ university crowd. However, there's (thankfully) no power-ballad to push it into the pure mainstream the way "Runaway Train" did for Soul Asylum. The Doughboys will have to rest on audiences' taste for hard pop to carry them further. Crush definitely has the potential to do that (perhaps helped by some strong videos) but the album is weakened by the aforementioned epics.

She's just another movie made for TV...

So if not the cover of Spin and Stone, at least those neat little magazines they give out for free at record store—as well as on the top of every reputable critic's end of the year list.

The Man Without A Face
Directed by Mel Gibson
Capitol Theatre
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

"Don't judge a book by its cover."

How many times have we heard this aphorism from our learned parents, teachers and friends? And how many times have we failed to follow the wisdom of this phrase?

I must confess that I myself violated this maxim when I bought my ticket for The Man Without A Face. Until recently, Mel Gibson has limited himself to what Harrison Ford has called (in reference to his own career) "run and jump roles." Like Ford, Gibson has established his name through numerous action movies, and despite the roles he may play in the future, I will always remember him as an action hero—as the leather clad Mad Max, or as the slightly twisted street-cop, Martin Riggs.

To me, the idea of Mel Gibson in a feel-good drama, let alone in the director's chair, seems completely incongruous, and with this in mind, I was somewhat wary as I stood in the queue. Judging by his mediocre performance in last year's Forever Young, I was convinced that Gibson couldn't excel in drama and that his performance in The Man Without A Face would be at best passable, at worst, dismal.

When all was said and done, when the credits finally ended and the houselights came on, I left as I predicted—disgusted. But my disgust wasn't at the movie, nor at Gibson's acting. My disgust was at myself.

Based on a novel by Isabelle Holland, The Man Without A Face is an emotionally-stirring movie which oscillates between bursts of joy and fits of sorrow. From beginning to end, The Man Without A Face is a captivating two-hour story which delves into the ideas of truth, beauty, and friendship. Okay, I know it sounds cliched. True, at any given moment, there is the real potential that The Man Without A Face could degenerate into melodrama. But the delight—and surprise—of the film is that it never does.

Obviously, my present raving about The Man Without A Face is in sharp contrast to the preconceptions which I had. To be honest, I am ashamed and embarrassed about falling into an all too common trap: of making a judgment without being informed.

The relevance of my confession—the reason why I'm going to such elaborate lengths to assuage my guilt—is that The Man Without A Face deals precisely with the problem to which I have fallen victim. Mel Gibson plays Justin Macleod, a horrifically disfigured school teacher who resides in a quaint New England hamlet. Of course, given the conservative nature of the community, Macleod lives as a pariah. Known commonly as "The Freak", Macleod is the favourite subject of conjecture—rumour marks him as a man who is anything from a mass murderer to a pornographer.

Enter Charles Norstandt (Nick Stahl), a disconcerted twelve year-old whose only ambition is to escape his dysfunctional family. Branded as the family retard, Chuck ironically finds his escape by applying to a military academy (the notion is as tragic as it is ironic—fleeing from one oppressive environment to another). However, in order to attend, Chuck must first pass the admissions test, and to do so, he reluctantly seeks the help of Macleod. After some initial differences, the two develop a lasting friendship, and together they embark on a journey through their haunted pasts.

In an ingenious scene, Macleod reveals his unhappiness by reading the opening lines from Virgil's Aeneid: "I sing of arms and the man... A fugitive, this captain, buffeted / Cruelly on land as on the sea." The passage is beautiful in itself, but in the context of the film, it also underscores the carefully crafted nature of The Man Without A Face. Not only do the lines subtly accentuate Macleod's isolation, but they also demand that the audience re-evaluate its conception of beauty. How can such a man who is, by all "accepted" standards, so ugly, recognize the beauty inherent in poetry? And the question is further complicated when we learn that Macleod is an artist. (Incidentally, some of the pieces are based on the sketches of Queen's Alumni Cheri Evans, BFA'93.)

The answer to which the film points is that beauty is an inner quality rather than an external one. In an exceptionally moving scene, Macleod expresses his frustration with the world's refusal to see an individual's inner qualities, to look underneath the superficial and to discover the person behind the face. He recites Shylock's lines from Act III, scene 1 of The Merchant of Venice: "I am a Jew... If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?"

A comedy would have Macleod enact his revenge on the people who have ostracized him. But, fortunately, the script does not descend to such predictability. Playing on the stereotype that a close, non-parental relationship between a man and boy must necessarily be abusive, Macleod is eventually barred from seeing Chuck. Of course, the audience is fully aware that such a relationship does not exist—yet another example of the discrepancy between appearance and reality. Through the simple technique of dramatic irony, Gibson brilliantly draws the audience into the film—the audience experiences the very same emotions of the protagonists.

Facing up to prejudice

The Man Without A Face refuses to assert that life can have a "happily ever after ending." Rather, it, much like Dead Poets' Society, maintains that tragedy is ever-present in life and constantly upsets our desire for comic endings. But unlike Dead Poets' Society, The Man Without A Face actively extends its message to a universal audience. As the title so subtly suggests, the misunderstanding and the mistreated are faceless individuals—he or she can be any number of individuals in our lives, and we must all rectify our attitudes towards them.

THE AMS IS LOOKING FOR ... 2 STUDENTS AT LARGE

To sit on the Alma Mater Society Committee on Internal Society Structure.

The mandate of this committee is as follows:

To research and devise a structure for the society which would best reflect the purpose and needs of the AMS.

Applications may be picked up in the AMS office and are due by Monday, September 27, 1993, at 5:00pm. For more information please contact:

Todd Minerson
Vice-President (University Affairs)
545-2725

JJ's Distro Bar Hi Boys and Girls!!
Today's Subject: Mathematics

When is the following true? $(\text{apple} + \text{banana}) < \text{money}$

SOLUTION: When $\text{apple} = \text{great}$ and $\text{banana} = \text{Poutine, Salads, Draft, Cappuccino, Steak and Chicken Sandwiches}$

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

CANADA ON SALE!

FROM	TORONTO OW Return	MONTREAL OW Return
Vancouver	199 339	229 359
Calgary	169 299	189 349
Edmonton	169 299	189 349
Kingston	69 98	59 109
Saskatoon	179 299	179 329
Winnipeg	139 229	149 269
St. John	149 289	129 229
Holifox	159 269	129 209
St. John's	199 379	169 329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

When is a student happy to get 66%?

When they sign up for a long distance Savings Plan from Bell.

For $4.00 a month, the Bell Long Distance Savings Plan can save you up to 66% on long distance charges. Visit your nearest Bell Phonecentre™ store to sign up. 66% never looked so good.

Bell
Answering your call™

In a triumphant Mode

Depeche Mode
Skydome
BY CATHERINE LIPA
The Queen's Journal

Thousands of devout fans of the British band Depeche Mode crowded into the Skydome, for a night of worship last Wednesday. For two hours the varied congregation witnessed a spectacular show of music lights and images.

Depeche Mode's concerts have long been dubbed "events" and the Devotional Tour, in support of their latest full-studio release, Songs of Faith and Devotion, is no exception. On stage, a podium was set up halfway back upon which musicians Alan Wilder, Andrew "Fletch" Fletcher and Martin Gore (the eccentric songwriter, wearing a matching squinted top and pants) played keyboards and two female back-up singers supported vocalist Dave Gahan.

The podium was supported by upwards of six cubic video screens on which pre-recorded images were shown, including silhouettes of band members (most frequently Gahan) and hands constantly printing "STRIPPED" across bare torsos were featured during, of course, the song "Stripped". All of these video segments were courtesy of creative guru Anton Corbijn, best known for his work on U2's artwork, videos and ZooTV tour.

Behind this upper stage hung the four "I" symbols from the Songs cover, each one representing a member of the band. The steel appearance of the symbols was consistent with Depeche's earlier "industrial" roots, which influenced such bands as Nitzer Ebb.

The evening's play list concentrated on their two most recent albums, Songs, of which all but three tracks were played, and 1990's Violator. Although these are the band's more mature efforts lyrically, long-time Depeche fans were neglected, given the absence of such old live faves as "Master and Servant", "Pipeline" and "Just Can't Get Enough". It would have been interesting to hear how the band would have adapted these songs to their new, rockier sound.

"I Feel You", the first single from Songs, introduced drums (majestically moved onto the main stage and played by Wilder) to Depeche's live show. Along with Gore's guitar-playing and Gahan's encouragement of live participation (the crowd sang the chorus), the song made the show feel almost like a "real" rock concert. Many other songs were re-mixed for the live show, including "Death's Door", one of the songs sung by Gore, which was more bluesy than the version on the Until the End of the World soundtrack, and older songs such as "Never Let Me Down Again" and "Fly on the Windscreen", which both received the live-drum treatment.

A big disappointment was "Condemnation", the next British single and Gahan's self-professed best recorded performance. Live, the strength and conviction of Gahan's voice was gone. As on the album, the female back-up singers were treated as another instrument, another element of the overall sound of the performance.

The highlight of the evening, besides the spectacular thunder and lightning effects which started the show, was Gahan's mere presence. Sporting his newly-acquired bad-boy grunge look, the sexy Mick Jag-

Please see DEPECHE / p.28

SAVE $$$

WITH OUR COUPON IN THE

WHAT'S NEXT

HOURS OF OPERATION
1PM-11PM 7 DAYS A WEEK

Performing Arts Office presents

Royal Scottish Academy of Music & Drama Chamber Orchestra

"...the audience asked for curtain call after curtain call"

The cream of Scotland's youth will perform:

- JS Bach Oboe Concerto
- Tchaikovsky String Serenade
- Britten Les Illuminations
- featuring Canadian soprano - Karina Gauvin
- Mozart Symphony # 29

ONLY $7 FOR QUEEN'S STUDENTS!!!

TONIGHT GRANT HALL 8 PM
$20 /$8 (child) all prices are plus GST

Tickets available at the Queen's Box Office, JDUC 545-2558

ZAP RECORDS
PRESENTS
THE 3RD ANNUAL
RECORD SHOW & SALE

KINGSTON MUSIC SHOWCASE FEATURING: MAHONES, INBREDS, SHINE, STONECUTTERS, & MORE.

COLLECTABLE RECORDS,
CDS, TAPES, VIDEOS,
MEMORABILIA,
RELATED ITEMS UNAVAILABLE
IN REGULAR RETAIL STORES

SUNDAY,
SEPTEMBER 26, 1993
10 A.M. - 5 P.M.

HOWARD JOHNSON
CONFEDERATION PLACE HOTEL
237 ONTARIO STREET, KINGSTON

ADMISSION $2.00

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT
ZAP RECORDS
77A PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO (613) 547-9949

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's
Clarke Hall Pub
The QP!

Alfie's Pub THIS WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22nd
KING APPARATUS WITH GUESTS GYPSY SOUL
OPEN 8

clark hall pub

not just a way of life, but a major motion picture with great refreshments and a killer soundtrack located above the bookstore - ☎ 545-6195 - Open Mon-Fri 8pm - 1am & Fri Ritual 12noon - 6pm

KISMET

Queen's Musical Theatre

-- 25th Anniversary Year--

Auditions for the 1193/94 production of
"Kismet"

Friday, September 24 - 5pm - 10pm
Saturday, September 25 - 9am - 8pm
Sunday, September 26 - 9am - 10pm
(Performances at the Grand Theatre in January 1994)

From the people who brought you last year's smash hit:
Fiddler on the Roof
Kismet is an exotic, challenging and award-winning musical in the spirit of Aladdin and the Arabian Nights. A rickling tale of adventure and intrigue in Medieval Baghdad. Kismet offers plenty of juicy roles for aspiring actors/singers as well as valuable opportunities for technicians & production staff.

Look for us at our sign up table in Mac-Corry and at Clubs Night!!
You have a date with destiny -- it's Kismet!
See You There!

Please phone Jessica Goldberg 531-8191 or Ken Jacobsen 546-4403 for more information

NEW FOOD BIG SCREEN 1 MILKSHAKES 30W CHEESECAKE LIVE 7 NIGHTS A WEEK AT 8PM SAT NIGHT
545-2740 545-2740 545-2740
BASEBALL LUNCH EVERY WEEKDAY AT 12 PC
FRI AFTERNOON ANTI-RIT MELROSE COOL TUNES 1

THE QUIET PUB
QP!
COME HEAR THE DIFFERENCE

BAND AUDITIONS & OTHERS. AFT THURS. AFT
MOVIES THIS WEEK!!!
OUR PICTURES UNPLUGGED
TS A WEEK RICKARDS TAP

Appearing every Tuesday

SUPPORT YOUR CAMPUS PUBS

A smashing success

Smashing Pumpkins
Siamese Dream
BY SIAN BEDDOE-STEPHENS
The Queen's Journal

Smashing Pumpkins have a lot to live up to after the overwhelming success of their 1991 album, Gish. However, Siamese Dream, their newest release, confirms their status as one of the best alternative bands kicking around today.

The album opens with "Cherub Rock", a scathing song in which Billy Corgan, vocalist/guitarist, rants about his discontentment with the music industry over snarling, driving guitars. Lyrics like: Who wants honey/ as long as there's smoney/ who wants that honey...let me out are a lead giveaway that the Pumpkins are less than pleased with their experience in the business.

As metallic as songs like "Cherub Rock" are, the band has an amazing multi-dimensionality which is showcased in Siamese Dream. Two songs later into the album, "Today" springs forth with its airy and almost poppish melody, but a careful listen reveals that the lyrics resemble something closer to a suicide letter than Top-40 material: "I'll tear my heart out/ before I get out/ pink ribbon scars that never forget/ I tried so hard to cleanse these regrets." Smashing Pumpkins' ballad, "Disarm" exhibits its musical experimentation similar to Dinosaur Jr. in their song "Out There" from their latest release Where You Been. Church bells, kettle drums, violins, and cellos accompany Corgan's tormented cries and the result is simply dramatic. The following song, "Soma", immediately melts into the fading strands of "Disarm". "Soma" is a sleepy, psychedelic adventure which begins with loping guitar chords and Corgan's trademark breathy vocals. However, midway through, the song suddenly climaxes and ends with a flurry of saturated full-force guitar.

Smashing Pumpkins - Siamese Dream

"Soma" is a perfect example of Smashing Pumpkins' ability to somehow mesh seemingly uncontrollable amounts of adrenalin with haunting celestial music.

Arguably, the best song of the album is the blissfully languid "Mayonaisse". Its mantra-like guitar wanderings and mystical lyrics combined with the fluidity of its unforgettable melody make it greater than the rest of the already great songs of Siamese Dream.

While original Siamese Dream is a stronger, more extreme continuation of the band's debut album Gish, Smashing Pumpkins still grate and howl as fiercely as they can whisper into nothingness. After hearing the mastery of the Pumpkins' musical range, hearing other bands' perfection of a once stamped style will never be enough.

Since Gish, the Pumpkins have arrived at the much feared doorstep of major-labeldom; they've since switched from Caroline Records to its parent-label, Virgin Records. If Siamese Dream is anyone's testing ground, rest assured; they have not been diluted. The Pumpkins are smashing as hard as ever.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES

CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE

824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442

Sleepless in Seattle	7:25
In the Line of Fire	9:40
Jurassic Park	7:05 9:35
Heedful Things	7:10 9:40
Manhattan Murder Mystery	7:15 9:40
Striking Distance	7:20 9:40
The Real McCoy	7:00 9:25

CAPITOL THEATRE

223 Princess St. 546-5395

Hearts and Souls	7:00
Hard Target	9:25
True Romance	6:50 9:35
Aliborn	7:05 9:10
The Fugitive	6:55 9:30
The Man Without a Face	6:45 9:15
The Firm	6:30 9:20
Undercover Blues	7:15 9:15

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA

394 Princess St. 546-FILM

Strictly Ballroom	7:00
Like Water For Chocolate	9:00
The Panama Deception	7:00
Strictly Ballroom	9:00

The Panama Deception
Strictly Ballroom

CLUBS

ALFIES
Wednesday King Apparatus

AI'S NANGAR
Wednesday Yuk Yuk's Comedy Club

STAGES
Tuesday I Mother Earth

THE TOUCAN

Tuesday Blue Shadow
Thursday Pig Out

BEN'S PUB

Thursday John Jude

THE WELLINGTON

Tuesday Fat Spider
Thursday Emory Lester (Lezz)

THE GRAD CLUB

Thursday Johnny Pearl

AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE

12 Sept. to 21 Nov.
The Art of Christine Pflug (1936-1972)
19 Sept. to 31 Oct.
Spirit Archives: an installation by Julie Winthrow

Depeche Mode

Continued from page 25

ger of the 1990's displayed much-improved dancing, crucifixion poses and coy strip-teases for the equally appreciative female and male fans.

Evident in Gahan's smile and sparkling eyes were the enthusiasm and sheer joy he felt in playing before such an appreciative crowd. Acting as Depeche cheerleader, Gahan was easily able to bridge the expansive between the stage and the furthest seating the audience to ignore the monolithic nature of the venue and focus their attention on the stage. In the end, even the great Depeche Mode debate—the tired "Is it live? Is it Memorex?"—was irrelevant.

New season for Studio Q

The Queen's Journal Staff

Look out all you couch potatoes! Studio Q will unveil a series of major changes when it debuts this Thursday, September, 23. The show has been given a complete cosmetic makeover. There's a new format, new anchors and a new theme song. The timeslot has also been changed. The show now airs both Thursdays and Fridays at six o'clock on Channel 13.

The newest addition to the Studio Q team is a video "toaster." The new wonder device will enable the station to introduce computer graphics, character generation and digital video effects to the program. The result will be a slicker, more professional looking program.

Features to look for in the upcoming year include:

- A Frosh Week Video that Studio Q will be selling later this month.
- Documentaries, generated from the new documentary unit.
- A birthday bash in the lower JDUC on September 24th.

WHAT'S UP?

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

Pick-up What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

September

<h2>21 Tuesday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The first ASUS Assembly will be held at 7:30pm in the Mac-Laughlin Room, JDUC. • Queen's French Center is holding an Open House at 96 Albert St. Drop-In hours are from 1pm to 5pm. • All Arts and Science DSC Executives should drop by the CORE this week to leave their names and 	<h2>22 Wednesday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Career Planning & Placement On-Campus Recruiting Workshop, 7pm, Dupuis Auditorium. Learn the mechanics of on-campus recruiting and how to better represent yourself on the application form. • La Table Francaise, Ban Righ Cafeteria, 5pm to 6:15pm. • QEA presents KING APPARATUS with GYPSY SOUL at Alfie's. 	<h2>23 Thursday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Career Planning & Placement Advanced Applications Workshop, 2:30pm at the Career Planning & Placement Center, Ground Floor, St. Lawrence Building. • Studio Q Season Premiere at 6:00pm on Cablenet 13. 	<h2>24 Friday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • ASUS Formal Applications Due 4:30pm at the CORE. • Queen's Progressive Conservative Campus Club Annual General Meeting at 6:00pm in the Dunning Hall Conference Room. • Studio Q 5th Year Anniversary Celebration, Lower JDUC 1pm - 3pm. Season Premiere 6:00pm on Cablenet 13. 	<h2>25 Saturday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • AMS Assembly Scribe applications due at Noon in the AMS Office. Contact Bob Adderly, AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner, for more information.
<h2>26 Sunday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The First Annual ASUS Buddies Breakfast will be held at Upper Ban Righ. All Buddies will be contacted with more information. 	<h2>27 Monday</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • ASUS Elections Nominations close today. • French Oral Communications Courses start today at the Queen's French Center, 96 Albert St. For more information, call 545-2534. • Applications for Queen's First Aid are due today. Forms are available at Student Health Services. 	<h2>Upcoming Events</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Dean of Women, Dr. Pamela Dickey Young, invites members of the Queen's Community to drop in to the office (Mac-Corry Hall, Room D217) on September 30, from 2pm to 4pm. • Are you interested in becoming a volunteer buddy with a child or adult with a developmental disability? The Community Living Program will be holding an information night on Tuesday, September 28th at 4:30pm in the John Orr Room, JDUC, 3rd floor. • The Students for Action Committee will be holding a Multicultural Conference on October 2nd in Dunning Hall at 6:30pm. All are invited to attend. There is free admission and various ethnic foods will be served. 	<h2>Volunteers Wanted</h2> <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • These AMS Committees are looking for first-year student volunteers. • Communications Queen's Enquirer Housing Issues (2 chairs) Community Interaction High School Liaison • Education AMS Committee on Development (AMSCODI) Authors Hidden Hunger Human Rights & Social Responsibility Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Issues National Issues Queen's Environmental Action Group Racism and Ethnic Discrimination Speakers Women's Issues • University Affairs Educating Students on Substances (ESOS) • Campus Activities (Each committee needs 2 first-year students. Applications due Monday, Sept. 27) Alumni Weekend, United Way Charity Ball, Undergrad Games Welcome Back Week, Grand Events (2 first & upper year students), Kaleidoscope Coffee House (1 co-chair & 4 Upper Years) Model UN (upper years also), Model Parliament Advertising Committee, Special Projects

NO-CHARGE CHECKING ACCOUNT

CASHSTOP CARD LETS YOU MAKE WITHDRAWALS EVERYDAY

CLASSIC VISA CARD WITH $500 CREDIT LIMIT.

Only Scotiabank chalks up a no-fee[†] banking package for students.

If there's one thing we know about students, it's that sometimes they run on a tight budget.

And since we were the first Canadian bank to introduce a student package three years ago, it's something we've kept in mind.

If you're a full-time college¹ or university student, you're eligible for the Scotia Banking Advantage[®] package. This package includes a daily interest checking account, an automated banking machine card, a Classic VISA card² and for qualified graduating students, an auto loan.

With Scotia Banking Advantage, you can also start establishing a good credit rating. Something that will be useful in the future.

So drop by your nearest Scotiabank branch and we'll show you all the ways we can help.

YOU COULD

-WIN $1,000 CASH-

IN THE SCOTIA BANKING ADVANTAGE SWEEPSTAKES!
10 PRIZES OF $1,000 EACH TO BE AWARDED ON A REGIONAL BASIS

Enrol in the Scotia Banking Advantage program by November 12, 1993, and you'll automatically be entered for a chance to win!

¹The Bank of Nova Scotia requires proof of matric. ²No monthly fee or minimum monthly balance. Community College, Technical Institute or Cegpp. ³Registered Trade Mark of The Bank of Nova Scotia. ⁴Subject to credit approval.

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

THE WHO'S WHERE/WHAT'S NEXT would like to apologize for the misprint in the 1993 - 94 What's Next. The correct hours for the Quiet Pub and Student Health Services are as follows: QUIET PUB: Mon - Wed 12:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m., 8:30 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Thursday and Friday 12:00 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Saturday 8:00 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Sunday 8:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES: Monday - Friday 9:00 - 4:30, Wednesday 10:00 - 4:30.

GOING SOUTH? Soapberry Shop's sun lotions and oils are made with Aloe, seaweed and cocabutter to promote tanning and moisturize. No PABA SPF numbers 3,4,8,10,15. 545-1028 122 Princess St.

GRADS! Would you like your picture published in the book seen by over 10,000 students? Are you graduating this year? Book your sitting NOW with a TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER!

WHO ARE THEY? Preston Schiedel Photography (542-7424), Sparks Studios (549-6560), Taylor Photographics (541-1098), and Gruenberg Photography (548-4541) are this year's Official Tricolour Photographers. Call them NOW! Your grad photo is forever.

THE REAL TIBET: Slide show and talk presented by Crossroads and Canada Tibet committee, September 23rd, 7:30 p.m. at the Kingston Global Community Centre, 461 Princess, lower level - Everyone welcome!

QUEEN'S FIRST AID unit applications are available NOW at Student Health Services, or look for us at Clubs Night. Applications are due Monday September 27th.

COMPUTERS at Home. Tutoring on site on your own Personal Computer. Tutoring/teaching everything from the basics to DOS, LOTUS, WORDPERFECT and even Desktop publishing! Phone Bruce at 531-8879 and leave a message.

JOB OPENING AT THE AMS Assistant manager needed for Vids in the Hall. Applications can be picked up and dropped off at the AMS office. Due Friday September 24th at 12 noon.

WRITING YOUR FIRST UNIVERSITY ESSAY. Attend a talk on this subject by Douglas Babington of the Writing Centre at 7 p.m. this Wednesday, September 29th, in Stirling Hall, Theatre B.

NATIONAL PARTY now at Queen's! Hope for a new and better Canada! More information? Visit us at Clubs Night, call Richard, 549-5984, or Kingston Campaign Office 389-0543.

HAVE YOU EVER had your phone number or address wrong in the Who's Where? Check your personal information this year. Go to the Infobank, JDUC, September 20th and 23rd.

CREATIVE WRITERS AND JOURNALISTS. Discuss your writing with Douglas Fetherling, the Queen's Writer-In-Residence. For an appointment, call the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

DON'T LET THE YEAR go by without doing some art. LIVART STUDIOS is situated close to campus and are accepting registration for life model classes, painting and more. Call 546-6842.

ARE YOU A WICCAN? Willing to share in fellowship, spiritual growth and study? Contact The Stone Circle, c/o Chaplaincy Dept., Box 22, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V7 Attention: Aspen.

TIRED OF KRAFT DINNER? Don't know how to cook, or just too tired to bother? Put some spice in your life! ART OF COOKING SCHOOL offers 20 different classes. Brochures/information: 546-2880.

WHITEWATER RAFT the wild water of the Black River gorge this fall in the Thousand Island Region with N.Y.'s leading Whitewater Outfitters, ARO Adventures. Special College rates. Call 1-800-525-RAFT.

NEARLY NEW AND GENTLY USED QUALITY CLOTHING The K.S.A. Women's Committee presents it's sale of quality clothing for the family, along with a selection of white elephant items. Look and buy Friday September 24th, 10:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., and Saturday September 25th, 9:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. at the J.K. Tett Centre, 370 King St. W., opposite St. Marys by the Lake Hospital.

JOB OPENING AT THE AMS Assistant manager needed for Vids in the Hall. Applications can be picked up and dropped off at the AMS office. Due Friday September 24th at 12 noon!

CHARISMATIC lead singer/front person wanted for Kingston - area band. Creative input encouraged as we focus on where music's headed, not where it's been. Call Kevin at 545-3218 or Jeff at 382-2329.

T.G.I.F. Hockey every Friday 3:15 to 4:15 Memorial Centre. October 1st to March 31st. $6.00. Need goalies. Call 544-1221.

OCCASIONAL BABYSITTER wanted evenings. Must have own means of transportation. Ten minute drive from Queen's. Call 389-8122 or 541-6095.

ENJOY LISTENING? Telephone Aid Line Kingston is looking for volunteers for our fall training session. Look for us at clubs night or leave a message at 531-8529 for more information.

FOR SALE: 1986 VOLKSWAGEN CABRIOLET Black on black, 5 speed, new clutch, exhaust, and CV joints. One owner, 94000km, mint condition, certified - $6900. CALL JONATHAN - 547-9876

FOR SALE: Classic black tails - tux with pants, bow-tie, and cummerbund. Formal Attire in great shape. $250. Call 544-4311.

FOR SALE: Crombie (Made in Scotland), cashmere and wool, long black overcoat. A classic coat in excellent shape. $120. Call 544-4311.

ORDER IKEA FURNITURE! Last chance to order from Student Direct is today (Tuesday September 21st) from 10 - 5 p.m. in the JDUC, Kitchen Sink (beside TD machine). For more information call Steve at 541-7878.

ONEWOODS bar fridge for sale. 5ft fridge. Excellent condition. $200.00 or best offer. If interested call Peter at 542-0228.

INEXPENSIVE DATA acquisition boards designed and manufactured by Canadians from $139. Call London Research and Development at (519) 438-1933 for details.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Winters coming! Please call 547-4106.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Left in Dunning, after Tales by Gaels. Call 542-6870.

LOST: one penis. if found please contact cdr.

DANIKA: Guess that it's the three of us for the next couple months. Nothing keeps me going more than knowing you're there, and here, whenever I need you. 'suppose your four legged friend is loved, too. Thanks for believing. Mish.

HEY MONKEY BOY: Zzzzzzzzz...

SARAH: MAJOR PROBLEMS! I found the string (finally), but...IT WASN'T TIED ON! The search continues...

HEY K! I think we should hang out... come find me...J.

Motorcycle Mama: Hey, great! Three months to one year...give or take a day, or seventy. You still owe me Frank, the farm...

Brock, Brad, Lori: News rocks... we have a dinner date...love, Jeff, your News Editor who cares.

Adrienne: Are you of Scandinavian descent? I owe you $10...

Jeff: you wily Irishman...I don't owe you $10.

Chris: you wily mongrel...you owe me $50.

Rob: you didn't warn me enough! CH

Vanessa: From all of us here in Canada, we love you, miss you, and wish you the best. Keep smiling, love Scott, Kirsten, Colin and Holly.

JERKY: As winter is approaching with much haste, does it not make sense that we should possibly arrange to get a furnace for the house? - Roody

Colin and Adrienne: Thanks for your patience with my section - especially with the ad! Megan Annie, Colleen, Tania: Thinking of all of you. Love from M. here at the Journal. You too, Ace.

Michael Hungerford: We didn't know you were that kinky! Next time you're bored, be more careful with the hot wax! Tide, you do add style!

Dave R: Hey punk! Thanks for a great dinner the other night. I can't believe what you did to our paper!! Aren't you glad it's printed with vegetable-based ink?!

Dawn G: Hey Babe! Don't forget your pictures are at my house. Sorry I missed you the other night - I'll see you soon for dinner at my place!

Rushowy: I can't believe you came down to Kingston and didn't even get in touch! Thanks a lot! I hope all is going well. Keep in touch!

Nicol: Thanks a lot to you too! Just for that I'm definitely faxing a copy of the picture of you with your pants around your ankles to your office. And you thought you escaped! Journal antics - ah haa haaa!!!

Nikolai: Don't touch that rat, you sicko. Do you see a grosse schwinehund! (Aber, mit eine kleine pflansta...)

Leroy: Sorry we ran out of space for your photo! We'll use it later, I promise. Anyhow...* you I won't do what ya tell me...

Jamie Lloyd-Smith: Did anyone ever tell you that you have the IQ of a squash? Come by The Journal and write, or, at least, we can go for a brew!

Machu Picchu: You're just space-filler this time, mais je t'aime anyhow.

Back Page

This week's recipe is from the kitchen of:
Dera Nevin
AMS Communications Commissioner

Simply Scrumptious Sandwich

Take 1 piece of white bread and apply a liberal coating of chunky peanut butter.
Take 1 piece of brown bread and smother with chocolate frosting.
Fill the sandwich with your favourite condiments. I like blueberry yogurt, thinly sliced pickles, and green olives with pimentos. Best served as a late night snack. If you've done a good job, with every bite, every taste sensation should be present: sweet, sour, salty, bitter, etc.

What she does: The Communications Commissioner is responsible for facilitating information flow among campus groups and organizations. She also makes sure all groups have access to information systems. Judging from the recipe above, she's either pulling our leg, highly kinesthetic or a heavy LSD user.

You can go to Dera if you have complaints concerning housing issues, want to advertise something worthy, or would like to comment on AMS practices or policies. She can be reached at the Communications Commish office (545-2732) or via E-mail at AMSCOMM@quecn.

Oops! In last Friday's issue of Misc, we forgot to mention the location of the Red Chamber. It's located at Princess Street beside the Toucan/Kirkpatrick, just west of King. The entrance to the store is the same as Modern Primitive just take the stairs up.

Hey! BECOME AN ILLUSTRIOUS MISC./ BACKPAGE WRITER! WORLD FAME IS ONLY A CRAYON AWAY! CALL JOEY OR DEREK AT 545-2800! NOW!

The Other Side

Bryce McBride graduated in 1989 with an Economics degree from Queen's, and from there went on to McGill to receive a Teaching Diploma. In September 1990, he went to Singapore to teach at the Canadian International School. He is presently the head of the Social Sciences department. While in the orient, he has travelled to Australia, New Zealand, Indonesia, Malaysia, Vietnam, China, Japan, Korea, Nepal, Thailand, and Hong Kong.

and are prepared for. You always get the things you need, even if you don't know what they are.

While the first few months were tough, as the school was a) a ruin, and b) devoid of students, now I'm really happy with things. By taking a chance with an uncertain venture, I was able to create a lifestyle from the bottom up which I now enjoy immensely.

After a few more years in the very independent teaching profession, I hope to go back to Canada and leave formal work environments altogether. How? Good Question! I'm very open to suggestions - got any?

So, I guess I'm grateful to Queen's for granting me a degree and for giving me access to resources which allowed me to maintain and develop an appreciation for the wider world - its ideas and beauty. Without the degree, I wouldn't have been hired to work here. Without the informal learning and development, I wouldn't have been able to survive and flourish once I arrived. Somehow, looking back, it all makes sense...

Unequivocally, Queen's was the place where I rendered myself unfit for organizations. Somehow, it failed in the task usually assigned modern institutions of higher learning: it failed to turn me into a machine. What was it about Queen's which allowed me to be spared? Key was that there were always places to hide. My fondest memories of university centre around CFRC, the Ellis Hall student film club, or the Douglas Library periodicals room. In these three places, I gained access to the worlds of music, modern iconography, and learned opinion. For me, this exposure was crucial. It gave me that broad perspective and certain invulnerability to circumstances which can sustain you in any situation, anywhere.

Coming to Singapore three years ago was a fluke. I answered a very dubious looking line ad in the Globe and Mail, had an interview over the phone and was on my way. I couldn't believe it. Now, though, I know that's how things work: you never get things you want

YOUR WAY RIGHT AWAY

$1.00 OFF HOMESTYLE BREAKFAST

INCLUDES:
• 2 Eggs your way
• Sausage or bacon
• Tater tenders
• Homestyle Toast
• Coffee or juice

Valid during breakfast hours only. Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer.

EXPIRES Oct. 3, 1993

Due Monday

- Poli Sci Paper
- Art History Essay
- Psych. 101 Lab
- English Essay
- Computer Sci Lab

DELL: YOUR 24-HOUR-A-DAY STUDY PARTNER

When you purchase a Dell computer, you get more than just a high-quality, aggressively priced, name brand computer - you get complete, toll-free telephone technical support, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. So, on weekends, and in the dead of night when most other facilities and services are out of reach, just call Dell. We guarantee you'll talk to a technical expert within 5 minutes! If you can't afford to miss a deadline, call Dell. After all, you want a study partner who's there when you need help!

NetPlex™ 425/NP
$1,309*

- 25MHz i486SX
- 4MB RAM
- 120MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- Local bus video
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

NetPlex™ 433/NP
$2,299*

- 33MHz i486DX
- 8MB RAM
- 230MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- Local bus video
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Dimension™ 450/XPS
$2,439*

- 50MHz i486DX2
- 8MB RAM
- 230MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- 128KB cache
- #9 GXe VL video card with 1MB VRAM
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Dimension™ 466/XPS
$2,789*

- 66MHz i486DX2
- 8MB RAM
- 320MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- 128KB cache
- #9 GXe VL video card with 1MB VRAM
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Monitors sold separately

CALL 1-800-668-6291 1-800-387-5754 en français
FAX 1-800-387-5753

Hours: Mon. - Fri. 8 a.m. - 8 p.m. Sat. 9 a.m. - 3 p.m. EST.

Dell Computer Corporation, 121 Granton Drive, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3N4
Halifax • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto • Calgary • Vancouver

For complete details on warranties, call Dell. All prices and specifications are subject to change without notice. *Guaranteed response restricted to 8:00 a.m. - 10:00 p.m. EST, Mon. - Fri. and 10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m. Sat. Dell cannot be responsible for errors in typography or photography. Shipping, handling and applicable sales taxes are included in the price. Dell and Intel Systems are registered trademarks, the DELL logo, NetPlex and Dimension are trademarks of Dell Computer Corporation. Intel and the Intel Inside logo are registered trademarks of Intel Corporation. Other trademarks and trade names are used to identify entities claiming the marks and names of their products. Dell disclaims proprietary interest in the marks and names of others. Copyright 1993 Dell Computer Corporation. All rights reserved. Systems may not be exactly as shown.

Look for the Intel Inside® symbol on our quality computer systems.

AD CODE: 2DA00

TUESDAY SEPT. 28
ACID TEST
$1 off admission with this coupon
Stages
"The #1 Campus Nightclub"

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess Street, Kingston
(corner of Montreal & Princess)
549-3553

Volume 121, Number 8

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Friday, September 24, 1993

Law school grads scramble for articling posts

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Match-making in the 90's is no easy proposition.

That's the lesson law school graduates across the country learned this summer, as 35 per cent were unable to find a match in the search for articling positions.

In a repeat of last year, the 1993 matching process - whereby law school graduates are matched with firms and government for articling positions - left many law grads out in the cold.

The reason the matching process failed so many students, according to Dean of Law Don Carter, is "the economy, plain and simple."

Mal Moorthy, president of the Law Student's Society at Queen's, agreed.

"It's not a lack of quality on the students' part" that's responsible for the low matching ratio, Moorthy said, "it's just a numbers game, in the sense that there weren't many jobs out there."

At Queen's the casualty rate was significantly lower than the national average. According to Gary Finkelstein, chair of the Queen's Law School Articling Committee, 20 to 25 per cent of students were left unmatched. This figure is nevertheless a serious concern for the faculty of law.

"Something has to be done," said Moorthy.

Finkelstein suggested that the Law Society of Upper Canada, the governing body for the legal profession in Ontario - and the body responsible for the matching process - could do more to help law graduates.

"The Law Society does not take as active a role in the placement of grads as would the Medical Association," he said. "There is far less involvement and commitment to students."

Finkelstein believes that the Law Society, the universities and the law firms must collectively come to "the realization that there just aren't enough [articling] jobs to satisfy demand."

Kait Parkinson, the Matching Program Service Coordinator at the National Matching Service in Toronto, said that the Law Society of Upper Canada is "doing everything in its power to try to help students who didn't get an articling position."

She said that those who didn't get articling positions could "attribute [their situation] to

Please see LAW on page B

Surface ready for referendum

BY MEGAN NICHOLS
The Queen's Journal

In the eye before the storm of the upcoming referendum on Surface, both Surface editor Junipero Lagtapon and Arts and Science Undergraduate Society President Jennifer Steeves are optimistic.

On Oct. 13 and 14, Arts and Science students will have the opportunity to express their sentiments towards Surface by voting in the referendum. The paper relies on funding from ASUS.

Though the results of the referendum are not binding, Steeves emphasized the importance of taking measures to best represent students' wishes.

However, both Steeves and Lagtapon have set goals for Surface this year that they hope will contribute to a positive response from the Queen's community.

In particular, the two stressed the importance of establishing a "critical base" for the articles and poetry published in Surface. "The last two years have been pretty radical, but controversy was only sparked with one or two articles," said Lagtapon. "This year we want to spark controversy in every issue, but [articles] have to have a critical base."

He continued to say that some articles and poems printed will still be "angry," but that the emotion will be tempered with reason.

Regarding the referendum, Lagtapon said that he has received "a lot of support from the ASUS executive. I'm pretty confident that once people see the paper this year we'll have a favourable reaction." He said that the referendum was important, however, in ensuring that ASUS remains accountable to students.

Steeves has drawn up plans for a Surface working group, which would be composed of students from a variety of backgrounds. She said that the role of the group will not be to act as a censor, but to encourage a diversity of opinions to be reflected in the newspaper.

Steeves also emphasized the need for reasoned arguments in articles, maintaining that Surface is "not a forum for people's feelings as much as it is a viewpoint. I think the bottom line is that we don't want people saying, 'I feel this way, period,' but explaining why."

"I think Surface really makes people think. And that's good... I will do all I can to make sure it continues."

However, Steeves also acknowledged the importance of representing Arts and Science students. "On a personal level I really support the paper... But Heath [Grant, ASUS vice-president] and I ran on an 'ASUS works for you' platform, so if students don't want it, we won't fund Surface... We have to represent what students want."

"But I think Surface really contributes to the Queen's community - it would be a shame to lose it."

The first issue of this year's Surface came out yesterday.

Where's Waldo? Clubs Night '93 at Jock Harty Arena.

Derek Yarnell

Engineering food fight fiasco

BY MICHELLE PELLEGRIN
The Queen's Journal

An engineering semi-formal banquet last week in Leonard Cafeteria degenerated into a full-fledged food fight, and will end up costing the Engineering Society around $400 in clean-up charges, said Director of Residences Graham Brown.

"It's one thing to have some high-spirited bun-tossing that ends in a few minutes, but to actually throw food at staff... that's totally unacceptable," Brown said.

The traditional "after-orientation" dinner was attended by 450 engineering frosh and 50 of their orientation leaders, as well as Applied Science Dean Carl Hamacher and several other faculty members.

First-year engineering student Jen Watt said the event "started off with the occasional tomato-throwing," but soon buns, water, potatoes, carrots, peas, Yorkshire pudding and roast beef entered the fray.

"If I had known this was going to happen I would have worn my coveralls," commented Watt.

Brown said that serving the meal had to be stopped "to protect the serving staff," and that the incident, while occurring after Orientation Week, will be reported to the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board.

"Our contract with EngSoc was for a banquet, not for a food fight," said Brown.

Dean Hamacher, who has been a guest at the last three post-orientation banquets, said that traditionally the banquet has been a "boisterous celebration."

According to first-year engineer Andrew McLeod, many students at the dinner were drunk, and "the dean [was] walking around dodging stuff being thrown."

For McLeod, the event was "a hell of a good time - the best dinner I've eaten at Leonard yet."

Chief FREC Duncan Parker called the event "awesome," but admitted that things were out of control right from the start, as a microphone had not been set up, making it difficult to get the crowd's attention.

Main Campus Residents' Council Vice-President (Discipline) Justine Amaro said the organizers "should have realized that security is an absolute necessity with an event of this nature."

Amaro added that MCRC is not responsible for providing security for these types of events, and that the organizers should have hired extra staff or Student Constables.

Inside

- NEWS
- TRASH 3
- ENTERTAINMENT
- KING APPARATUS 21
- MISC
- RAVE CULTURE . 28

Quote

"Just because you go to a women's event doesn't mean that you hate men."
—Ciddalia Faria, host of this year's candlelighting.

ein PROSIT der Gemütlichkeit

170 PRINCESS STARTING SEPT 29th Phone 546-7468
OR A LA CARTE Amadeus and the
 Your Hosts Inge & Peter Breitwieser
 Celebrate in the true German Tradition
FOOD by the METER-BEER by the LITER
 DR. A. LA CARTE AND SCHNAPS

An Invitation
 To all Women New to Queen's

104th Candlelighting Ceremony

Sunday, September 26, 1993
 Grant Hall
 4:30 p.m.

Keynote Speaker:
 Nancy Jackman

Reception in Grant Hall following the ceremony

Mackenzie calls for UN changes

BY SYLVIA D. WARDEN
 The Queen's Journal

Retired Major-General Lewis Mackenzie addressed a crowd of several hundred people Wednesday evening at the Grand Theatre, as part of the Printed Passage Bookstore's "Meet the Author Series". Mackenzie was promoting his new book Peacekeeper: The Road to Sarajevo.

Dressed in civilian attire, Mackenzie looked altogether different from the man in the blue United Nations fatigues who appeared all summer on the nightly news, during his tour of duty in the former Yugoslavia.

He gave an impassioned speech on the Canadian Forces and their lack of political support.

Mackenzie was rumoured to be thinking about political office, but said he ultimately decided against it because it would not give him the freedom to say what he wanted.

He added that the book tour gave him the perfect opportunity to talk about the upcoming federal election.

Mackenzie said he was "appalled by the fact that defence and foreign policy aren't election issues." He believes politicians are "wallowing in feeling sorry for ourselves" and are not concentrating on issues outside Canada's borders.

Mackenzie went on to say that "no one can like soldiers" now, because of reports of racist soldiers in Major-General Lewis Mackenzie: The man and his book.

Somalia. He said he is embarrassed that political leaders will not speak positively about soldiers.

Mackenzie described Canada's unique place in the world, and said that our birthplace and nationality mean we tend to be good peacekeepers. Mackenzie added that "we want people to see us as peacekeepers."

He said we have earned the respect of the world and are on every nation's list of peacekeepers.

Mackenzie then moved from his praise of the Canadian Armed Forces to a discussion of the shortcomings and changing function of the United Nations.

According to Mackenzie, the world has changed since the creation of the UN, and now a new set of rules are required. He believes the "decision making-policy needs a major overhaul."

Germany and Japan are nations that are being considered as additions to the security council, Mackenzie said, joking that perhaps the "balance on your Visa account dictates whether you are invited to [the table]."

He suggested that countries who have historically supported UN missions, such as Brazil and India, should be added to the council.

Mackenzie said he doesn't like the fact that Britain, France and the United States are making decisions which directly affect Canadian ground troops.

Finally, the major-general-turned-author quoted a favourite saying of his. "Obligations beyond borders are directly linked to your blessings at home," he said.

Want to help youngsters learn to read? The Story Centre October Book Drive aims to do just that. Beginning October 2, you can donate a book. Stop by the Campus Bookstore, Novel Idea, or Printed Passage, buy a book (between $5 and $20 each), and the Reading and Parents Program will ensure the book will make it to a needy child.

The Kingston Community Crisis Centre provides crisis response by phone, walk-in, and mobile service. All services are free and confidential. Call 544-4357. Open from noon to 2 a.m., and there's an answering service at all hours.

Prospective minor hockey referees for this season can be certified at a clinic on October 2. The Ottawa District Minor Hockey Association will hold clinics at Regiopolis Notre-Dame High School. The cost is $60 and registration runs between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. For more information, contact Hank Kelly at 546-5382.

COULD YOU MAKE A DECISION THAT WOULD AFFECT OVER 95% OF CANADIAN HOUSEHOLDS?

Procter & Gamble is a major manufacturer of consumer packaged goods. With leading brand names such as Tide, Ivory, Crisco, Pampers and Bounce, chances are that you have at least one of our products in your home - 95% of Canadian households do.

A variety of career opportunities are being offered for summer interns & full time employees. Furthermore, applications from business schools and other academic disciplines are encouraged.

We are looking for strong achievers, dynamic communicators, and people who enjoy a challenging environment.

For more details, visit the Placement Office, or come to one of the two P & G Corporate Presentations:

September 30th, 4:00 pm & 7:00 pm.
 The Faculty Club

DON'T GET CAUGHT UNPREPARED!

Come by the AMS Publishing and Copy Centre and check out the services we offer, including brand new self-serve copiers with reduction/enlargement, double-sided copying, and sheet feeders!

Open weekdays 8³⁰ till 5³⁰ weekends noon till 4⁰⁰

located in the basement of the J.D.U.C. • © 545-6543 • FAX 545-0350

Trash, SOARB, at odds over orientation cancellation

Trash says SOARB overstepped mandate

BY KAREN HALL
 The Queen's Journal

The transfer students, or trash, orientation executive met behind closed doors with the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board on Tuesday, to discuss the cancellation of the transfer students' frosh week.

SOARB cut trash week short after some orientation leaders, known as trash collectors, broke their contracts and drank with their frosh at an unsanctioned keg party during frosh week.

Justin Moodie, a trash collector, requested an audience with SOARB to discuss concerns about the board's jurisdiction and authority in cancelling the week. In an interview after the meeting, Moodie said SOARB told him "they [SOARB] took the power [to cancel the week] because nobody else had it."

Moodie added, "our students were punished for the actions of their leaders. We made a mistake and that's fine. [SOARB] did, and that's not."

SOARB Co-chair Dr. Jim Bennett told The Journal Wednesday that Moodie "asked [the members of the committee] to sign a declaration that they had acted outside their jurisdiction, and to sign an agreement that we would not act outside our jurisdiction again."

"He was quite vocal and outspoken in criticism of myself and SOARB, based on his reading of the Jackson Report [on orientation]," Bennett said, adding that "SOARB is guided by the recommendations of the Jackson Report."

Moodie was "vocal and insistent that we had acted outside our jurisdiction," Bennett said.

In a letter to The Journal published in today's Opinions section, the trash executive quote the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee to Review Orientation, or Jackson Report, as giving SOARB a "a purely regulatory function," and that SOARB went beyond its limits in shutting down the week.

Bennett argued that "it is [SOARB's] responsibility to ensure that the policies laid out by the Senate are followed during orientation. As such, we are given power of approval over events."

"Without approval, events cannot be part of the official [orientation] program."

Responding to criticism raised at the meeting, that SOARB had no right to attend events, Bennett asked, "how does SOARB [monitor events] if they don't know what's going on," and added that "SOARB members attended every official event during the week."

Transfer student Julia Quinton also addressed SOARB at the meeting. In an interview with The Journal, Quinton said "my only concern is that what happened [to trash week] won't happen again."

"The point is to build a good trash week next year."

Bennett remarked that "[Quinton] and her trash group are embarrassed to say they're trash [because] they are being tarred with responsibility for the situation," when the leaders are really responsible for the situation.

Bennett remarked on "her [Quinton's] frustration that we were not able to provide alternative events quickly. That is something that the committee has to address."

One of Bennett's concerns was that SOARB "imposed the punishment for the actions of leaders on the participants and that's wrong."

He admitted that the committee has to look at the issue of "separate punishment for group leaders [and] inadvertently punishing members of the group."

Principal Smith's successor to be named soon

BY DAVE COLEMAN
 The Queen's Journal

The principal selection committee is close to making its recommendation for the replacement of Principal David Smith.

Margaret Hooley, secretary for the university Senate and the selection committee, said the committee had reached a "short-list of six internal and external [to the Queen's community] men and women from across Canada."

Smith is approaching the end of his second five-year term as principal of Queen's. Unlike past principals, Smith has no official role in the selection of his successor.

The selection committee has twenty members — nine nominated individuals from the Board of Trustees, nine nominated senators and two staff. Four of the members are students, including Rector David Baar, AMS President Katherine Phillips, last year's AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) Liz Muggah, and former GSS President Olukayode Oluayodun.

The committee first convened in February. Open forums were held to discover the qualities that people in the Queen's community value in a new leader. In a statement made in March, Hooley emphasized the "great importance to the university of providing an open, accessible process."

adding an open, accessible process."

In addition to the 200 letters the committee fielded as a result of the forums, Hooley said that members of the selection committee met with 155 groups on campus. "The committee met with them all ... it was very worthwhile and profitable."

Armed with their cross-sectional survey, the committee spent the summer wedding through the 150 nominations to pinpoint the ideal candidate.

From the nomination stage until the committee's recommendations are approved by the Board of Trustees, the nominees are kept secret. "The kind of people that are interested [in the principal's position] are the type of people that don't want to be public," Hooley said. "It is my understanding that [nominees] drop out if the process is public."

The University of Toronto, which selected a new principal three years ago, also uses a secret policy. York University, however, provides names to the public at the short-list stage.

Hooley said the committee hopes to have the recommendation completed by mid-October.

CANADA ON SALE!

	TORONTO OW Return		MONTREAL OW Return
FROM
Vancover	199	339	229	359
Calgary	169	299	189	349
Edmonton	169	299	189	349
Kingston	69	98	59	109
Saskatoon	179	299	179	329
Winnipeg	139	229	149	269
St. John	149	289	129	229
Halifax	159	269	129	209
St. John's	199	379	169	329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

FALL REGISTRATION '93 10% Discount for Queen's Students

KIDS TO ADULTS
Beginners to Advanced
- Classical Ballet R.A.D.
- Modern Jazz, Tap
- Creative Movement
- Ballroom
- AEROBICS
- Pro Instructors

Come dance with us ...
See the difference!
"NEW LOCATION"
259 QUEEN STREET
DOWNTOWN
547-5678

THE SPORTS BAR "THE ORIGINAL SPORTS BAR" SCHEDULE

Fr. Sept 24	7:30 THE SHOWDOWN BISCINI YANKEES - JAYS	10:30 Padres - Giants	Tues. Sept 28	11:00 Mariners - White Sox 8:00 Jays - Brewers
Sat. Sept 25	1:30 Yankees - Jays 4:00 Padres - Giants 10:00 A's - Seattle 10:30 Yankees - Jays		11:00 Jays - Brewers 10:30 A's - Rangers
Sun. Sept 26	1:30 Jays - Yankees 4:00 N.F.L. 4:00 Patriots - Jets		11:00 Mariners - White Sox 8:00 Jays - Brewers 10:30 A's - Rangers
Mon. Sept 27	8:00 Jays - Brewers 9:00 Steelers - Falcons		11:00 Mariners - White Sox 1:00 Blackhawks - North Stars 7:30 Jays - Orioles 10:30 Giants - Dodgers
			Fri. Oct. 1	7:30 Jays - Orioles
			Sat. Oct. 2	7:00 Jays - Orioles

* COLDEST PITCHERS AT THE BEST PRICES
* EXCELLENT PUB MEALS
* NFL SUNDAY BREAKFAST 11-4
* 9 FOOT SPORTSVISION SCREEN
* 125 BROCK ST * 546-0429

Candlelighting to be less formal this year

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

This year's Candlelighting ceremony to welcome first-year women to Queen's will be "less formal, warmer," says the event's host Cidalia Faria.

Candlelighting has been a tradition at Queen's for over 100 years, since a dozen undergraduate women met for the first time in 1889.

Faria, a law student in her final year, who also spent her undergraduate years at Queen's, said that this year's event will be much different from the one she attended as a frosh in 1986.

"We're moving away from the purely traditional... to make it relevant to '93," Faria explained.

In 1986, attendance was pretty much mandatory, Faria said, and the ceremony was very formal and structured. In recent years, the event has become optional, and has lost its official purpose — as an orientation event for women.

Faria said this year's event will be a "genuine welcome" for women who are new on campus.

"It's something that's unique to Queen's," she said.

This year's keynote speaker is Nancy Jackman, co-founder of the Legal Education Action Fund, an organization that provides money for equal rights cases and legal challenges under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Charis Valso, the chair of the Alumni Association's Committee on Women's Affairs since 1989, said the event will feature readings, singing, and the introduction of the Dean of Women, Pamela Dickey Young, who will also deliver an address.

"It's going to a little more intimate," Valso said. The highlight of the event is the actual act of candlelighting, where upper-year women pass a flame to every first-year woman in the audience.

"It's something that can become a special memory," said Valso. She described the event as serving a practical purpose, in terms of "alerting women to the support systems available."

Faria stressed that the event is "not a hugely political thing."

"Just because you go to a women's event doesn't mean that you hate men. Candlelighting is just a sharing, a bonding experience, an extending of friendship."

"Women at Queen's have a lot to celebrate, a lot to think about, a lot to challenge, lots to listen and lots to speak to," said Faria.

Candlelighting 1993 takes place in Grant Hall, this Sunday, Sept. 26, from 4:30 p.m. to 6:00 p.m.

ANC adviser describes South Africa's future

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

On Wednesday afternoon, the Faculty of Law played host to an adviser who is shaping the future of South Africa.

Dr. Albie Sachs, a senior member of the African National Congress's delegation to constitutional talks, addressed a full auditorium in Macdonald Hall. He outlined his reasons for believing South Africa will succeed in democracy, and discussed the principles and arrangements on which the constitution will be written.

Sachs argued that those who think South Africa will become a democracy without bloodshed or loss of stability should question their convictions.

"It is not enough that morally we deserve to succeed," he said. Despite support from the United Nations, the Commonwealth, and various non-governmental organizations, Sachs said, "expectations are not guaranteed."

Rather, Sachs explained, objective reasons for success should be examined. Since numerous African nations have faltered in setting up democracy, he said, many people tend to believe that there is a "continental determinism" that says "thou shall not succeed."

However, according to Sachs there are a number of reasons why South Africa ought to succeed. While most African countries endured "profoundly anti-democratic" colonial experiences, and could not handle the sudden switch from colony to independent democracy, South Africa's "institutions of democracy are not new," he said.

Sachs cited the long history of multi-party elections, the changing of governments, and a free, if limited, press, as vitally important institutions that are known to South Africans. "No other African state entering independence had the same experience," he said.

"The biggest contribution we can make [to other African countries] is to get democracy right in our country," Sachs said.

Besides a history of democratic institutions, if not actually democracy, Sachs mentioned the advanced infrastructure of South Africa and the existence of numerous non-state organizations that would act as a glue to keep society united.

Various organized religions, trade unions, universities, and groups of all sorts are "powerful agents in our society," Sachs said, which let people look elsewhere than the state for answers.

Anticipating concerns about the leadership of South Africa, Sachs promoted the ANC as proof of stable leadership; it is a body with over 80 years of history and many dedicated workers, he said.

Sachs laughed as he recalled a colleague who was embarrassed to fill out a form and admit that, unlike most everyone else from the ANC, he had never been imprisoned or banned.

Sachs also recalled his own past of losing an arm in a bomb attack, being imprisoned without trial, and being forced into exile. He explained that his experiences, and those of many ANC members, gave him a personal insight into the importance of a bill of rights.

"The main clause in any bill of rights is 'never again,'" he said, adding that the bill would effectively be "our own negative autobiographies."

Sachs went on to outline what the ANC is hoping to include in the constitution. He mentioned the ANC's support for a unitary state, and said "our whole quest has been for unity — for one country."

The country must recognize that "no culture is intrinsically more worthy or less worthy than another," Sachs said. "It's not black rule we want, but democracy."

Describing the composition of the new state, Sachs said that there would be three tiers of government: national, regional, and local. Each level's assembly would be democratically elected and would be sovereign over certain areas. However, he said, some fields, such as health, would necessarily be shared responsibilities.

Sachs supported the idea that the wealth from natural resources should be pooled and shared with the whole country, rather than divided by region. He cited Germany, Australia, and India as countries which successfully employ this form of redistribution.

Addressing the question of gender, Sachs offered change from the "overwhelmingly male-dominated" system of the past, and spoke of intervention, in the form of affirmative action, to ensure that women will be represented fairly in the new South African state.

For the ANC's part, the party would make sure 15 of every 30 candidates are women on its election lists. These lists would determine who would go to parliament under a proportional representation system.

Sachs expressed his desire to include a non-discrimination clause in the constitution. The clause, which he described as "enshrining what has been our dream," would seek to prevent discrimination on the grounds of race, religion, colour, sex, language, disability, and sexual orientation.

Sachs feels that the ANC has "made enormous progress," and looks forward to realizing "the long, long dream that we've had when South Africa holds its first non-racial elections ever, on Sept. 27, 1994.

PUC deposit fight

BY JULIE MOLNAR
The Queen's Journal

The heat is on the Public Utilities Commission, as the Alma Mater Society and Queen's Legal Aid have joined in a coalition with Kingston community groups to challenge the PUC's $250 security deposit.

Customers who have no previous accounts, or who have defaulted on bills with the PUC, in addition to those who don't own property and whose unpaid utilities can't be put on their property taxes, all find themselves forking out $250 for a security deposit when they sign for utilities in Kingston.

"My concern is that such a deposit affects university students because we make up a high percentage of rentals," said AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin.

PUC Secretary Bob Gray said that the security deposit is necessary because PUC loses "an inordinate amount of money due to people leaving without notice, with no forwarding address and leaving an outstanding bill."

Gray said that businesses and restaurants can pay thousands for their security deposits. Deposits must be high to reflect the size of the bills, Gray explained, as PUC provides water, hydro, sewer and gas to Kingston residents.

Gray added that the combination of outstanding debts and a weak economy has caused the deposit sum to escalate.

Nevin suggested that the PUC increase the installation fee from the current $8.95 to a flat rate of $25, and eliminate the $250 deposit because the "$250 is not paying off the debt as much as the flat rate" would.

Nevin sees the PUC using the $250 as a "stop-gap measure that limits and prevents some groups access to a fundamental service."

Gray argued that the deposit hike is not a measure to eliminate debt but rather one to stop it from piling up. The $250, plus interest, is returned when tenants move out.

Nevin said that a legal challenge is underway in Peterborough against the local utilities commission. People who were cut off because they couldn't pay their security deposit, even though they kept up with their bills, are pressing the issue there.

The coalition in Kingston is waiting for the outcome of the Peterborough case before they pursue legal action here, Nevin said.

Meanwhile, some grad students at Queen's are refusing to pay their security deposit and, Nevin said, "to my knowledge, nothing has been done [by the PUC] yet."

Nevin suggested that students put all housemates' names on the PUC bill, and pay the bills on time, so that they can avoid the security deposit next year.

CROSS-CAMPUS BRIEFS

Ryerson Polytechnical University

September 15

Toronto's Ryerson University has been a prime recruiting ground for cults, and now the administration has stepped up its efforts to make students aware of the issue. The student union has been given $800 for posters and a counselling hotline. Cult recruiters can be found anywhere on campus: in classes, halls, the book store, and outside. Some have even enrolled in particular classes to recruit people, according to anti-cult advocates. New and returning students received a letter, warning that "any involvement in cult activity can bring confusion and unhappiness."

—The Eye-Opener

University of Western Ontario

September 17

The troubled UWO Graduate School of Journalism narrowly lost a Senate vote on its existence, because of a failure to inform one of the voting members. The Senate Committee on University Planning voted six to five to close the school as of May 1994, but one vote could have changed the outcome.

Students' Council President Mike Bums, who told the Western Gazette he would have voted in support of the journalism school, did not know of the vote. In fact, he only found out about the meeting that day, and was unaware that the vote was being held, since it was not mentioned on the agenda.

The first ever gay and lesbian studies course at Western has been cancelled, amidst anger and controversy. "The Gay and Lesbian Challenge: Art and Literature After Stonewall" drew standing room only attendance last year. The professor, James Miller, apparently decided not to teach the course this year. But some students alleged that radical lesbians ruined the class for Miller, opposing him as a man and for a lack of lesbian literature in the syllabus.

—The Gazette

BE REASONABLE!

EVERYONE SHOULD HAVE A REASON TO PARTY.

SEPT. #24

The first "Love Boat" airs (1977)!

SEPT. #25

Heather Lacklear(32) and Christopher Reeve(41) share birthdays on Queen's Commerce Variety Night!

SEPT. #26

The answering machine is invented(1962)...PARTY ON!

Growth of Diverse 547-Pool

Released September 10 1993. Prices subject to change without notice.

BACK TO SCHOOL COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Redwing Computers provides high quality computer systems at competitive prices with a high degree of service and support. Our excellent and experienced staff are here to help you. Redwing Computers - for the best combination of Quality, Service and Price!

System	Price	Upgrades and Options
$1,249! Redwing System 1 - 386DX-33 (486 Processor upgradeable) Intel 80386DX-33MHz microprocessor 256KB cache Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,249!	MS-DOS 6.0 & Microsoft Windows 3.1 & Serial Mouse bundle $130 Microsoft DOS 6.0 $45 Microsoft Windows 3.1 (w/ system) $45 Serial mouse $25 IDE Hard Disk Upgrade 100MB to 130MB +$30 130MB to 170MB +$35 170MB to 210MB +$40 110MB to 250MB +$45
$1,349! Redwing System 2 - 486SX-25 Intel 80486SX-25MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,349!	RAM Upgrades 2MB to 4MB (5K systems) $160 4MB to 8MB (5K systems) $200 Printer Panasonic 9-pin DTPM P216 (Quiet) $200 Panasonic 9-pin KX-P1122 (Quiet) $200 Fujitsu 24-pin DL1150 w/ colour HP DesignJet 500 printer $440 Creative Labs SoundBlaster 2.0 hard scanner HP PCL Laser printer $375 Add-ons 5.25" 1.2MB floppy diskette drive $70 GVC Internal 2400 baud Modem $75 GVC Int. 9600 baud Fax/Modem card $85 Logitech ScanMan 2.0 hard scanner $165 Sound Blaster Pro $135 Sony 31A CD-ROM drive $340 Creative Labs Education 8 bit kit $69 Creative Labs Education 16 bit kit $79
$1,575! Redwing System 3 - 486DX-33 Intel 80486DX-33MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,575!	Monitor Upgrades 14" VGA to 14" SuperVGA $25 14" SVGA to SuperVGA 28 dp $41 14" SuperVGA 28 dp to Non-Intel VGA $28
$1,695! Redwing System 4 - 486DX2-50 Intel 80486DX2-50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,695!	Video Adapter Card Upgrades 256KB VGA to 512K SVGA $65 512K SVGA to 1MB SVGA $25 1MB SVGA to ATI Wonder/2.24 1MB $35
$1,825! Redwing System 5 - 486DX-50 Intel 80486DX-50MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,825!	VL-Bus Upgrades System 4, 5 & 6 (2 Slots) $120 512K SVGA to VL-Bus Video Adapter 1MB $130 512K SVGA to ATI Graphics Ultra Pro 2MB $509 For other peripherals, accessories and software, please consult your sales representative.
$1,975! Redwing System 6 - 486DX2-66 Intel 80486DX2-66MHz microprocessor 4 MB RAM, 70sec. exp. to 32MB 120 MB hard disk 3.5" high density floppy drive 14" SuperVGA monitor SuperVGA adapter card, 512KB 101 key enhanced keyboard 1 parallel, 1 games, 2 serial ports Mini-tower case, 220W power supply 128KB SRAM cache & cache controller	$1,975!

REDWING COMPUTERS

Tel: (613) 386-9388 - 650 Bath Road (at Gardiners) - Kingston, Ontario - K7M 4X6 - Fax: (613) 384-8508

Kingston's Friendly Computer Store - Serving Kingston & Area for over 10 years!

Come write for news, we'll make you famous.

Phone 545-2800, or drop by 272 Earl Street, and ask for Brad, Lori, Brock or Jeff.

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICE

New numbers to serve you better:

CONSULTING NURSE SERVICE 545-6028

MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS 545-6029

24 hour APPOINTMENT CANCELLATION LINE 545-6711
Please note that failure to cancel an appointment could result in a financial charge.

PSYCHIATRIC SERVICES 545-2508

INQUIRIES/ACCOUNTS 545-2506

TELEPHONE FOR THE DEAF (TDD) 545-6899

HEALTH LINE 545-6000 ext.4444
Monday - Thursday, 6 - 9 pm.

REMEMBER TO BRING YOUR HEALTH INSURANCE CARD AND YOUR STUDENT CARD TO EACH APPOINTMENT

Please Note:

Beginning September 15, we will be collecting the $ 31.50 Student Health Service portion of the Student Activity Fee from non-activity fee payers who choose to use the Student Health Service. This will be an annual payment collected at the first visit to the Health Service.

THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS "DON'T GO HOME WITHOUT IT!"

	DEPARTURES FRIDAY	RETURNS SUNDAY	COST ONE-WAY (GST INCLUDED!)
TORONTO WEST CAMPUS	1:55pm	8:00pm	$20.00
VIC HALL	2:05pm
J.D.U.C.	2:15pm
OTTAWA WEST CAMPUS	5:35pm	8:00PM	$16.00
VIC HALL	5:45pm
J.D.U.C.	5:55pm
MONTREAL WEST CAMPUS	2:50pm	5:45PM	$25.00
VIC HALL	3:00pm
J.D.U.C.	3:10pm

DROP OFF POINTS:

TORONTO: Oshawa*, Scarborough Town Centre, Union Station, Bus Terminal
MONTREAL: Kirkland Shopping Plaza, Bus Terminal
OTTAWA: Kanata*, Pinecrest*, Carling & Kirkwood*, Bus Terminal
*By Request Only

PICK UP POINTS TO RETURN:

TORONTO: Union Station
MONTREAL: Bus Terminal
OTTAWA: Bus Terminal

TICKETS ON SALE
NOW UNTIL NOON FRIDAY!
in the Queen's Box Office.
PHONE: 545-2558 No Refunds/Exchanges

Clothes to cover your ASUS

BY TANIS ROBINSON
The Queen's Journal

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society is going into the fashion business.

ASUS is creating a new clothing company this year, called Levanna Designs. The company is the brainchild of Commerce student Craig Lauric and ASUS President Jennifer Steeves.

Levanna was the name of the women's society which merged with the men's society in 1967 to form ASUS.

The company will sell clothing primarily to the various ASUS committees, but will also have stock in stores such as the College Book Merchant and the Campus Bookstore. The committees, however, will not be forced to buy from Levanna Designs, says ASUS Vice-President Heath Grant, who insists that there will be fair competition.

The purpose of Levanna Designs is to increase the revenue of ASUS without raising student interest fees, Grant said.

Levanna will sell its clothing at a lower price than the competition where possible. Grant expects a 10 to 20 per cent mark-up to bring in a marginal profit. Money will be saved, he said, by keeping expenditures within ASUS.

According to Grant, the start-up costs are minimal ("maybe just a fax machine," said Grant) and there will be no risk involved, because clothes will be ordered on demand. A contract has been signed with Clothes for Consciousness, a Montreal company.

Levanna will soon be hiring a director, a business manager, two marketing consultants and a four-person sales team. All students can apply, but preference will be given to Arts and Science students.

No growing pains in the School of Rehab

BY GEOFF LANGDON
The Queen's Journal

In this time of cutbacks and fiscal restraint, the School of Rehabilitation Therapy is probably unique in accepting twice as many students as it did three years ago.

And staff and students say that the changes demanded by a skyrocketing enrolment have been painless.

Carolyn Pinkerton, administrative assistant in the School of Rehab, said the school's first-year class has increased from around 40 students in 1990 to over 80 last year. The school includes both Occupational Therapy and Physiotherapy.

With nearly 90 first-year students being accepted this year, the school is continuing to grow and the entire school will have doubled its 1990 size by 1994, Pinkerton said.

To compensate for swelling class sizes, five new faculty members have been added and the Louise D. Acton building has undergone extensive renovations, said Pinkerton.

The money for the upgrading and staff hiring was provided in 1989 by the Ontario Ministry of Colleges and Universities, in the form of a one-time grant of $752,000, Pinkerton said.

However, she added that the grant only covered start-up costs, and funding since then has come out of the general budgets.

In a report to the Ontario Council on Graduate Studies, the school prepared a statement explaining the need for the increased spending. It explained that "the Ministry of Health and the Council of Ontario Universities indicated that the health care system would require double the (1988) number of rehabilitation professionals over the next 15 years."

Pinkerton expressed pride in the improvements, saying "we've had a master's program since 1987 and a PhD program is in the works." Approximately 20 students are currently in the master's program, many of them international students from Brazil and China, she said.

The additional money also enabled the school to attract better professors, Pinkerton said. "All of our OT 'tenure stream' professors have their PhDs," she explained. "The entire complexion of the school has changed."

Pinkerton outlined a Queen's program, unique in Canada, called Community-Based Rehabilitation. She explained that with the help of $5 million provided by the Canadian International Development Agency, the program will work toward "moving [therapy] services away from the big hospitals [to] smaller local centres."

According to Rehab students interviewed by The Journal, the sudden increase in class sizes has not adversely affected the quality of education.

Tom Hein, a third-year physiotherapy student, expressed satisfaction with class sizes, labs and interaction with his professors.

When asked whether the lab equipment is up-to-date, he replied, "when we need [the new equipment] we borrow it from the hospital."

Lee-Anne Mennie, a third-year Occupational Therapy student who already has a degree in Psychology, found her professors in Rehab "much more accessible than in Arts and Science."

Mennie expressed optimism about her future opportunities. "OT is a growing profession," she said. So much so, she added, that many second- and third-year students receive lucrative job offers, mainly from the U.S.

With the sudden increase in the number of students, greater pressure is being put on the Rehabilitation Society, the school's student organization, to represent and promote the school, both on and off campus. Wendy Smith, president of the Rehabilitation Society, believes the society is "undergoing a lot of change."

Modelling themselves after the other student governments on campus, this year's executive is striving to provide more services for its students, and to create a bigger voice for Rehab in the Alma Mater Society, Smith said.

Towards this end, an additional AMS Assembly representative was added, and the number of Rehab Society councillors was increased. Professors now sit on society committees, and the Rehab Society provides students to take part in tenure committees.

Other events, such as Rehab Awareness Week and a job fair, raise school spirit and aid students in finding jobs when they graduate, Smith said.

On the subject of job opportunities, Smith was less optimistic. She believes there are "not going to be as many jobs" in coming years due to health care cutbacks in Canada, and stated that she is setting up an "ad hoc committee to study the problem."

Smith also identified the flight of graduating Rehab students to the U.S. as a major problem. "Do we want all our educated professionals to go to the States?" she asked.

Smith herself admitted that the U.S., with its lure of large salaries and attractive benefits, is a likely destination for her, "for at least one year."

Megalalo's

RESTAURANTS INC.

Papa Loui's

From Burgers to Fajitas to Stir Fry to Steaks to Pasta with Flair.

Megalalo's has mega portions and something for everyone! Our Kitchen is open late and best of all we feed you on a student budget!

Located on the lower level, Papa Loui's offers affordable Draught, Large Screen T.V. & a relaxing Atmosphere.

531-9788 226 Princess St. • Beside the Grand Theatre

ASUS ELECTIONS

OCTOBER 13TH AND 14TH

Available Positions:

1 YEAR ASUS REP TO AMS
1 YEAR SENATOR

ARTSCI 97 YEAR EXECUTIVE
PRESIDENT
VICE PRESIDENT
SECRETARY
PUBLICITY- 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
SOCIAL- 2 POSITIONS AVAILABLE
WIC
BEWS

NOMINATIONS OPEN MONDAY SEPT. 20TH
THROUGH THURSDAY SEPT. 27
CAMPAIGNING STARTS OCT. 5TH AT 12:00 A.M.
AND ENDS OCTOBER 12TH AT 8 P.M.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT STEPHANIE
LANE OR JASON MARKWELL AT 545-6278.

Engineering celebrates 100th year

BY MICHAEL MOSS
The Queen's Journal

Last year's restoration of the Grant Hall clock was the first of many projects undertaken by engineers to mark their centennial this year. Oct. 30 will mark the official 100th birthday of Queen's Engineering, and, according to Engineering Society President Mark Simpson, "Queen's engineering's renowned spirit and unrivalled excellence will be in full swing this year to commemorate this outstanding achievement."

Besides fixing the clocktower, engineers have planned an open house, a video production, t-shirts and hats, and the awarding of honorary degrees. Of special importance to the celebration package is the centennial video produced by Queen's Television.

"It's not what you think it is," said Reg Clark, chair of the Centennial Committee, speaking of the eight-minute video. "It's a series of images taken from books, slides, and paintings, with a musical background. It's not a big, big production, but it's an interesting one."

The ceremonies will have an international dimension as alumni in 40 centres around the world will also be celebrating the centennial.

An engineering open house will take place from Oct. 21 to 23. 2000 high school students are expected to take part in the scheduled department tours, lab demonstrations, and other displays featured on the first day. The second and third days will be open to both alumni and the public.

The faculty has its own plans for Oct. 30 including a special convocation at Grant Hall, at which 12 honorary degrees will be awarded. The convocation will be followed by a party at Jock Harty Arena.

Simpson said that "a lot of people on both the faculty side and EngSoc side have worked very hard in planning for this year's events to mark Queen's Engineering's 100th birthday."

Law articling shortage

Continued from page one

the fact that [there are] twice as many students as positions."

While the number of law students registered for the matching process went up by "100 or more," she said, the number of articling positions "went down slightly."

Parkinson explained that "smaller firms who traditionally took part in the match were not even offering articling positions."

In an interview with The Journal, LSS President Moorthy explained that articling is a crucial step for a student entering the legal profession.

"Our concern is that, economics aside, in order for us to pass the Ontario Bar Admission we have to have completed 12 months of articling," she said. "That is a requirement of the Law Society of Upper Canada."

Déan Carter suggested that if the legal profession is going to demand that law graduates article before they can pass the bar, then it "has an obligation to provide these students with [articling] jobs."

According to Finkelstein, the high number of law students who weren't able to make a match means that there are a "significant percentage of grads who are stuck with degrees and can't practice their trade."

This is a particularly poignant problem, Finkelstein noted, given that one third of law students are mature students, some with families, and many with "a lot of debt."

Finkelstein said that the matching dilemma leaves the legal profession with two choices — either graduate less law students or create more jobs.

"I'd hate to say cut back on acceptances," he said.

Déan Carter agreed that the low matching rate for articling will put downward pressure on law school numbers.

"I can predict that there will be pressure from the [legal] profession for law schools to restrict the numbers in law school," he said.

Carter suggested that fundamental changes to the way students gain entrance to the law profession might be necessary to protect law graduates.

"We" may have to consider moving away from an articling system," said Carter, adding that this could involve adopting a system similar to the United States, where law students write the bar exam after graduating.

He said that at present his department's concern is helping those Queen's law graduates who have yet to find articling positions.

According to Finkelstein, those students who don't match in the first round can still find a placement in a subsequent match.

However, while 10 firms in the Toronto match still had articling positions available after the first round last year, only one firm had positions left this year.

Finkelstein said that the overabundance of law graduates looking for an articling job has left some students working for peanuts.

"Some firms have been taking on additional students with low levels of compensation," he said. "And some students are in such a bad position that they have to take it."

"In the heyday of the 80's a lot of firms were under a great amount of growth, and [they] overgrew," Finkelstein explained, "but now the crunch has hit and firms cannot offer to take on new [students] because they're oversized as it is."

Moorthy also said that the changing times have had grave consequences for law graduates.

"Five or six years ago it was really a student market," she said, "but there's certainly been a shift."

Further, Finkelstein noted, the economy has decreased the frequency with which firms hire the students who have articulated for them.

"The hire-back ratio has increasingly diminished," he said, adding that the ratio has dropped from 60 to 70 per cent in the mid-80's, to 20 to 30 per cent in the early 90's.

The matching process was originally designed to be pro-student, according to Moorthy. The idea was that students would not be forced into accepting a less desirable firm's offer while waiting to hear from their first choice, she said.

Moorthy met with the LSS yesterday to discuss the issue and possible solutions.

Your writing could be filling this space!

Come write for news. Phone 545-2800 or drop by 272 Earl Street

Is your idea of luxury macaroni and cheese?

There's nothing wrong with a hearty serving of "Student Helper," but you should be able to afford some variety on your plate. That's why you should check out Bank of Montreal's new Student Loan.

You can apply for a loan of up to $5,000 for each year of 5 years of undergraduate study, up to $20,000 in total, and up to $10,000 for 2 years of post-graduate studies. You'll be taking advantage of special student interest rates, and you just have to make interest payments while you're still in school. You'll also get a quick answer to your loan request.

To find out more, just drop by your nearest Bank of Montreal branch. And while you're there, ask us how else we can ease the pressure—a discount on day-to-day banking, special Bank of Montreal MasterCard® cards, and more. You might find it easier to balance your account and your meals.

Call our Queen's Student Hotline for more information 545-3022

*Available to full-time students, entering any year of post-secondary education at a recognized Canadian community college, university, or polytechnical school. Bank of Montreal eligibility and credit requirements must be met. See your branch for complete details. MasterCard is a registered trademark of MasterCard International Inc. Bank of Montreal is a registered user.

Bank of Montreal
We're Paying Attention

CompuShoppe

278 King St. East 547-2240
Monday to Friday 10am - 6pm
Saturday 10am - 4pm

Don't Miss Out On These Prices!

486 335X

Intel 80486SX CPU
128K Cache
10F Keyboard
130M Hard Drive
1.44M Floppy Drive
4M High Speed RAM
28dp Colour SVGA Monitor
512K Video Card

$1319

486 33DX

Intel 80486DX CPU
128K Cache
101 Keyboard
130M Hard Drive
1.44M Floppy Drive
4M High Speed RAM
28dp Colour SVGA Monitor
512K Video Card

$1489

486 50DX

AMD 486DX CPU
128K Cache
101 Keyboard
210M Hard Drive
1.44M Floppy Drive
4M High Speed RAM
28dp Colour SVGA Monitor
512K Video Card
Heat Sink Fan Included

$1589

Multimedia

Zoltrix MITSUMI

Package #1

Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card
Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone
Zoltrix ZX-55 Speakers
Zoltrix Headphones

$79

installation $5

Package #2

Mitsumi 700ms CFMC CD ROM
Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card
Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone
Zoltrix ZX-55 Speakers
Zoltrix Headphones

$279

installation $20

Package #3

Mitsumi 350ms CFMC CD ROM
Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card
Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone
Zoltrix ZX-55 Speakers
Zoltrix Headphones

$339

installation $20

CD ROM Bundle $99
Groler, World Atlas, Reference Library, Animals, and Game

Please Note:
Above prices CD only quantities last and subject to change without notice. FREE installation of peripherals, including above Multimedia specials with the purchase of a system.

Bentley had suddenly come to the realization that his writing skills were somewhat below par. This epoch shattering revelation came after a long string of "Fs" appeared on all of his essays (one professor even inquired into the possibility of having his future essays come with "subtitles"). Since Bentley is not exactly splitting atoms in his basement, the thought of getting help for his falling grades had evaded him - until a friend referred him to the writing centre.

This service was established by the University in the 1986/87 academic year and was done so in response to the concern and need for student counselling on writing papers, doing seminars, running tutorials, etc. A survey conducted in October, 1989 provides reassuring evidence that the writing program at Queen's can comfortably bear comparisons with the best university programs in the Province. Students are contributing $95,000 for an endowment fund to be set up for the future success of the centre. Your continued support is critical to maintaining a superior learning environment at Queen's University. Please, don't let Bentley down.

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

TONIGHT!

The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir!

Gambling on a Smoker? We give the best odds in Vegas 531-5300 Just Book It!

Great Food Specials Every Night!

Come Early! Cheap 7:30-9:30!

Sat The Mahones

Definitely Party Time! Come Early! Still cheap 7:30-9:30!

Every Sunday!
2 for 1 Chicken Dinners and Wild Blues Yonder
Rockin' Blues - No Cover!

Coming Soon!

The Watchmen One Hopping Penguins The Doughboys

Every Tues. N.T.N. Trivia Challenge grab your favourite mensa member and see how you stack up against the competition (This is my week, Dukaki)

Mon. Nite Football 2 Big Screens Stereo Sound Pitt. vs. Atlanta 20 cent Wings!

Every Thurs! Don't miss Dipsomania Cheap Cheap All Nite Long! WOW

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter
Managing Editor
David Pavao
News Editor
Jeff Gray
Production Manager
Colin Ho
Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse
Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor
Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland
Photography Editor
Marika Glickman
Graphics Editors
Richard Dubois
Joey deVilla
Features Editor
Alison Masemann
Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis
Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols
Backpage/Misc. Editors
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla
Assistant News Editors
Brook Martland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson
Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down
Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petre
Ryan Chen
Sian Boddoo-Stephens
Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn
Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yarnell
Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielsen
Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer
Sales Representatives
Chris Ritchie
Fiona Macauley
House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6726
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

Mike Cain, Rob Camp, Dave Coleman, Cameron Dixon, Frank Dixon, Karen Hill, Hugh Hodges, Geoff Langdon, Andrea Mathew, Julie Molnar, Mike Moss, Michelle Pellegrin, Tavis Robinson, Leroy Rodrigues, Derek Small, Fiona Vance, Russell Vance, Sylvia Warden

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

The non-partisan group Vote Education is asking all candidates in the upcoming federal election to fill out a survey. This survey would force the candidates to record their views on issues including access to post-secondary education, student aid financing, federal financing of post-secondary education, research and development, taxation and employment programs.

At The Journal, we put ourselves in their shoes. The following is our collective answer to the questions on the survey. Only the questions are repeated in this editorial, as the preamble to each question is not just explanatory, but often leads the participant toward a specific answer. Also, we decided to focus specifically on the problems inherent in the university system.

Section One - Access to Post-Secondary Education

1) Do you believe that every Canadian has the right to access Post Secondary Education in Canada? Does that access currently exist? If not what are the barriers?

It is our belief, that every Canadian should have the right to access post-secondary education. However, for many reasons we believe this not to be the case. Many potential university students face financial restrictions, thereby perpetuating the elitism that accompanies virtually all universities in Canada. Many of these barriers hit potential students well before they decide if they should even apply to university.

Section Two - Student Aid Financing

A. Short Term Solutions

1) Are you in favour of reinstating the six month interest free grace period on Canada Student Loans?

Expecting students to find meaningful employment immediately after graduation in order to pay interest on student loans is unreasonable. The concept of the student loan is predicated on future gains and should therefore be considered differently than the average bank loan. In today's economic climate, six months is barely enough time to secure gainful employment.

2) There has been a proposal to increase the minimum course load required to be eligible for Canada Student Loans from 60% to 80%. Do you support this move?

A move to 80 per cent would only serve to limit accessibility. Many part-time students limit themselves to a 60 per cent course load for valid reasons. Some are working, some are raising children and some may not be physically or emotionally prepared to enrol in a full course load. A 20 per cent increase in course load would necessarily require a jump in tuition fees as well. Thus the financial burden placed on the student and the government would merely increase. While the bureaucratic complications would be severe, perhaps minimum course load requirements should be assessed on a case-to-case basis. However, the question remains if this would effectively prevent abuses to the system.

If it were up to us...

3) Should private lending institutions have a role to play in assessing the needs of students applying for financial aid? What role should financial institutions play?

Positions on this question are mixed. Suggestions have been made that increased competition among banks could possibly increase accessibility to loans or reduce interest rates. In this respect, a greater role on the part of lending institutions would be encouraged. However, the fact remains that banks are in business to make profit and any increased involvement would be to the detriment of students. Accessibility would decrease if banks began to assess each student's ability to repay a loan.

B. Long Term Solutions

1) How will you reform Canada's student financial aid system to reflect the changing needs of Canadian full and part-time students?

2) Do you support a system of loans whereby repayment would be based on income and ability to pay?

Any reform to the Canada student financial aid system must be two pronged. As tuition continues to rise, only an income-contingent loan repayment plan with an ability based payback program offers a fair and effective approach to student financial aid. However, it is imperative that all prospective student be made fully aware of what financial options lie in front of them. If this is not done, the perception of accessibility (elitism) will not change.

2.b) Would you run such a program through existing systems of revenue collection such as tax returns?

While most of us believe that such a program would be effective, sensible and fair, another suggestion was made. Loan repayment could be collected through existing channels except in the case of default. In this case, collection through the tax return system would be initiated.

3) Should governments continue to regulate tuition fees?

If governments did not regulate tuition fees, the university system would become, for all intents and purposes, privatized. Loan requirements would skyrocket.

Section Three - Federal Financing of Post-Secondary Education

1) Are Canada's colleges and universities adequately funded? Do you believe that the financing of post-secondary education should be administered through a federal agency?

Lack of equipment, larger class sizes and the inability to secure professors are all indications of a serious lack of funding. Although the creation of a federal ministry of post-secondary education has been proposed, with the goal of ensuring financial accountability and national standards of education, chances are a mammothly slow bureaucracy would be created. This would inhibit any meaningful change to how federal financial influence over post-secondary education is administered. Furthermore, a centralized funding system may lose sight of regional differences.

2) What would you do to ensure that the government developed a coordinated national policy with regards to post-secondary education? Do you support a national education strategy? What type?

If a ministry could be created that was effective and efficient, and that did not overlook regional differences, then a federal ministry for post-secondary education could possibly provide Canada with a globally-minded workforce thereby ensuring some security for Canada's prosperity. However, ensuring an effective national policy is a difficult proposition especially when dealing with policy decisions traditionally under the provincial domain. Regardless, education should be a national priority.

3) Do you believe that a fixed percentage of transfer payments should be targeted to post-secondary education?

Although fixed percentage transfer payments could possibly prevent education from becoming a casualty of budget cuts, and thereby would allow universities to function more easily, such a proposal is accompanied by practical and constitutional difficulties. Provincial control over funding allocations would be limited, and this would mean moving dangerously close to unsolvable constitutional debate. From the practicality perspective, enrolment and economic factors vary from year to year confusing where fixed percentages should be targeted.

Section Four - Research and Development

1) How will you ensure research and development are given appropriate priority in the Canadian economy?

Money spent on research and development is an investment in the future of this country. Productivity and economic growth are linked conceptually to education. Though they are referred to as one, research and development are two separate entities. Research comes before development and funding decisions should reflect this reality. Additional government spending and corporate tax breaks could be used to ensure that research and development receive the funding and recognition they deserve.

2) Do you support a reinstatement of funding to the national grant-giving bodies?

Grants are an integral part of research, benefiting both professors and their students. Especially in a country like Canada, with a relatively small economy and small market, funding for research from federal sources is imperative. However, like any other bureaucracy, money and time are wasted in the decision making process.

Section Five - Taxation

1) Would you support the removal of the Goods and Services Tax from academic textbooks?

On this question, we found ourselves split. Some believe that any reading material free of advertising should be free of the GST. Others, however, believe that everyone should pay their fair share. Being a student does not mean special status, especially when certain necessities such as tampons and diapers are subject to the tax. Income tax on scholarships, however, is a much more important issue.

2) Do you favour mandatory Student Union fees becoming explicitly tax-deductible, as are other union dues?

Yes. This should already be the case, but will not make a huge difference.

3) Would you support the extension of the post-secondary income tax credit to part-time students?

More often than not, part-time students are taking partial course loads for valid reasons, as stated above. Why should it be harder for these students to get a post-secondary education? At least half the credit should be extended to part-time students, though ideally this would be done on a case-to-case basis to ensure students' needs are met.

4) Are you in support of the regulation of 'non-tuition related' fees by the government?

Unless they grow so large as to be on par with tuition fees, 'non-tuition related' fees should not be regulated by the government. University student governments and administrations should be responsible to gether for setting these fees.

Section Six - Employment Programs

1) How will you help to ensure adequate summer job opportunities for students?

Were the government responsible for creating summer jobs for students, and were students at the top of the employment hierarchy, then the government could try to provide jobs by encouraging co-op programs between universities and companies. However, co-op programs are not always successful. Instead of struggling to provide summer jobs, the government should focus on ensuring access to university.

2) What should the federal government do in terms of a National Job Strategy for graduating students?

If a national jobs strategy is to be implemented, it should be one that encourages employers to hire graduates. However, the above answer applies here.

3) Currently students pay about 20% of the cost of their education. What % of the cost should students pay?

Most of us would not be willing to pay more than 20 per cent. However, if students are forced to pay more, tuition hikes must be fairly matched with some form of outside spending. At least one person on our editorial board feels that zero tuition would be ideal.

Opinions

SOARB violated mandate

The Editor,

During Orientation some leaders break the rules. This year was no exception. The punishment for violating the contract, as leaders are led to believe, is to be 'de-leadered'. This year, the leaders of Transfer Orientation were chosen to be punished. However, contrary to intuitive logic, those who broke the rules were not 'de-leadered' but instead the entire week was cancelled. Leaders and students alike were forbidden to continue with the Orientation of Queen's. The issue then, in the minds of both the transfer students and the Transfer Orientation Executive, is not whether Trash acted wrongly but whether SOARB did.

Dr. Jim Bennett, the co-chair of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board, told The Journal "Our task is not to make the rules - it is to ensure that the policies of the University Senate are carried out." (September 14) However, if one cares to look at the mandate of SOARB one will notice this: "SOARB is purely regulatory in function, setting general policies for Orientation, and leaving it to AMSOC and the faculty and school Orientation committees to execute these policies."

The chairs of Transfer Orientation thus demand a formal written apology to the transfer students from Dr. Jim Bennett and Mr. Amein Punjani to be printed in the Queen's Journal and approved by the students before publication. We demand that Transfer Orientation be fully reinstated in the Orientation programme until such time as SOARB "consults widely and be perceived to do so" on its future. Finally, we demand that all members of SOARB sign a contract which binds them to uphold the written mandate of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board on punishment of expulsion from the Board. The question is now whether SOARB is a body designed to punish leaders to the painful detriment of the students or a body to "help students make a smooth transition in to [Queen's]." SOARB has clearly violated its mandate and as such attention should be turned away from the fruitless squabbling over whether Trash Leaders broke the rules, which they clearly did, to whether SOARB is an effective body which completes its mandate, which it clearly is not.

On the 10th of September the members of the Executive were told about the cancellation of the remainder of the week. Unfortunately Dr. Bennett & SOARB have, again forgotten to read their mandate. The Jackson report clearly states that "should it [SOARB] contemplate making any substantive or structural changes, SOARB will consult widely and be perceived to do so." (10) The cancellation of Trash week is clearly a "substantive" change to Orientation. With an incoming population of over 100 students Transfer Orientation rivals many of the faculties. SOARB neither consulted with the Queen's community nor was it perceived to do so when it cancelled Transfer Orientation. Not only is SOARB illegitimate in its authority to cancel the week, it has done so without the prescribed consultation.

SOARB has told the Queen's community, and Transfer students in particular, that the cancellation has hurt the Board a lot more than it hurt the students. This is wrong. The damage done to the students of Transfer Orientation is both far reaching and severe. They were told that they were to be welcomed in to the Queen's community with open arms and smiling faces. They arrived and did what all other students did: have fun, get to know the school, and sign up for classes. What did they do wrong when Mr. Punjani says that "the fact remains that the Trash Executive were not carrying out their responsibilities as charged."? (Journal, September 17) It seems they are being punished for the mistakes of their leaders. The Jackson Report states that SOARB, in all of its actions, shall "use as its principle set of criteria the stated goals of Orientation." (10) The goals are simply this: "To help students make a smooth transition into their new environment in all of its aspects." (2) Punishing the students, contrary to SOARB belief, does not hurt the Board more than the students and, again, is clearly against these policies."

Dr. Jim Bennett, the co-chair of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board, told The Journal "Our task is not to make the rules - it is to ensure that the policies of the University Senate are carried out." (September 14) However, if one cares to look at the mandate of SOARB one will notice this: "SOARB is purely regulatory in function, setting general policies for Orientation, and leaving it to AMSOC and the faculty and school Orientation committees to execute these policies."

The chairs of Transfer Orientation thus demand a formal written apology to the transfer students from Dr. Jim Bennett and Mr. Amein Punjani to be printed in the Queen's Journal and approved by the students before publication. We demand that Transfer Orientation be fully reinstated in the Orientation programme until such time as SOARB "consults widely and be perceived to do so" on its future. Finally, we demand that all members of SOARB sign a contract which binds them to uphold the written mandate of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board on punishment of expulsion from the Board. The question is now whether SOARB is a body designed to punish leaders to the painful detriment of the students or a body to "help students make a smooth transition in to [Queen's]." SOARB has clearly violated its mandate and as such attention should be turned away from the fruitless squabbling over whether Trash Leaders broke the rules, which they clearly did, to whether SOARB is an effective body which completes its mandate, which it clearly is not.

—Marianna Wisenthal and Fareeda Shaib
Chair persons, Transfer Orientation

talking heads

"What did you think of this year's 'Career's Day'?"

"Everything you need to know."

—Julie Anderson
Comm '96

"Everyone goes out of their way to help."

—Jacqueline Wylie
Comm '96

"It's just like a stop and shop."

—Steve Fiorelli
Comm. '94

"It's depressing."

—Debbie Baccangelo
Arts '94

"I came for the free samples."

—Kim Gammage
Comm '94

"I came to visit my friends who graduated and got jobs last year and left me here to keep studying."

—Steph Lallamne
Arts '93

Features

Healthy, Wealthy and Wise

As the school year gets underway in earnest, it's a good time to start thinking about developing a healthy eating and fitness routine. The information in this Feature is intended as a guide to students who may be living on their own for the first time, or as a refresher course for those people who have gotten a little too accustomed to Kraft Dinner and Pop Tarts since returning to school.

For students new to the ghetto, shopping for your own groceries may be the first hurdle that you encounter when trying to fend for yourself. Student Health Services runs a program called Supermarket Safari, which can assist you in choosing nutritious and inexpensive options at the grocery store.

The program will begin in October, and involves weekly tours of the A&P every Wednesday evening with a representative from Student Health. For more information, contact Diane Nolting, the Health Educator at Student Health Services.

The key to a healthy diet, according to Nolting, is remembering that "there is no such thing as good food and bad food." She emphasizes that if students constantly deprive themselves of food that they really covet, they end up feeling unhappy about themselves and envious of others. In the same vein, fad dieting is also useless because it doesn't really involve reorienting your everyday eating patterns. Following the Canada Food Guide is an important first step in maintaining a healthy diet. If you are trying to lose weight, remember that it is most important to reduce your fat intake rather than your calorie intake.

Women should take special note when reorienting their eating habits. Because women are most prone to dieting, they often sacrifice proper nutrition by reducing their iron or calcium intake. Calcium deficiency can lead to osteoporosis in old age, but is easily remedied by eating calcium-rich foods such as low-fat dairy products, spinach and broccoli. Eating iron-rich foods such as lean red meat, dried fruits and whole-grain products can prevent the onset of fatigue and anaemia. Iron is more readily absorbed when it is consumed along with foods rich in Vitamin C.

Shopping Tips

- Do as much comparison shopping as possible. Even though the life of a student is hectic, it's often worth it to spend a little extra time hopping from store to store.
- Take advantage of coupons and specials, but don't let the cheaper price entice you into buying complete junk!
- Buying in bulk is often cheaper, but there's really no point in getting too much if it will end up getting stale or going to waste.
- You've all heard this one before, but it bears repeating: don't shop when you're hungry!
- Processed foods are always less nutritious and most often more expensive than unprocessed ones; try and avoid them.

- Read labels before you buy: products labelled "light" or "natural" may not be all they're cracked up to be. Look for products with low fat, salt and sugar content.
- Instead of using expensive vitamin and mineral supplements, try to include all the nutrients you need in your daily diet. The only time you should be supplementing your diet is if it's been recommended by a doctor.
- Vegetarians can eat for a lot less and still get enough protein in their diet. Take a page from their book and eat more legumes and less meat!

- The key way to control fat intake from meat and poultry is to reduce portion sizes. 90 grams or three ounces is enough at one sitting.
- As a general rule: leg meat is lowest in fat; loin cuts are moderately low in fat; shoulder cuts are highest in fat. White poultry meat has half the fat of dark poultry meat.
- Stir-fry meals (quick, easy and very nutritious) can be made with almost no fat if you use a heavy gauge non-stick pan.
- Cut down on cheese! A slice can contain up to 13 grams of fat. Low fat or skimmed milk cheese gives you about three grams of fat per slice.
- If you drink cream in your coffee, three cups a day could be increasing your fat intake by ten grams. Even homogenized milk is a better alternative.
- Big Marriott-type muffins can contain up to 12 grams of fat. Try and bake some batches at home: they average five grams each and are a heck of a lot cheaper too!
- Snack crackers are high in fat! The best kinds are soda crackers, melba toast, swiss flat bread, rice cakes and water biscuits.
- Caesar salads and julienne salads are not really a healthy alternative when eating out. And any salad with loads of dressing is not optimal.
- When you order pizza, order extra vegetables rather than extra cheese. Skip the meat if possible!
- Eat as many fruits and veggies as you want, but beware the avocado! It can contain between 20 and 30 grams of fat each.
- Try to increase your consumption of dried beans, lentils and peas: they are low on fat and high on fibre.

Source: 89 Ways to Cut Fat, by Denise Beatty.

Shop 'till you drop

The easiest way to ensure that you eat at least relatively well at school is by buying the right kinds of groceries. There's not a whole lot you can do with a box of Kraft Dinner but heat and serve (or if you learned to cook from your Grandmother, add gross stuff like ketchup, thyme, tarragon, bacon bits and other assorted goodies). However, if you buy a wide and healthy variety of staple foods, you could end up actually enjoying your meal! To assist in achieving this goal, The Journal has compiled a list of food stores and their various faults and attributes. Remember, each of these stores has something to offer, so try and hit them all during your ghetto sojourn.

John's Deli, 507 Princess Street

If you haven't discovered this place yet, you're definitely missing out. Located right across from the Beer Store on Princess Street, John's Deli is a great place to find a really diverse selection of imported (primarily European) foods. The store is fully stocked with canned legumes, tomato sauce, mediterranean fruit juice, Italian cookies, European chocolate, and a great selection of teas and coffees. And while you might expect exorbitant prices, most of these items are comparable to their North American Wonder Bread counterparts found at the A&P. The fruits and vegetables are also very reasonably priced, but the freshness factor is not always consistent. Another huge advantage of John's is that it has a butcher and deli counter, which means fresh meat! And finally, check out the great selection of gourmet and pedestrian cheeses, as well as some bread that actually has a crust!

The A&P (Corner of Princess and Barrie streets)

What can I say about this store that most Queen's students don't know? By all means, shop at this store for your basic grocery needs, but don't confine your consumer urges to this limited universe. As we all know, variety is the spice of life, and the A&P is notorious for its low product turnover. The positive aspects of A&P include the relatively cheap frozen foods and dry goods, as well as the convenience of having everything (including wilted lettuce and junky processed foods) in one place. This is a particular advantage when the February roads are coated in slush. While you are there, however, don't fall for the "my parents never let me have Fruit Roll-ups or Marshmallow Fluff, I need it NOW!" trap. The challenge is to buy cheap stuff that won't bum the insides of your stomach.

Meyer's Cash and Carry (Princess at the top of University)

This bulk food store is just a hop, skip and a jump away from the A&P, and is a more environmentally conscious and in most cases cheaper alternative to overpackaged dry goods. In the three years I have been in

Kingston, Meyer's has progressed from a store that stocked bulk candy, noodles and dog food to one that boasts a wide variety of nutritious bulk foods, like Nature Burger mix, Tabouli mix (a cracked wheat salad), and Tofurella (a cheese substitute). This is also a great place to pick up spices, since you can get as little as you need, although there is a minimum charge of 20 cents. A new offering is bulk fudge, which of course should be indulged in on an occasional basis only. This points to one of the hazards of Meyer's: you may think that because this is a bulk food store everything in it is good for you, but this is not the case! The gummy worms they sell here are not nutritionally different from the ones at Mac's Milk. Generally speaking, the health food content of the store has measurably increased over the past few years. Some particularly tasty products include the spicy red pasta (which lives up to your basic pasta and tomato sauce), and the fairly reasonably priced dairy products (watch for specials on these).

The Kingston Farmers' Market (King St. and Brock St.)

The market, a Kingston institution, is at its peak right about now. As the fall harvest of fresh fruits and vegetables piles up, the parking lot behind city hall is a great place to get really fresh produce. Now is the time when you will see the highest amount of locally grown produce, because in the early spring some of the stuff seems to be grown elsewhere.

You could go really nuts in one visit, since all the fruit and veggies just make you feel so wholesome and virtuous, but remember that fresh produce will spoil, and it's actually best to make frequent visits to buy a small amount each time. If that's too time consuming, try buying potatoes, carrots, squash, and apples, which tend to keep for longer.

Most of the booths also sell cut and potted flowers, and items like honey, maple syrup and cheese curds are also available. One booth specializes in sausages, and although they are too pricey for the average budget, the Kielbassa is a nice treat. While you're there, take advantage of the booths run by local bakers and craftspeople as well.

Asian Market (Princess Street at Clergy)

If you want to add some interest to your meals, this small owner-operated store at the corner of Princess and Bagot is a good place to start. It features a wide variety of Southeast Asian staples and delicacies, including foods from India, China, Japan and elsewhere. The wide variety of sauces (curry, soy, hoisin, teriyaki) are an excellent way to add life to a stir-fry. For the adventurous chef, the Asian Market also stocks some fairly uncommon Chinese vegetables and frozen foods. You never know what's out there until you go take a look, and this place is a great way to get your creative culinary juices flowing. This is also a good place for staple foods like rice and noodles at decent prices. Check it out!

Tara Natural Foods (340 King St. E.)

This is the health food store after which all other health food stores are modelled. It's granola city in here, and really makes you feel relaxed and healthy. But let's face it: unless you actually eat some of the stuff in here, you won't be any better off for your visit. Tara's boasts almost everything the vegetarian could want: cheese substitutes, soy burgers and dogs, non-dairy burritos, dried legumes, organic vegetables and more! The cheese selection is also quite diverse, and priced comparably to most grocery stores. Speaking of prices, a quick survey of vegetable prices indicated that you won't be paying much more for organic, although this could change drastically once winter rolls around. Broccoli was $1.20 a bunch (compared to $1.29 at A&P), and green peppers were 50 cents each (compared to 75 cents at the Farmers' market). At Tara's you can also find a wide variety of bulk spreads, including peanut, almond and cashew butter, honey and tahini. Containers for these items cost extra, so it's best to bring in your own. As well, when you bring in your own containers or coffee bags, Tara's will donate four cents each to the Kingston Environmental Action Project.

While you're there, check out the wall of spices available, but pay attention to the prices: some of them are a little astronomical! Another notable offering is the Bridgehead Coffee, which is produced in Third World countries through Oxfam, a charitable organization which tries to keep profits in the country of origin.

It's best to bring your own shopping bags to Tara's, although they do provide previously used plastic shopping bags if you forget.

15 ways to cut fat

1. Know where fats hide out. Most fats are found in butter, margarine, oil, meat, poultry, fish, milk products, bakery products, fast foods and convenience foods.

2. Cut down on fat when cooking. You don't really need 1/4 cup of butter to saute your onions. And chances are you can cut 1/4 of the fat out of baking recipes without ruining them.

3. If you buy salad dressings look for low fat or no fat.

4. Simply stop using butter or margarine on toast. Jam or honey are tasty low fat substitutes.

5. The key way to control fat intake from meat and poultry is to reduce portion sizes. 90 grams or three ounces is enough at one sitting.

6. As a general rule: leg meat is lowest in fat; loin cuts are moderately low in fat; shoulder cuts are highest in fat. White poultry meat has half the fat of dark poultry meat.

7. Stir-fry meals (quick, easy and very nutritious) can be made with almost no fat if you use a heavy gauge non-stick pan.

8. Cut down on cheese! A slice can contain up to 13 grams of fat. Low fat or skimmed milk cheese gives you about three grams of fat per slice.

9. If you drink cream in your coffee, three cups a day could be increasing your fat intake by ten grams. Even homogenized milk is a better alternative.

10. Big Marriott-type muffins can contain up to 12 grams of fat. Try and bake some batches at home: they average five grams each and are a heck of a lot cheaper too!

11. Snack crackers are high in fat! The best kinds are soda crackers, melba toast, swiss flat bread, rice cakes and water biscuits.

12. Caesar salads and julienne salads are not really a healthy alternative when eating out. And any salad with loads of dressing is not optimal.

13. When you order pizza, order extra vegetables rather than extra cheese. Skip the meat if possible!

14. Eat as many fruits and veggies as you want, but beware the avocado! It can contain between 20 and 30 grams of fat each.

15. Try to increase your consumption of dried beans, lentils and peas: they are low on fat and high on fibre.

Source: 89 Ways to Cut Fat, by Denise Beatty.

Lentil Land

Increased numbers of university students are turning to vegetarianism as a dietary option. For some the decision to eliminate meat from their diet is environmental or ideological, and some chose to do so for the purported health benefits. Either way, it's important to shop wisely for a vegetarian diet. Because animal proteins contain a complete complement of amino acids (and most plants don't), it's recommended that vegetarians ensure that they have eaten certain combinations of proteins by the end of the day. Complementary combinations of proteins include peanuts and milk, breads and cheese, beans and rice, cereals and milk, beans and wheat, and bread and eggs, pasta and cheese, and peas and rye.

Studies have found that it is entirely possible to maintain a healthy vegetarian diet. In fact, it has been found that vegetarians may be able to absorb iron and zinc more efficiently. A vegetarian diet also tends to be significantly lower in fat than a meat-eater's diet. On average, Canadians consume about 40 per cent of their calories as fat, whereas a vegetarian diet contains 15 to 23 per cent of its calories as fat.

It's not necessary, however, to cut meat out of your diet completely to achieve some of these health benefits. On a tight budget, many students tend to reduce their meat intake anyway. If this is the case for you, make sure you are supplementing your diet with other proteins.

This feature was compiled by Alison Masemann, Features Editor and french fry connoisseur. Special thanks to Diane Nolting from Student Health Services for her invaluable help and resources.

Fit for Fall

The benefits of living an active life are countless. I find that the periods in my life when I feel the best both physically and mentally are those in which I am the most physically active. It is incredible just how closely linked the mind and the body truly are. The state of one often depends on the other.

If you are thinking of becoming more active, it's very important to choose a form or forms of exercise that you enjoy so that you do them often. Walking or biking to school is a great way of incorporating fitness into our lives. If you find that getting motivated to exercise or making it to the gym for aerobics classes or volleyball games is difficult, be sure to schedule it in and assign it the same importance as doing your homework or going to class. Too often people put exercise on the back burner when their lives get hectic. This is an unfortunate trend, because exercise really makes us better able to deal with life's stresses. Our bodies and minds become stronger and healthier with exercise, making us better able to fend off illnesses and challenging life situations.

For some people, it takes exercising on a regular basis for it to become a routine, natural part of their lives. I was lucky this summer because I worked at an aquatic facility, so I didn't have to go far in order to exercise. To get myself into a routine I made sure that at least three times a week I swam a certain number of lengths before I left the pool. After a while doing them became a habit and I found myself looking forward to my workouts.

For other people, exercise comes more naturally since their favourite pastimes are often related to physical activity. For others who haven't had as much exposure to sports and fitness, more effort is usually needed to get involved.

In a recent conversation I had with a friend, we were agreeing on the fact that if one sticks to a form of fitness for a particular amount of time there is a breaking point where performing the activity feels very natural and is very exhilarating.

This summer I stuck to my routine like I never have before and I still can't get over the impact it had on my overall well-being. I had far more energy, a more positive outlook on life and I felt generally more comfortable "in my skin".

I think the greatest part of exercising regularly is that it helps to boost self-confidence. Exercise gives us more energy, making us more productive, better able to accomplish things for ourselves, and better able to give time to others. Physical activity has many benefits so it's worth making it a priority! On a final note, with apologies to Joseph Addison, "exercise is to the body what reading is to the mind."

Caroline Davies, Arts '94, is majoring in health and sociology, and enjoys singing "Fame" with her Echo Mike™.

BMI Baby

So you think you're overweight? Not so fast! While we are inundated with images and information that point to an "ideal weight," it's important to recognize that different people are born with different body types. Whereas in the past it was accepted that there was an "ideal weight" for both men and women, health professionals now agree that one can only really specify a range within which one can fall. To this end, the Body Mass Index has been developed. This table indicates whether or not you fall into low, moderate or high risk zone for developing health problems. The formula is the same for men and women, and should not be used for children, for those under 20 years and over 65 years, for pregnant or lactating women.

HOW TO FIND YOUR BMI

1. Mark an X at your height on line A
2. Mark an X at your height on line B.
3. Take a ruler and join the two X's.
4. To find your BMI, extend the line to line C.

IF YOUR BMI IS UNDER 20

A BMI under 20 may be associated with health problems for some individuals. It may be advisable to consult with a physician for advice.

IF YOUR BMI IS BETWEEN 20 AND 25

This zone is associated with the lowest risk of illness for most people. This is the range you want to stay in.

IF YOUR BMI IS BETWEEN 25 AND 27

A BMI over 25 may be associated with health problems for some people. Caution is suggested if your BMI is within this zone.

IF YOUR BMI IS OVER 27

A BMI over 27 is associated with increased risk of health problems such as heart disease, high blood pressure and diabetes. It may be a good idea to consult a dietician and physician for advice.

QMA

Welcome

THE QUEEN'S MARKETING ASSOCIATION

An introduction to the QMA

The Queen's Marketing Association was founded in 1984 by Fred Singer, a Queen's Law student and Commerce graduate. With strong support from Ken Wong of the School of Business marketing department, Fred soon developed a dynamic organization run solely by students.

Today, the QMA is an organization of 1,300 general members and over 60 core members who actively work on various projects. Built around the concepts of autonomous student management and strong entrepreneurial attitudes, this organization continues to enhance university education by providing students with practical experience and skills. Through topical Speakers, a National Conference, Market Research Surveys, Special Projects, Retail Sales, and Practical Skills Workshops, QMA members further their education while showing initiative and taking responsibility. The QMA provides a forum for the exchange of ideas between faculties and the business community while assisting its members in finding meaningful careers.

Upcoming Events

September 22 - 28 1993-94 Membership Drive

Be sure to sign-up at one of the many booths on campus!

September 27 & 29 Public Speaking & Oral Presentation Workshop

Learn a few tricks and get feedback on your own style.

Sept. 27 - Oct. 15 Computer Skills Instruction Series

Get to know Lotus 123, WordPerfect and Harvard Graphics.

September 29 Annual General Meeting

Guest Speaker: Michael Cullen, V.P. Marketing of Thomas J. Lipton.

October 5 Warner Lambert Speaker Series: "North American Success Stories"

Ted Fletcher, President of Starter Canada (sporting goods).

October 6 Time Management Workshop

Find out how to fit everything into your hectic schedule.

October 21 Unilever Speaker Series: "Towards 2000 - Gaining a Competitive Advantage in Today's Changing World"

Andreas Kerkovious (Law '88), Mountain Equipment Co-op Board of Directors.

November 2 Warner Lambert Speaker Series: "North American Success Stories"

Sam Joseph, V.P. Marketing of McDonalds.

November 10 Unilever Speaker Series: "Towards 2000 - Gaining a Competitive Advantage in Today's Changing World"

Charles Oliver, V.P. Marketing of Lever Brothers.

January 28 & 29 Annual National Conference: "Towards 2000 - Marketing for the 90s Consumer"

Look for more information about the conference in upcoming newsletters.

*Beware Engineers! The Northern Telecom Speaker Series details will be announced in the near future. Look at the QMA display case by the Mac Corry bank machines for further information.

How Do I Join the QMA?

You only have a few days left, so hurry and sign-up in either Mac Corry, the JDUC or Dunning between 10:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m.. Our booths will be set until Tuesday the 26th; but the sooner you sign-up, the better your selection of our FREE gifts offered to you! So come out today and bring a friend!!

If you have any questions please feel free to call Sylvie at 531-8652.

Whats in it for me?

Letter from the President:

The one truly amazing thing about Queen's is that there are so many ways for students to get involved, be it in sports, with clubs, or through various student organizations. I clearly remember reading The Journal in first year and being absolutely amazed at all the activities that were run by students. I soon decided where I wanted to focus my efforts, however, and became a member of the Queen's Marketing Association. As today's QMA president, this was a decision from which I never looked back!

After joining the QMA, I discovered how important marketing is to each and every Queen's student. It became very clear to me that marketing is not limited to business, but is everywhere. How we market ourselves influences the success of our relationships with others, be it with family, friends, or fellow employees. Ultimately, marketing's most important application is ourselves.

The QMA is not a Commerce organization. It is a marketing association for everyone who sees value within themselves. Although being a QMA member is a rewarding and fun experience, it is equally important to recognize the crucial role the QMA plays in bringing a marketing perspective to students — a perspective which cannot be found in the classroom. For these reasons, I strongly encourage all students, from all faculties, to join the QMA!!

Drew McReynolds

President - Queen's Marketing Association

These are the nine divisions which work together to make the QMA into a great organization:

Business Division (Mike Harris, Director) - The Business Division is currently developing a variety of goods and services for the 1993-94 year. Look out for our Queen's clothing line of sweat shirts, t-shirts, and hats. We will also be offering a bus service to Toronto and Ottawa at Thanksgiving and Reading Week.

Speakers Division (Mika Yamamoto, Director) - The QMA's Speakers Division's purpose is to provide members of the QMA and the Queen's Community with insight into real life experiences of individuals in the business world. With three speaker series, our objective is to appeal to a broad spectrum of students through various faculties.

Advertising Division (Sarah Lauriston, Director) - The Advertising Division is the "face" of the QMA. It is our job to relate what the QMA has to offer, as well as make students aware of upcoming QMA events. We accomplish this through our newsletter and various campus-wide promotions, we also run an advertising competition in cooperation with one of our sponsors.

Marketing Research Division (Zoe Nutten, Director) - The Marketing Research Division was created due to the tremendously successful 1991 "Queen's Student Alcohol Attitudes Survey." Today, it continues to prosper through its work with QMA divisions, other Queen's association and groups, as well as with QMA sponsors.

Special Projects (Jen Lawetz, Director) - Special Projects is the most elusive of the QMA's divisions. We perform, well, a variety of Special Projects. We like to keep them under wraps, so look for a few surprises from us in the upcoming year!

Practical Skills (Fiona O'Connell, Director) - The Practical Skills Division offers workshops and courses which provide students with an opportunity to learn new skills and apply ones previously learned. Our workshops include: Time Management Workshops, Resume Building/Interview Workshops, Public Speaking Workshops, Computer Skills Instruction Series, and a Marketing Crash Course.

Human Resources (Sylvie Levesque, Director) - Human Resources is the division which strives to help the Board of Directors work together in perfect harmony, recruit as many general members as possible (to ensure great speakers and great sponsorship!), and to organize social events. We are behind the synergy that drives the largest organization on campus.

Corporate Division (Pete Doulas, Director) - The Corporate Division manages communication between QMA members and sponsors. Our noted sponsors are Warner Lambert, Unilever, Golfarb Consultants, Procter & Gamble, Northern Telecom and the Holiday Inn. Our sponsors are a main reason for the QMA's success.

Conference Division (Karen Kilcullen, Director) - The Conference Division is responsible for the QMA's highly acclaimed Annual National Conference. This year's theme is "Toward 2000 — Marketing for the 90's Consumer." Some of our expected speakers include corporate leaders from Unitel, General Motors, Unilever, Warner Lambert, and Procter & Gamble. The Conference is an excellent and exciting opportunity for students to meet and learn from members of the business community as well as from other Canadian students.

Editor's Note

As an English major, I spent a good three years believing that the QMA was geared towards Commerce students and did not apply to me. Now the current editor of the QMA newsletter, I wish I had become involved sooner as the QMA is open and readily accessible to all Queen's students. For those interested in becoming involved and contributing to the Queen's community, look to the QMA. Not only is it an excellent way to meet people, but it will enable you to gain valuable experiences and offer you unlimited opportunities at the level of intensity and commitment you choose.

As for myself, I'll be busy keeping both new and old members informed of QMA events. Remember to look for our next newsletter at the beginning of November!

Until then, welcome to the QMA!

Jillian Boyd

Thanks to our sponsors!

Holiday Inn
KINGSTON

Procter & Gamble

Unilever

nt northern telecom

Goldfarb Consultants

WARNER
LAMBERT

NOTICE

The TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK wishes to announce an amendment to our advertisement in the What's Next. A fourth Official Tricolour Photographer has been added to our list:

GRUENBERG PHOTOGRAPHY

is located at 65 Clarence Street,
Kingston, Ontario
and may be reached at
(613) 548-4541

94's Don't Forget!!! You MUST have your sitting booked for graduation photos of one of the official Tricolour photographers no later than November 15, 1993. If you want your photo included in this year's Tricolour, you must book by this date. (NOTE: The cutoff date for sittings is January 31, 1994.)

The Tricolour Yearbook would like to extend our sincerest apologies to Gruenberg Photography for this omission.

NOTICE

APPLICATIONS NOW AVAILABLE FOR:

Tricolour Yearbook

Layout Editor, Business Manager, Darkroom Assistant, Desktop Publishing Editor, News Editor, Art/Literature Editor, Graduate Section Editor, Clubs Section Coordinator, Other Staff Members

Campus Activities Commission

First year students for:

Alumni Weekend, United Way, Charity Ball, Undergrad Games, Welcome Back Week, Grand Events, Kaleidoscope, Coffee House, Model U.N., Model Parliament, Advertising Committee, Special Projects

Upper year students for:

Model U.N.
Grand Events
Coffee House
Coffee House

One co-chair for:

Communications Commission

Members and volunteers for:

Queen's Enquirer, Hausing Issues, Community Interaction, High School Liaison, InfoBank, Electronic Signboard, What's Up Page Hausing Issues Committee

2 Chairs for:

VPUA ESOS Committee

Video Store Assistant Manager

Walkhome Staff members

coming up from OPIRG KINGSTON

Volunteer Orientation
Monday, Sept. 27th @ 7 pm
John Orr Room, JDUC

MANUFACTURING CONSENT:
Noam Chomsky and the Media
Wed., September 29th @ 7 pm
Third Floor Common Room, JDUC

WEN DO
Women's Self Defence Class
Oct. 2nd and 3rd, Sat. + Sun.
Sliding Scale $10 - $20

For more info. CALL 549-0066

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

It was so much fun, we want to do it all over again.

The subject in question, of course, is the Queen's Golden Gaels' victory in the 1992 Vanier Cup last November. That win, by 31-0 over the unbeaten and #1-ranked St. Mary's Huskies, was the first shutout in Vanier Cup history. The game was nowhere near as close as the score indicated. It not only proved that the Gaels were by far Canada's best team, but also that the whole Huskies team could travel to Ontario and go an entire weekend without scoring!

With All-Canadian tailback Brad Elberg unexpectedly back at Queen's this fall, many people are expecting the Gaels to not only repeat, but to do so convincingly. After all, wasn't Elberg more than anyone else the architect of the championship season?

But the first three games of the season have shown that trouble looms on the horizon. One-sided losses to Toronto and Bishop's, and a nail-biting win over Ottawa have found this year's Gaels far from sharp. Counting just the two-league games, the 24 Queen's points scored is better than only one CIAU team, the York Yeomen, who just tied a CIAU record with their 33rd consecutive loss. When you're being compared to York in any aspect of football, you're in trouble.

Queen's has lost several key players from the 1992 team, players who were among the best-ever Gaels at their respective positions. Although competent replacements are on hand, graduated leaders like All-Canadian linebacker Mike Boone, All-Canadian defensive tackle Eric Dell, conference All-Star tight end Dan Wright, all-time Queen's leading scorer kicker Jamie Galloway, conference All-

Star centre Tom Clark, conference All-Star halfback Paul Beresford, conference All-Star deep back Chris McCormick, and five-year quarterback Tim Pendergast are being sorely missed. In addition, linemen like All-Star Jason Moeller, Chris Finner and John Zulich, who were counted on either to start or play a lot off the bench, are on campus but not available for various reasons, making both the offensive and defensive lines lacking in experience and depth.

When a team wins a championship, its opponents the next season will prepare twice as hard. And when that winning team is Queen's, probably the most hated school in Canada by players from other schools, the Gaels know they can expect fierce resistance. It's the "Beat Queen's and make our season worthwhile" syndrome. More specifically, it's the "Stop Brad Elberg" syndrome at work.

Compared to last season, Elberg has been next to invisible so far in 1993. Downcast after the Ottawa game, he commented half-heartedly, "If I play any worse, coach Hargreaves will be cutting me." Although that's far from the case, Gaels' fans are wondering when Elberg will break loose.

The Regina rumble enjoyed a dream season in 1992. Just how dominant was he? Well, consider that Elberg scored at least as many regular-season TDs (14) as NINE entire CIAU teams (Alberta, Carleton, Concordia, Guelph, McGill, St. F.X., Waterloo, Windsor and York). Brad was the top-scoring non-kicker in the country. His rushing total of 937 regular-season yards on only 118 carries — third in the CIAU — was also more than (count 'em!) NINE teams (Bishop's, Carleton, Concordia, Guelph, McGill, McMaster, Saskatchewan, St. F.X. and York). Then there were the eight TD's in the playoffs, the MVP awards for

Sports

Don't expect a Vanier repeat in 1993

Can Elberg lead the Gaels to a repeat?

Marka Glickman

The Vanier Cup, OQIFC league and Gaels' team, the Jim Tait Award, the #2 overall CFL draft selection, a bobsledding trip to Italy, and a free-agent signing by the Philadelphia Eagles. After three seasons with the Gaels, Brad is the top-scoring non-kicker in Queen's history, with 34 touchdowns and 204 career points. That's since the ancient Sumerians started keeping track, back about 1887 or so. Who had a better year? Maybe John Olerud of the Jays, but maybe not! Brad's exploits have been featured in national media such as The Globe and Mail and The Sports Network. He is arguably the most famous Queen's personality, whether it be student, alumni, or leader, of the present day. It was almost as if Elberg was sitting at a blackjack table and getting dealt 21 on every hand!

When one player does that much damage and gets that much attention, it's no secret that opposing coaches will be burning the midnight oil searching out ways to stop or slow him down. Judging from the Bishop's game, it was almost as if the Gaels had a player in the Gaels' huddle, the way they were able to anticipate what Queen's was going to do on offense. Brad has become all OQIFC coaches' favorite game film star.

Unlike success in an individual sport like golf or track, Elberg's came as an individual tailback in a team football context. In golf, there is no one to tackle you and prevent you from hitting that 1-iron 230 yards, finishing two feet from the pin. A track star doesn't have to worry about an opponent knocking down that record javelin throw. Football is much more demanding in terms of maintaining consistently outstanding performance.

Between last season and this, Elberg's dream run stopped in drastic fashion. Ruled ineligible for the Philadelphia Eagles because of a technicality, cut by the Saskatchewan Roughriders because they already had somebody at running back, and promised only a practice roster spot with the struggling Toronto Argonauts, Brad elected to return to Queen's, finally finding a team that would take him. It's a very big jump from college to the pros, where players are often treated as pieces of meat rather than human beings. Although Elberg is always smiling and upbeat regardless of circumstances, the disappointments he has suffered in the last three months must be weighing heavily upon him.

It's been frustrating for Elberg so far, but don't count on his slump continuing. He has too many skills and too much pride. Elberg simply finds a way to win over the long run.

Elberg's dry spell aside, too many people are going to expect too much from the 1993 edition of the Gaels. Not that they aren't a talented and determined team. Not that they don't know how to win. But last year, so many things fell into place that a repeat seems unlikely. After all, only twice before (1970 — Manitoba and 1977 — Western) has a Vanier champion been able to repeat. It could happen, and we'd all love to see it, but we shouldn't expect it.

Extra Points

Fullback Don Rowrick waited his turn for four years for a chance to start for Queen's. He went down early in the Ottawa game, gone for the season with a broken leg, removed by stretcher and ambulance after being down for a good ten minutes. Nobody worked harder to get ready for 1993 than Don, and now all that work is down the drain. His veteran leadership really can't be replaced. Get well soon.

See page FOOTBALL / p.18

With a Bang, Intramurals Have Started

BY ROB CAMP
The Queen's Journal

The Intramural program got under way last weekend with the first sport of the year, BEWS Softball.

The tournament started with 16 teams vying for the championship and when the dust had finally settled there were but two left. Perennial powerhouse PHE was to take on the young upstarts of Rehab.

Now Rehab was not going to be intimidated by PHE, after all they had Ron "DEEP" Herman, the man who had swatted a ball from the West Campus diamond and hit a field hockey player on the North field (a distance of roughly 450 feet). So perhaps it was no surprise when Rehab came from behind to win big over PHE in the finals.

WIC ball and Tug-of-war

Other sports to hit the field were WICball and Tug-of-war.

In the WICball final there was an exciting finish as PHE squeaked by Con-ed in a repeat of last year's final. The game, watched by dozens of spectators, was fast and furious with several lead changes before PHE finally emerged victorious.

The Tug-of-war final, while perhaps not quite as exciting, was still an impressive display of strength, as both PHE and Rehab bulled their way into the finals. Both teams looking for the ultimate victory put on fine displays of brute power before Rehab finally came out on top.

Starting Monday night the majority of leagues will have initiated their season with the first set of games.

Therefore it is important to check the schedules currently posted on the way to the changerooms to see when and where your team is playing.

Otherwise you just might miss out on what is already turning out to be a spectacular intramural season.

Women's Varsity Tennis

BY ANDREA MATTHEW
The Queen's Journal

The Women's Varsity Tennis squad was back in full swing this past weekend, hosting teams from McMaster and Western, out at West (and I mean West) Campus. Queen's, still carrying an abundance of competitive players from tryouts last week, had many potentially destructive player combinations.

Returning Golden Gaels include Nicky Myslivecek, Bali Athwal, MJ Young, Andrea Matthew and Nancy Ip. There is a plethora of new talent this year in the racquets of Pam Lewis, Lisa Bradford and Moira Malvestulto. Two players not playing this weekend are Mike Thomson and Heather MacDonell.

The first matches commencing at oh-my-gosh-its-early nine a.m. were played in near-rain darkness. Fortunately, not only did the sun come through but so did "No-Reebok Skirt" Athwal, "Mmmmm" Myslivecek, "Long-hair" Young and "I've got work to do" Matthew, who trounced their opponents in straight sets. Queen's took the McMaster series 6-3.

Near wins from "Orange Bette" Ip and "Goran" Bradford, and Athwal and "Prince Top Spin" Lewis almost pulled the team through in doubles. In the end, wailing Western Purple people stole the series 6-3. This weekend, the women's team will be in Waterloo to challenge the warriors.

Football Gaels

Continued from page 17

Queen's coaching legend Frank Tindall, and CFL Hall-of-Famer halfback Ron Stewart have both been inducted as charter members into the OUAA Sports Legends Hall of Fame.

Tindall coached the Gaels from 1939-75 — he's still going strong at 84 years young. Stewart started for the Gaels from 1953-57, and later for the CFL's Ottawa Rough Riders. Congratulations!

Hockey Hall-of-Famer Ed Voss, a mainstay of the wondrous Queen's teams of the 1920's that won three straight Grey Cups (no, that's not a misprint!) died recently at his home in Florida.

Voss played in the NHL for several teams after graduating from Queen's, became an NHL referee after his playing days, and rose to Supervisor of NHL officials. Voss was 88.

He was one of the last links to those glory postwar days, when a bunch of Queen's university players whipped all comers, winning 20 straight games over pros and amateurs alike from 1922-25.

What's a' Happening?

BY DEREK SMALLS
The Queen's Journal

This is a friendly reminder of what athletic events will be taking place this weekend. The football game is not the only home appearance of our Gaels this weekend, there are lots of other things to see.

Cross Country	Sept 25	Queen's Open
Rugby	Sept 25	McMaster
Tennis (M)	Sept 25	Tournament
Football	Sept 25	Carleton

Catch Rugby at Kingston Field (where drunk spectators watched a good ol' fashioned McGill whipping on Sept 11th). Catch Tennis at the courts in front of Richardson Stadium (they won't frisk you for booze). Catch Football at Richardson Stadium (they will frisk you for booze). Catch the X-Country if you can!

Notables

BY I. STRADLIN
The Queen's Journal

Queen's, in three sports, is on top of the standings in our respective divisions. Maybe it is a little premature to pop the Dom, but if everyone is consistent maybe our heralded school will have a smorgasborg of champions before this term is over!

Soccer Standings

Eassem Division
Team	W	L	T	PTS
Carleton	2	0	0	4
Queen's	2	1	0	4
Toronto	1	0	1	3
Laurentian	1	1	1	3
Trent	1	1	0	2
York	1	2	0	2
Ryerson	0	3	0	0

Tennis Standings

Team	Week 1	Points
Queen's	12-2	24
York	10-2	20
Waterloo	8-6	16
Western	5-2	10
Ottawa	5-9	10
McMaster	4-8	8
Toronto	2-5	4
Brock	1-13	2

Rugby Standings

Division I
Team	W	L	TP
Queen's	1	0	2
Western	1	0	2
McMaster	1	0	2
York	0	1	0
Waterloo	0	1	0
Guelph	0	1	0

OQIFC Football Standings

BY THE UPDATOR
The Queen's Journal

Team	GP	W	L	T	PF	PAPTS
Bishop's Gaitsers	2	2	-	-	60	27 4
McGill Redmen	2	2	-	-	51	41 4
Carleton Ravens	2	1	1	-	36	40 2
Queen's Golden Gaels	2	1	1	-	24	45 2
Concordia Stingers	2	-	2	-	44	55 0
Ottawa U Gee Gees	2	-	2	-	29	36 0

As you can see, Queen's is in the middle of the pack. The boys from Quebec, if the trend continues, should battle it out for first. My bet is that Bishop's comes out on top, but don't call the boys in Vegas yet. Concordia and Ottawa, two perennial losers, should be the cellar dwellers; these two pose no "real-world" threat to Queen's making the playoffs.

Interestingly, there is but one category in which a Gael leads the OQIFC, receptions. Receiving (by receptions):

Player	Team	NO	YDS	AVG	TD	LG
Ed Kidd	Queen's	12	151	12.6	1	29
Mike Noble	Concordia	11	172	15.6	1	24
Steve Papp	McGill	10	193	19.3	1	34
Chris Dorrington	Carleton	9	108	12.0	2	27
Paul Kozan	Queen's	8	163	20.4	1	46

Congratulations to Ed Kidd for leading the pack and to Paul Kozan for rounding out the group.

The final piece of Football news is the nation's top ten ranking. Unfortunately, Queen's is not privy to this rather unelite club, but ask yourself this: "How many players do the "Bisons" have on the Deans List?" If you want to find the answer, I suggest you visit the bagel truck parked in front of the PhysEd Centre.

- Here we go:
- 1-Calgary Dinosaurs
 - 2-Toronto Blues
 - 3-Laurier Golden Hawks
 - 4-Bishop's Gaitsers
 - 5-Acadia Axemen
 - 6-McGill Redmen
 - 7-UBC Thunderbirds
 - 8-St. Mary's Huskies
 - 9-Guelph Gryphons
 - 10-Manitoba Bisons

STAND-BY FOR TAKE-OFF.

At Canadian Regional, we understand how difficult it is for students nowadays to make ends meet.

That's why we're offering a year-round student stand-by fare at 65% off the regular economy fare anywhere that Canadian Regional flies.

So, if you thought a flight home or a chance to get away was beyond your budget, then think again.

For more information, call your travel agent or Canadian Airlines and simply stand-by.

Canadian Regional

Canadian is a registered trademark of Canadian Airlines International Ltd. Fares available on a one-way or return basis. Fares applicable for students between the ages of 12 and 24. Proof of age is required. Travel on a stand-by basis only.

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994
GRADUATES
1994 GENERAL MOTORS GRADUATE PROGRAM

GET YOUR $750
REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY FROM GENERAL MOTORS.
Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SEVERAL VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS. THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

It's your last year...

IT'S YOUR ONLY FORMAL!

THE ARTS & SCIENCE UNDERGRADUATE SOCIETY is looking for THE 1994 FORMAL CONVENOR

The Class of 94 needs you to plan the last and best night of your undergraduate life.

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS Core and must be received no later than September 30 at 4:30 pm.

Your formal will only be as good as you make it!

LOOKING FOR THE GOOD STUFF?

DROP INTO SEPP'S SKI SHOP

WE'VE GOT IT

GEAR

VOLKL, LANGE MARKER, K2, ROSSIGNOL, NORDICA, KASTLE, SALOMON, ROLLERBLADE, MERRELL, AND MORE!

GOODS

PATAGONIA, SIERRA DESIGNS, NORTH FACE, OAKLEY, RAYBAN, COULOIR, SUNICE, CHLOROPHYLLE, ROYAL ROBINS, AND MORE!

SEPP'S SKI SHOP - 131 MONTREAL ST. DOWNTOWN
542-4558 OR 542-5224

P.S. THE SUMMER SKI SALE CONTINUES!

City Sports

Phone 542-4415

298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT

RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

NEW ARRIVALS OF SHOES NIKE, ASICS, HI TECH, ADIDAS, RYKA, CONVERSE	QUEEN'S HATS FROM $14.99
Graphite squash rackets reg. to $119.99 SALE from $49.99
EXERCISE EQUIPMENT WORKOUT CLOTHING	STUDENT CARD & GOLD CARD HONOURED HERE

TEAMS ○ FLOORS ○ CLUBS ○ FACULTIES

Jackets ○ T-shirts ○ Rugby Jerseys ○ Golf Shirts ○ Sweats

Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ○ Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

The PERFECT PLACE for:

- Smokers
- Formals
- Semiformals
- Banquets
- Charity Balls
- A place to take Mom and Dad

- * No room charge
- * Dance till 2am
- * Special Drink Prices (negotiable)

Let the staff at the Harbour Restaurant help you arrange your class function and make it a success!

 Call now 549-4440

Department of Alumni Affairs

SPECIAL PROJECT FUNDING

The Alumni Association accepts applications from Queen's groups on a semi-annual basis for funding special projects.

If you have an innovative program you wish to have considered for funding, please pick up an application form in the Department of Alumni Affairs, west wing of Summerhill.

Completed applications must be returned to the Department of Alumni Affairs by Tuesday, October 5, 1993.

The TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK is currently accepting applications for a number of editorial positions.

Available positions include:

ASSISTANT EDITORS:

1. LAYOUT EDITOR
2. BUSINESS MANAGER
3. DARKROOM ASSISTANT

TYPESETTING:

1. DESKTOP PUBLISHING EDITOR

SECTION EDITORS:

1. NEWS SECTION EDITOR
2. ART/LITERATURE SECTION EDITOR
3. GRAD SECTION EDITOR
4. CLUBS SECTION CO-ORDINATOR

Applications available at the AMS office in the JDUC. The deadline to submit your application to the AMS office is 2:30 pm, SEPTEMBER 27th. Interviews will be held SEPTEMBER 28th to OCTOBER 1st.

ALSO... If you want to join our awesome photography staff, layout staff, or desktop publishing staff, plus assorted other stellar individuals, you DON'T NEED TO APPLY! Just come out to our FIRST MEETING!!!

TIME: 2:00pm, Sunday, October 3rd
PLACE: Tricolour Yearbook Office, Room 050a, JDUC

His housemates were absolutely stunned. Never before had they seen such a sight. Bentley had risen from bed at 7:30am, vigorously washed himself in the shower (including what was left of his hair) and stood eagerly in the kitchen waiting for his Pop-tart to rear itself from the toaster. What had brought on such thundering enthusiasm from a guy who is usually too lazy to breathe? The housemates demanded an explanation. After Bentley announced that he was going to his 8:30am class, he went on to explain just how interesting and challenging he found his course to be. The professor was excellent and the material was presented in such a way that enabled even Bentley to enjoy his learning experience. What Bentley did not know was that this monumental achievement was due in large part to the Instructional Development Centre.

The Instructional Development Centre opened its doors in January of 1992 and has been serving as a resource centre for faculty and teaching assistants to improve the learning environment in the classroom.

The quality of teaching at Queen's has long been a priority for students on this campus and the newly created I.D.C. is a testament to student commitment in this area. The student contribution is targeted at $750,000, representing one third of the total need for the Centre with the knowledge that it will be funded at a 2:1 match with other campaign resources. Your continued support of the Queen's Challenge is vital to maintaining the Instructional Development Centre which, in turn, will motivate other students, like Bentley, to get up for their 8:30's.

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

Entertainment

A skankin' good time

King Apparatus with Gypsy Soul
Allie's
BY RYAN P. CHEN
The Queen's Journal

Allie's was definitely the place to be for exercise on last Wednesday night. With King Apparatus and Gypsy Soul on the bill, that meant the ska/soul-train would be making a stop for a night of continuous dancing.

Gypsy Soul took the stage at 10:10 pm, and for fifty minutes they delighted the crowd with a tight, energetic performance. A seven-piece band from Toronto, Gypsy Soul blends the soul and R&B of the Sixties with what guitarist Dave Krain calls, "the funk'n'roll" of the Nineties. The result of this weird dialectic is a sound which cries out to the audience, "Dance! Dance! Dance!"

And dance they did. In what may be an Allie's first, Gypsy Soul had people heading to the floor by the chorus of their show-opener. What began as a few neo-hippies doing the "psychedelic thing" quickly snowballed into a gaggle of disarrayed bodies moving in every way possible. Despite the chaotic nature of this picture-of-arms-flailing, legs-kicking and heads-shaking - the crowd was amazingly organized and surprisingly controlled.

Happily, there was none of the macho attitude on the floor - people gave one another room to dance and respected each other's space.

Oscillating between the tempos of allegro and andante, Gypsy Soul seemed in direct contact with the audience through the entire show. When the floor needed a moment to catch its breath, the band would respond by slowing the pace down to a wind and grind groove of guitars and drums. And when a moment of catharsis was called for, they would oblige with a blast of horns and an out-pouring of funkadelic guitar riffs.

As it always is with Allie's, acoustics proved to be a problem for Gypsy Soul's set. Lauren Bauer's angst-filled vocals were barely audible over the fanfare of horns, and when the horns were mute, his soulful harmonies were stifled by inordinate amounts of guitar reverb. Unfortunately, Gypsy Soul was oblivious to this fact and tended to make a bad listening situation worse by trying to one-up themselves - the quality of their sound decreased as the intensity of their performance increased.

The audience, however, didn't seem to mind. People were there to dance, not to listen, and the acoustics didn't hinder the dance-inspiring nature of Gypsy Soul's music. Regardless of the sound quality, Gypsy Soul was unquestionably entertaining and enjoyable. As a friend said to me while scurrying to the dance floor, "You could write an entire piece just on these guys alone."

Kicking off their set at precisely

11:30, King Apparatus, Toronto's most successful ska outfit, lead the audience through their repertoire of easy-to-skank-to-hits. Opening with the bar-favourite, "Non Stop Drinking", King Apparatus immediately packed the dance floor. Since people were heading to the floor with beer in hand, I think the basic irony of the song and the nature of King Apparatus's music was lost on many - you don't need to drink to have a good time at one of their shows.

As expected, King Apparatus focused on the material from their new release, Marbles. That most of the songs were unfamiliar to the audience was irrelevant. Tunes like "Stumbling", "Stupid" and "Sodom and Toronto" are so infectious that one can dance to them whether or not they're recognizable. And since they seem to be a natural progression from such familiar numbers like "Solid One Love", "King Apparatus" and "Break Your Heart", one hardly notices any discontinuity at all. One just keeps on moving.

King Apparatus has always been a band that is best experienced live - a fact largely due to the rapport which the band establishes with its audience. Using such techniques as passing around the microphone, questioning the audience, and performing his own one-man-dance-show, lead vocalist Chris Murray always makes a conscious effort to draw the audience into the show.

Like Gypsy Soul, King Apparatus was in touch with the audience for the entire night. Sensing that the screaming fans might be interested in buying some paraphernalia, the band appropriately paused for a brief commercial break. After playing their infamous "Buy Our Stuff", Murray shamelessly, but playfully, pointed to the various t-shirts on display and kindly announced the much anticipated arrival of The Carla Ronci Scooter Zine. The self-advertisement seemed to work, as many King A shirts dotted the crowd for the remainder of the night.

I'm not sure if people thought that buying a King Apparatus shirt meant that they were now free from responsibility, for after the commercial break the behaviour of the crowd took a turn for the worse. During Gypsy Soul people had remembered to respect their neighbour, but this attitude seemed forgotten during the latter half of the show. Skanking doesn't mean that you jump up and down and bounce into every person in sight. Granted, it's easy to get worked up when dancing to King A's music, but that's no excuse for crushing someone against a monitor. I don't go to a show to have someone kick me in the calves or to have one bonthead crowd-surfer fall on my head. So the next time you go to a show, any show, listen to what Chris Murray says in "Dancing Fools": Remember what it means to dance.

While such annoying behaviour was enough to relegate me to the sidelines, it wasn't enough to ruin the show for me. Nor was the fact that King A conspicuously ignored such upbeat numbers as "Made for TV" and "Michael & Anne." (Maybe it was for the better - these songs would have just worked up the boneheads even more.) Although it would have been nice if King A had played an encore (I really wanted to hear "Strong Physical Urge"), it was not really necessary for them to perform a masturbatory crowd-pleaser - one can't be displeased with a night of non-stop dancing.

for us to succeed as a band we had to emphasize original material. So at that point, we made a conscious decision that this was our style and the direction we're heading in.

QJ: Are there any particular influences?

CM: [laughs] All of them.

Sam Tallo: We say The Specials. They weren't so much the heavy hom sounding ska band.

CM: They have the same lineup as we do. Out of all the bands that we ever covered tunes from, they were usually Specials' tunes.

QJ: Having said that, do you feel that you're playing in the shadow of 2-Tone?

CM: For sure. When we tried to make it more serious as a band, Specials' "A Message to You, Rudi!" - do you feel the same way about ska music? Do you think it should be an outlet for taking about social issues?

CM: I think across the board music is an expressive medium. To say that ska is about social issues, well that's only isolating a small segment of ska tunes that there are. For every tune like "Shanty Town" there's a tune like "Stir It Up", which is a love song. We tend not to focus on political issues. We got into this band because we wanted to have fun playing music, it wasn't for a political agenda. We don't have a platform.

QJ: Unlike Skaface.

CM: We as a band look more at this as music as music. We don't emphasize the non-musical end of ska... wearing suits, riding a scooter, talking about rude boys, whatever. Those are things that are not essential to the music, in our opinion. They come up since there's a history between those things and the music. We definitely see some bands and say, "Come on guys, there's more to it than that too." There's the music, which is the first thing. There are some bands that look great - they're all wearing suits and sunglasses, and have a big hom section, and they're singing about Rudi, [pause] and it sucks.

ST: It'd be very interesting to see where ska, as a viable form, could go. There are bands like The Bosstones that are trying to do something different.

CM: I think the type of ska that's having the most success these days is ska that's fusing other styles. We do that. We try to broaden the styles we draw from.

QJ: Yeah, just listening to Marbles that seems pretty evident. It seems a lot more experimental.

CM: We do some things that not every ska band does, like experiment with time signatures. We try to make things a little more interesting and unexpected.

ST: We also had a lot more time in the studio on this album. The first one was recorded and mixed in three weekends. This one we had six weeks. Not to mention more money and people with a little bit more insight with recorded music.

QJ: My last question has to do with the name. Why "King Apparatus"?

CM: The band name was suggested by our first drummer's roommate. And we said "yeah." And then we get asked about it at every interview.

ST: [Laughs] And we don't know what it means either. This "King Apparatus" thing.

CM: But it could mean whatever you'd like it to be.

Nothing Freudian I hope.

Mitch Girro's sporting a King Apparatus.

Derek Yarnell

Prior to the show, I had the opportunity to talk with lead vocalist Chris Murray and guitarist Sam Tallo about life, the universe and everything.

Queen's Journal: The question I always have is why ska? Why are you playing it?

Chris Murray: When we started we were just learning cover tunes to get enough tunes to put a show on... I was the big ska fan in the band and I kept on bringing in ska tunes. Initially, I was the only one doing any songwriting as well, so I was writing ska tunes. After a couple of years, when we started thinking of this [performing] in a more serious way... our original repertoire was almost all ska. We also realized that, in the long run, right away we started to run into comparisons to 2-Tone bands and opinions on ska that were formed solely from experiencing 2-Tone. We've always been playing in the shadow of that [2-Tone]. Right now we don't think about it very much, except for in the case where we now have to play with The Special Beat. That's something I sort of look at in a mixed way. As a fan, it's great to see the original players who played the songs I grew up loving, but haven't seen any positive step forward for them. I've seen live albums of The Selector and The Special Beat that are just all the hits from the old albums.

QJ: When I was growing up with ska music, it was always seemed to talk about social issues - Desmond Dekker's "007", The

A deceptively simple story

The Story of Qiu Ju
Directed by Zhang Yimou
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The opening shot of Chinese director Zhang Yimou's latest work, The Story of Qiu Ju, announces that it is a departure from his previous films. Initially, his camera records the varied passers-by on the bustling main street of a small contemporary Chinese town. Pedestrians, bicyclists and carts move past before the main characters are identified: Qiu Ju, a young pregnant woman and her younger sister-in-law are pulling a cart bearing Qiu Ju's injured husband.

The contrasts between this single shot and Zhang's previous films — Red Sorghum (1988), Ju Dou (1990), and Raise the Red Lantern (the latter two each received Academy Award nominations for Best Foreign Film) — are striking. This is the first film to be set in the present; Zhang previously employed the standard gambit of the artist under authoritarian rule, by locating the previous three films in the pre-Revolutionary 1920's (this metaphorical sleight-of-hand proved too thinly-veiled, however, as none of Zhang's film's were screened in China until late last year).

Furthermore, Zhang's previous works were intensely personal and richly symbolic tales, featuring a handful of characters as a microcosm of Chinese society — epics on a small scale. The Story of Qiu Ju, while focusing on a single household, reverses the situation: it is a small story played out on a broad canvas a fable on a large scale. Thus, while Ju Dou and Raise the Red Lantern hardly acknowledged the existence of the outside world, The Story of Qiu Ju, in its opening scenes, and throughout the film, locates its characters firmly in the context of a large and thoroughly alien modern China, including its crowds.

The Story of Qiu Ju is both more and less than the director's earlier explorations. Ju Dou was a melodrama (without the pejorative connotations of the word) which depicted the tragic web of jealousy, lust and revenge spun between a young wife, the aged, abusive and impotent dyer who has purchased her, and his adopted son, who becomes her lover and fathers her child. Raise the Red Lantern portrayed a young woman who, upon being sold to the middle-aged, rich (and faceless) Master as his fourth wife, finds herself trapped in an increasingly brutal world of domestic politics and oppression. (The film was accurately described by one critic as both "a classically composed tragedy and a feminist horror film.")

The incomparable Gong Li stars as Qiu Ju.

In contrast, The Story of Qiu Ju is (for the most part) a comedy. In the opening scene, Qiu Ju (Gong Li) is taking her husband to the

"A few punches are one thing, but to kick a man where it counts..." Thus begins a lengthy quest for justice — think of it as Kafka goes to remote rural northern China.

Qiu Ju's dealings with a complex and contrary bureaucracy (as conducted in a half dozen journeys of increasing length) are hindered by several factors: her refusal to let the matter drop makes her a pariah in her village and even in her own family (her husband, the kicked himself, turns against her); as a woman, in offices full of loudly talking men, she goes unheard; as an undereducated rural dweller, she is the object of stares and the easy victim of cons in the big city; finally, her notion of justice — a sincere apology — is at odds with that of the system, which offers a cash payment. This opposition leads to a conclusion which is decidedly ambiguous.

The strengths of the film will be familiar to fans of Zhang's previous work, namely his masterful eye and his casting of the incomparable Gong Li in the lead role (Zhang and Gong are an off-camera couple).

Zhang's visuals — marked by static camera work married to an unerring sense of composition and colour — mark him as one of the world's greatest directors. Having seen Ju Dou, no one could forget the enormous bolts of richly coloured (and symbolic) red and yellow cloth produced at the dye shop, or, similarly, the lanterns of the title of Zhang's next film. Here, the familiar colours red and yellow appear in the chilies and maize produced by the village (which hang from the houses) but the dominant image is provided by the sprawling, seemingly barren countryside (which is reminiscent of the landscape in another recent film with some similar themes, Nikita Mikhailov's Urga). This is effectively contrasted with the claustrophobic tumult of the city. The climate also plays a role (recall Zhang's use of the passing seasons in Raise the Red Lantern), as one literally feels the cold of life in northern China (everyone is bundled up in this film).

Gong Li again demonstrates that she is one of the finest actresses working in cinema today. The role of Qiu Ju is a change from her two previous roles as a victimized object of desire, and Gong shows herself to be equally at home with this lighter material. (She can also be seen in the upcoming Farewell to My Concubine, which took top honours at Cannes this year.)

The Story of Qiu Ju is not harrowing in the manner of Zhang's previous films, but it doesn't intend to be. It is, by design, a smaller film filled with gentle humour and exquisitely shot. Moreover, it boasts a nearly perfect structure, in which the film's languid movement effectively captures its subject, leading to a surprising and affecting conclusion.

The Royal Scottish Academy Chamber Orchestra
Grant Hall
BY RUSSELL VANCE WITH FIONA VANCE
The Queen's Journal

My year in Scotland, spent largely in staid, smoke-filled pubs shoulder to shoulder with bluntheaded rugby players, made me sceptical of the Royal Scottish Academy Chamber Orchestra's cultural capacity for handling the refined and delicate music of Mozart, Bach and Tchaikovsky. However, the Chamber Orchestra's performance Tuesday night in Grant Hall demonstrated remarkable gracefulness with a varied and challenging program.

The performance, under the direction of the celebrated Philip Ledger, began with Mozart's Divertimento in D major for oboe, horns and strings, written when Mozart was just 20 years old. Regrettably, the oboe began hesitantly, but soon relaxed to produce a warm, sweet tone. The ensemble had no difficulty filling Grant Hall with its rich sound — indeed, there was never a feeble moment, despite the relatively small size of this group.

The lovely, long, sculpted lines of the Andantino led gracefully into the folk-like themes of the Rondo. For the most part the ensemble managed to avoid sagging in the later movements, which is a difficulty endemic to exhausted touring groups.

Great Scots Open Classical Series

The Mozart was followed by Bach's familiar Concerto in D minor for oboe and violin. Although Andrew Dickie played sensitively and eloquently on the oboe, Dominique Sarosta-Binnie was merely adequate on the violin, never quite managing to soar over the rest of the strings. The most poignant movement was perhaps the Adagio with its steady pizzicato which sustained the soloists' lyrical thematic interplay.

Without a doubt, the highlight of the evening came with Tchaikovsky's sublime Serenade in C major. Tchaikovsky wrote the composition as a tribute to Mozart and confided in a letter to a friend that the piece was "inspired by inner compulsion. It comes from the heart." The first movement, with its breathless, bold opening theme, scored daringly over the frantic and rhythmic energy of the cellos, was followed by a tremendously graceful and fluid waltz that has become one of the most popular waltzes of all time. One need not be a classical music lover to visualise the expansive swarm of ball gowns this music conjures in the mind. The sturdy peasant dance that provides a finale for the serenade is orchestrated so that the 29-piece ensemble produced a sound as rich as that of a full orchestra of 65 players.

The least accessible piece on the program was the song cycle Les Illuminations, by Benjamin Britten, that contains lyrics from the sordid and intensely original poetry of Rimbaud. Britten's music was in stark yet refreshing contrast to the more classical tone of the rest of the concert. Canadian soprano Karina Gauvin exhibited powerful control over this difficult piece, with her clear and confident voice. Unlike many vocalists, Gauvin blended well with the orchestra to produce a unified yet colourful sound that captured the combined spirit of Britten and Rimbaud.

The concert concluded with Mozart's Symphony No. 29, written at the tender age of 18 (there's nothing like an underachiever), and is considered typical of Mozart's middle period. Although the concert was thoughtfully structured (beginning and ending with Mozart, and building in intensity and complexity in the middle), and although no single piece was weak, the only major flaw in the program was its length. By the Andante of the symphony, the orchestra and audience were fading. It would not have adversely affected the program if one selection had been omitted. Nonetheless, Kingston should consider itself fortunate to be included in this fine orchestra's Canadian tour.

Philip Ledger directs the orchestra in rehearsal.

Marika Glickson

If a Journal Photog has snapped a pic of you, then drop by the Journal and grab a copy of it. The cast is close to nothing, and the nostalgia is huge.

Only Scotiabank chalks up a no-fee[†] banking package for students.

If there's one thing we know about students, it's that sometimes they run on a tight budget.

And since we were the first Canadian bank to introduce a student package three years ago, it's something we've kept in mind.

If you're a full-time college¹ or university student, you're eligible for the Scotia Banking Advantage[®] package. This package includes a daily interest chequing account, an automated banking machine card, a Classic VISA card² and for qualified graduating students, an auto loan.

With Scotia Banking Advantage, you can also start establishing a good credit rating. Something that will be useful in the future.

So drop by your nearest Scotiabank branch and we'll show you all the ways we can help.

YOU COULD
WIN $1,000 CASH
IN THE SCOTIA BANKING ADVANTAGE SWEEPSTAKES!
10 PRIZES OF $1,000 EACH TO BE AWARDED ON A REGIONAL BASIS
Enrol in the Scotia Banking Advantage program by November 12, 1993, and you'll automatically be entered for a chance to win!

Scotiabank

¹The Bank of Nova Scotia registered user of mail. ²No monthly fee or minimum monthly balance. ³Community College, Technical Institute or College. ⁴Registered Trade Mark of The Bank of Nova Scotia. ⁵Subject to credit approval.

Radio Daze

CFRC 101.9 / cable 90.9 is your campus-community alternative in Kingston.

Program guides are available FREE of charge on campus at the station in the basement of Carruthers Hall and the Infobank in the JDUC.

Special events this coming week include:

Live coverage of Queen's Golden Gaels Football vs. Carleton U at Richardson Stadium 12:30 on Saturday September 25.

CFRC Call in 545-2121: New Call in Show - have your say! Mon-Thu 10pm

Mon: Student Life Ghetto Horror Stories

Tue: Student Vote in Federal Election

Wed: Movies, Movies, Movies

Thu: weekly Trivia with prizes

CFRC Notebook Elections '93 Special from 5pm

Mon: Peter Miliken, Liberal

Tue: Chris Papadopolus, National Party

Wed: Mary Ann Higgs, NDP

Thu: Barry Gordon, PC

Fri: Sean McAdam, Reform Party

CFRC Countdown Sunday 11pm-12midnight

Native Programming: L'd Red Radio, Thu 6pm

Women's Programming: Virtual Reality, Mon 9pm

For more information call Maureen, Peggy or Jerome at 545-2121

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA

394 Princess Street
(at Division) 546-FILM

Showing this weekend:

A Revenge Comedy
THE STORY OF QIU JU
ZHANG YIMOU

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING
ANNETTE BENOIST

Call 546-FILM for screening times or pick up a copy of our free program at the Cinema.

PURCHASE AT LEAST ONE ELIGIBLE TAPE OR CD SHOW YOUR STUDENT I.D. AT ANY PARTICIPATING MUSIC STORE AND GET A FREE "I.D. THIS!" SAMPLER

A Suicide in the City

Christiane Pflug
The Art of Christiane Pflug
Agnes Etherington Art Centre
BY MIKE MOSS
The Queen's Journal

Christiane Pflug committed suicide in 1972. Although it may sound eulogistic, the spirit of her works - that is those donated to and currently on display at the Agnes Etherington Arts Centre - is one of poetic yearning; a longing for freedom, of release from all the conventions which tie the Bohemian artist to the world at large. Once Pflug immigrated to Canada from Paris in 1959, Toronto absorbed her into its urbanity.

Unlike the impersonal style of the Impressionists, Pflug's cityscapes possess a sympathetic, almost surreal quality; a quality that is augmented by the comfortable and unpretentious room in which her works are hung. And of this collection, three pieces in particular echo with the cry of isolation in the big city.

Self Portrait in a Window Pane is a sombre pencil drawing reminiscent of a Baroque Flemish painting in that the window sill is included within the composition itself. This device shortens the gap between artist and onlooker, as if Pflug were daring the viewer to come closer, while simultaneously incorporating the siter (herself) into the anonymity of the city through her presence in the edifice.

When one is confronted with Bird Cage with Hydro Mast, the sense of peacefulness one would expect from its pale greys and still-life ambience is nonexistent. Instead the overwhelming bird prison suffocates the canvas, while the window sill in the background reminds us of Self Portrait. Under closer observation it seems that the bird in the lower cage corner is looking out through the locked aperture. If the bird is a symbol of confined freedom, and as a literary motif it is popular as such, then what or who does the other bird symbolize? Perhaps the hydro mast in the background is an allusion to the Eiffel Tower, a means of harkening back to her student days in Paris, or the innocence of youth.

Bird Cage with Hydro Mast, by Christiane Pflug.

Finally, Toronto Island Beach, a photo-mechanical lithograph, is a panorama of a beach dotted with swimmers. In watching the water one senses a perception of time. The motion of the waves or at night when the sea and the sky become one seems like time is a visible natural force. Pflug must have been aware of this when she captured the essence of timelessness, not in the people whose backs face the viewer, but in the four figures who are looking back (perhaps Pflug her husband, and two children).

Pflug said of herself that she painted what she saw; I think she painted more.

Canada Computer
350 Princess St.
542-8467

Computers	Hard Drives
386DX-40MB 128K $1105	120MB $215
486SX-33MB 128K $1243	130MB $225
486DX-33MB 128K $1429	170MB $245
486DX-50MB 128K $1615	250MB $299
486DX2-66MHz 128K $1709	340MB $389
*All systems come with 386 RAM, 120MB HD, 1.44MB 3.5mm SVGA monitor, 512K video board, 101 keyboard, mouse w pad
Printers	Diskettes
HP LaserJet 4 (NEW) $689	3.5" HD Formatted $5.99
HP LaserJet 4 (NEW) $875	3.5" HD Formatted $4.49
HP LaserJet 4 $1740	3.5" HD Formatted $12.99
HP DeskJet 500 $378	3.5" HD Formatted $12.99
HP DeskJet 500C $510	3.5" HD Formatted $12.99
HP DeskJet 500C $780	3.5" HD Formatted $14.95
HP DeskJet 500C $189
HP DeskJet 500C $247
HP DeskJet 500C $C 11.1
Monitors	Sound Cards
Mega Image SVGA 39cm $269	Sound Blaster Compatible $57
Mega Image SVGA 28cm $209	Sound Blaster Deluxe (3 games) $115
Mega Image SVGA 21cm $129	Sound Blaster Pro Deluxe $175
Vision 4E $420	(Includes $500 free software)
Vision 4E $510	Sound Blaster 16 $229
Vision 4E $699	Sound Blaster 16 ASP $295
Vision 15 $730	(SB 16 includes free encyclopedia on CD)
	Gravis UltraSound 16-bit $179
	Sound Blaster Edutainment 16 CD $710
	CD ROMs
	Microsoft (bare kit) $235
	Sony CD-ROM $235
	Microsoft 30Days - 4 titles $315
	Modems
	2400 baud $45
	9600 Fax/Modem $60
	Zeltrix 14.4K Fax/Modem $175
	1.5K 14.4K Fax/Modem (INT) $229.95
	1.5K 14.4K Fax/Modem (EXT) $259.95
	Tap Backup
	Colorado 250MB Internal $219
	Colorado Track or 250MB Ext $469

*Call for tape backups, keyboards, phones, answering machines, stereos, TV's, VCR's, and much more!!!

JJ's Bistro Bar
We inspire eating!

What can you get at JJ's for under $5.00 you ask?

EVERYTHING!
(Poutine, Salads, Stk & Chk Sandwiches, Draft, Cappuccino)

WARNING: EATING AT JJ'S CAN BE HABIT FORMING!

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

QUEEN'S ENGINEERING AND SCIENCE ENVIRONMENTAL COALITION

POSITIONS AVAILABLE FOR 1993/94:

- Head Coordinator
- Local Project Coordinator
- National Project Coordinator
- Fundraising Coordinator
- Speaker Coordinator

ALL STUDENTS WELCOME TO APPLY

Applications Available in Engsoc Due Wed., Sept 29th.

First General Meeting 7 pm Wed., Sept. 29th., Stirling C

RAMBLE ON!

It's a quarter after eleven, nearly the middle of the night, and I'm sitting in front of a cathode ray tube which will probably give me skin cancer, but so will going for a long, brisk walk in the summertime, so that's all right. It's what's on the cathode ray tube that worries me; it's the opening to a piece I'm writing, designed to convince others to come out to Stirling Hall this Sunday to watch two hours worth of Star Trek: The Next Generation.

I'm trying to get other people to watch this show. I'm actually looking forward to the season premiere, to find out more about Data's descent into evil. I can feel the ghost of Cameron Oixon, circa 1988, sitting behind me trying to throttle me with his bare hands. That could be because I really need to get some sleep, but if he's there, I'm sure he has his reasons. I hated the show when it first came out. I mean really hated it. Of course I watched the first season - I try not to pass judgement on anything I haven't actually watched, unless it's got Richard Simmons in it - but I do pass judgement on things I have seen, and, having seen the first season, I passed on the second and third.

What happened? How can you expect to get away with a major plot point by simply having them say "Oh well, we have a lot more to learn about the Universe?" What is this? A major villain refuses to acknowledge his mistake for forty-nine minutes of a fifty minute episode and then turns around with no further evidence submitted to him?! They're making a season of this crap?! And to think BBC erased the classic Evil of the Daleks. God help them.

But after 1988 and 1989 came 1990, and a slightly older frosh wandered into the Gordon House common room just in time to see a certain starship captain turn around to face the camera, skin dead white, eyes dead to the world, a body stolen and possessed by soulless automation cy-benetics, forced to turn against his fellow crew-members, helplessly to do anything about it.

Oh. It seems to have gotten better. And yes, it has gotten better. The actors have stopped trying to throttle me with their bare hands. The audience (even if the writers still need occasional lessons on how to avoid "the moral of the story"). Continuity has improved despite occasional lapses (Worf's son vanishing into thin air for most of season six, for example).

Perhaps best of all STNG has finally acknowledged that universal harmony is - while not impossible - certainly not a natural state of affairs. Simply sitting down and letting happiness occur is not enough; true triumph and vindication can be found only after difficulties have been fought and overcome; and the most life-affirming episode of them all "The Inner Light", doesn't even have a trademark happy ending. Far from it.

The old flaws are gone; admittedly, only to be replaced by new flaws; but hey, let them who are without sin put their glass houses up for sale. The generations thrive on in Deep Space Nine. If nothing else Star Trek teaches us to have faith in the future; perhaps some day the human race will live in harmony, perhaps the STNG writers will one day come up with a murder mystery we can't solve in the first two minutes. Anything is possible, except perhaps the recovery The Evil of the Daleks. Still can't believe they wiped it. What a crock.

Cameron Dixon is a fourth year English/Drum student who has successfully completed a 12-step Dr. Who recovery program.

The Queen's Star Trek Club meets Sundays at 7:00 pm in Stirling Hall, Lecture Room D.

Mother Earth STAGES BY MIKE CAIN

The Queen's Journal

I must admit, I had my reservations about my Tuesday night appointment with Canada's latest addition to the heavy metal scene, I Mother Earth. In fact, on Tuesday afternoon I found myself wandering the streets of Kingston wondering if I would bother going at all, especially since the last time I had listened to anything resembling heavy metal I was fourteen and checking out Helix and Kick Axe at the Oshawa Civic Centre. Just then, a long white van pulled up and stopped beside me. As I nervously clutched my recently purchased copy of In Utero, the van door slid open to reveal several long-haired individuals. Smoke billowed out and I caught that familiar sweet smell - but then again, it could have just been American cigarettes. "Hey man," said a guy with dreadlocks a la Doughboys, "Do you know where Stages is?"

Momentarily stunned by the stupidity of the question, I nevertheless pointed him in the right direction and he thanked me and started to close the door. But then it hit me - could it be? As he started to close the door I swallowed my pride and blurted out: "Hey, are you guys I Mother Earth?" He stopped, studied me for a moment, then slowly nodded his head and murmured, "That's right dude." As the van pulled away I realized that higher powers were obviously at work, so I decided to fulfil my journalistic responsibilities and take in the show.

To my surprise the crowd at Stages was fairly sparse - one would think that a band that is being touted as "the next big thing" in the Canadian Metal scene and a video in high rotation on MuchMusic would be a bigger draw. As the sound man checked the snare drum I quickly came to a realization - these guys were going to be loud. Really loud. The kind of loud that made you realize that those hair-like things in the inside of your ear are laying down and never getting up again. Motorhead loud.

The band opened at a fast pace with the Metallica-like "No One", featuring those familiar rhythmic, chugging power chords. However,

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

Come write for Entertainment.

An Otherworldly Evening

these guys were by no means a pure speed metal band; right from the "get-go" the band showed great technical skill and the ability to play in various styles. "Not Quite Sonic" featured nicely timed pregnant pauses, tempo swings and - interestingly - a percussion section with bongos (or congas, I don't know the difference. Who does?), wind chimes and woodblocks. In fact, the auxiliary percussion used throughout the show added an almost Santana feel to the music. An interesting touch for a "metal" band. It was loud though.

Early in the show I realized that the band was heavily influenced by Los Angeles' Jane's Addiction. Songs like "And the Experience" and "Levitate" bore a distinct resemblance to "Nothing Shocking" and "Coming Oown the Mountain" respectively. The vocal style of Edwin (yes, just Edwin) conjured images of Perry Farrell (although I was fairly confident that he was not going to dance around naked - fairly confident) while the guitar work by Jagor Tanna reminded me of 70s metal which seems to be a heavy influence on some of today's alternative bands. It was loud.

While the group sounded like Jane's Addiction, they looked like Anthrax, decked out in cut-off jammer style jeans and army fatigues with high cut sneakers. I also noticed that Jagor played a left-handed guitar, right-handed. Not being a guitarist I have no idea why he chose to do this (I hope for sound and not style). The band also showed a lot of energy on stage moving about continuously, obviously not affected by the small crowd. Loud though it was.

After a good half-hour of fast paced highly charged music the band slowed down, apparently - as Edwin explained - "For those who are on hallucinogenics." "So Gently We Go" was a 10 minute semi-psychedelic exploration during which time bass player Bruce Gordon took centre stage displaying tremendous technical skill and aplomb. The auxiliary percussion also added to the moody feel of the song. A loud mood.

Gordon also took control on the next two songs, "Production" and "Basketball", two extremely funky songs in which he displayed some Flea-like skills. By this time the crowd had grown somewhat and were in a dancing mood, a perfect time to play their (loud) single.

"Rain Will Fall", with a beginning that reminds one of Jane's Addiction's "Stop", got more people on the dance floor where they stayed for the remainder of the show, as it didn't slow down much from that point on. They stayed loud too.

Although I didn't know what to expect from I Mother Earth, I can honestly say I was impressed. The band had the kind of high energy that is hard to resist when combined with some really fine songs. Far from being the typical metal band I expected, they were almost an art rock band, heavily influenced by Pink Floyd, Rush, King Crimson and the like. This was most obvious when they digressed into self-indulgent (but enjoyable) instrumentals. However, the sound that the band most closely mirrors, as I have mentioned before, is that of Jane's Addiction. This may go some ways to explaining why the crowd was split into "alternative" fans and regular metal fans for, like Farrell and company, I Mother Earth's strength is their ability to successfully combine the best of the old, while always adding something new.

I Mother Earth - a great hair band. Derek Yarnell

Book Portraits Early and Save Money!

Book sittings by Oct. 15th and SAVE!

reg. $24.95 NOW $19.95

Order package by Oct. 30th and SAVE!

Classic Package B - 2 x 8" x 10", 4 x 5" x 7" prints reg. $125.75 NOW $99.95

Sparks
Quality & Service for 18 years as an official Tri Colour photographer
330 Princess St. 549-6560

GRADUATION PORTRAITS

Are you planning an event for Alumni Weekend '93?

All groups planning events for October 22-24 should send a representative to an Alumni Weekend Review Board meeting on:

Monday, September 27
7:00-8:30 p.m.
MacCorry B204

R.S.V.P. Faye Patten at 545-2060

ZAP RECORDS PRESENTS THE 3RD ANNUAL RECORD SHOW & SALE

KINGSTON MUSIC SHOWCASE FEATURING: MAHONES, INBREDS, SHINE, STONECUTTERS, & MORE.

COLLECTABLE RECORDS, CDS, TAPES, VIDEOS, MEMORABILIA, RELATED ITEMS UNAVAILABLE IN REGULAR RETAIL STORES

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1993
10 A.M. - 5 P.M.

HOWARD JOHNSON CONFEDERATION PLACE HOTEL
237 ONTARIO STREET, KINGSTON

ADMISSION $2.00

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT
ZAP RECORDS
77A PRINCESS STREET,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO (613) 547-9949

The Ukrainian Dance Company HOPAK will be performing at the Grand Theatre for one night only on Monday, September 27 at 8:00 p.m. Good seats are still available at reduced prices for students of $20 and $16.

closest tunesmiths come out!

The Entertainment Department has just received word that Crooked House Records is offering an international song-writing contest. The song-writing categories include:

- | | |
|-----------------------------|----------------------|
| Country/Western | Dance/Rap/World beat |
| Adult contemporary/Folk/Pop | Rock |
| Rhythm & Blues/Gospel | Easy listening/Jazz |

All entries must be original songs. Three lucky Grand Prize Winners will be selected and awarded a publishing contract with Crooked House Records. In addition, the prize-winning songs will be recorded by an "award-winning group of musicians" which will be released on CD and distributed world-wide for radio airplay.

For a copy of the contest entry form, write: Crooked House Records (International Song Contest) P.O. Box 51027, Royal Square P.O. New Westminster, B.C. V3L 5P6
If you're interested, hurry—the contest deadline is November 30, 1993.

STREET LIFE

These listings were copied as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	Monday	7:00
CATARAQU CINEXPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwast Dr. 389-7442	Much Ado About Nothing	7:00
	The Story of Qiu Ju	9:10
	CLUBS
In the Line of Fire	AJ's HANGAR
Jurassic Park	Friday	Bourbon Tabernacle Choir
Needful Things	Saturday	The Mahones
Manhattan Murder Mystery	Sunday	Wild Blues Yonder
Striking Distance	THE TOUCAN
The Real McCoy	Friday	The Stonecutters
	Saturday	The Freeway Band
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395	Monday	Bora
Hours and Soul	Sunday	The Mahones
Hard Target	Monday
Texas Romance	6:50 9:35	THE WELLINGTON
Alibone	7:05 9:10	Friday
The Fugitive	6:55 9:30	Saturday
The Man Without a Face	6:45 9:15	Sunday
The Firm	6:30 9:20	Monday
Undercover Blues	7:15 9:15	THE DUKE OF KINGSTON (aka Duke's)
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-FILM	Friday	The Grudy Birds (formerly Shiraz)
Friday	Saturday	The Committee Band
Much Ado About Nothing	HOWARD JOHNSON
The Story of Qiu Ju	Sunday	10 a.m. to 4 p.m.
	Zap Record Show & Sale (featuring great live bands)
Saturday	AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
The Story of Qiu Ju	12 Sept. to 71 Nov.
Much Ado About Nothing	The Art of Christiano Pflug (1936-1972)
Sunday	19 Sept. to 31 Oct.
The Story of Qiu Ju	Spirit Archives: an installation by Julie Winthow
Much Ado About Nothing

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

WORD PROCESSING: $1.75 per page. Pick up and delivery. Essays, thesis, anything usually 24 hour service. Call Jennifer at 634-1151.

THE WHO'S WHERE/WHAT'S NEXT would like to apologize for the misprint in the 1993 - 94 What's Next. The correct hours for the Quiet Pub and Student Health Services are as follows: QUIET PUB Mon - Wed 12:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m., 8:30 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Thursday and Friday 12:00 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Saturday 8:00 p.m. - 12:30 a.m., Sunday 8:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES: Monday - Friday 9:00 - 4:30, Wednesday 10:00 - 4:30.

GRADS! Would you like your picture published in the book seen by over 10,000 students? Are you graduating this year? Book your sitting NOW with a TRICOLOR YEARBOOK OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER!

WHO ARE THEY? Preston Schiedel Photography (542-7424), Sparks Studios (549-6560), Taylor Photographics (541-1098), and Gruenberg Photography (548-4541) are this year's Official Tricolour Photographers. Call them NOW! Your grad photo is forever.

HEY WOMEN: It's Candelighting '93, come on out to Grant Hall, September 26th at 4:30 for speakers, music and a whole lot of "welcoming", "celebrating" and "learning!"

VICKI KEITH and CARLOS COSTA are coming to speak at Queen's on Monday September 27th in Dunning Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. This is the first of many speakers presentations brought to you by the AMS Speakers Committee.

CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM will be open Saturday September 25th from 11:00 a.m. to Sunday September 26th at 7:00 p.m. Enter through Victoria Hall front desk or Albert St access road. 545-6078.

QUEEN'S FIRST AID unit applications are available NOW at Student Health Services, or look for us at Clubs Night. Applications are due Monday September 27th.

DON'T LET THE YEAR go by without doing some art. LIVART STUDIOS is situated close to campus and are accepting registration for life model classes, painting and more. Call 546-6842.

WHITEWATER RAFT the wild water of the Black River gorge this fall in the Thousand Island Region with N.Y.'s leading Whitewater Outfitters, ARO Adventures. Special College rates. Call 1-800-525-RAFT.

NEARLY NEW AND GENTLY USED QUALITY CLOTHING The K.S.A. Women's Committee presents it's sale of quality clothing for the family, along with a selection of white elephant items. Look and buy Friday September 24th, 10:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., and Saturday September 25th, 9:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. at the J.K. Tett Centre, 370 King St., W., opposite St. Marys by the Lake Hospital.

HUNGRY? Try the Saute of Seasonal Fruit in Caramel Sauce with Passion Fruit Sorbet in a Phyllo Chocolate Cup. Art of Cooking School, 546-2880. Brochures: Kitchen Cargo, 57 Brock; Hind Quarter, Quattrocchi's.

SOAPBERRY SHOP's Eyebright Eye Gel cools and refreshes puffy red eyes, tired from studying! A quick reviver for people who use computer screens, long distance drivers, even safe for contacts. 545-1028 122 Princess St.

AUDITIONS FOR QUEEN'S MUSICAL THEATRE 1993 - 94 production of KISMET are being held tonight 5 - 10 p.m., tomorrow and Sunday in the McLaughlin Room. Come and sing a song for us.

AUDITIONS for Queen's Musical Theatre 1993 - 94 production: KISMET are being held TONIGHT 5 - 10 p.m., tomorrow and Sunday in the McLaughlin Room, 2nd Floor, JDUC. Please drop by for more information.

QUEEN'S PLAYERS auditions at JDUC September 24th, 7 - 10 p.m. September 25th 12 - 5 p.m. Please prepare a song to sing. For more information: 530-4921.

DOWNTOWN CLASSES in Dance - Modern Jazz, classical ballet, tap, aerobics. Ages 3 years to adult. Creative movement for preschoolers at 5678 Dance Studio, 259 Queen St., between Barrie and Clergy St. Information call 547-5678.

BETHISRAEL, CONGREGATION Yom Kippur Services: Kol Nidre - Friday, September 24th 6:15 p.m.; Yom Kippur - Saturday, September 25th 9:45 a.m.; Yiskor - Saturday, September 25th 12:30 p.m.; conclusion Saturday, September 25th 6:15 p.m. 116 Centre Street students welcome.

HEY WOMEN: It's Candelighting '93, come on out to Grant Hall, September 26th at 4:30 for speakers, music and a whole lot of "welcoming", "celebrating" and "learning!"

CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM will be open Saturday September 25th from 11:00 a.m. to Sunday September 26th at 7:00 p.m. Enter through Victoria Hall front desk or Albert St access road. 545-6078.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money-back guarantee. Call MEDLAW SEMINARS at 531-9016.

VICKI KEITH and CARLOS COSTA are coming to speak at Queen's on Monday September 27th in Dunning Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. This is the first of many speakers presentations brought to you by the AMS Speakers Committee.

ANYONE INTERESTED in forming a PARAGLIDING/HANGLIDING, contact Darlene at 542-2098.

WHO: All Arts-Sci 95's. WHAT: First Alfies Smoker of the year WHEN: Saturday September 25th (tomorrow). Be there early... 'nuff said.

DON'T KNOW WHERE TO TURN? Call the confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon - Thurs. 6 - 9, 545-6000 ext. 4444 or leave a message.

HEY WOMEN: It's Candelighting '93, come on out to Grant Hall, September 26th at 4:30 for speakers, music and a whole lot of "welcoming", "celebrating" and "learning!"

VICKI KEITH and CARLOS COSTA are coming to speak at Queen's on Monday September 27th in Dunning Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. This is the first of many speakers presentations brought to you by the AMS Speakers Committee.

CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM will be open Saturday September 25th from 11:00 a.m. to Sunday September 26th at 7:00 p.m. Enter through Victoria Hall front desk or Albert St access road. 545-6078.

FREE TRIPS and MONEY!!! Individuals and student organizations wanted to promote the hottest Spring Break destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013.

VICKI KEITH and CARLOS COSTA are coming to speak at Queen's on Monday September 27th in Dunning Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. This is the first of many speakers presentations brought to you by the AMS Speakers Committee.

CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM will be open Saturday September 25th from 11:00 a.m. to Sunday September 26th at 7:00 p.m. Enter through Victoria Hall front desk or Albert St access road. 545-6078.

CAMPUS OBSERVATION ROOM will be open Saturday September 25th from 11:00 a.m. to Sunday September 26th at 7:00 p.m. Enter through Victoria Hall front desk or Albert St access road. 545-6078.

WINDSURFERS/SNOWBOARDERS! End of season sale on new and used Windsurfing equipment - large selection. '94 snowboards are almost here. Call for hours 541-1189, Kingston Sailing Centre, 347 Wellington St.

FOR SALE: Smith Corona laptop computer - only 3 year old. Comes with 10 disks and an extra ribbon for the printer. $400.00 or best offer. Call Dan at 547-9499.

ONE WOODS barfidge for sale. 5ft fridge. Excellent condition. $200.00 or best offer. If interested call Peter at 542-0228.

INEXPENSIVE DATA acquisition boards designed and manufactured by Canadians from $139. Call London Research and Development at (519) 438-1933 for details.

HOUSEMATE WANTED: Available by October 1st. To share with six upper year females. Close to downtown and to campus, 45 Clergy St., East. $280 per month. Call 547-9769.

WANTED:ROOMMATE Spacious downtown apartment, to share with one other and a dog. $375 per month, low PUC, lease. Call Kyla at 546-3044.

WANTED:ROOMMATE Available now - to share with two fourth year students. Completely renovated apartment (fireplace, stylish interior brick & limestone walls). Excellent location - across from Shoppers at Division and Princess. $300/month, low PUC. Call Alex @ 531-0476

LOST: '96 Arctsj jacket at Alfies last Thursday. Please call 547-6756, it's getting cold. Reward offered.

TO WHOEVER: Thanks for returning the keys that were in the pocket of the jacket you took on September 11th, however, I would also like the jacket back. Call 531-3213.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Winters coming! Please call 547-4106.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Left in Dunning, after Tales by Gaels. Call 542-6870.

T.G.I.E. Hockey every Friday 3:15 to 4:15 Memorial Centre. October 1st to March 31st. $6.00. Need goalies. Call 544-1221.

NEED CASH! Outgoing, ambitious, work own hours! Call 547-9011.

PERSONS WANTED: to collect signatures for petition. 25 cents per signature. Call 634-1470.

APPLEMILL 555 Bath Road. Two part-time positions available. Apply in person with resume. 542-4716.

TWO STRONG helpers needed to assist with moving furniture. October 2nd, 1993, 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Good pay. No we won't be moving a piano! Call 542-8225 evenings.

RELIABLE caregiver for 2 children. Part-time, flexible hours. Close to Queen's. Please call 544-3501.

CHRISTINE GAUER - We're looking for you for our Heart and Stroke Committee. Please call me. Mary-Sheila 547-0614.

REMEMBER FOOTBALL CAMP, REMEMBER ME Your meal card numbers were 32 and 65. Do you want to go out sometime? Moore

TO THAT SUPER DJ AT ALFIES WITH THE PINK HAIR You are as cute as your music is good! Spin my records any time! - A Secret Admirer

DARKROOM & COUCH CASANOVAS: Thank you for a pleasurable soiree of moonshine and the Joy of Sex on your waterbed. I feel that I have truly been initiated into the QJ club.

HEY TOUGH GUY!! I MEAN YOU, GOLDSACK!! Dreams will take you anywhere...

First, we'd like to address those who are currently cruisin' in their Camoros-with-the-neon-light-underneath, wearing out their brand-new Bat Out of Hell 2 cassettes and anxiously awaiting Dove Wilcox's return: Bite me! Now that we've got that out of the way, have you heard that a group of Queen's students calling themselves n-space productions are holding K-Town's 5th rave, Aleph 5?

Rave Culture

by Derek Walker and Joey deVila

In the beginning there was industrial music. Then industrial music began acid house. Then acid house began techno. This, of course, all didn't happen spontaneously. In fact, techno traces its origins back to the twenties with Dadaist movement and musique concrete, also known as the "art of noises", from which the legendary '80s band got their name. They aimed to create a music composed entirely of sounds.

The fifties saw the first industrial music and experimentation by druggy accidental-shooter-of-family-members William S. Burroughs, randomness guru John Cage and their contemporaries. They simply pasted sound samples together in a random fashion and recorded the result. Needless to say, K-9 Meets the Alien Mind Screens and 4'33" (four minutes and thirty-three seconds of recorded silence) didn't make it on the sock-hop charts.

It was not until the past decade or so that sampling became popular among mainstream musicians. In 1985, Ensoniq, an American manufacturer, released the first inexpensive ($1,995 - at least $3000 cheaper than the next one up) sampling keyboard. Dance/rap producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis (Jane Jackson's producers) got their hands on this box and didn't turn back. The mid-eighties saw a wide range of bands such as M.A.R.R.S. (who sprang from Colourbox), Two Men, a Drum Machine, and a Trumpet, Big Audio Dynamite and the almighty Sigue Sigue Sputnik using sound samples and "scratching" to augment their funky beats. In fact, the term house music (remember that?) comes from a club in Chicago called the Warehouse where one of the DJs popularized scratching in samples. As this scene gained popularity in Chicago, it was noticed abroad. Says Genesis P-Orridge of noise-meisters Throbbing Gristle and industrialdisco-band Psychic TV:

"We brought a load of house records back to England with us when we were in Chicago. They were really obscure white label (a not-very-legal remix of songs released by a DJ crew) Charlie Acid Trax stuff. Everyone went berserk over it. They all said 'acid' on them, so we thought that meant LSD, but it actually meant sampling. We didn't know that; we just thought 'ohh LSD.'"

The confusion arose over the Chicago slang term acid burn which meant "to sample". By then, the word acid has worked its way into the house lexicon. The freakier variant of House music became Acid House. Phuture released the dance anthem Acid Trax, D-Mob put out the tribal chant-o-rama We Call It Acted, and yelling "Acid" on the dance floor was perfectly normal behaviour. Acid became synonymous with cool: "This is one acid single" or "This is an acid machine" (when referring to a synthesizer). Of course, the fact that a fair number of these people were actually dropping acid helped spread the use of the word.

As acid-house parties became even more popular in the U.K., so did public concern over the events: there was noise, rambunctious crowds and of course, drugs. The scene was pushed further underground, the parties becoming what are now called raves. People would break into abandoned offices or warehouses, set up their sound and light systems, and let people "discreetly" know about the location. Many of these raves were, and are still being, shut down by the police using an assortment of legal justifications. In the U.K., Fleet Street tabloids generated weeks of sensationalistic headlines denouncing the so-called "Evil Acid Barons" (the supposedly rich rave organizers). As the crackdown on warehouses intensified, raves moved outdoors, a move that started to attract the I-missed-out-on-Woodstock-and-the-Isle-of-Wight hippy crowd. Can't win 'em all, I suppose.

At the turn of the decade, rave culture hopped the pond to North America. Since 1987, techno was being made in bedroom studios in Detroit, but it wasn't until 2 Unlimited released their hit single Get Ready For This that techno gained widespread popularity.

Raves are a veritable multimedia experience. They are meant to tantalize not only one's ears but eyes and palate as well. For your eyes, many larger raves feature laser shows, film projections, slide projectors, a computerized lighting system, and video projectors displaying computer animation are all the rage. Your taste buds can sample the smart drinks, which get their name from the smart-drugs that are often put in the beverages during more underground raves. More often than not, though, smart drinks usually are topped up with a variety of vitamins and natural stimulants to energize the thirsty rave-goer. Smart-drinks are composed of fruit juices, ice and fruit, blended until a unique texture is reached to further enhance their flavour.

Those who want something stronger than smart drugs opt for cider (it's not as filling as beer), acid or the famed designer drug Ecstasy (a.k.a. "E" in the U.K. or "X" in N.A.). To enhance the high, many ravers indulge in hyperventilation or inhaling Vicks VapoRub (prominently featured in several Altern8 videos).

There's the fashion, most of which is loud, drug-inspired and ugly. Cat-in-the-Hat headgear and sock hats rule, although toques are acceptable. Your pants should either be tightly tapered or bellbottoms. Shirts with hoods are preferred, but not necessary. Clash everything. This look is the fault of the Brits, and if you think their style is bad, wait 'til you see their cutane.

And of course there's always the music, which is usually very loud - VERY LOUD I SAID! Most raves have a central dance area, where most of the frenetic activity and dancing occurs, and a chill-out area, where mellow, more hypnotic music called "Trance" is played for those in need of a rest. Considering that Trance techno (that means "from Germany", kids) is pushing the 180 beats-per-minute mark, you'll need said rest.

Techno tends to break the pop conventions and (like punk and rap) is considered quite unlistenable by a lot of people. But that's why a lot of us like it, right? If you're a fan - or just curious, n-space productions, headed by "Ozone" Bolton and "Venus" Prodanos is hosting Aleph 5, the latest in their series of raves, tomorrow. It will feature 7 DJs including DJ Ajax from Ottawa's Forever raves, a 3-way sound system, IntelBeam lighting, a smart bar run by Affie's DJ Jenn and Dera "Sandwich" Nevin and of course, a merchandise booth - all in all, Kingston's largest rave ever. Tickets are available at Zap Records (77A Princess) for $5.00 - you can also buy them at the rave. We won't give away the not-so-secret location on this page, but we'll give you the rave number: 531-9110. The rave won't be serving any alcohol, so don't forget the pre-rave parties: DJ Johnny O at Affie's might have something planned, there's a rave kegger in the ghetto and the "One Foot in the Rave" all-alternative/grunge pre-rave bash to get the aggro out of your system with DJ Joey at Clark Hall Pub. Aleph 5 itself should run from ten-ish till the last raver goes home! Rave on!

You like-a da MISC? MISC is good, no? I get you some...

MISC

Sex Type Things by Joey deVila and Derek Walker Shag Tape Contest

You've dimmed the lights. You've made your bed (for the first time this year). You've purchased your favourite latex barrier devices. Hell, you've even had a partner! But something is missing...you can't quite put your finger on it...

Good sex, like good sex comedies, should have a good soundtrack - otherwise, like a bad sex comedy, it's a waste of eight dollars and ninety minutes for both you and your partner. Hence the Shag Tape - the most important component in your stereo system. Like a fine wine during a good meal, it sets the mood. Like loud whistling when you're in a washroom stall, it covers up any embarrassing noise.

So that's why we're having a contest. You don't have to actually send us your tape (we wouldn't trust Canada Post with such a prized possession either); just send us a list of songs on your tape. We're taking your top ten songs: your favourite ballads of love and affection (affection? affliction?).

But there's a catch. We have already disqualified certain songs because they are clichés in the shag tape world and if people would just stop listening to them in the act, they would have much more satisfying sex lives. They are:

- Stairway to Heaven - Led Zeppelin* (Clichéd, awful reminder of those ego-shattering grade seven dances)
- Dream On - Aerosmith* (Popularized in mid-80's because FM radio DJs had time to do caka while it played)
- Ride of the Valkyrie - Wagner* (My ex-housemate used this to signal the others that Charlie does surf)
- Free Bird - Lynyrd Skynyrd* (It's really hard to do anything even remotely romantic when the chipping starts)
- Somebody - Depeche Mode* (When I hear this, I remember ugly Dave Gahan singing it in concert, pelvis thrusting)
- Baba - Styx* (In fact, anything by Styx - except Mister Roboto - is disqualified)
- Beth - Kiss* (Lick it up is by far a superior shag tune)
- Bolero* (you know, the "10" theme) - Ravel (Pais imagos of Dudley Moore in my head - AIEEEEE!)
- More than a Feeling - Boston* (This is far when you haven't got a partner)
- Ace of Spades - Motorhead* (It's on my shag tape)
- Four Seasons - Vivaldi* (If you play this, you're trying to fake high-browness)
- Strokin' - Clarence Carter* (nuff said!)
- Anything by REO Speedwagon, Air Supply, Chicago, Meat Loaf (ditto)
- and especially Brown Eyed Girl by Van Morrison (Could we take this number behind the barn and quietly shoo it?)

Please submit a short explanation with your list. Extra points are awarded for thematic lists. Write something so cunning that you could brush your teeth on it.

And now the good part: The winner will get his or her list and explanation published along with two free personal parts. That's a whopping $10 value (cue oohs and ahhs from readership). Submit your entries via Campus Mail (the blue mailboxes) or drop them off at Shag Tape Contest (mt) Headquarters c/o the Journal House, 272 Earl St.

Submissions must be in by Friday, October 8th at 12 noon, SHARP!

RAVE WEATHER

by Joey deVila

FRI CLOUDS HI 22 LO 18

SAT RAIN HI 20 LO 15

SUN SHOWERS HI 18 LO 16

BURGER KING

YOUR WAY RIGHT AWAY

BURGER KING

$1.00 OFF HOMESTYLE BREAKFAST

INCLUDES:

- 2 Eggs your way
- Sausage or bacon
- Toast tenderloin
- Homestyle Toast
- Coffee or Juice

Valid during breakfast hours only. Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer.

EXPIRES Oct. 3, 1993

HANGAR
RESTAURANT & BAR

Wed Shine
Thurs Dipsomania
Fri & Sat Hopping Penguins

QUEEN'S Journal

McDonald's

DELIVERY
1-800-663-2233

U of T leaves OUSA

BY SYLVIA D. WARDEN
The Queen's Journal

The relatively new Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance just lost its largest member. The University of Toronto Student Administrative Council, a founding member of the organization, voted to temporarily pull out of the 10-month-old organization on Sept. 17.

U of T SAC External Commissioner Merry-LN Unan said SAC voted to "suspend its membership in OUSA pending changes it wants to see in the OUSA constitution." Unan said that U of T wants two things - a removal of the current eight-delegate cap on representatives and changes in the powers of the OUSA steering committee.

Both demands, Unan said, are issues of representation, for without the delegate cap, U of T's greater population would be more accurately represented.

U of T was to hold a referendum on OUSA membership on Oct. 6 and 7, but this has been postponed until the spring, Unan said.

Meanwhile, student funding for OUSA is being put to referendum at Queen's on Oct. 13 and 14.

OUSA was formed by U of T, Queen's, Brock, Laurier, and Waterloo to provide an effective lobby for students. Most of these schools formed the new lobby group after leaving the Ontario Federation of Students.

According to Alma Mater Society President Katherine Phillips, the decision by U of T "will not tarnish" the reputation or credibility of OUSA. Phillips added that "U of T is an interesting situation [because] it has a lot of student govern-

Ravens ruin Gaels' home-opener.

Marika Glickman

GSS president resigns from post

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

Graduate Students Society President Michael Aregbesola has decided to relinquish his post, citing "personal reasons" as the grounds for his resignation.

Aregbesola, who has held the post since April 1, 1993, announced his intention to step down at the GSS council meeting last Wednesday.

Aregbesola explained that his personal situation had reached a critical point, and that he "had to choose between studies and extracurricular activities."

He assured The Journal that he had "no problems with anybody" at the GSS.

According to Aregbesola, the GSS has decided "not to go with a campus-wide election [to choose a new president] because of the cost," and will instead run an internal election.

An election will be held at the GSS council meetings on the third Wednesday in October to select a new president, he said.

Aregbesola, who plans to "step down at the end of this month," said that GSS Vice-President (Internal) Scott Duggan will take over as acting president to "alleviate a vacuum."

In an interview with The Journal, Duggan confirmed that he "will be serving the position until we find a new president."

Duggan said that it is his intention to run for the position, and praised his predecessor.

"We are all very disappointed that Michael's going to resign," he said, adding that he has "done a lot" for the GSS.

"The GSS has been notorious for having an executive being divided," Duggan said, but this year Aregbesola "led a united executive body."

Duggan noted that while past GSS governments have been criticized for failing to make the graduate student voice heard on campus, "Michael made a strong attempt to make sure that graduates were represented at various campus functions."

Duggan and Aregbesola agreed that the most serious challenge facing the GSS revolves around the Council of Ontario Universities' proposal to hike graduate school tuition to $4,500.

"The most pressing concern is how to start up dialogue, with fee increases expected next year," said Aregbesola.

"There is too much division between the students and government," he said. "They're not working together."

The Queen's GSS will also have to "work closely with other students governments, particularly in Ontario," to handle the situation, Aregbesola noted.

Aregbesola said that as GSS president he "always wanted to make opportunity for changes."

He observed that resistance to change is "something general at Queen's. Change is not easily welcomed... that is my personal discovery."

Aregbesola was quick to add that it is the system, and not the students, that are resistant to change.

"There are a lot of people with great ideas who are not involved," he said. "In order to make change you have to go beyond the [GSS] council to the actual participation of students."

Aregbesola called his term as GSS president "very encouraging," and said that he was able to interest a lot of people in the GSS.

"In the case of the GSS you have to go to grass-roots and get in touch with grad students," he said. "By changing the individual, then you can change the system."

Engineers criticize profs, faculty

SHARON WILSON
The Queen's Journal

A survey filled out by engineering students last year has revealed student dissatisfaction with the faculty, labelled teaching methods "stagnant," and criticized student-administration relations.

The report includes these complaints:

- Teaching methods within some departments have rendered the educational system "stagnant." Students claim lectures, labs and assignments do not allow for "original thought or problem-solving."

- An overall lack of direction in first-year makes it difficult for many students to choose a discipline. One student said, "I really have no idea what engineering is all about although I have completed nearly one quarter of my engineering program."

- Professors with poor attitudes or inadequate teaching skills are not reprimanded for their deficiencies.

The report reads: "In industry, people must perform to certain standards. Here it seems that a professor has never been removed from a teaching position, let alone fired for consistently poor teaching or bad attitudes towards the students (or peers) etc."

- A "cold and impersonal" electrical engineering department left one respondent feeling that the department doesn't "give a damn about the students." The report states that "the overall effort and product [of electrical engineering teachers] is simply inappropriate, backwards and unacceptable."

- In student-administration relations, 51 per cent of the students surveyed felt uncomfortable mak-

Please see REPORT on page 4

Quote

"Basically they tell you, 'pick a state, we'll find you a job.'"

—Wendy Smith, Rehab Students Society president, on US firms recruiting health care grads.

Inside

- NEWS HEALTH CARE . . . 7
- LITERARY LAPSES QUARRY 14
- ENTERTAINMENT NIRVANA 25

ein PROSIT
der Gemütlichkeit

Starting Sept 29th
at the Amadeus

170 PRINCESS Phone 546-7468
CE. A LA CARTE Your Hosts Inge + Peter Breitwieser
AND SCHNAPS

Celebrate in the true German Tradition
FOOD by the METER - BEER by the LITER

More Satisfaction

The beer ads promise it, yet the Rolling Stones still can't find it. Chances are, you're still looking for that wonderful sense of well-being.

The Christian Reformed Campus Ministry called Geneva Fellowship can help you experience more satisfaction this year at Queen's, by showing you the peace, contentment and fulfillment Christ's influence can bring to all the diverse parts of your life. We focus on how to integrate the Christian faith with academic living, in Bible studies, group discussions, special lectures and a cross-denominational Sunday Evening Worship on campus. We also help keep body and soul together with a drop-in student supper every Wednesday evening.

Please join us ... at Geneva House, 104 Queen's Crescent or call Campus Pastor Bill Van Groningen at 545-2962. We'll show you Christ's approach to getting satisfaction.

COULD YOU MAKE A DECISION THAT WOULD AFFECT OVER 95% OF CANADIAN HOUSEHOLDS?

Procter & Gamble is a major manufacturer of consumer packaged goods. With leading brand names such as Tide, Ivory, Crisco, Fampers and Bounce, chances are that you have at least one of our products in your home - 95% of Canadian households do.

A variety of career opportunities are being offered for summer interns & full time employees. Furthermore, applications from business schools and other academic disciplines are encouraged.

We are looking for strong achievers, dynamic communicators, and people who enjoy a challenging environment.

For more details, visit the Placement Office, or come to one of the two P & G Corporate Presentations:

September 30th, 4:00 pm & 7:00 pm.
The Faculty Club

The AMS Board of Directors is looking for two members at large for the Strategic Planning Committee. Submit your name and phone number to the Board of Directors mailbox in the AMS Office by October 8, 1993.

Flame passed to first-year women at Grant Hall Candlelighting ceremony

BY MICHELLE PELLEGRIN
The Queen's Journal

A long-standing tradition continued at Grant Hall Sunday evening, as first-year women were welcomed to Queen's.

The Candlelighting ceremony, which has been an annual event for 104 years, "connects us with all other women that are going to Queen's and those who have attended Queen's in history," said Dean of Women, Pamela Dickey Young.

Women were welcomed by a number of speakers and listened to poetry and music - including Alma Mater Society President Katherine Philips singing "Wind Beneath My Wings."

A highlight of the ceremony was the candlelighting itself, as all guests were given candles which were lit by women from every faculty.

Many alumnae were present, including Arts '37 grad Shirley Brooks, who recalled her first Candlelighting ceremony.

She said that in her first year at Queen's, women were only allowed to join the Arts Faculty, and that at Candlelighting, women received the academic gowns which they had to wear to class.

Brooks said that she felt this year's event was "organized beautifully."

The ceremony's keynote speaker, Nancy Jackman - the founder of the Legal Education Action Fund, spoke of "the thousands of Queen's women who lit candles before us."

Jackman discussed the role of women in today's society and said that the historical oppression of women hasn't ended. Events such as the Candlelighting ceremony "bring light to the darkness" by having people reflect on history and its direct effect on women today, said Jackman.

Azza Nefzaoui, an international student from Tunisia in North Africa, said that while she enjoyed the ceremony, it could be improved by adding an open discussion.

Nefzaoui, who is starting her PhD in mining engineering, said "they should have allowed people to speak their mind" about why they came to Queen's, and what they thought of the school thus far.

"It was nice to have this for first year students," said Angela Han, a first-year student.

Charis Kelso, chair of the Alumni Association's Committee on Women's Affairs, spoke about the history of women at Queen's since the first Candlelighting in 1889.

This was the first Candlelighting ceremony for Dean Young, and she described the experience as "liberating."

After the ceremony Jackman told The Journal that she could not understand why any woman would choose Queen's in the wake of the Gordon House incident in 1989, in which male students hung signs mocking the No Means No anti-rape campaign.

Young responded to Jackman's comments by saying that while the Gordon House affair was "not a good time in Queen's history," Queen's is "not much different from other universities."

She maintained that "Queen's represents a place where women are welcome."

Although the event was to welcome women, men were not turned away. However, Jackman said the few men who did attend the ceremony, "took my energy away and distorted my angle."

Cidalia Faria, host of the ceremony, closed the event by saying "this is only a welcome, and it's only just begun."

LEAF co-founder Nancy Jackman takes part in Candlelighting ceremony Sunday night.

Des Olsen

Maclean's survey cranking up again

Queen's prepares statistics for annual university rankings

BY DAVE COLEMAN
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's administration is putting the finishing touches on the statistics it will send to Maclean's magazine for their third annual Canadian university ranking survey.

However, some schools have opted to drop out of the survey this year. Carleton, Memorial, and one campus at the University of Quebec have all declined to provide the information to Maclean's.

In July, Maclean's sent the universities an eighty-question survey, asking for essentially quantitative data. "They ask for data on the size of the student body, class sizes, operating budgets, library holdings" and other such statistics, said Roger Healey, assistant director of the Resources Planning Department at Queen's.

The compilation of information involved about ten departments at the university, Healey said, with Resources Planning acting as the "coordinating office."

Healey estimated that ten work-hours were given to the survey by each department, making a total of 100 staff hours.

Carleton university President

Robin Farquar cited "staff limitations" as a major determinant of his school's decision not to participate in the survey. Farquar said that Carleton could not afford to devote two full-time professionals to data collection for two months other" from Memorial students. Perhaps, he said, "they see it for what it is - an interesting way to sell magazines."

In the Sept. 9 issue of the Memorial Gazette, University President Arthur May called the "Good press won't ever hurt you..."

—Roger Healey, Resources Planning Department

And Farquar questioned the Maclean's survey's usefulness. "I don't think [the survey is] a particularly useful or valid exercise to begin with," he said.

Peter Morris, manager of information services at Memorial, explained that the decision to withdraw from the survey was a "matter of policy."

Morris said that Memorial officials do "not have a problem with providing public information - the problem is with the way that Maclean's processes that information."

"It might reflect their reality," he said, "but it doesn't reflect [actual] reality."

Morris added that there "has been no response one way or the way." Queen's has done well in previous rankings. It took the number twospot in the 1991 survey of the 46 Canadian universities and last year, when it fell in a separate category for schools with extensive graduate and professional programs, Queen's ranked third out of 15 schools.

"Good press won't ever hurt you," Healey said, adding that the survey "makes universities more topical, which is good for universities as a whole."

According to Healey, the biggest concern for universities is Maclean's own agenda concerning the survey results.

"Maclean's is trying to sell magazines, and if they sensationalize the results, they may do the universities a disservice," he said.

Healey noted that the first survey issue in 1991 was one of the magazine's top sellers. He estimated that the 1992 issue was not as successful, and warned that "for the third [this year's survey] they may get more sensational again."

The Maclean's university survey issue comes out in November.

"We want to have this information at our disposal... we would be

A memorial service for history professor Catherine Brown will be held today in Grant Hall at 5:15 p.m. Brown died suddenly in her sleep on Aug. 17, at the age of 64. She was the winner of several teaching awards, including the Alumni Award for Excellence in Teaching in 1983.

The Queen's Book Exchange two weeks ago served some 3,500 students, exchanged a total of 12,000 books, and generated more than $23,000 in funds. The proceeds will be distributed among CUSO, the Wood Green Red Door family shelter of Toronto, Extend-a-Family Kingston, and the Helen Tufts Tutorial and Nursery School Programs. This year's donation is $4,000 more than last year's total.

All money raised by the QBE came directly from the sale of used textbooks and all proceeds are donated to charity. The exchange was operated by the Queen's Christian Fellowship.

Queen's First Aid had a busy fresh week. Over 500 hours of volunteer service were put into helping victims of minor accidents, including:

- 50 cuts and scrapes
- 8 sprained ankles
- 9 other joint injuries
- 13 asthma/breathing difficulties
- 250 colds, some tending to hypothermia (all at the engineers' greasepole event)

Queen's First Aid was formed in 1986 to provide prompt, efficient first aid services to the Queen's community. Volunteers attend frosh week and homecoming events, football games, convocation ceremonies, and intramural sports events. During the 1992-93 academic session, QFA provided more than 2,500 hours of volunteer service to Queen's. QFA can be contacted through the Student Health Service.

Interested in the Pacific Rim? A Studies in International Development conference, to be held between Oct. 29 and 31, may hold appeal for you. The topic is "Asia in the 1990s: Meeting and Making a New World," and sessions include Asian women in the international division of labour, Asian environment and development, and new social movements in Asia. For information and conference fees, contact the SNID coordinator, at the department of political studies - 545-6232.

Ambassador discusses "new Japan"

Calls changes in Japan "a revolution"

BY KATHRYN FULLER
The Queen's Journal

The Canadian Ambassador to Japan, Donald Campbell, came to Queen's on Friday to discuss the evolution of a "new Japan" since the Japanese elections on July 13 of this year.

Campbell said there has been "a revolution" since the removal of the old regime, which held power for 37 years.

The ambassador underscored the factors which led to the forging of the "new Japan." He said he believes the people's desire for reform came, in part, from the succession of political scandals which swept over Japan.

"I don't think that there is any politician in the Diet [the Japanese parliament] who has not accepted money," said Campbell.

The public could no longer tolerate what they perceived as governmental incompetence, Campbell said. He described it as a "bursting of the bubble in Japan."

Similarly, Japan's Cold War belief that "the U.S. will guarantee [Japan's] security against any communist aggressors," is now questioned by the Japanese, he said.

Campbell added that the growth of a "new Japan" could be attributed to generational differences. The political masters of the previous government were very old, he said, while the new members of cabinet are much younger, with newer expectations and ideas.

However, Campbell also observed that even though there have been many changes in Japan, the country itself is still very conservative. "There was never any question of a change in policy [with the new government].... The policy directions of the old government were the policy directions the new government was taking."

He explained that "Hosigawa, the prime minister, is very un-Japanese in terms of his predecessors," but added that "there is a question of how long he will last." He noted that people in Japan expect an election to be called in June of this year.

Campbell also described the reactions he sees Japan taking in the future. "Japan has been in a state since World War II.... There is a call for Japan to become a more 'normal' nation and come out from under the wraps of the United States and play a larger role internationally."

Discussing Japan's foreign policy, Campbell said that "there will be a much stronger Asian focus." He added that Japan's over-reactions for World War II to the rest of Asia are an example of this openness and internationalism.

Finally, speaking of Canada-Japanese relations, Campbell said that Canadians to improve their understanding of the economic, political and social changes taking place in Japan.

"Canadians have problems of awareness, in terms of interest and possibilities of Japan," he said.

Report recommends changes

Continued from page one

ing a complaint about a course, professor or department, while 83 per cent did not know the appropriate procedure to do so.

Gender-biased language continues within the classroom, said the report, as one student responded: "I find routinely that females in engineering are forgotten when discussing the tasks of an engineer."

Designed by the student-run Education Excellence Committee (EDEX) of the Queen's Engineering Society, the survey's stated objective was to "obtain the viewpoints [of engineering students] regarding the overall level of education" they are receiving at Queen's.

The survey was distributed in lectures during the winter term in 1993. Students were asked to give numerical ratings as well as written comments to a series of questions regarding the Faculty of Applied Science.

A total of 1,092 students, close to 60 per cent of those enrolled in engineering, completed the survey. The results of the survey were compiled in a final report in July.

Engineering Society President Mark Simpson said that "[the report] has opened a lot of eyes and got people talking, which is what we wanted."

Applied Science Dean Carl Hamacher told The Journal that the faculty was "seriously looking into the report," but was not ready to comment on it yet.

In previous years, student evaluations of teachers and courses have been kept confidential by the Faculty of Applied Science, the report said.

With the report made public, the committee hopes that students and alumni alike will join together to make their concerns heard by the dean and department heads.

EngSoc Vice-President Peter Sutton, who was a member of the 1992-93 EDEX committee, is also satisfied with the results of the report, but cautioned that the survey is one of "student perceptions... what the students thought happened."

The EDEX report includes 20 recommendations to the faculty. Simpson said some of the report's suggestions have already been implemented.

Among the report's recommendations put in place are consultations between administration and first-year students on a regular basis. The first of three meetings is scheduled to take place tomorrow between the Chair of First Year Studies, Dave Turcke, and a class of '97.

Student-administration communications have also been improved with last year's implementation of EngLink. The service provides student representatives (one male, one female) who will be a "friend" to students to approach administration with a concern or complaint, Simpson said.

Both Simpson and Sutton said that the recommendation of restructuring "the electrical department will meet with the resistance."

Currently, Dean Hamacher meets with both the president and vice-president of EngSoc as well as the yet-to-be-named incoming chair of EDEX and John McGeechay, acting associate dean, to discuss results of the survey.

Hamacher stressed that, in considering the survey, there are aspects that must be considered: the statistical data, and the "pretative discussion."

"I had a vision at C.P.&P. and now my network extends beyond the known time/space continuum." TRUDY, new york bag lady/time traveler/psycho-historian

Increase your employment contacts through our free workshops:

- * On-campus recruiting (ACCIS)
- * Resume Writing
- * Interview Preparation
- * Job Search

Career Planning and Placement

ground floor, St. Lawrence Building

(Let us be the Jane Wagner to your Lily Tomlin)

THE AMS IS LOOKING FOR ... 2 STUDENTS AT LARGE

To sit on the Almo Mofet Society Committee on Internal Society Structure.

The mandate of this committee is as follows:

To research and devise a structure for the society which would best reflect the purpose and needs of the AMS.

Applications may be picked up in the AMS office and are due by Monday, September 27, 1993, at 5:00pm. For more information please contact:

Todd Minerson
Vice-President (University Affairs)
545-2725

A SPARK OF IMAGINATION...

...lights up your face, your eyes.

A true portrait of you — lively, eager and ready to bring your special gifts to the world — is just what you need to give family and friends.

For the most important photograph of your life, make an appointment now at Sparks Studios, where imaginative, innovative photography captures the unique spirit of the individual in every portrait.

Packages to suit all needs and budgets.

Sparks
STUDIOS

330 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6.
Phone: (613) 549-6560 Fax: (613) 549-4268

AN OFFICIAL TRICOLOUR PHOTOGRAPHER

CFRC offers more talk radio

Philip Downey and Bob Conway host Classics by Request on CFRC.

Marika Glickman

BY ANDREA HUNCAR
The Queen's Journal

Queen's radio will offer more talk radio this year, as CFRC increases its spoken word content to meet federal regulations.

When CFRC-FM renews its license with the Canadian Radio and Telecommunications Commission in Aug. 1994, Canada's oldest university radio station will have to comply with a new requirement which demands that 25 per cent of university radio programming be spoken word content.

According to Andrew Duffy, CFRC Radio Club president, "this is a policy that was put into effect, after suggestions from other college radio stations, to increase the distinctiveness of college radio."

Duffy said he feels positive about the change. "[CFRC] will be able to present a better picture of the community... and that is our main objective," he said.

According to CFRC's full-time manager, Maureen Plunkett, the station is already quite close to meeting the requirement, with spoken word content currently at "approximately 22 per cent."

Plunkett said she is very pleased with the current line-up, as it incorporates spoken word content with "very diverse [programming] and... something for every listener's taste."

Spoken-word programs include The Chinese Garbo (in Mandarin and Cantonese), three French programs, and an East Indian program — The Call of the Flute.

L'il Red Radio, which made its debut last week, deals with aboriginal issues, and will include an exploration of the arts (with film and book reviews) as well as interviews.

In After Stonewall, hosts Chris Veldhoven and Alison Bowe feature artists, conduct interviews and investigate issues pertaining to the gay, lesbian, and bisexual community. The program is now in its fourth year.

Furthermore, program assistant Jerome Poon-Ting said, "[CFRC] is working with other institutions" in its programming.

He cited, as examples, The Pillbox, a program which is hosted by and for the students of Royal Military College, and Earth Chronicles, which makes use of pre-taped environmental programs from McMaster University's radio station, CFMU.

Other shows which will help in achieving the mandatory level of spoken word content include CFRC Notebook and CFRC Call-In.

Dave Segins, host of CFRC Notebook, said his program offers a "local perspective [on] youth-oriented issues."

The show is a magazine program which deals with student life, campus politics, racial and feminist issues, as well as topical news stories.

With a new broadcast delay unit (allowing the station to effectively screen calls before they're broadcast), the station is able to introduce CFRC Call-In. The show deals with issues ranging from alcohol abuse to budget gourmet.

Although spoken word content is an important matter for CFRC, the 25 per cent requirement has not affected the quality of music programs, according to Poon-Ting. Music programming still offers diversity; jazz, dance, rock, folk, blues, and classical music will be found on CFRC, he said.

Poon-Ting explained that CFRC emphasizes new music. The audience "will always hear the latest music, regardless of the music type," he said.

To ensure this, CFRC has an internal regulation requiring 25 per cent new releases on every music program. Any song released within two months is considered a new release, Poon-Ting said.

Listeners can also look forward to new programs such as New Noz, which, according to Poon-Ting, is "100 per cent new music," and the syndicated show Ascension, hosted by Britain's John Peel, who is known for his discovery of bands such as the Happy Mondays and New Order.

CFRC can be found at 101.9 on your FM radio. For a program guide, call 545-2121, or drop by the Infobank in the John Deutsch University Centre.

Cafe Max LUNCH AND DINNER

FROM 11:30 am TO 10:00 pm.

10% OFF EVERY MEAL.
(SUNDAY to THURSDAY)

ASK FOR YOUR 10% OFF CARD,
VALID UNTIL MAY '94

LUNCH FOR $6.45

DINNER FROM $7.95 to $12.95

EVERY MEAL COMES WITH SMALL SALAD, AND GARLIC BREAD.

39 Brock Street, 547-2233

PUBLIC MEETING

The Campus Master Plan: Campus Development Options

October 1, 1993
John Deutsch University Centre,
John Orr Room at 11.30am to 1.30pm
(presentation to be made at 12noon)

All members of the Queen's community are encouraged to attend, as planners are looking for input. Bring your lunch - coffee and tea will be provided.

GIVE YOURSELF A SHOT!

The Shot is giving away a VIA voucher every week (equal to the value of your ticket)

KEEP YOUR TICKET:
Just drop your ticket stub off at the Shot (no facsimiles please). Then join us Wednesday nights (beginning September 7) and get ready to win! Winners will also be announced on CFRC radio. Join us at the Shot...where everybody gets a break!!!

Gentle of Duke 547-Pool

FORM 360

VIA

TAKE A LOOK AT THE TRAIN TODAY

RED CROSS

BLOOD DONOR CLINIC

SEPT. 29, 30
2 - 8 PM
LOWER VIC HALL

TRANSPORTATION: courtesy of Amherst Taxi (384-1550) within city limits, from 3 to 6pm.

REFRESHMENTS: courtesy of Coca Cola, Weston Bakeries, Doherty Distributors, Domino Pizzo, McDonald's, Second Cup.

COME OUT AND SHOW US WHAT YOUR MADE OF!

Sponsored by:
The Engineering Society
The Nursing Society

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT FOR '94 GRADS!

THE TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK

OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHERS FOR 1993-94 ARE:

- * GRUENBERG PHOTOGRAPHY
- * PRESTON SCHIEDEL PHOTOGRAPHY
- * SPARKS STUDIOS
- * TAYLOR PHOTOGRAPHICS

If you want to see your graduation photo in the TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK, you MUST book your sitting with one of the above photographers by NOVEMBER 15th! Each graduate is entitled to one free shot to be published in the Tricolour Yearbook if your sitting is booked by Nov. 15th.

Become a permanent part of Queen's history -

Book Now

GRADUATE STUDENTS !!

THE LAST DAY TO OPT-OUT IS SEPTEMBER 30TH.

THIS YEAR, FEES THAT YOU CAN OPT-OUT OF INCLUDE THE GRAD CLUB, THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE, COMMUNITY SERVICE, QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY, QISS BURSARY PROGRAMME, STUDENT REFUGEE SUPPORT, AND THE PRUDENTIAL HEALTH PLAN (IF YOU HAVE OTHER EXTENDED HEALTH CARE COVERAGE).

SEPTEMBER 30TH IS ALSO THE LAST DAY YOU CAN OPT-IN YOUR FAMILY TO THE HEALTH PLAN.

THE GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY OFFICE IS IN ROOM 21 IN THE J.D.U.C. FOR THE MONTH OF SEPTEMBER WE ARE OPEN FROM 8:30 AM TO 4:30 PM. WE RETURN TO OUR REGULAR HOURS OF 9 AM TO 1 PM ON OCTOBER 1ST.

GSS
GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

Queen's puts OUSA funding to referendum

Continued from page one

ments [and] not one government has sovereignty."

AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed agreed with Philips, saying she was "not dismayed at all" with U of T's decision to "suspend its membership." Pirmohamed said U of T is still taking part in OUSA meetings, and the "changes U of T wants just need time to be worked into the constitution."

Philips said OUSA is an "organic association" which moves and changes with the people involved.

Pirmohamed contended that the University of Western Ontario's recent decision to become an official member "signifies the merits of OUSA." Philips believes that without U of T, OUSA still has a membership of 90,000 students, making it larger than other provincial-student lobby groups.

While it may have more members, Philips is quick to point out that OUSA does not have the administrative staff of OFS (now called the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario), which has been criticized for being

"You get more bang for your buck [with OUSA]."

—AMS President Katherine Philips

top-heavy and out of touch with student needs.

Philips said the 95 cents per student that OUSA is asking for on the referendum is nowhere near the $11 students paid to OFS.

Both Philips and Pirmohamed believe this is an especially crucial period for post-secondary education. Philips said it is imperative "that we're part of a provincial organization."

She said it's "so important to have a communication base [that] gives support for issues that are important on campus."

At OUSA, proposals are written collaboratively, Philips said, and consequently "our words have stronger meaning." Philips argued "you get more bang for your buck [with OUSA]."

Pirmohamed said that because OUSA

"purports to represent students on student issues," the referendum will be very important in determining the group's legitimacy.

Both Philips and Pirmohamed are confident OUSA will receive majority support at Queen's. However, Philips said that if it fails, Queen's will still be officially involved and the AMS "could find the money within the budget."

Pirmohamed said "we are already members of OUSA, now we need to finance it."

In discussions with students, Pirmohamed said, she was repeatedly told that tuition and student aid were on the minds of students.

Raising tuition fees is a "pressing concern" and the "means testing by parents [income]," used to determine access to OSAP is "unreal" Pirmohamed said.

Further, she said, the demand for a 30 to 50 per cent increase in tuition by the Council of Ontario Universities is "outrageous." Pirmohamed believes the proposal "makes a mockery of any reasonable discussion of under-funding."

Please see AMS on page 8

US grabs health care grads

Companies recruit Canadian students

KATHY GOLDER
The Queen's Journal

While many students struggle to find a job after graduation, students in the health care field are receiving offers before they graduate. And many are being lured to the United States.

Rehabilitation Therapy Student Society President Wendy Smith said that American "companies are really keen to hire Canadian graduates, they think we get a good education here." Often, they are so eager to hire students that they add perks, such as room and board, or health and liability insurance, according to Smith.

"Basically they tell you, 'pick a state, we'll find you a job,'" she said.

Brian Kwon, president of the Aesculapian (Medical Students) Society, said that the issue affects all medical professionals, not only those just graduating. "You'd be hard pressed to find [a general practitioner in Kingston] who hasn't been approached" by American recruiting companies, Kwon said.

The Rehab Society has initiated an ad hoc health care committee to examine current issues in the health care field, Smith said, including the flight of health care professionals to the United States.

The committee will determine what position they will take on the issue, and try to assess what impact the flight of students to the U.S. will have on health care in Canada, she said. Furthermore, the committee will look into American offers that sound too good to be true, and keep students informed, Smith continued.

For her part, Smith said that she would like the opportunity to work in the States, "because it's good to travel and get experience." But she said that she wouldn't choose to live there permanently.

Smith believes that finding a job in Canada is more difficult than in the States. Furthermore, work experience in the U.S. would help a person in finding work in Canada, she said.

Rehab student Angie Ashton agreed with Smith. "If I couldn't find a job here, then definitely I'd go [to the U.S.] for the first five years and get experience," she said. However, she would prefer to work in Canada if there were a job available.

Lori Johnston, another Rehab student, disagreed. Johnston said she does not find American jobs all that attractive, and would "rather stay within Canada." She suggested the possibility of going overseas to work if Canadian jobs were not available.

When asked if he would go to the U.S., Kwon said that if it were "necessary to enter residency training in the States because of inaccessibility in Canada," he would. Still, he said, his preference would be to stay in Canada.

Kwon explained some of the factors that cause medical professionals to go to the United States. "Students sometimes find post-graduate and residency training opportunities in the States, especially in 'exotic' specialties," Kwon said, and then decide to stay.

Kwon noted that, "American medical centres often tempt Canadian physicians with incredibly lucrative offers, both in terms of money and workload."

In addition, Kwon alleged, some of the changes made by the NDP government in Ontario discourage Canadian graduates who have worked or trained in the U.S. from returning to Canada.

Students who wish to return to work in Canada must have a letter from a Canadian hospital, promising employment after the student returns, he said. Kwon finds this requirement unreasonable.

According to Kwon, the U.S. needs Canadian general practitioners at the primary care level. This is because many American doctors prefer to practice high-paying "esoteric specialties" at the tertiary care level, he said.

Kwon suggested that the American health care plan, unveiled last week, will move the U.S. system towards more primary care. This shift, coupled with the lack of American general practitioners, may lead to "a massive exodus of [Canadian doctors] to the States," he said.

Increased Canadian interference with the medical profession, such as Ontario's social contract, could similarly push doctors away, Kwon argued. The government is trying to take more and more of a role in medical care, he said, and many Canadian doctors would prefer to go to the United States where there are fewer restrictions. It becomes "almost a matter of autonomy," he said.

Kwon said that the entire medical community must work toward improving the financial situation of Canada's health care system.

"Everybody in the medical profession, including students, recognizes the need for financial responsibility ... We want to play a role in the changes that will hopefully improve the situation," Kwon said.

—According to fourth-year nursing student

Sheri deVries, American recruiting companies provide many tempting offers for nursing graduates as well.

deVries "would prefer to stay in Canada if at all possible ... but, by opening myself up to the American market I'd be increasing my chances of getting a job."

deVries said she would rather be in Canada than anywhere else in the world. She wants to be a part of positive changes in the Canadian system of health care. However, she added that there are more opportunities in the States simply because there are more medical centres.

Second-year nursing student Jodie Sach said she's taking a more pragmatic approach to her future job search. She is "going to go where there's a job, and it doesn't matter where."

Science is Cool!

SCIENCE DISCOVERY, the Arts & Science Summer Day Camp for High School students, is accepting applications for the following positions: Camp Director
Assistant Camp Director

These two full-time paid positions are responsible for the planning and coordination of a series of fun-filled two week Science Camps.

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE, 183 University, and must be submitted no later than September 30th at 4:30.

Show these students what you've known for years...

AMS defends OUSA

Continued from page 7

Philips believes all students should have equal access to student aid at "fair and appropriate levels." OUSA argues for the income contingent loan repayment (ICLR) program, in which students would pay back loans based on their income.

OUSA contends that with an ICLR system, there would be more money available and an easier repayment schedule for students.

The plan differs from OSAP in that interest is accrued immediately after leaving school, and repayment is based upon one's income, not the size of one's loan.

Under ICLR, students will be expected to contribute between two and four per cent of their annual income to repayment. The maximum repayment schedule is fifteen years, after which time any remaining debt will be forgiven. Further, if one's annual income is less than $21,000, the student is not expected to begin repayment.

According to Philips, "most people will end up having to pay their entire loan back [and] the number of defaulters would be few." She considers this program a "far cry better" than the present funding situation.

Philips says the initial money required to start the program could be obtained by selling bonds, similar to Canadian Savings Bonds, on the open market.

Recently, OUSA's ICLR proposal has faced criticism from other organizations. Some argue that when OUSA compares its proposal with the Australian ICLR program, they neglect the problems that exist for students there.

Pirmohamed, however, doesn't idealize the Australian set-up, calling it "far more elitist" because it offers a 15 per cent discount on tuition "for students who pay up front." She added the model OUSA is suggesting is "universal — everyone pays the same."

Philips sees corporate partnerships as another funding option. Corporations could provide library acquisitions and lab equipment, she said, while conceding that "we don't want too much private involvement, because too much could influence academic autonomy."

While the emphasis has been on funding, both Pirmohamed and Philips see OUSA as having several objectives.

Pirmohamed said the role of OUSA "is to look at a variety of issues that affect students." Discussion papers on accessibility, accountability, and the quality of teaching are being drafted, Philips stated.

Philips and Pirmohamed believe the response from the government has been favourable because "we offer realistic alternatives."

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

1991 - 1994 GRADUATES

GET YOUR $750* REBATE

ON THE PURCHASE OR LEASE OF ANY GM CAR, LIGHT TRUCK OR VAN

IF YOU'RE IN YOUR LAST YEAR AT COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY OR A RECENT GRADUATE, CHECK OUT THIS ONCE-IN-A-LIFETIME OPPORTUNITY FROM GENERAL MOTORS
Or Call 1-800-GM-DRIVE

*OFFER DOES NOT APPLY TO SEVERAL VEHICLES DISTRIBUTED BY GENERAL MOTORS. THE $750 REBATE INCLUDES GST.

It was a brutal collision, Bentley leaped onto Tindall Field along with hundreds of other Queen's Students to join the football parade. Just as Bentley reached the center of the pitch, a band member had swung his tuba around to meet Bentley's melon with a terrific clang. The journey down to the Hotel Dieu was quite a blurry one but once Bentley arrived he received excellent care from a nurse who had just graduated from Queen's University. The professional and thorough treatment he received put all of his concerns at rest as he lay on the stretcher, anxiously awaiting another of those groovy pills. What Bentley did not know, however, was that he had actually contributed to the quality of care he was receiving by his contribution to the funding of the Nursing Skills Lab.

The Nursing Skills Lab is a focal point for the education needs of Nursing Students. It is a lab where student nurses practice and learn skills necessary for their courses and the completion of their degree. At the present time the Skills lab does not have the appropriate amount of equipment to function effectively. In an attempt to remedy that situation, the students of Nursing unanimously endorsed a $5 interest fee in the fall of 1989 to go towards purchases for the Lab. Unfortunately, however, it is not enough to adequately provide for the facility so the student run Queen's Challenge Campaign has earmarked the Nursing Skills Lab for $50,000. Your continued support of the Campaign is vital to maintaining the learning environment Please-

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

178 Ontario Street 544-6885

COCAMO CONCERT CALENDAR

Thurs., Sept. 30

SPICE & COMPANY
HOTTEST CARRIBEAN CALYPSO PARTY BAND!

Thurs., Oct. 7

LOWEST OF THE LOW

Thurs., Oct. 14

ONE

Keg Party Economics (101)

+ PARTY = MONEY

- Save on your keg parties with us!
- We make beer Affordable!
- FREE Keg & Tap rental
- FREE Keg delivery
- FREE Keg Pickup
- FREE Refills (H2O only)
- FREE Tax (only 26¢/L)
- FREE Pictures of Bob Rae for the bottom of the toilet bowl.

Choose the right personal brewery and BE satisfied

BREW NOW FOR HOMECOMING!

The Brewing Experience 407 Counter St Unit 160 Tel 542-2187

There's nothing wrong with a hearty serving of "Student Helper," but you should be able to afford some variety on your plate. That's why you should check out Bank of Montreal's new Student Loan.

You can apply for a loan of up to $5,000 for each year of 5 years of undergraduate study, up to $20,000 in total, and up to $10,000 for 2 years of post-graduate studies. You'll be taking advantage of special student interest rates, and you just have to make interest payments while you're still in school. You'll also get a quick answer to your loan request.

To find out more, just drop by your nearest Bank of Montreal branch. And while you're there, ask us how else we can ease the pressure—a discount on day-to-day banking, special Bank of Montreal MasterCard® cards, and more. You might find it easier to balance your account and your meals.

Call our Queen's Student Hotline for more information
545-3022

*Available to full-time students, entering any year of post-secondary education at a recognized Canadian community college, university, or polytechnical school. Bank of Montreal eligibility and credit requirements must be met. See your branch for complete details. MasterCard is a registered trade mark of MasterCard International Inc. Bank of Montreal is a registered user.

 Bank of Montreal
We're Paying Attention

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

- Editor-in-Chief: Sarah MacWhirter
- Managing Editor: David Pavao
- News Editor: Jeff Gray
- Production Manager: Colin Ho
- Entertainment Editor: Rob Furse
- Editorial Page Editor: Douglas MacGregor
- Sports Editor: Joel Sutherland
- Photography Editor: Marika Olickman
- Graphics Editors: Richard Dubois, Joey deVilla
- Features Editor: Allison Macemann
- Opinions Editor: Tara Hillis
- Literary Lapses Editor: Megan Nichols
- Backpage/Misc. Editors: Derek Walker, Joey deVilla
- Assistant News Editors: Brock Martland, Brad Elder, Lori Thorlakson
- Assistant Production Manager: Adrienne Down
- Assistant Entertainment Editors: Ian Ferrie, Ryan Chen, Stan Beddoe-Stephens
- Assistant Sports Editor: Jen Flynn
- Assistant Photography Editor: Derek Yamell
- Assistant Literary Lapses: Tim Mitchell
- Business Staff 93-94:
 - Advertising Manager: Andrew Nielsen
 - Creative Staff Manager: Alex Hamer
 - Sales Representatives: Chrs Ritchie, Fiona Macauley
 - House & Systems Manager: Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Comments copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printers, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario.

Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800
 Fax Number: 545-6728
 Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
 Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

- Sheldon Bradshaw, Dave Coleman, Jason Currier, Sarah English, Kathryn Fuller, Kathy Golder, Jason Heroux, Andrea Huncar, Jason Kenney, Coni Kepper, Catherine Lipa, Mike Lewicki, Jason Lewis, Francis Marinette, Des Olsen, Geoff Owen, Michelle Pellegrin, Cindy Platten, John Pollard, Chris Price, Leroy Rodrigues, Rob Thompson, Marc Walton, Sylvia Warden, Darryl Whetter, Sharon Wilson, Chris Zabel

Straining to hear; fighting to be heard

Kim Campbell said that a federal election is not the time to discuss policy issues. Mel Hurtig asked why he was not allowed to discuss policy issues - by participating in a national, televised debate. Kim Campbell quickly retracted her statement. But Mel Hurtig is still asking his question.

Most Canadians shook their heads in disgust at Campbell's statement, and were left suspicious after her speedy retraction. Many Canadians, fed-up with and cynical about the election process, are asking the same question Hurtig is asking.

Who decides? Who has the right to decide which parties receive national attention in a national election? How does a grassroots party gain a stamp of legitimacy from the national media? And even though many of these parties have right-wing agendas that can be considered threatening to some Canadians, does this mean that they should be denied a voice? Who gives the media the right to play the role of a moral elite?

It took the New Democratic Party about thirty years before it received its stamp of legitimacy. It took Preston Manning and the Reform Party only three years. This was the result of both leadership and political aims. (The NDP fought for what wasn't; the Reform Party fights to take away what is.)

The Natural Law Party, which advocates transcendental meditation as a means of solving the social and economic problems of the country, has more candidates running than the National Party. You don't hear them demanding media coverage. Maybe they are sending their demands telepathically, but that doesn't mean they have any less right to coverage than Hurtig's party.

Grassroots movements are almost always successful in attaining local coverage. However, grassroots political parties are caught in the vicious circle of the technicalities of our 'information' society. They are usually denied access to the tools that would enable them to get the support they need to make a banner of a party. However, this is not the case in at least two instances. A member of parliament can be independent, or, a member of parliament can be a cross-over. How would independent incumbents be given national coverage, unless an incumbent harkens to Ross Perot-like tactics?

difference. However, they need the support to get the tools.

Despite criticism from the public, the national media insists upon focusing coverage on parties who hold seats in Parliament. Hurtig, whose party was formed in November of 1992 - and is already fielding 41 candidates - is mad as hell that he has not been extended the invitation to participate in national debates. Understandably so, if one considers the logic behind the parliament excuse.

The parliament excuse assumes that each member of parliament has been voted into that seat under the

And what about the cross-over? What about the member who switched loyalties after being elected into office? To whom is that member responsible - when that member has no delineated constituency, and thus no mandate from a constituency? Why should that member, of an ad hoc party which has never been subjected to election, be included in national debates?

Although the Bloc Quebecois quite obviously has support in Quebec, one of the largest voting blocks in the country, this does not mean that it has legitimately passed the parliament test.

The parliament excuse is obviously faulty. However, there does seem to be an element of reason in limiting the debate membership to the traditional parties. How would a national, televised debate be structured with five or six leaders - two of whom speak English and arguably reasonable French, one of whom speaks English and French equally poorly, one of whom speaks both languages fluently and one of whom speaks only English?

It may be wise to limit the national debates to the traditional parties. However, coverage must be broad and far-reaching. And this includes national coverage - of all parties fielding candidates.

Perhaps the emphasis on national, televised debates is misplaced. Increasingly, the disgruntled electorate has turned to forums such as town hall meetings as a means of expressing frustration and getting its voice heard. These town hall meetings have proven effective with up to nine panellists.

In an age when computer hook-ups are offered as the key to participatory democracy, town hall meetings are an encouraging sign that voters are not simply apathetic, but frustrated.

Democracy in Canada has been shifting, albeit slowly, from the backrooms of our nation's capital to town halls accessible to all Canadians. Every Canadian should play a role in shaping the future of this country, and the media is responsible for ensuring that every Canadian is presented with all of the views put forward in this most important of democratic exercises.

OUSA: Referendum without debate

Ever had a referendum just for fun?

On Oct. 13 and 14 Queen's students will cast votes in a referendum on whether or not to pay an annual student fee of 95 cents to the Ontario Undergraduate Students' Alliance.

But don't worry if you don't know what OUSA is, or what it stands for. Your vote doesn't really count.

The Alma Mater Society is determined to fund the alliance, and has said that even if we vote "no" to the 95 cent fee, they'll just take the money - our money - out of the AMS budget anyway.

Does that sound democratic to you?

U of T's decision to "temporarily suspend" their membership in OUSA last Tuesday, as well as postpone an Oct. 6 referendum on the subject until spring, makes us question just how strong the alliance is.

U of T's reasons for withdrawal included problems of procedure and representation within OUSA, but there may have been other reasons as well. Resistance to OUSA at U of T has been vocal, with an organized "No" side to the referendum distributing pamphlets and plastering the campus with posters.

Which brings us to our referendum. Will there be any mobilized opposition to OUSA here at Queen's? And if there were, would it really matter? We appear to be in OUSA, and paying for it, whether we like it or not.

But with U of T's participation now in question, we have to wonder how effective a voice will OUSA be? What kind of clout would an alliance have without U of T's 44,000 full and part-time students?

The lack of debate around Queen's participation in OUSA can only be unhealthy. Many don't know what OUSA is or what it advocates. And more alarmingly, many Queen's students don't seem to care, or to even know that a referendum on the issue is forthcoming.

The letter says that since the introduction of the Australian plan, "students have paid over $500 million into the system every year;

meanwhile, the government has reduced its own contributions."

The argument that the government could saddle students with huge debts while continuing to underfund post-secondary education under such a system is a valid one. But, it is important to take the letter with a grain of salt. The Australian context is different. They moved from a policy of zero-tuition to an income-contingency loan plan, which meant that tuition rose dramatically from zero.

Australia has had a loan system similar to the OUSA proposal since 1989. In an open letter to U of T students written by the Australian National Union of Students and distributed with a "Say 'no' to OUSA" pamphlet, we are warned that the introduction of such a plan "has been a mechanism for our government to continue to underfund higher education."

The letter says that since the introduction of the Australian plan, "students have paid over $500 million into the system every year;

Here in Canada, students are used to paying some of the costs of their education. But whether one agrees or disagrees with what OUSA proposes, why aren't we talking about this type of thing at Queen's?

Of course, what students think of what OUSA stands for won't matter in this referendum. We aren't voting on our membership in OUSA, as U of T students will be in the spring. We're just voting on how we are going to pay for it.

Opinions

Student Health accessible

The Editor,

In the Queen's Journal Opinions section of September 21, 1993 "Talking Heads" section there was a reference made to Student Health Service - "Student Health always has long lineups; this makes them very inaccessible."

I wish to vigorously dispute this statement. Last year at the start of term, and indeed for all of the years I have been associated with this clinic - long lineups - so long as to stretch outside of the building were the norm. This is no longer so. We have computerized, added to our medical staff and increased the nurses' role in direct health care delivery. This allowed us on Monday, September 13 to provide service (doctor or nurse visit) to 313 students (in past years it has been in the 195-200 range). Currently Well-woman check-ups are available within a few weeks, as opposed to last years' few months.

There is no general waiting list at all for the Division of Psychiatry and Clinical Psychology. Contrast this to the community which surrounds us - most family doctors have closed their practices to new patients. If you can get in it is routine to expect to wait several weeks for a simple problem (ie. 10 min. appointment), if you want counselling/psychotherapy a wait of 3-6 months is standard in this community which is said to have the highest ratio of psychiatrists to population in Ontario.

We are by any standard very accessible and working hard every day to become more accessible. Accessibility is not only the number of slots available in a day, but also in providing a welcoming face to the diversity on campus. We've been working hard in the past year to reflect this diversity in our staffing.

We've taken further steps this year to ensure a minimum of wasted time by establishing an appointment cancellation number (547-6711) and to encourage responsible behaviour we will be billing students who fail to show for their appointments. (One estimate of this lost service suggested that there was 600 hours of wasted time for psychiatry in 1991/92 because of no shows and even more for the family doctors).

Any other suggestions to improve accessibility are more than welcome. We are your service.

-S.H. McHevin

Associate Director
Queen's Student Health

Successful Run

The Editor,

On Sunday September 19th the people of the Queen's community once again gathered together in support of the Terry Fox Run. Our community has hosted previous Runs to raise money for cancer research and we have had some great results.

This year's run was no exception. Over 360 participants enjoyed the beautiful weather as they ran, jogged, walked and biked the 5km route. It was amazing to see the number of people who came out to support Terry's dream of finding a cure for cancer. We are proud to announce that over $8500 was pledged and donated for the Terry Fox Run, the most ever for the Queen's Community.

The Organizing Committee would like to thank all the participants as well as the people involved in opening ceremonies. Fox 960 provided everyone with music for the Run and the Town Crier started people moving, after they finished their aerobic warm-up with Super Nautilus. We look forward to seeing everyone again next year!

—Queen's Terry Fox Run Organizers

Real Live Slacker

talking heads

"Do you think the fate of social programs should be debated in the current election campaign?"

"Yes, I believe it should. Since coming from Poland I have seen the effects of a government not putting enough emphasis on social programs."
Ania Shmidt
Arts Sci '96

"I agree with most of the social programs, but I think that people should slowly be weaned from the welfare system."
Matt McGrath
Comm '96

"Yes, because these are issues which affect the population as a whole. As a student, I'd like to see a little more money going to the education system. I'd like to see legislation which would maintain health care at its present level."
Dave Jacobs
Meds '96

"Yes, there is clear pressure on the government to reduce costs. At the same time, there is increased pressure on social programs, particularly health care in the future."
Chris Page
Policy Studies Ph.D.

"Yes, it is a sacred trust and something that most, if not all, Canadians treasure."
Kevin Giddings
Arts Sci '95

Joey deVilla

Marriott Defended

The Editor,

I wish this letter could receive front page status as did the one-sided Marriott union article (Journal Sept. 21), but I guess being stuck somewhere in the middle of the paper will have to do.

For months now, I have been hearing about Marriott part-time workers being unionized. I do not wish to comment on whether that is good or bad for Marriott employees or for the company, nor do I wish to make any comments on the negotiations. However, being a Marriott employee for almost two years, I would like to express my personal feelings of anger towards the people who are trying to convince the Queen's population that Marriott management is the "evil" corporation.

With reference to the male employee who wishes to remain anonymous, I cannot understand how you can generalize and say that all the managers treat the employees like children. First of all, I have never been treated with disrespect or like a child and I have never seen a manager treat any other employee or student in this fashion. I can speak in general because I have worked at all the units on campus, with exception to MacCorry.

I would also like to comment on the fact that you think your job was not secure and you could not address the problem that you were having with a manager. I have always been able to discuss issues and concerns with most of the managers on campus and that is not effective, I can talk to higher management. By saying that you (Mr. Anonymous) think your job is not secure is probably not because you were having personal problems with a manager (you could have transferred to another unit.) You obviously have an attitude problem and you were probably not a good worker; that might explain why management had to baby-sit you. You are trying to make management look like cruel people that are out to get their "slave" part-time employees. This is totally ludicrous.

Now I wish to comment on the "slave" issue that another Marriott employee feels compelled to tell the university population. Last time I checked slavery does not exist in Canada. Management does not make part-time workers do anything more than is expected of full-time workers. Part-time workers may have more to do in the way of cleaning, but that is only because there is more time available at the end of the day than during the day.

Am I the only Marriott employee lucky enough to have been treated fairly and not be driven like a "slave"? I think not. I happen to like my job with Marriott and I am tired of a selective group of people trying to make Marriott look like a vicious, manipulative, "slave"-driving management team.

Finally, I have had several people come to me in confidence and tell me that they had signed union cards only because they felt they had no choice. They were pressured so much by Bruce Dodds that they wanted him to leave them alone. Now, lets consider who is the tough, shrewd outfit!

—Heather Moore
Part-time Marriott Supervisor

Send your Opinions to The Journal

Don't Raise Tuition, Cut Overpaid Old Profs

Recent proposals by politicians to raise student tuition fees by 50 per cent or more are disturbing to say the least. With students already facing crushing debt loads, low paying summer jobs, and future unemployment, it would seem that previous generations, having already squandered our future, are actually more out of touch with reality than we previously may have thought.

I would, however, like to make a proposal for university education that our forebears have to date failed to put forward. The proposal is a simple one, yet, since student hardships seem to be of little concern to politicians and university administrators, I have never before seen it in print.

I propose that the academic gerontocracy, who earn salaries averaging $70,000 and as high as $100,000 should retire and make way for young blood. Fresh-faced Ph.D.'s would readily accept entry level professorships starting at $30,000 (a sum which is lower than earned by your average postal worker or university janitor). In place of one professor ready for pasture, departments could hire two, three, or even four recent graduates who would not only work for less pay, but have the energy to publish and teach at a more intensive rate. Such young professors would also be more in touch with the students of the 1990's, who often complain of irrelevant courses currently being taught at universities and indifferent staff.

If aging professors are not willing to retire, perhaps they would be willing to take pay cuts. Canadian universities are bursting at the seams with academic poseurs bantering socialist slogans or professing other supposedly humanitarian beliefs. Lets see these Cadillac-driving, granola-crunching, 'save the whale' types put their money where their mouths are and cut their salaries by $5,000 or $10,000. The left-over funds would definitely come in handy as undergraduate scholarships and graduate fellowships and could be named after the professors in question, for ego purposes.

Politicians' and university administrators' claim that raising tuition fees and higher student loans will solve student problems should "Benefit of the doubt..?"

In places like Toronto, New York, Los Angeles, Amsterdam, etc. it is very easy to be anonymous with your day to day doings. Because those cities are so large, it can be very easy to do things without people knowing what you're up to. In Kingston, however, anonymity is extremely difficult. In this city of 65000+ people, nothing that a person does goes unnoticed. Students who live in very close quarters on campus can see each other coming and going. Since the city only has one main street and only a single cross street where entertainment can be found, students are always crossing paths. As a result, it is very difficult for, say, a gay man to go out to Robert's without being interrogated by his peers. It is therefore understandable that gays, lesbians and bisexuals feel uncomfortable being out in Kingston and trying to meet other queers. So, to avoid this questioning, queers at Queen's simply don't come out. They are, therefore, not allowed to go out and enjoy the company of other fellow queers.

Imagine, for instance (if you are not already), that you are a woman and that women socializing together were considered unacceptable societal behaviour. I think it would become increasingly difficult for you as a woman to socialize entirely with men. Men who harass you. Men who attack you. Men who physically harm you. This is the exact scenario for gays, lesbians and bis. We are trapped in a world of straits who insist on discriminating against us, making fun of us, harassing us, beating us with bats, assaulting us both physically and sexually, and even killing us. As a result of this, many gays, lesbians and bis, myself included, tend not to give straits the benefit of the doubt.

Despite what you might think, I do adore my strait friends. Fortunately, I've been out for more than 3 years, so the heterosexuals (or sometimes asexuals) that I have befriended, have had to pass my anti-homophobia and anti-heterosexism tests (not to mention my anti-racism and anti-sexism tests). If they do not pass these with at least a 75%, they are not worthy of my sincerest friendship. They usually make up the remaining 25% with my help. So, I now have a niche of het friends who totally accept me (sexuality intact). They support me, encourage me, socialize with me, ask about my boyfriends, hug me, kiss me, sleep in the same bed with me, hold me, cry with me, etc. without feeling that they have to constantly remind me that they are not gay ... because I already know - lord knows it's not hard to tell. I love my het friends dearly, sometimes even more than my gay friends. I wouldn't be complete without these friends.

Heterosexual friends are important; gay friends, however, are essential. If I didn't have them, I wouldn't be able to live my life. A lone gay man in a heterosexual world is like a single black man in a white world (or vice versa), or a lone woman in a male world (or vice versa)... I can hear some guys right now saying, "That wouldn't be so bad, man." Oh yeah? Try it sometime. You'd have no one to "male-bond" with. You'd have no one who knew anything about your male problems. You'd have no one to talk to about your latest love interest. And if you were gay, you'd have NO love interest!! It's not easy being one in a million, especially when the rest of that million is all against you. You say, "I'm not against queers!" But you're not exactly for us either. You perpetuate stereotypes by telling gay jokes. You discriminate against us by not inviting us to your formals. You over-react if someone calls you a 'fucking faggot' or a 'cock-sucker.' What's wrong with being a faggot? Are strait women worthy of being beaten to a pulp with a bat because some of them are cock-suckers too? Lesbians aren't cock-suckers so does that make them acceptable? As a member of the strait community, you don't go out of your way to stop homophobia, so you're just as bad as the rest of the bigots. When was the last time you told a friend that a homophobic joke he was telling was in poor taste? Not recently (if ever) I'll bet. There is a fairly consistent sentiment in the lesbian, gay and bi community that a person is assumed homophobic until he or she proves to us otherwise.

—Basil Girgah (Queen of da Nite)

Recently, I participated in an exercise where a group of people were given little slips of paper. On those pieces of paper was a sexuality (either gay/lesbian, bi or heterosexual) and they were told that their primary goal was not to divulge that information under any circumstances and their second goal was to find out what the other people's sexualities were. All but two of the participants found it very difficult. The two that didn't were actually queer. One person said that the only way he could keep his sexuality a secret was to lie; a woman said that she found it very difficult constantly using gender neutral language; another man said that he ended up just agreeing with the majority. These are things that heterosexuals take for granted. Now do you understand why it's so difficult for people to be comfortable with their sexuality? Probably not.

A week ago, an old friend of mine came back into town to do her Masters at Queen's. We sort of dated each other back when I was one of those strait bigots. I didn't call her a girlfriend because it wasn't all that serious, but we were great friends. She's been away from Kingston since and I've never told her. The thought of confronting her with it is terrifying. I'm ashamed that I, a person who has been on television discussing my sexuality and have spoken to over 2000 students about it, am afraid to tell a close friend that I'm gay. Actually, it pisses me off that I have to bow down to society again. I will, nonetheless, bite my lip and tell her, if she hasn't already read this of course.

Derrick Howie

Due Monday

- Poli Sci Paper
- Art History Essay
- Psych. 101 Lab
- English Essay
- Computer Sci Lab

DELL: YOUR 24-HOUR-A-DAY STUDY PARTNER

When you purchase a Dell computer, you get more than just a high-quality, aggressively priced, name brand computer - you get complete, toll-free telephone technical support, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. So, on weekends, and in the dead of night when most other facilities and services are out of reach, just call Dell. We guarantee you'll talk to a technical expert within 5 minutes! If you can't afford to miss a deadline, call Dell. After all, you want a study partner who's there when you need help!

NetPlex™ 425/NP
$1,309*

- 25MHz i486SX
- 4MB RAM
- 120MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- Local bus video
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

NetPlex™ 433/NP
$2,299*

- 33MHz i486DX
- 8MB RAM
- 230MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- Local bus video
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Dimension™ 450/XPS
$2,439*

- 50MHz i486DX2
- 8MB RAM
- 230MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- 128KB cache
- #9 GXe VL video card with 1MB VRAM
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Dimension™ 466/XPS
$2,789*

- 66MHz i486DX2
- 8MB RAM
- 320MB hard drive
- 3.5" floppy drive
- 128KB cache
- #9 GXe VL video card with 1MB VRAM
- Pre-loaded MS-DOS® 6.0, Microsoft Windows™ 3.1, mouse

Monitors sold separately

CALL 1-800-668-6291 1-800-387-5754 en français
FAX 1-800-387-5753

Hours: Mon. - Fri. 8 a.m. - 8 p.m. Sat. 9 a.m. - 3 p.m. EST.

Dell Computer Corporation, 121 Granton Drive, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3N4
Halifax • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto • Calgary • Vancouver

Look for the Intel Inside® symbol on our quality computer systems.

For complete details on guarantees, call Dell. All prices and specifications are subject to change without notice. * Guaranteed response restricted to 8:00 a.m. - 10:00 p.m. EST, Mon. - Fri. and 10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m. Sat. Dell cannot be responsible for errors in typography or photography. Shipping, handling and applicable sales taxes not included in the price. Dell and Dell Systems are registered trademarks, the DELL logo, NetPlex and Dimension are trademarks of Dell Computer Corporation. Intel and the Intel Inside logo are registered trademarks of Intel Corporation. Other trademarks and trade names are used to identify entities claiming the marks and names of their products. Dell does not claim proprietary interest in the marks and names of others. Copyright 1993 Dell Computer Corporation. All rights reserved. Systems may not be exactly as shown.

AD CODE 2DA00

Literary Lapses

Quarry's Quest

Forty years ago, a few Queen's students participating in a Writers' Workshop decided to create a literary magazine for the purpose of publishing their work. This marked the birth of Kingston's Quarry Press, which today has grown to become one of Canada's foremost regional publishers.

BY MEGAN NICHOLS
The Queen's Journal

Since its inception in 1952, in addition to publishing the original Quarry magazine, the press has grown to publish two more literary magazines (Poetry Canada and Canadian Fiction Magazine), novels, poetry books, children's books, and non-fiction and regional books. It has become an instrumental force in the Kingston literary community, with its dedication to the publishing of local authors and books about eastern Ontario, and its support of the literary community.

Bob Hilderley, owner, editor and publisher of Quarry Press, explains how Quarry has expanded from publishing one annual regional magazine to becoming a major player in the Canadian publishing industry. In the early 1960's, when Quarry's founders Tom Eadie, Tom Marshall and Colin Norman decided to increase the scope of the publication, Quarry magazine began to be distributed nationally and quarterly, featuring such prominent Canadian authors as Margaret Atwood and Al Purdy, and edited by such well-knowns as Michael Ondaatje. Quarry's first book, The Beast With Three Backs, by Eadie, Marshall and Norman, was published in 1965.

Over the years Quarry has passed through the hands of many different editors and supporters. Brown Wallace, Carolyn Smart of the Queen's English department and Michael Ondaatje have all played roles (and still do) in Quarry's history, and Kingston author Steve Heigton is presently Quarry's main editor. For a time Quarry was backed financially by Queen's, and later by St. Lawrence College, and it finally incorporated in 1986, a year before Hilderley's arrival on the scene.

Hilderley recalls Quarry's first few years on its own, before it had its own office space on King Street. "I edited it out of my bedroom... I had to run from teaching [at Queen's] over to the printer to say, 'oh, that's fine.' It was all done after hours or Saturday mornings... We'd all sit in the living room around on the floor and put labels on [the magazines]." He flippantly adds, "I don't know if it's any more sophisticated now."

Since it has incorporated, Quarry's sales have skyrocketed, from $17,000 in 1986 to over $800,000 in 1991. It has expanded into the U.S. and Europe, and is planning on extending its series of regional books to southwestern Ontario.

Hilderley considers Quarry's ties to Kingston and eastern Ontario as essential to its life and function. Quarry magazine is one of the longest-running literary magazines in Canada, second only to The Fiddlehead (1948), and Hilderley attributes this partly to the belief that "people haven't been willing to give up on us." He says that one of Quarry's "greatest strengths" is its regional support, and that approximately 40 per cent of its revenue comes from the area between Belleville and Ottawa, and that 10 per cent comes from one single store in Kingston. "That's how important it is to have a strong strong local anchor," explains Hilderley.

Besides founding the Kingston School of Writing, where aspiring writers can receive feedback and attend classes run by established Kingston authors, Quarry also co-publishes books with many Kingston organizations, such as the Kingston Field Naturalists, St. George's Cathedral and The Whig-Standard. Hilderley explains that the regional books published by Quarry, such as Up and Down the Ottawa Valley and other cultural and historical guides, usually provide the revenue to make it possible for Quarry to publish its literary titles and fund the Kingston School of Writing.

Hilderley does not feel that Quarry has to compromise its publishing ideals, however, by printing works purely for financial gain. "Even in some cases where we've done small memorial books for people, what redeems the book is that it's very important to them; it's significant to their lives - and that's not compromise."

"These are the kind of books that permit people within their own community to be proud of their own community; to be proud of themselves... The rewards [as a publisher] are peculiar, but the one I like the most is when people come up to me and say, 'Thanks for doing this book.'"

Of the 17 books published by Quarry last year, Hilderley says that money was lost on 11 of the books, and that this was expected. Most literary publishing in Canada is deficit publishing, even with support from the Canada Council and the Ontario Arts Council - evidence that most presses are not in it for the money. The editors of small presses are often personally subsidizing their literary titles, says Hilderley, and without government grants, "there wouldn't be a Canadian publishing industry."

Part of Quarry's mandate since its inception has been to provide a forum for emerging first-time Kingston authors to publish their poetry and fiction. "We're deliberately trying to build our company on this community and we've had the good fortune of having in it a very rich literary community," remarks Hilderley. The Quarry magazine editorial board reflects a spectrum of the Kingston community, including a few Queen's undergraduates, Queen's professors and members of the community. With this mix, Hilderley says that "this wonderful levelling goes on between student and professor, town and gown."

But sadly, despite this link with the university, Quarry and Queen's seem to have lost touch over the years. Hilderley feels that one of the elements responsible for this has been Queen's student government, which for the past three years, has refused to permit Quarry to set up a table in Mackintosh-Corry Hall, since Quarry is not Queen's-affiliated. Every Friday a Queen's volunteer would run the table, where students could purchase books and magazines at reduced prices, and at the same time become informed about Quarry and its role in the literary community.

In spite of its tenuous link with Queen's,

Please see QUARRY on page 15

The Hounds that Haunt Europe

Black Dogs
Ian McEwan
Vintage
174 pages
$13.50

It is a cruel paradox that, in 1993, Europe stands, if not in a shambles, on a precipice. The demise of the monolithic bogeyman to the East and the long-awaited advent of economic intention in the West have both passed, but a recession lingers and disquiet reigns. The horror in former Yugoslavia rages on. The initial joy of German unification has faded to reveal an entirely new set of faultlines, prompting innumerable worried reports and, just last week, two books, with more doubtless to come. Xenophobia rises unabated in France and is on the rise in Britain, where the debate over the Maastricht Treaty has driven numerous anachronistic "little Englanders" from the woodwork of their supper clubs. And then there is today's Eastern Europe, a story all its own.

These events form the context for English author Ian McEwan's latest novel, Black Dogs, finally available in a trade paper edition. This, his fourth novel (which complements two collections of short stories), is his most ambitious work to date, and commensurate rewards accrue to author and reader alike.

McEwan's previous works, notably his short stories and first two novels, The Cement Garden and The Comfort of Strangers (shortlisted for the 1981 Booker Prize and filmed by Paul Schrader in 1990), were unflinching explorations of obsession, death, revenge, and taboos such as incest, which sought to shed light on the dark side of human passion. What made McEwan's writing so chilling was its laconic, indeed desiccated, style, which had the devastating effect of making the irrational seem rational, the unimaginable seem plausible.

Black Dogs dramatically builds on this existing high standard of craftsmanship and thoughtfulness. As expected, McEwan demonstrates a remarkable economy of words; there is nothing superfluous here, yet there is nothing spartan about his writing. Every sentence contributes to a whole which is tremendously evocative and affecting.

The novel's crowning achievement is its seamless combination of McEwan's familiar, darkly personal themes with a much broader ontological and political perspective. The result is both a pleasurable story highlighted by vivid characterization and a profound and disturbing meditation on Europe.

The narrator of Black Dogs is Jeremy, a forty-ish publisher and writer who, as he explains in the brief preface, is an orphan, and thus, throughout his life, has been intrigued by other people's parents. This forms the basis of the book, which is an account of his wife's parents, Bernard and June Tremaine.

It is 1946. Bernard and June, having fallen deeply in love during their wartime government service in London, are newly married and about to set off on a honeymoon in Italy and France. They have just joined the Communist Party, and, full of ideals and affection, are undaunted by grim reports of the reconstruction. One evening in rural France, the couple comes upon a dolmen at sunset. As June, on her deathbed, tells Jeremy, Our lives had gathered to this supreme moment - a sacred site more than five thousand years old, our love for each other, the light, the great space in front of us - and yet we were unable to grasp it, we couldn't draw it into ourselves. We couldn't free ourselves into the present. Instead we wanted to think about setting other people free. We wanted to think about their unhappiness. And our wretchedness was our inability to take the simple good things life was offering us and be glad to have them.

The following day, June has an experience which changes her life forever. She abandons communism, indeed all material politics, and embraces spirituality. She and

Bernard become permanently estranged, though never divorced. (The black dogs of the title recall Winston Churchill's nickname for his periodic depressions. For June, they are a similar symbol for civilization as a whole. To say anything more about the incident in question would deprive the reader of McEwan's masterful creation of foreboding.)

This event, and June and Bernard's radically different recollections and interpretations of it, act as the impetus for Jeremy's consideration of the rational and the spiritual. Bernard and June are the extremities, the twin poles along whose slippery axis my own unbelief slithers and never comes to rest.

Thus, through Jeremy, the trauma of France in 1946 is linked to visits to Poland in October of 1981 (at the height of the Solidarity movement) and to Berlin in November of 1989 (as the Wall comes down), and to his own experiences in the same part of France in the present.

Black Dogs is a superb achievement that affects the reader on many levels: as a love story between the politico Bernard and the priestess June; as an examination of conflicting world-views (notes Jeremy, "I am uncertain whether our civilization at this turn of the millennium is cursed by too much or too little belief..."); and as a disturbing rumination of the "black dogs" which have haunted Europe in the past, and which rear their heads once more.

IAN PETRIE is the Journal's assistant Entertainment editor and a very charming young man, who writes for Literary Lapses 'cause he knows it's better.

Fame and Rumour

A short story by Jason Heroux.

"Whoever asks me, wrongs me." —The Song of Roland.

HOW long have you been there, like that, how long has it been?

He listens to the subtle lurches of the room. The air is dark and seems to magnify the slightest creak, funnelling sounds into him. He imagines the entire wood of the room inhaling.

He may light a cigarette. He may study his own hands as they emerge from their dormant positions, holding the lighter, surprised by such obedience.

The sounds of the room trespass through him.

HEY, Colette.

Well, well. Look at this. Where you coming from. Ray? How'd you know I moved here?

You weren't hiding.

Didn't think I had reason to. You shaved off your beard.

Is Sonny home?

A little smile. Shrugging. All depends on what you call home, Ray.

Do you have any idea where he went?

Forget the whole thing, Ray, please.

Any idea at all?

Get your own damn ideas.

She lets him into the house. She was wearing a housecoat when she answered the door, he can smell sleep still in her body. As she dresses in the next room, he imagines the scars. Some may close like a mouth, he thinks, others may spread like cracks of light under doors.

You don't like me, do you? What?

You blame me for what happened.

That's not true.

The room is completely excavated of his character. His photographs on the wall, his favourite furniture, all amputated from the scene. Ray's not sure which of them is responsible for this.

Are you thinking of looking for him?

I'm worried about him. I may be able to help. Why did you let him go?

It's not the type of thing you "let" happen. Come on, Ray, you knew him. It just happened. He happened.

HIS body lies scratched upon the plastic sheets of a bed inside Le Marquis Motel. All the lights are off. The room roulettes with passing headlights. I want to tell you a story, he told her. Are you comfortable? Sit next to me. Put on that towel if you're cold. You must listen to what I am about to tell you.

This is a story about a famous photographer. I will not describe him to you, because you have never met him, and that's not important anyway. This man, what would you like to call him? Take your time, do not pick the first name that enters your head.

Michael, the girl said, how's that?

Yes, that's fine. Michael used to take pictures, and eventually he could not imagine himself in the future unless it was a photographed image of himself he imagined.

Do you understand? It doesn't matter, that is not the important part. Whenever he took a photograph of his friends or family or strangers he noticed they all looked into the camera the same way, as if they were all thinking the same thing. Do you know what they were thinking? What do you think when you look into a camera? You do not have to answer. He began to believe in an empty place that everyone desperately wishes to enter.

And? What else happened?

It's not a true story. That's all that happened.

The girl stretched from the bed, walking shyly toward the small, doorless cubicle. She sat down. The room was quiet. I can't pee if you're looking at me.

HAVEN'T seen him in four months, the man said.

Did you hear what he did to his wife?

Sure, I heard.

Do you have any idea why he did that?

I don't know. Why does anyone hurt anyone? Just lack of imagination, I guess. If you're interested, there's a rumour that he cut off all his own toes.

Yeah, Ray said, I heard that one.

Yeah. The man shrugged. There's probably no law against that, though.

Mute things that cruel my friends with wordlessness. "Never be a boy, T." no I won't but from an envelopment of pockets you unnetsted these wet hurts and cupped them, still salt trembling, for me, to see.

Sympathies I meant to say turned paste buried in dilute blood and the quiet which scabs boys laid husks on me.

I left your bare words unsoothed.

Left, too coward of connection to even touch goodbye.

So I am a boy after all, who left you cold from opening, and now is finally exiled as justice for having sent everyone away.

—T. Alex

.....
Hello sadie
you look good today
now come d o w n here and give me a hug angel
It's
.....

—Francis Martinette

Printed Passage Books Ltd

invites you to readings at The Grand Theatre by ARTHUR BLACK & THOMAS KING
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28th, 8:00 pm and by
JEFFREY SIMPSON & BEN WICKS
MONDAY, OCTOBER 4th, 8:00 pm
For free tickets and information call Printed Passage at 546-7650

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Princess & King
Open 7 Days a Week
Phone: 546-7650 Fax: 546-5638
Serving Kingston for over 15 years

Quarry

Continued from previous page

Hilderley says that Quarry's ties to the rest of Kingston are one of the things that sets it apart from other small presses. In addition to this connection, he also attributes Quarry's concern with its readers to its continued success. "We have been, of the small literary presses, by far the most aggressive in doing what I call the 'other' side of publishing. Many small presses in Canada edit well and produce very nice books. Not very many of them sell and put as many of those books into readers' hands as we do." He emphasizes the importance of seeing books through from printer to reader, not just from author to printer, in order to "complete the circuit" from author to reader.

Some of Quarry's upcoming releases to watch for are an anthology of short pieces by literary and historical figures who have written about Kingston, from Samuel de Champlain, to Walt Whitman, to contemporaries such as Michael Ondaatje and Diane Schoemperlen (who will be reading at Just Jazz on Wednesday at 8:00 pm); the reissue of Matt Cohen's Salem novels; Joanne Page's first book of poetry; and Barry Dempster's new novel. Quarry is also planning a clearance sale for the end of October; look for the upcoming ad in the Journal for details.

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

QP!

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

QP!

'Please let me be heard!'

Offering alternative drinks, recognizable tunes and more, the QUIET PUB is perfect for private parties! 545-2740

COMING UP:
wine-tasting smoker Oct. 1
Kramer look-a-like contest Oct. 14
Aladdin Oct. ?

THE QP! - WHERE CONVERSATION IS FEASIBLE.

Tonight PHYSICS SMOKER w/ DJ Joey

Wednesday Friends of Stu Live!

Also this week:
Science Formal Smoker Thursday with the Simpsons premiere, Seinfeld & DJ Ryan
Friday Afternoon Ritual The coolest Friday afternoon organic chemistry lab ever! DJ Lisa t.a.'s the class starting at noon.

Cool band
Cool drinks
Cool bar
No dinks!
What more can you ask for?

clark hall pub It's like your best friend's rec room -- only with larger appliances!

Open Monday through Saturday 8:00pm - 1:00am and Friday Afternoon Ritual 12noon - 6:00pm phone 545-6195

DIG CIRCUS Alfie's WHETHERMAN
The World's GROOVE TUBE
Coolest Band Pub Funk For The Whole Family

APPEARING WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 29th
DOORS OPEN AT 8:00

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

QP!

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

QP!

Sports

Ravens shock Gaels in home opener

BY GEOFF OWEN
The Queen's Journal

Analysis of the Gaels' 25-20 loss to the Carleton Ravens should be prefaced by two points: first, the Ravens are a vastly improved football team who appear ready to challenge for second place in the OQIFC. New head coach Donn Smith has taken the second most pathetic football program in the nation (after 34 consecutive losses, York's claim to be the worst was never in doubt) and turned them into a giant killer.

The second qualification to the Gaels' most recent loss has seemingly escaped those esteemed few who have been chosen to cover Queen's on the radio, on the television, and in print. Simply put, the 1992 season ended after Brad Elberg raised the Vanier Cup above his head last November. This season is not a continuation of its glorious predecessor—a fact that many media types have failed to recognize. Moreover, these same people seem able only to remember last season's final three victories. The Gaels are being suffocated by reminders of how difficult it is to repeat and by comparisons to last year's team. While this is not an acceptable excuse for Saturday's result, it is a reality that is being unfairly ignored.

Despite the score, many positives occurred in the Carleton game, mostly in the form of superior individual efforts. Tim Ware was the Gaels' best player and he has become a dominant middle linebacker. He was all over the Richardson Stadium field stuffing the inside runs, showing relentless pursuit when Carleton ran outside and he was constantly in the face of the Ravens' quarterbacks. As the season progresses, look for Ware to fill the huge hole left in the defence by All-Canadian Mike Boone.

On the offensive side of the ball, Ed Kidd and Paul Kozan continued their outstanding seasons accounting for almost 50% of the receiving yards. Thanks to the emergence of rookie fullback John Thelen, Kozan has been running out of the slot position and scored the second Queen's touchdown. Thelen has proven himself as a talented receiver, rusher and a punishing blocker for tailback Brad Elberg.

The Raven's escape the clutches of the Golden Gaels.

Marika Glickman

Speaking of Elberg, nobody has been criticized more this year than the gifted running back who should be playing professionally somewhere.

Despite his disappointing numbers in the season's first two games, nobody remains more determined than Elberg. He is as gifted as any collegiate athlete anywhere and he displays a mettle game in and out that is second to none. His effort on the weekend (75 yards rushing, 108 yards receiving, 1 touchdown) indicates as much.

With all this said, the fact remains that the Golden Gaels were appalling on Saturday. It was a loss characterized by both poor play and poor coaching. Perhaps the most alarming reality of this collapse was that Carleton's coaching staff made better half-time adjustments than the Queen's coaches. Defensive co-ordinator, Bob Mullen, who is one of the country's most innovative and intelligent football minds, failed to adjust to the addition of some misdirection and screen passes by the Ravens. Furthermore, his selection of defensive fronts and coverages combined with some terrible tackling by his players, altogether transformed Raven running back David Bosveld into the second coming of O.J. Simpson. Bosveld ran for 115 yards on 20 carries and scored three touchdowns. At 170 pounds, it remains largely a mystery how he could be so dominant running outside and between the tackles. Yet he ran past people, over people, and gained yards by moving piles of bigger, stronger players clad in gold.

Mullen's offensive counterpart, Bob Howes, kept his three best receivers, Kidd, Rob Weir and Chris Gear, on the sidelines in the second half, opting instead to use rookies Paul Othen and Paul Greenhow. While Kidd was hurt, he was okay to come in when Carleton went ahead late in the fourth quarter. Why was Howes not playing his best players until the game was all but lost?

There exists some animosity between the Gaels and their coaches which is unlikely to go away after this defeat. The team has not had a day off since training camp began, Doug Hargreaves' inability to accentuate the positive and some questionable politics about which players should play and what position they should play indicates that the two groups are not on the same wavelength. The 1993 football Gaels are not going to win anything until such time that the players are playing for the coaches, not in spite of them.

The talent exists on this team (coaches and players) to win the rest of the remaining games; with so many returning players, the know-how exists. As long as players like Brad Elberg are around, the will to win is certainly there. The loss to Carleton, while disappointing, may be the shake up the 1993 team needed so that they will always remember that football games cannot be won without spirited play.

Queen's is more than capable of repeating their 1992 Vanier Cup victory, but right now all they need to focus on is playing aggressive and fundamental football against the Concordia Stingers next weekend.

Queen's varsity rowing

Victory on the river and in the Beer Garden!

BY CORI KEEPER
The Queen's Journal

After much dedication and many early morning workouts, the Queen's Rowing Team was ready to compete in the 1993 rowing season. Both components of the team, Varsity and Varsity Development, bonded and ragged at their last chance for freedom at last weekend's Head of the Swamp Party. This weekend the team became serious as they headed to Toronto for their first chance to destroy the competition.

The Toronto Sprints, organized and run by the University of Toronto Rowing Club, involves a race 800 meters shorter than the regular 2000 meter course and provides the initial chance for newly formed crews to compete together. Although it is early in the season, and much technical work remains, the results from this weekend are full of successes.

The men's heavy eight upheld their strong reputation as part of the mens four-time consecutive OUAA champions. The crew, composed of Guy Langelon, Vaughn Abbey, Curtis Boyington, Jason Farclough, Matt Osler, Bob Partington, Jamie Humphries, Walley Hobbs and coxed by Memec Lovell, dominated their race and brought home gold. The other win was a hard earned first by the women's lightweight four composed of Andrea Koster, Stacey Mitchell, Julie Mahoney, Claire Netherington and coxed by Stephanie Bertels.

The men's lightweight eight women's heavy four and the women's heavy eight were all beat out in tight races. The closest race of the day went to the women's lightweight eight, as they roared to the finish they almost reached victory but were beaten out by U. of T. and Western in the final strokes.

The two women's Varsity Development crews had successes of their own. Although this was the initial racing experience for many of the rowers, the novice women's eight B took second in the consolation final, and the novice women's eight A placed third overall. The entire Queen's rowing team has many more hours of brutal morning workouts ahead as the men's crew trains to reclaim the OUAA championship and the women's team to seize the OWIAA championship for Queen's. The team races again next weekend in the Head of the Trent.

Ben Johnson who?

Women's cross-country off to a strong start

BY JASON LEWIS
The Queen's Journal

Astounding the competition and terrorizing small forest creatures, the women's cross-country team takes one more step towards OWIAA dominance. The site for this week's tour de force was our very own Queen's Open Cross-Country Meet held at Lemoine's Point on Saturday. The meet was also a success for the organizers and volunteers who ran four different races throughout the afternoon. Seven teams competed in the two university events including a small but swift group all the way from Laurentian. Other teams included RMC, McMaster, Waterloo, Ottawa, and Guelph the Dave "I swear it's only 10k" Scott-Thomas and Jeff "I saw him measure it" Brisson were not only pleased with the successful execution of the day's events but with the performance of the women's team.

Led by a hungry Judy Elfassy in second place overall they handily won the senior women's event by over 20 points. Sophie Kenward in fifth place and Suzanne Garrett in sixth both handed in typically strong performances while Jen Drynan and Kerry MacKelvie backed them up with impressive tenth and thirteenth place finishes respectively. Consistently strong performances such as these have rocketed the women's team from anonymity to a fourth place ranking nationally.

The men's team ran well despite being only a skeleton of its usual self. Much of the team was taking the meet off to volunteer and rest up for the remainder of the season. The remaining athletes placed fifth as a team with Derek Hackshaw leading in tenth place. Mark Arseneault, Jason Lewis, Jeff Kalbneisch, Andrew Stuart and Hackshaw make up the five qualifiers for Queen's.

The only mystery at the otherwise well run meet was the relative stickiness of the course itself. Competitors and coaches alike were surprised to see times that were minutes slower than expected. Many theories have been advanced to account for this ranging from poor measurement to mass hallucination, though none have adequately explained the phenomenon.

Next week the team travels to Sudbury for the Laurentian's Invitational meet. You can expect more of the same from the women and a strong showing from the well rested and prepared men's teams.

Women's tennis team too strong for Waterloo

BY MIKE LEWICKI
The Queen's Journal

The women's varsity tennis team from Queen's got up with the sun on Saturday morning to get ready for a trip to Waterloo and a chance to play the Warriors. We didn't know this trip would be such a killer, but nonetheless, we were off to play in a six singles and three doubles format.

After approximately four hours in the van the women were ready to tackle the female Warriors. The only problem was finding them! After way too many wrong turns, a friendly family pointed us (literally) in the right direction. Once arriving at the Waterloo Tennis Club we stepped on court to play our opposition. With conditions similar to your average sauna, our Gael's made quick work of the Warrior's. The women thrashed them 8-1 in score, and didn't even let the football game outside distract them. The team was awesome with Bali Athwal winning 6-2, 6-1, M.J. (fix this clamp?) Young winning 7-5, 6-3, Nicky Myslivecek winning convincingly 6-1, 6-2, Pam Lewis crushing her opponent 6-1, 6-1, and Miko (quack!) Thomson steamrolling her way to a 6-4, 6-0 victory. Moira Maluestutto lost a heart-breaker 7-5, 7-5 but fought hard to the end. In doubles, Pam and Bali won 6-3, 6-3, M.J. and Nicky won 6-3, 6-3, and Lisa "touch" Bradford and Miko rounded out the winning with a 7, 6-6, 3 score. Congratulations!!

We now faced the tough part of the long day, travelling home when we were all exhausted. Pam and Lisa were "sick as dogs" and stayed in the back, while Nicky took over the rein (and almost the steering wheel as well). Moira had to locate her parents while Miko couldn't do as simple a job as putting the right amount of gas in the truck. All in all it was a very successful day with "Whoomp...(there it is)" always keeping us in good spirits. Next week the team travels to Toronto to take on the Laurier Golden Hawks and the U of T. Blues at the National Tennis Centre.

A boot to the head

A Marauder gets marauded as the Gaels defeat last year's champs.

Derek Yarnell

BY ROB THOMPSON
The Queen's Journal

There was a victory party at Queen's Saturday night. Notwithstanding the football loss, the rugby Gaels took Kingston field and handed defending OUAA champion McMaster a 23-8 defeat. There weren't thousands of drunken frosh in attendance, but a solid crowd of about 150 people took in the game. It was sweet revenge for Queen's, who lost the title of champion, for the first time in six years, to the Marauders in a one-point defeat last year.

The play was disorganized early on, and both teams hit the scoreboard within minutes of the kickoff. Gareth Pettigrew nailed a penalty in the 2nd minute. At the 5 minute mark, McMaster replied with an unconverted try by Jeremy Graham. The Gaels settled things down and kept relentless pressure in the McMaster end for most of the first half. Pettigrew gave Queen's the lead on another penalty, and then added a try in the 33rd minute. Steve Pettigrew (Gareth's brother) started the run inside the Queen's 22, made several dazzling moves, and carried the ball well into McMaster territory. The ball eventually made its way to the outside where Gareth Pettigrew counted, and converted the try. In addition to Gareth's scoring, he repeatedly sent the Marauder backs scurrying after the ball with his booming clearances.

The second half saw Queen's penalized early and often. It caught up with them in the 10th minute as Graham booted a penalty to bring the Marauders within a try. That's as close as they would come the rest of the day. The Gaels overpowering strength and fitness battered down their opponents, and in the 32nd minute of the half, the Gaels used the entire width of the field to record a try. After turning the Mac defenders inside out with several spectacular passes and dummies, the ball ended up in the hands of Pete Jaques, who stormed in for the try. The scoring was closed in the 38th minute when Jaques got the ball after a scrum and muscled to the corner for his second try of the game. Both tries went unconverted.

Coach Al Ferguson was obviously pleased with the victory over the Marauders, but said that the Gaels took far too many penalties, and didn't capitalize on all their opportunities. He felt that later in the season, such mistakes could be costly. Gareth Pettigrew shared his coaches sentiments, but was confident that they would minimize the miscues as the season progresses, and said that their strongest rugby is yet to come. He attributed Saturday's victory to experience and their superior fitness level. On the whole, both men found it to be a satisfying victory and looked forward to facing Mac once again in the final game of the season, and then in the playoffs.

The rugby Gaels are next at home, Saturday, October 2nd, when they host the Waterloo Warriors. Game time is 1:00 pm at Kingston Field. They also have a midweek encounter with the Yeomen of York, Wednesday afternoon in Toronto.

Percy wins playoff

Golfing Gaels finish 2nd and 4th

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

The Golden Golfing Gaels were busy last week, travelling to two one-day invitational events in Peterborough and Waterloo.

On Wednesday, Queen's placed a highly commendable second in the Trent Invitational at Kawartha Lakes Golf Club in Peterborough. Veteran star Gord Percy captured individual first place for Queen's after winning a one-hole sudden-death playoff from Jason Ireton of Guelph. Percy and Ireton had tied with scores of 76, five over par on the tricky wooded and hilly layout.

The Gaels totalled 330 strokes, counting the best four scores from five players. They finished four shots behind victorious University of Toronto. Guelph wound up third at 335, while three schools (Trent, Waterloo and Sir Sandford Fleming College) ended tied for fourth at 343 in the nine-team field.

Derek Dupuis from Queen's shot a solid 78, while Gaels Darrin Parker (85), Chris Seitz (91), and Robin Hutchinson (93) struggled yet were not alone in doing so, as scores were high.

Friday saw Queen's travel to the Waterloo Invitational at Conestoga Golf Club, where they finished fourth in a strong twelve-team field. This course is much easier than Kawartha Lakes, and players took advantage of gorgeous fall weather to post some excellent scores. Trevor Hunter of Guelph shot even-par 67 to emerge as low individual, three shots ahead of Bill Seagris of Windsor. Percy continued his hot play with 71, good for third place.

In the team standings, Queen's totalled 304 shots, ten in arrears of champion Windsor. Guelph (298) and Western (299) placed second and third respectively in a very competitive field. Chris Seitz got back on track with 74, Darrin Parker shot 76, while Robin Hutchinson and Derek Dupuis both had 83.

After three events, Percy leads all players in All-Star point standings. However, Queen's is not playing in the Guelph Invitational this week, so that could change.

The next event for the Gaels is the two-day OUAA championship, next Monday and Tuesday at Blue Springs Golf Club in Acton, hosted by Waterloo. This is a newly-designed, very tough golf course. Queen's will get a practice round the day before the finals start. Head coach Ed Deans figures, "Queen's should finish in the top four teams, and we could challenge for the title if Hutchinson and Dupuis start playing better. Those guys are much stronger players than their scores have indicated."

If Percy is on his game, he could be a threat to capture the OUAA individual gold medal. In 1990, Percy finished second overall, and his recent form indicates that he is recovered from last season's shoulder separation.

Carleton has improved

Five reasons why the Ravens are good at football

BY DAVE RASHID
The Queen's Journal

1. Head Coach Donn Smith seems to be the vital element in Carleton's resurgence as a contender. Has earned the respect of the players over the past few seasons and has amassed a loyal coaching staff.

2. Veterans. In the past, Carleton has had players who either leave the school, get kicked out, or choose not to play football.

3. Recruitment. This is largely due to the coaches and scouts, without rising young stars, it is hard for teams to improve.

4. Unity. The team plays together, obviously this has something to do with the combination of good coaching and respect for veterans.

5. Positive Outlook. The team has improved from being a joke to being billed as a potential contender. This is somewhat inspiring.

The bottom line is that Carleton has improved and will most likely continue to improve.

AMS orientation positions are available!

Get involved and help welcome the class of 1998

"More details to come"

or call the
Campus Activities Commission
545-2725

IN A BAND? WANT A GIG?

STUDENT BAND NIGHTS ARE STARTING SOON if you are interested come down to the office in the JDUC and fill out an application form for information call 545-2731

549-5420
349 King St. East
(King & Princess)

549-5425
401 Princess St.
(Princess & Division
under Princess Towers)

Large Pizza
3 items, 2 cokes
Pick up or delivery
$9.99

Small Poutine
$2.99
Pickup only

LOOKING FOR THE GOOD STUFF?

DROP INTO SEPP'S SKI SHOP

WE'VE GOT IT

GEAR

VOLKL, LANGE MARKER, K2, ROSSIGNOL, NORDICA, KASTLE, SALOMON, ROLLERBLADE, MERRELL, AND MORE!

GOODS

PATAGONIA, SIERRA DESIGNS, NORTH FACE, OAKLEY, RAYBAN, COULOIR, SUNICE, CHLOROPHYLLE, ROYAL ROBINS, AND MORE!

SEPP'S SKI SHOP - 131 MONTREAL ST. DOWNTOWN
542-4558 OR 542-5224

P.S. THE SUMMER SKI SALE CONTINUES!

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1993

IS THE FINAL DATE TO ADD A FULL COURSE OR A FALL TERM HALF COURSE

(WITH PERMISSION OF INSTRUCTORS)

"Have you ever considered being in movies?" Bentley was taken by surprise. A woman had accosted him just as he was walking out of the Sidewalk Cafe and presented him with this question. Naturally, Bentley was flattered and proceeded to tell her of the time he was an extra on Polka Dot Door and how people often mistook him for Robert De Niro and Al Pacino (actually, it was Don Knotts and Marty Feldman but Bentley often twisted the truth). She explained that she was in Film Studies at Queen's and was in the process of taping a documentary on "lethargy" and wondered if he could be interviewed. Bentley gave a deep sigh and said he couldn't be bothered.

The Film Studies Department at Queen's University has long been in need of proper equipment in order to effectively provide students with the necessary means to further their education. The 16mm camera that the Department had previously been using was rendered obsolete over 15 years ago and has actually been placed in a museum in New York as one of the first 16mm cameras that could be physically lifted. The Queen's Challenge Campaign has earmarked the Film Studies Department for $53,400 to purchase a new 16mm camera. Yet another example of students helping students. Queen's Challenge money at work. Please.

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

The Investment Banking Division of Goldman, Sachs & Co.

Financial Analyst Program

cordially invites the students of QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY to an information session on careers in Investment Banking.

All undergraduates are welcome to attend.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1993

THE QUIET PUB
J.D.U.C.
5:30 p.m.

Entertainment

Cover band produces surface area

Volume
The Caribbean Club
BY SARAH ENGLISH
The Queen's Journal

Arriving at the Caribbean last Thursday, I was rather disappointed to note that Volume's name did not reflect their audience draw. Undaunted, however, I mingled with the sparse crowd and began to enjoy/dishke the volumetric experience.

After a well-done cover of Soundgarden, and an almost as well-done cover of Jane's Addiction's "Mountain Song", I quickly chatted with my neighbour who confirmed that yes, Volume is strictly a cover band. Woe is me. This was a bad scene, seeing as my impression of the band thus far had been poor. Volume have an interesting image; from their grungy, toque-ish thing wearing keyboard player to their Teva sandals, peace symbol T-shirt wearing vocalist (who, incidentally, kept reminding me of the vocalist of The Spin Doctors). In all, I must admit I felt rather discouraged at this point, wondering how I had been talked into coming to see a wannabe cover band.

They dived next into a cover of the classic Velvet Underground tune, "Heroin". The crowd (which was obviously more familiar with Volume than I) paid close attention, and no wonder. Kudos to the drummer, whose great rhythm drove the song into near perfection. Lulling slightly, then swelling, the band managed to recreate the oceanic spell of the original. My love/hate relationship with this band was now in full swing. "Honey Pie", originally a Beatles song, was done in new-school Pixies fashion with lots of "sonic masturbation" on the part of the band. Joey deVillia took this opportunity to punk out and play his keyboard with his forehead. The first set continued to bounce along, including "Alive" by Pearl Jam. Sidetracked momentarily later in the set, I returned my gaze to notice the bass player being totally punk rawk, sitting cross-legged on the stage while playing. This was cool, especially since he was wailing on that bass like there was no tomorrow. Totally impressive!

Brief intermission: I find out all kinds of interesting stuff, including that the reason he was sitting was that his bass strap broke. Wicked touch, nonetheless. Some jock behind me proclaims that now he knows where Volume gets their name. I also discovered from a friend who had learned his lesson in boy scouts that Joey deVillia's keyboard is the only instrument audible through a set of earplugs. Hm... Hm...

Volume soon returned to the extremely cramped "stage" with inroductions and a new bass strap. By now the Caribbean was packed full of student types, most slightly inebriated and ready to rock and roll. Things had really picked up.

The second set continued with even more energy, perhaps due to crowd support. Covers included a Red Hot Chili Peppers number and "Bullet in the Head" by Rage Against the Machine, a song which highlighted the musicianship of the band members. Particularly impressive was "Sober" by Tool, in part due to the vocals which completely matched the song's feel.

Volume are a pretty neat band. They play songs we all know and love and sing in the shower. This, however, is the problem I have with the band. Their sets felt like a who's-who compilation of the "alternative" music world, and this was somewhat disturbing. I had difficulty thinking of a token alternative band that Volume didn't cover (I finally found one - Ned's Atomic Dustbin). It was much like a condensed version of Lollapalooza 1, 2 and 3, except there were fewer freaks, and more jocks and Birkenstocks. Maybe this is a reflection of the fact that what was once alternative is now the mainstream, but would a band that covered Lisa Lougheed or John Secada have the same credibility?

I also had the feeling that the tunes covered were perhaps a little too close to the originals, and could have used some deviance from the regular, a little more variation.

Despite this petty peeve, I found myself enjoying the band. All of the members were great musicians. Best of all was the lack of attitude that the band expressed. One received the impression that the members were in it first because they loved the music and loved to play, and this made all the difference. Instead of being just a band, they were a fun band, and that's what music is all about, isn't it?

The Volume poster reads, "You hate us... we hate you back". So I left hating?...loving?...confused.

Pumping up the volume with Joey (left) and Mike.

Alex Bewley

Bla... Bla... Bla...

en français?
à Kingston?
POURQUOI PAS ?
au
Centre français de Queen's
96 rue Albert
Kingston, K7L 3V2
545-2534

Heures du Bla... Bla...
Les lundis, mardis, mercredis et jeudis de 13h à 17h

Cours de français
Accent mis sur la conversation.
Petits groupes

Ciné-club
Tous les derniers mercredis du mois du mois de septembre à avril
Dupuis Hall, 19h. Entrée libre

Table française
Tous les mercredis à la cafétéria
Ban Rich à partir de 17h

Voyage à Québec
Lors du carnaval d'hiver

BIENVENUE À TOUS!

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES SEMINAR SERIES

Organized under the auspices of Queen's Environmental Network

A forum for discussing presentations by specialists in various environmental topics. All member of the community are welcome to attend.

The series has been partly supported by the Principal's development Fund and also by the School of Urban and Regional Planning.

Special public event partly sponsored by the Queen's Environmental Network:
September 28, 2:30-4:30, Dunning Auditorium
"A New Kind of Sharing"
a short talk by Arthur J. Hanson, President and C.E.O. International Institute for Sustainable Development (Ottawa)
Two local panelists will also give short presentations which will be followed by an open discussion:
Prof. John Small (Biology, Queen's)
Mayor Helen Cooper (Kingston)

Schedule - Schedule (to 1993)

- October 12 - "Cleaning Up the Canadian Arctic: Setting Environmental Criteria and Protocol for the 80/85 Line" Professor John Poland (Ottawa)
- October 26 - "The Sustainable Biosphere Project" (N.D.S. & Thursday) Richard Harner, Associate Director Sustainable Biosphere Initiative (Washington)
- November 9 - "Climate Change and Ecosystems" Professor Harry McGeachy (Queen's)
- November 23 - "Controlling Stresses in Wildlife: Habitat Control in Ontario" Professor R. Tiedler (Queen's)
- December 7 - "Classical and Post-classical Environments of Canada: the Sedimentary Record in Lakes and Seas" Professor A. Gilbert (Queen's)
- January 11 - "Soils & the Environment" Professor C. E. Sutherland (Queen's)
- January 25 - "The Junction of the Toronto Lead Abatement Project" Professor Peter Langlois (Community Health & Epidemiology (Queen's))
- February 10 - "Environmental Economics of Water Planet Earth" Professor Sarah Hudson (S.B. & Thursday)
- March 8 - "Natural and Engineered Bio-systems for Water Quality Control: the Chateauguy Town Centre Stone Pond Project" Professor Brian Anderson (Civil Engineering (Queen's))
- March 22 - "Urban Sprawl" Professor Moh-Lu Leung (Urban & Regional Planning (Queen's))

Striking Distance
Directed by Rowdy Herrington
Calarauq Cineplex
BY CHRIS ZABEL
The Queen's Journal

"They shouldn't have put him in the water if they didn't want him to make waves," quips the poster of this new Bruce Willis action outing. Unfortunately, "They shouldn't have put him in a movie if he'd have spent his time more profitably at home picking up the place for Demi and the kids," seemed an appropriate response on my way out.

Willis plays Thomas Hardy (not to be confused with the author of The Return of the Native - forgive me, every critic is allowed to make this lame joke), a Pittsburgh homicide detective who is put in the unhappy position of having to testify against his partner in a police brutality case, and quickly loses all of his friends (after all, no one likes a fink).

Next, he is kicked out of homicide for making waves (as promised), when the mysterious Polish Hill (a.k.a. Perogie Peak) serial killer case, which he was investigating, is suspiciously swept under the carpet.

We catch up with (slide down to?) Tom two years later, when he has become an alcoholic, perfected a technique for keeping a day's stubble on his chin, and been transferred into a job with the River Rescue branch of the force (in that order? Who knows...).

The plot then thickens enough to hold a spoon upright (but not enough to hold the attention of a high school graduate), when, in response to a "111" (does anyone in Hollywood really expect Joe Bag-o-Popcorn to be familiar with police jargon, or do they think that sounds cool?), Hardy finds a body. Not only has the victim been murdered in the same fashion as those by the serial killer, but it's a body that Tom, years ago, knew in the Biblical sense. Yes, the killer is still with us and has decided to worsen the lot o' poor Tom, not only by killing his old girlfriends, but also by going that extra yard to throw a frame in front of Tom's grouchy puss.

Spitting distance

Unlike in Moonlighting or Die Hard, in this movie Willis only depresses. The script does its best to make him come off all sympathetic and sensitive like: he's not afraid to shed a few of the old salties over his father's body bag, he's comfortable enough with his own sexuality to hug a man, and he even has a cat named Bob (no doubt named after Fosse, or some other arts figure).

These efforts, however, rather clash with his chain smoking, his Jim Beam bottle decor, and his steady flow of unfunny one-liners (sample: "I thought you quit smoking." "Gum didn't work."). This isn't funny. Nowhere to be found is the scintillating wit that made the Die Hard movies so memorable.

Willis answers traditional set-up lines with sandpaper snarls that might pass as hard-core tough if he were Clint Eastwood. But he isn't, and his boyish face (if not hairline) should relegate him to funny guy roles. By the end of the movie, even yet another "Yippie Kie-Eh, Motherfucker" would have been welcome. None of the characters in the movie like this guy and no one in the audience appeared to take issue with this judgment. If you want to see bitter alcoholics, it's cheaper and easier to hang around Princess and Division. Aside from the taut set of pees he sports in a convenient ripped shirt scene, Willis seems like serious pasture bait.

It would be nice if I could prefer Sarah Jessica Parker, who plays Willis's partner in the River Rescue division, as the bright spot in this dreary film, but she, too, sinks under the weight of its sludge. The excessively bubbly disposition that distinguished her in L.A. Story (and somewhat in Honey-moon in Vegas) is replaced with a hesitant optimistic outlook and the same hairdo that my mom had in the 1960's. Even her shorts, cropped by the producers to half the length of those worn by other women on the force, fail to arouse interest.

Also present in Striking Distance is Dennis Farina (Midnight Run, the great, short-lived TV series Crime Story). Not surprisingly, he plays the captain of the force, who also happens to be Willis's wise Uncle Nick. Although Farina's career is in the doldrums, it was still good to see him.

If blame must be laid for this stinker, one could start with Silence of the Lambs. The serial killer movie sub-genre unquestionably reached its peak with Hannibal the Cannibal, and if we lived in a perfect world, opportunistic writers would have quietly skulked off to plunder another social tragedy.

Bruce should stick to rehashing Die Hard if he needs money or an excuse to get out of the house (or he should at least rent The Player and watch that last scene enough times to figure out that we're going to need at least a glimmer of irony from now on). Sarah Jessica Parker alone will not be scared by this sea monster - it seems she still has an interesting future ahead of her. If you're a die hard Willis fan (arf arf), head to the video store and avoid this bottom dweller.

Masala adds spice to a double shot of Bourbon

The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir with Masala AJ's Hanger
BY CINDY PLATTEN
The Queen's Journal

If rock n' roll was on your brain Friday night, then A.J.'s was the place to be. The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir was the main attraction, but Masala kicked off the Friday night partying.

Masala came on at 9:30 to a crowd which was already rowdy and boisterous. This funky rock band opened their set with their own rendition of Bob Marley's "I Shot the Sheriff", which had dancers scrambling to the floor.

The band got right into their lively music, which was no small feat considering the fact that their lead singer, Wanda Rose, quit the band five days earlier. Guitarist Samantha Stevens, filled in nicely for Rose and supporting her were Adam Hodge (bass), Mitch Marshall (rhythm guitar), and Cam Giroux (drummer). Because of Rose's resignation, the band also had to write new songs to add to their regular songs.

Other numbers included a funky instrumental piece and a song that Stevens wrote just a week ago. It was the first song she has ever written, affectionately called "Sam's Song", and was one of the best received songs of the evening. Further selections included "Voodoo", "My Baby Says She's Going to Leave Me", and "Up for the Down Stroke". All of these songs contained a strong rock and blues beat to which Marshall charged up the crowd with his electric guitar wailing.

What also made this group a fun band was their unique stage presence. Stevens sported the sixties-ish look with her flower shirt and crew-cut hairstyle, while Hodge wore his hair long and held back off his face with a funky head band. Marshall, on the other hand, gyrated around the stage with a glittery, silver shirt which might have looked better on anyone else at a discotheque. Oddly enough, it looked right at home on the enthusiastic guitar player.

The group, whose influences run from jazz to hard rock, plan to keep travelling and hope to cut their first album. Unfortunately, Cam Giroux is leaving the band, but his departure is not met with hostility or hardships. The three remaining members plan

Kate Fenner pours out the bourbon at AJ's.

Sheldon Bradshaw

to scout around for a new drummer and search for a new name for the group. Whatever their name is, Masala was an excellent opener for The Bourbon Tabernacle Choir.

There is only one word that can really describe BTC: a w e s o m e . While Masala charged up the crowd, BTC definitely took them up to a fevered pitch which lasted for almost three hours. The eight person group kicked off their first set with a rockin' tune called "Grow". The dance floor, which was already jam-packed, got even more crowded while dancing to the gospel/soul songs like "Make Amends", "Somebody Deliver Me", and "Valentine". Lead singers Dave Wall and Kate Fenner blasted out the songs with such high packed energy that every one in the room could feel it and returned the energy two-fold.

The band got the biggest cheer of the night when Chris Brown claimed to be the Pope's illegitimate son. Brown also used little breaks in the band's playing to stress the importance of voting carefully. However, the evening wasn't all politics, as songs like "Worms" and "One More Time" were churned out with great relish, with Wall playing sax and Brown switching to the trombone.

The band, whose influences include James Brown, Van Morrison and The Band, came on at 10:30 and played energetically until almost 1:30 with only a short break in between. For the encore, BTC played two songs (one of which was called "We Can't Wait Any Longer") to a very appreciative audience.

The Bourbon's latest album is Superior Crackling Hen and is about a year old. BTC, whose members have been playing together since they were fifteen years old, plan to do an Eastern tour, cut a new album and then "park it for a while." A good time was had by all on Friday night, which left no doubt in my mind that BTC will be welcomed back to Kingston with enthusiasm and a case of Wild Turkey.

Voting's now in easy reach

If you are a Canadian citizen who will be 18 years of age or older on Election Day, you have the right to vote. But to exercise that right, your name must appear on the voters list.

The recently amended Canada Elections Act makes life simpler. First, revision of the voters list has been extended to give more voters, like yourself, the opportunity to be registered.

Next, the Special Ballot has been added, so now there's a new way to have your say by mail or in person.

To learn more, pick up the Elections Canada leaflet available at your Student Association, Registrar's Office or campus bookstore. Or call the number below.

1 800 267-VOTE (8683)

The non-partisan agency responsible for the conduct of federal elections

Does the stiff want cappuccino?

Manhattan Murder Mystery Directed by Woody Allen
Catarauqui Cineplex
BY DARRYL WHETTER
The Queen's Journal

I do what I want, and they [the public] can take it or leave it—and eventually they can leave it.
—Woody Allen (Rolling Stone interview, September 16, 1993)

Currently being taken (or left) at the Catarauqui Cineplex is Manhattan Murder Mystery, Allen's twenty-fourth directorial credit. Murder (well, I couldn't abbreviate it to Manhattan now could I?) is Woody-light: pure, self-indulgent comedy without any moral or philosophical baggage. And to those more concerned with morality than comedy, back issues of People can still be scraped out of the bottoms of the bird cages they belong in. Take it or leave it.

So what's in a title, beyond remedial alliteration? Well, Allen does stuff his "Murder Mystery" with the requisite mysterious death(s) and even a car chase with the bumbler himself behind the wheel. What makes it a Manhattan murder mystery, at least in Allen's case, is that the majority of action takes place over coffee and cheesecake and three-quarters of the major characters work in publishing or writing.

Unlike earlier works such as Crimes and Misdemeanours or Shadows and Fog, in Murder Allen doesn't use the crime as a thematic coat check for broader moral conclusions and examinations. It's a murder mystery where one of the main culprits is saturated fats, and, as it meanders to the morgue, the sleuth work is full of chat about matrimonial insecurity and the decline of sex with age. In fact, if I were to venture a thematic cross-section of Allen's work, one contending interpretation would have to be "The Rise and Fall of Woody's Sperm Count."

In the face of such grim realities as diminishing virility, Allen confesses the need for escapism. "You can't really come face to face with reality too frequently or for too long a time because it'll wipe you out. It's too brutal; it's too terrible a thing." (RS interview) So he's ducking reality. Take it or leave it.

As has been heavily publicized, Murder is the (working) reunion of Woody and one-time leading lady/lover Diane Keaton. Keaton, not surprisingly, plays Carol, Woody's on-screen wife. Carol and Larry Lipton are a middle-aged couple facing not enough sex (trust me, they're even more fixated than I am), and too many foreboding indicators of marital dissatisfaction. Keaton illuminates her undecided character with a quirky, casual intensity; she delivers her jealous and criminal suspicions with a delightful air of flighty melodrama.

Alan Alda also makes a return to Woody World as Ted, the recently divorced kissing bandit with a type-writer, full of eyes and compliments for Carol. It's all right that he hits on his best friend's wife, because he always wears nice sweaters and has a superb wine palate. Alda effortlessly uses his mature screen presence and velour vocals to juggle between flirtatious wanna-be detective and ethically challenged amigo.

As Larry, Allen himself flushes out the comic characterisation of Murder, playing the perhaps overdone combination of caustic wit and harmless ineptitude. The wit isn't as sparkling as last year's Husbands and Wives, although the Brooklyn comic certainly isn't running dry. Larry describes his wife's hysteria as "nothing Prozac and a sledge hammer couldn't cure." Allen's nth version of the paranoid clown has, however, become more than a little threadbare with age. His once-insightful homage to Charlie Chaplin is humbled by too much bumbling. At 57, Allen has inadequately evolved the whine of his protagonist clown from its earlier angst to one too many complaints over lost sleep.

Not merely four witty characters with cappuccino, Murder weaves its comedy with the threads of a slightly sneaky mystery plot. Allen tops this structural paranoia with long-time cinematographer Carlos di Prama's handi-cam work and a wonderful score direct from Michael's Pub (the real-life home of Allen's jazz band). Who else would set a late night car chase to "Sing, Sing, Sing"?

This comic synthesis of plot architecture and witty characterisation evokes a strong sense of Murder's progenic debt to predecessor's Shadows and Fog and Husbands and Wives. The marriage of these two techniques, like Larry and Carol's, is, unfortunately, an unhappy one. Allen alternately dips his film into these two sources without ever fully immersing it in either. The architecture of Shadows supported a meaningful thematic query, while the more focused examination of relationship insecurities in H & W expanded the humour into significant insight. In Murder, the failure of this technical marriage is epitomised in Allen's reliance on a tired ending device: the "pairing-off" of relevant couples and a few quick smiles before the credits role.

I wouldn't leave it, but it didn't take me very far.

THE FLAVOUR OF INDIA IN DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

Featuring Tandoori, Curry, and Vegetarian Dishes
25% OFF Regular menu items with this coupon
Buffet Regular $7.95
With Student ID $5.95
Please present your ID in advance
EXPIRES MAY 30, 1994

DOMINO THEATRE

370 King Street West

OPEN AUDITIONS CHARLEY'S AUNT

By Brandon Thomas
Directed by Richard Lindley
CAST REQUIRED: 3 men ages 40-70 yrs
3 men ages 19-24 yrs
1 woman age 45-65 yrs
3 women age 17-22 yrs
(Ability to speak with British Accent)
AUDITION DATES: Mon, October 4 & Tues., October 5/93
7:00 P.M. - 9:00 P.M.
in the Domino Theatre Lounge
PLAY DATES: December 2 - December 18/93
For more information call 374-3323

JJ's Bistro Bar Hi Boys and Girls!!

Today's Subject: Mathematics
When is the following true? $(\text{apple} + \text{egg}) < \text{egg}$
SOLUTION: When $\text{apple} = \text{great JJ's atmosphere}$ and $\text{egg} = \text{Poutine, Salads, Draft, Cappuccino, Steak and Chicken Sandwiches}$
409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

Interested in working on a newspaper, then come out! (FREE DONUTS)

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1993

IS THE LAST DATE TO DROP A FALL COURSE OR A FALL/WINTER COURSE AND OBTAIN A FULL REFUND

If you liked his AIR FARCE days, you'll LOVE

Dave Broadfoot's Comedy Crusade!

"Improbable Comic Delivery" Globe & Mail
"Hilarious, Charming & Clever" Toronto Star
"Audience Rocking With Continuous Laughter" Toronto Sun

GRAND THEATRE
Friday, Oct. 1, 8 pm
$17.50 (GST incl)
Reserved Seating Tickets at Grand Box Office: 530-2050
A Shantero Production

This Friday!

Beautiful visions

An unknown cinematographer shooting an unknown film—but it must be good if it's in Visions.

Visions of Light
Directed by Arnold Glassman, Todd McCarthy and Stuart Samuels
Princess Court Cinema
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

The film business is bifurcated, quite naturally, between its on-screen and off-screen realms. The movies make stars of on-screen performers at an almost alarming rate—even the cynical designation "flavour of the month" doesn't seem to do the machine justice these days. Inversely, the off-screen participants remain nearly wholly anonymous. Admittedly, a select cachet of directors (most often auteurs as opposed to hired guns) enjoy international reputations and there are a dedicated group of fans who may be counted on to see each new film by Allen, Scorsese, Coppola, or the like. But this is clearly not the case with the majority of films, particularly in the mainstream. Have crowds been flocking to see The Fugitive because it's the latest work by director Andrew Davis? Of course not. Harrison Ford is, understandably, the draw.

Let us not, however, shed any tears for neglected directors, as they are superstars compared to the rest of the technical professionals who are responsible for making films. Indeed, the typical audience member's curiosity about the end credits leaps directly from the cast members to the truly arcane support personnel, such as the ever-popular "gaffer" and "best boy". The superb documentary Visions of Light seeks to rectify this sin of omission by putting a spotlight on a group of talented artists heretofore shamefully neglected: cinematographers.

Who can deny that The Last Emperor and Manhattan are films that look simply wonderful? Yet who, outside of a small clutch of film critics, students and buffs, can identify their cinematographers (a.k.a. directors of photography)? Instead, we attribute the respective look of the films to Bertolucci and Allen, not Vittorio Storaro and Gordon Willis. Visions of Light decisively redresses this anomaly in simple fashion: it sits a number of the world's leading cinematographers in front of a camera (for a change), lets them talk about their work on some of the finest films in memory, and shows excerpts to illustrate what they're talking about. The documentary features films representing the entire history of the medium, from Birth of a Nation (1915) to Goodfellas (1990). The result is ninety-minutes of pure cinematic bliss which promises something for everyone even remotely interested in the craft of film-making.

A who's who of cinematography ensues, and the true sense of community is apparent among this group (no doubt attributable in part to the fact that they've all been uniformly neglected). A genuine sense of appreciation for their colleagues' and deceased predecessors' work permeates the comments of every interview subject. Thus the viewer leaves with a sense of appreciation for the work of late greats and groundbreakers, such as Billy Blitzer (who worked with D.W. Griffiths) and Gregg Toland (largely responsible for the famous "deep focus" shooting in Citizen Kane).

The cinematographers' sense of history does not make this a mere exercise in nostalgia; indeed, to suggest so would be to ignore the film's central thrust: that cinematography is an art of continual advancement. Under this pretext, a wide variety of contemporary films sure to be familiar to even the most casual movie-goer are showcased: Lazlo Kovacs on Easy Rider, William Fraker on Rosemary's Baby, Gordon Willis on The Godfather, Nestor Almendros on Days of Heaven, Vittorio Storaro on Apocalypse Now, and Michael Chapman on Taxi Driver and Raging Bull.

This contention is buttressed by the film's inclusion of young, rising cinematographers, most notably Ernest Dickerson, already renowned for his work on all of Spike Lee's films (which helped Dickerson make an early jump to directing with his 1991 film Juice).

One of the best revelations of the film is that some of the most acclaimed works of cinematography have been entirely accidental. Gordon Willis confesses that, in hindsight, he believes he underlit Brando in The Godfather, while Conrad Hall describes how the technique of flaring was initially considered an unacceptable mistake on the part of the cinematographer. Anecdotes like these offer an unrivalled insight into the art of film-making.

The one weakness of Visions of Light is its almost total focus on American films and cinematographers. Admittedly, European luminaries like Almendros, Sven Nykvist and Storaro feature prominently, but only in terms of their work on American films. Indeed, Bertolucci's The Conformist and Truffaut's Jules and Jim are virtually the only foreign elements in the film.

This shortcoming may be attributable to the fact that the film is an American co-production, with one of the interested bodies being the American Film Institute (although with a Japanese broadcaster acting as co-producer, one would have thought some clips from Kurosawa's body of work would have been mandated). Furthermore, given the distribution barriers facing any documentary film, and the repeatedly demonstrated antipathy of North Americans to subtleties, it is not entirely surprising that the producers opted to cover only the domestic front. This remains, nevertheless, something of a pity.

Ranting and raving

Alph 5
Grant Hall
BY CATHERINE LIPA
The Queen's Journal

Whoever said that the rave scene is dead was obviously misinformed. On Saturday night, rave was alive, albeit slightly ill, at Kingston's fifth and supposedly largest rave, Alph 5. Held at Grant Hall, Alph 5 was organized by a group of Queen's students under the name of "n-space productions."

For the masses who still don't know what a rave is, the phenomenon is basically a huge dance party that lasts for hours. Originating in England in the 1980's, hundreds went to raves to dance and do drugs (particularly Ecstasy, "E"), to dance, dance, do E, etc. Recently, raves crossed the Atlantic and have since been poorly imitated by both Americans and Canadians. Here, raves are not underground, nor are they renowned for E consumption.

Alph 5 featured seven disc jockeys, including CFRC's Billy D, D.J. Ozone, and New Brunswick's D.J. Sascha. However, for someone not versed in techno, the first hours of music would have seemed like one continuous song of drum machines, bleeps, and other neat synth tricks.

Starting at 10 pm, the dance-floor resembled a high school gym—small groups of ravers huddled in the extremes of the room. Perhaps this behaviour had something to do with the fact that a large portion of the early ravers were, at most, sixteen years old. As the attendance swelled, however, so did the dance-floor.

The two rooms in use were the "Red Room" and the "Blue Room." Supposedly corresponding to the atmosphere, the main Red Room housed the dance-floor, while the Blue Room was the cool-down, chill-out room. On the Red Room stage, the djs did their stuff while images were projected onto two large screens placed on either side of the front of the stage. One screen continuously showed a National Film Board short, upside down, while the other showed an array of nifty visuals.

Strobe lights were the choice lighting of the night, supplemented by red and green criss-crossing lights which shone onto a foot-high platform placed in the middle of the floor. The platform was soon taken over by ravers wanting to be seen—mainly girls wearing little in the way of clothing.

The Blue Room, in the depths of Grant Hall, did not quite achieve the trance atmosphere normally associated with cool-down rooms. Instead, evidence of a low budget was everywhere, especially in the vertically-cur drop sheets that hung from the ceiling. Also absent were comfortable chairs with fluffy pillows (there was one sofa amongst a plethora of rock-hard Grant event chairs) and true trance music.

All in all, Alph 5 made for an enjoyable night/early morning of dancing and people watching, but paled in comparison to raves in Toronto and Montreal, not to mention England. But, for all the hardcore ravers out there, there will surely be another K-Town rave in the not-so-distant future. Until then, rave on!

Striking a pose at Grant Hall. Chris Pitt

A piece o' Garth

Garth Brooks
In Pieces
Liberty
BY JASON KENNEY
The Queen's Journal

The latest offering from Garth Brooks—if you're counting that's three in the last three years—brings plenty of up-tempo beat and lots of down home country sound. It's the up-tempo songs that have me wearing out the remote control buttons.

The first track, "Standing Outside the Fire", begins with a strong sound and Garth comes in hitting one high note after another. If you listen to country you know the sound I'm speaking of (hey, I've come to appreciate it). The song then goes through the use of harmonica, fiddle, violin, piano and probably most of the instruments available. I'm picking this one as one of the first two he releases to Country Music Television (CMT).

The sixth track "Ain't Going Down 'Til the Sun Comes Up" has great movement, but it may be too much for part-time Nashville listeners. But give it a second try and the head-shaking beat might just hook you.

The third track "American Honky-Tonk Bar Association" is more down home country than even the title suggests. Rock is still in my heart, and seeing honky-tonk in the title would make me sceptical even if the song didn't sound like George Jones (and he does).

The last track, "The Cowboy Song", gives you the feeling Billy Crystal must have had in City Slickers for this one, he should get Jack Palance to sign the dotted line. No one could see City Slickers and not have him come to mind.

I listened to Garth Brooks' two previous album releases and found this one to continue his "New Country" sound. Nothing stands out in your face, but it sure feels good to listen to.

New release is pure Nirvana

Nirvana
In Utero
Geffen/MCA
BY ROB FURSE
The Queen's Journal

After enduring the cultural wasteland of Ronald Reagan, George Bush and MTV in the Eighties, leagues of disaffected youth coalesced in the Nineties to reject the viscid makings of their cultural heritage. Yet as the Eighties were shed, it became apparent there was even less to replace what little had been lost. Paralyzed by a general malaise, we are labelled as Slackers, a lost Generation X—not only are we unsatisfied, we do not even know what we want.

Rap was the first music to address the immediate needs of youth. Sprung from the desolate jaws of the inner city, bands such as Grand Master Flash and the Furious Five and Run D.M.C. gave a voice to society's most oppressed as they created a vitriolic brew of angry sounds and lyrics.

Yet even as rap reflected the problems of the city, there was still the looming gap left by punk's premature demise. The middle class youth of the suburbs were still searching for the new Clash. Bypassing the trivial musings of pop music fodder one was left with a fragmented and incomplete music scene. Husker Du or Metallica partially satisfied, yet no band could quite find it in themselves to capture and embody the full extent and complexity of our diseased culture.

Much more a product of, than reaction to its environment, Nirvana was formed in 1987 by one alienated youth—Kurt Cobain. Screaming, shouting and clawing, Nirvana was the antithesis of the well promoted and produced band. They were also exactly what the public needed. After the success of their independent album Bleach, recorded for only $606.17, the band found themselves signed to Geffen and in the studio recording Nevermind.

At this point the collective conscious kicks in as we all recall the first CD's lead single, "Smells Like Teen Spirit", the anthem of 1991 and indeed of a generation. The whole world sang along as Kurt Cobain took us on a tour of his retarded adolescent development. Incorporating cleverly bitter and revealing lyrics with the guitar sound that has become known as grunge, Nirvana hit a nerve and hit the big time.

However, what Nirvana discovered in their meteoric ascent in popularity was that the big time hit back.

With In Utero Kurt Cobain exorcises the adolescent demons that once plagued him and turns his focus to pitfalls of fame. It is obvious Kurt Cobain is already tired of being a commercial entity worthy of appropriation. In the first lines of "Serve the Servants" which opens the CD he announces, Teenage angst has paid off well but now I'm bored and old.

These themes continue throughout the CD. In "Rape Me", Cobain exhorts the listener to hate me...taste me. This irony is imbued with a double edge by the use of a chord progression that mimics that of "Smells Like Teen Spirit", the song that started this whole process. Cobain's mixed feelings are capped off in the song's twisted last lines: Appreciate your concern! 'at I'll always stink and burn. As much as In Utero is a paean to rejected ideals, it is also clearly a transitional point in Nirvana's development. Rife with images and references to birth, this release hinges on this theme renewal and decay. The back cover features grisly images of fetuses in various stages of development, but it is not only Nirvana that is In Utero, but our entire generation. Now that our generation has been identified and placated by Nevermind, we are left with the question of what to do with our future.

In "Dumb" Cobain struggles with his future and the acceptance of his success, as he equates happiness to dumbness: ...I'm having fun! I think I'm dumb. Later he admits his predicament in "All Apologies": What else should I be! All apologies.

This frustration is equally reflected by the music as it is by the lyrics. The printed lyrics for "Tourette's" consist solely of Cafk, Tish, Sips, which anyone with a little anagram experience can figure out are not part of a high-brow vocabulary.

One factor that sets this CD apart from Nevermind is the cohesion between lyrics and music. While Nevermind was a creation of pure pop genius, its radio friendly

What ultimately distinguishes In Utero from any other past efforts is its hope for the future. Cobain subverts the paradoxes that confine him through his use of dialectics. Cobain is a natural heir to John Lennon; the Natural King of Illiteracy. It is only when the web of dialectic wordplay is unraveled that a cohesive theme begins to emerge. What else could I write! I don't have the right. Or, Hate/Haigh.

The CD ends with "All Apologies" a song with a great single note guitar riff. With lines such as, I wish I was like you/Easily amused the song encapsulates both the entire CD's anger at present-day realities, but by ending with the line, All in all is all we all are, Cobain also proffers a hope for the future.

Although this is not a "Shiny Happy People" album by any means, Kurt Cobain has done more than any feel-good album could ever do just by addressing the problems, hopes and fears of our future. To expect more would be really too much, but of course there is always the next release...

chorsus often belied the true thrust of the songs. On In Utero Cobain is more than willing to sacrifice the commercial viability of his songs in order to match the power of his vision. To this end "Senseless Apprenticeship" and "Radio Friendly Unit Shifter" come to mind as singularly uncommercial songs that reflect Cobain's ennui with top forty hits. The songs that do have commer-

Cooking up pop in the Lab

Transient Random Noise Bursts With Announcements
Duophonic Ultra High Frequency/Elektra
BY JOHN POLLARD
The Queen's Journal

"Artful pop music" is a contradiction in terms. For when you discuss the latest in hot, rocking sounds, indie, corporate, or otherwise, you're talking about crap—useless fluff that owes more to fashion than to real, artistic discourse. Funny then that Stereolab, England's enigmatic purveyors of melody, noise, and self-described "space-age bachelor pad music" should seem so cultured, so adroit, so...artful.

Musically, the 'Lab are popsters in the purest sense: their trade is all aesthetic, no substance. Nevertheless, there's something to the band, a savvy and a humour that lends them weight and import. They've spent years trading pop's traditions and pretensions for objectivity, a heartfelt disinterest in modern music that hints of a genuine artistic sensibility. Put simply, when Stereolab write a pop song, it's only a pop song.

Not to suggest that this is an inconsequential or otherwise poor album. Quite the contrary, Transient Random Noise Bursts With Announcements, though it sounds frightening, is as kind and as good a collection of songs as your likely to find these days. True, this, the band's fourth long-player, is given to fits of, well, transient random noise bursts with announcements. But, for the most part, it swims easily on Stereolab's typically expansive chord structures and Laetitia Sadier's crystalline voice. "Tone Burst", "Our Trinitone Blast", "Crest", and "Loek-Groove Lullaby" are especially satisfying in their guitar-driven ennui.

Transient Noise Bursts With Announcements is a languorous thing. Loose, jangly, coy to an extreme, it's difficult to say why it succeeds.

No to suggest that this is an

TRANSIENT-RANDOM-NOISE BURSTS WITH ANNOUNCEMENTS

STEREOLAB

it's certainly not the musicianship, and, in these times of heavy experimentation, hyper-eclecticism, ambience, and white noise, it's not Stereolab's ingenuity either.

No, the 'Lab differ because, unlike the egotist, failed-artist musos currently infecting the "alternative" scene, they have half an idea—distracted pop for pop's own sake. Normally, that wouldn't get you anything. Today, in new music, it'll get you more than most, including my respect.

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	CLUBS	STAGES	GALLERIES
CATARACQU CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442	AI'S HANGAR Wednesday The Gaudi Birds (formerly Shine)	THE TOUCAN Wednesday Arthritis Society Benefit Shine	VISIONS OF LIGHT 9:10
Sleepless in Seattle 7:25 Age of Innocence 7:00 9:15 Jurassic Park 7:05 9:30 The Good Son 7:10 9:10 Manhattan Murder Mystery 7:15 9:35 Striking Distance 7:30 9:45 The Real McCoy 7:40	THE WELLINGTON Tuesday Weeping Tile	THE COCAMA Thursday Spica and Company	AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE Until 21 November
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395	THE DUKE OF KINGSTON (aka Duke's) Thursday Bora Laskins	THE GRAD CLUB Thursday Electricity	THE ART OF CHRISTIANE PILLAG (1936-1972) Until 31 October
The Program 6:45 9:25 Searching For Bobby Fischer 7:10 9:15 True Romance 6:50 9:35 Airborne 7:00 The Fugitive 6:55 9:30 The Man Without a Face 9:10 The Firm 6:30 9:20 Undercover Blues 7:15 9:15	PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-FILM	VISIONS OF LIGHT 7:00 Much Ado About Nothing 9:00 Secret Nation 7:00 Visions of Light 9:10 Secret Nation 7:00	SPIRIT ARCHIVES An installation by Julia Winthrow

WHAT'S UP?

Pick-up What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar

Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

September.....October.....

Tuesday

- ◆ The Community Living Program is holding an Information Night at 4:30pm in the John Orr Room, JDUC, 3rd Floor. Come to find out how you can volunteer with a child or adult with a developmental disability.
- ◆ USSQ Jackets (Nursing, Rehab, Phys.Ed., and Con-Ed) fitting and ordering. 5pm to 8pm, Main Victoria Hall Common Room. Fittings will also be held Wednesday, Sept. 29th, same place and time. For more information, call 545-6850.
- ◆ A Memorial Observance for Dr. Catherine Brown will be held at 5:15pm in Grant Hall.

Wednesday

- ◆ 1st AMS Coffee House! 8pm to 11pm at the Lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Featuring: In Love With Ourselves and Spoon River (spinoff of the Septembers). Come out and have a great time.
- ◆ The Queen's French Center presents Uranus by Claude Berri with Gerard Depardieu and Jean-Pierre Marielle. 7pm at Dupuis Hall. Admission is free. For more information, call 545-2534.
- ◆ The Queen's University Muslim Students' Association is having its first QUMSA Night at 7pm in the Intemational Center, JDUC, Insha Allah. Hope to see you there!
- ◆ BLOOD DONOR CLINIC, 2pm to 8pm, Lower Victoria Hall. Free food and drinks, and free taxi service between 3pm and 6pm. Please bring 2 pieces of ID.
- ◆ AMS Media Schmooze at the QP! 5:30pm to 8:30pm. Be There!

Thursday

- ◆ BLOOD DONOR CLINIC. 2pm to 8pm, Lower Victoria Hall. Free food and drinks, and free taxi service between 3pm and 6pm. Please bring 2 pieces of ID.
- ◆ The Dean of Women, Dr. Pamela Dickey Young, invites members of the Queen's Community to drop in to the office between 2pm and 4pm for refreshments and a time to acquaint or reacquaint yourself with Dr. Young and with the functions of the Dean of Women's Office. The office is located at D217, Mackintosh-Corry Hall.
- ◆ ARTSCI '97 - Come out to Alfie's tonight for the First Annual SAFE SEX SMOKER. Doors open at 6pm. Come early for free condoms and other treats.

Friday

- ◆ Today is the last day to Opt-Out of your Green Shield Health Plan or your opt-outable Student-Interest Fees. Go to the AMS Office, located in the Lower level of the JDUC between 9am and 4:30pm. Bring proof of your current extended health plan coverage, your Queen's student card and the Green Shield Health Plan Card that you received at registration.

Saturday

- ◆ The Students for Action Committee will be holding a Multicultural Conference in Dunning Hall at 6:30pm. All are invited to attend. Admission is free. Various ethnic foods will be served.
- ◆ Making the Link, a day long conference linking eating disorders and sexual assault featuring Ellen Bass, co-author of The Courage to Heal. 8:30am - 4:30pm at St. Lawrence College. For further information, please contact the Kingston District Community Information Center at 542-1001.

ASUS Elections

- ◆ Nominations for the following positions will remain open until Wednesday, Sept. 29th, 5pm.
 - 1) Arts/Sci '97 Year Society President
 - Vice-President
 - Secretary (2 positions)
 - Publicity Officers (2 positions)
 - BEWS Rep (2 positions)
 - WIC Rep (2 positions)
- 2) First Year ASUS Rep to the AMS
- 3) 1 - Year Senator

For further information, or to pick-up or drop off nomination forms, please contact Stephanie Lane or Jason Markwell at 545-6278, or drop by the CORE at 183 University Ave.

- ◆ Interested in publishing or gaining editorial experience? The ASUS Undergraduate Review is looking for enthusiastic students to sit on its editorial board. Help promote the success of fellow students. Applications and more information are available at the CORE. Deadline is October 4th.

- ◆ Interested in working with children? Take part in an educational program teaching kids bike safety. Great experience and references! Minimal time commitment. Pick up applications at the AMS Communications Office.

Upcoming Events

- ◆ AIDS Information Display, Tuesday, October 5th and Wednesday, October 6th. The Kingston AIDS Project will set up an information display during AIDS Awareness Week to answer questions and distribute educational materials. Cataragui Town Center from 9am to 4pm.
- ◆ Queen's Environmental Network presents "Cleaning Up the Canadian Arctic: Setting Environmental Criteria and Protocol for the DEWLine" with Professor John Poland (Queen's Chemistry). October 12th at the Policy Studies Building, Room 554. 8pm - 9:30pm.

Sunday

- ◆ FROM ALL WALKS OF LIFE. Confederation Park (Ontario St.). Registration: 8:30am. Sponsored by the Kingston AIDS Project in conjunction with the United Counties AIDS Project (UCAP), Dawn House and Gentle Spirit Metropolitan Community Church, Kingston. A 10km fundraising walk to benefit people living with HIV/AIDS.
- ◆ For more information, contact the Kingston AIDS Project, 545-3698.

MUSIC LESSONS Private or group. Piano, flute, guitar, theory, composition. Experienced, qualified instructors. Reasonable rates. Located in beautiful downtown studio. Call 530-2146.

THE SOAPBERRY SHOP has 98% pure Aloe Vera gel. Provides quick relief for burns, insect bites, chopped skin and shaving irritations. Promotes healing and moisturizes. 545-1028. 122 Princess St.

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOFF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

HEALTHY EATING CONCERNS? Call the Confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon - Thurs 6 - 9. 545-6000 ext 4444 or leave a message.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money-back guarantee. Call MEDLAW SEMINARS at 531-9016.

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!!! Individuals and student organizations wanted to promote the hottest Spring Break destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013.

EXPAND YOUR HORIZONS at the Art of Cooking School: Bountiful Thanksgiving dinner, single's brunch, dinners in 20 minutes, wine tasting, dinner parties. 546-2880. Brochures: Kitchen Cargo, 57 Brock; pasta Genoa; Hind Quarter, Quattrocchi's.

WRITING YOUR FIRST UNIVERSITY ESSAY. Attend a talk on this subject by Douglas Babington of the Writing Centre at 7 p.m. this Wednesday, September 29th, in Stirling Hall, Theatre B.

CREATIVE WRITERS AND JOURNALISTS. Discuss your writing with Douglas Fetherling, the Queen's Writer-in-Residence. For an appointment, call the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

ARE YOU A WICCAN? Willing to share in fellowship, spiritual growth and study? Contact The Stone Circle, c/o Chaplaincy Dept., Box 22, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V7 Attention: Aspen.

FOR SALE: 1983 Pontiac Parisienne Brougham. Good condition, big trunk, seats 6. Good car for moving or going home and back. Asking $1500 or best offer. Call 548-8537.

PARKING next to new library - $35 per week, small cars. Call 546-4797.

PARKING AVAILABLE Minutes from main campus, exclusive 24 hours/day use, security lighting. Please call Catherine at 548-1768 until 11 p.m. and keep trying.

WANTED: ROOMMATE Spacious downtown apartment, to share with one other and a dog. $375 per month, low PUC, lease. Call Kyla at 546-3044.

I NEED HOUSEMATES: Clean house, backyard, garage — $270 plus utilities! Call 541-1761!

LOST & FOUND

LOST: '96 Artsci jacket at Alfies last Thursday. Please call 547-6756, it's getting cold. Reward offered.

TO WHOEVER: Thanks for returning the keys that were in the pocket of the jacket you took on September 11th, however, I would also like the jacket back. Call 531-3213.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Winters coming! Please call 547-4106.

LOST: A silver ring, with diamond chips all around, somewhere on Princess, Barrie, Colborne or Queen St., on Tuesday September 21st. Extreme sentimental value!! Reward offered. Please call 547-5528.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Left in Dunning, after Tales by Gaels. Call 542-6870.

WANTED

DRUMMER NEEDED for Alternative band. Have already recorded. Call Steve at 547-1513.

W.A.G.G.S., B.P., Sangam, Smores, clovehitch, Barges... Mean anything to you? Needed: 2 spirited women willing to join 4 other happily over-committed Queen's students in leading our pack. If at all curious, please call Rachel at 531-3855, Moe at 545-9852 or Sue at 545-9516.

I NEED A RIDE!!! I'm going to Guelph for the Oct. 1 weekend! Call 531-3404 if you have wheels!

FOR SALE

TO THE J-TYPES: I spend way too much time in this house, but its because I love you all so much. Rob, I promise I will write faster. Ian, your poem is in the mail. Stan, no comments about my body, please. Sarah, I like chocolate donuts. Jeff, where's the plaid? Gooley, where are all our cd's? To all wannabe entertainment contribs, come in and be in our air-band!

TIBET IS NEAR! October 2 at

K.C.V.I., the Kyirong Choling Lama-sery will bring Tibetan music to Kingston. Check out Friday's Journal for more information (in the Features section).

DUFTON: The death of the Cordoba has shaken us greatly. We missed Bishop's Homecoming, and may never meet your special someone at Western. How did we cross a continent only to have the beast roll over while running a local errand? Your housemates wonder...

CHERRY: you are now immortalized... you are in print. You are S. You are T. You rock the discotheque. You light my strobe. KBUH. Puff.

HEY JEFF ELDER! See me, Feel me, Touch me. Can't wait to kick your engineering butt in tennis again soon. Don't lie, Jeff, you know we were watching television... Love and kisses, B.

LORI: This is a command from your fellow news sleuths — GET WELL SOON! We need your insight, your zeal, your professionalism, but most of all we desperately need a budget story. Brad's tired of cold-calling, Jeff's doing Woolco announcements over the paging system and Brock is organizing the living hell out of the news desk. We're that bored without you. Come home soon.

NICK "SO I SEE" CEAUCES-CAU! Your legendary, perverse antics have now landed you in the pages of a newspaper. Perhaps not the "Forum" you would have hoped for, but nonetheless I hope you appreciate the press coverage. For the sake of your not-so-secret identity, I must be cryptic, but let's just say your stories of conquest have travelled far and wide. In admiration, DeLa Roche.

POOCH-A-KININI: How're ya' doing stranger? I miss staying up 'till 6:00 am with you and getting to look at your "crazy hair" 'till 5:00 pm. Let's do dinner. By the way, you're the sexiest. ME.

INICKOLAI! Ich bin ein schwinehund! Du hast der grosset hare der weld... Chus!

FROOTS: Ask and ye shall receive! Soon I will let you know about your pigout session. Till then, keep bitching!

D: Hereyago baby... as ordered, alittle something just for you. Love ya always, forever and ever (so don't forget!). Mish.

PERSONALS

Back Page

CELEBRITY Recipes

Queen's: land of swimming pools, movie stars & students.

This week's recipe is presented by Peter "Muskrat" Sutton and he gives it the lovely, if not strikingly obvious name of

Rotini with Parsley, Basil, Tomatoes and Parmesan Cheese

- 1/2 pound rotini
- 2 tbsp vegetable oil/margarine
- 4 green onions, chopped
- 3 tomatoes, coarsely chopped
- 1 cup fresh parsley, coarsely chopped
- 1/4 cup fresh basil, coarsely chopped (or 1 tsp dried basil)
- 1/2 cup grated parmesan cheese
- salt and pepper to taste

Cook the rotini al dente (Italian for "with teeth"; don't cook it all the way - make sure it's still firm) and drain it. In the oil, heat the onions, tomato and garlic for 2 to 3 minutes. Stir in the rotini, parsley, basil and cheese. This dish serves 4 as a main course and 6 as a side dish. Peter, who is a vegetarian, tells us that "you can add meat to the recipe, but yuck!"

Peter "Muskrat" Sutton is the Vice President (Society Affairs) of the Queen's Engineering Society. He's Engineering's "unknown activist" and has appeared almost naked in Golden Words too many times for his own damn good.

Former Journal Editorial Boards were not sympathetic to the cause. The editorial cartoon pictured above appeared in the Tuesday, September 22, 1987 issue. This was two years before the Gordon House Incident and the massacre at Ecole Polytechnique, when you still heard the line "I'm not a feminist, but..."

Skeletons in Our Closet
by Derek Walker and Joey deVillia
1987: Our Take on Take Back the Night

Commentaries on Take Back the Night, the annual North America-wide women's March which takes place this Saturday

Bridging the Gap by Derek Walker and Anne Yourt

Taking Back the Night

On October 2, many women from the Queen's and Kingston community will participate in the annual Take Back the Night march — a march which has become an important tradition for women in cities all over the continent. But especially for those just entering the community, the importance of this event may not be readily apparent.

The awful truth, however, is that time and time again it has been seen that such events are vital for reminding all of us, both men and women, about gender inequalities in our society. The Take Back the Night march symbolizes women's quest to live in a society where they can walk at night without fear... unfortunately a vision not reflected by today's reality.

In only the past few weeks — barely a month into school — this fact has been demonstrated with the assault of a female Queen's student in her home by a prowler.

Through the past decade, students coming to Queen's were greeted by slogans fastened to overpasses as far away as Cornwall warning mothers that their daughters would not be safe at Queen's. Only recently were such "traditional" orientation songs as Gang Bang banned from orientation events.

In 1989, there was the infamous Gordon House incident, where several young men gained national attention with their parading of the "No Means No" campaign. Taping signs to their windows stating "No Means Harder" and "No Means Te Me Up" and "No Means Harder" these assholes figured their little joke was funny.

"As for the feminists, I find it a little disheartening that a small vocal minority can twist things very minor, taken lightly by most, into international news," stated David Zuk, one of the nine, at the time of the incident. A month after Zuk's statements, a well-armed Marc Lepine walked into Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique. It became clear that Gordon House was a "very minor" symptom of a very major problem.

In 1989 a McGill student was gang-raped at a Zeta Psi fraternity party where she and her fellow women's rugby team players were supposedly being honoured. The case was dismissed due to lack of evidence (the woman was unconscious and frat-brats always stick together). On the day the case was dismissed, the Zeta Psi's threw a victory party.

In this atmosphere which is so hostile for women, so many of these horrors get buried. As a man with few female acquaintances, I'm alarmed at the number of stories I have heard:

- Of a woman who was brutally assaulted on a campus (not Queen's) and receiving no help or assistance from the administration who didn't want her to press charges, and from profs who figured that being raped was not traumatic enough to warrant some academic relief.
- Of another woman who was sexually assaulted by a housemate. Despite the fact it has taken her and will take her years to recover from the incident, there was no point to pressing charges because it would have been her word against his.
- Of a woman who was beaten and raped by an inmate on probation. He forced his way into her apartment.
- Of professors who sexually assault their students or harass them. This doesn't happen only in far away places, it happens at Queen's too.
- Of women who brought in complaints of being sexually harassed by an appointed member of the student government only to be ignored.

The stories come out, but they don't come out easily from under all the pain in suffering that these events precipitate. They are not news. They do not contain the official stamp of authority that news brings with it. But the fact remains that these events did happen, and for us to ignore them is perhaps the greatest travesty we can commit.

So if women cannot be safe at home, they cannot be safe on the streets, they cannot be safe from harassment or abuse at work or school, when can they be safe?

Many have called "Take Back the Night" marches as exclusionary — and they are exclusionary. Women must first be able to stand on their own, and feel safe on their own before they can really interact with men on an equal footing without fear. After centuries of being slotted as number two, after not being legally recognized as "persons" until a few decades ago, after being excluded from so many male-dominated functions, what harm can one night a year do?

Change may come, but only with compassion and understanding and with a recognition from men that there is a time to comfort and be close to women but there is also a time to give them the space they need.

Derek Walker is a mistler who respects his sisters.

A Woman's Perspective

As a woman, I don't care if there are people (male or female) who find events such as the Take Back the Night Demonstration exclusionary. You can argue with me about this and I will probably agree with you, but I'll make no apologies. This is a moment for women/wimmin/womyn to take a stand together. Yes, men do have to be a part of the solution to violence against women — yet this doesn't mean that their participation in this march is vital. Let me put it to you this way, there are also men who wear white ribbons to try and get laid.

There are also women who fail to appreciate the severity of certain issues. Although its seldom mentioned in discussions about the Gordon House incident, there were women who displayed counter signs reading phrases such as "NO means it's too small." Actions like this only serve to confuse issues even further, it adds to the acceptability of the initial signs and serves to trivialize the matter.

There is great dissent among feminists, other women and the women who are feminists but afraid to call themselves by the f-word... about where the direction of women's issues is headed. However, what stands at the forefront of all of this is the fact that women are not always (if ever) safe. This is true whether you're feminist or not, pro-choice or pro-life, rich or poor, atheist or believer, lesbian, bi, or straight. This event allows women to feel strength through unity and empowerment as a group. And that's something that has to happen before anything else can. As for apologies, talk to me when the Catholic Church and any of the others are prepared to apologize for excluding me and the other would-be she-popes...

Anne Yourt is not afraid to use the f-word... any f-word!

YOUR WAY RIGHT AWAY

$1.00 OFF HOMESTYLE BREAKFAST

INCLUDES:
 • 2 Eggs your way
 • Sausage or bacon
 • Tater'enders
 • Homestyle Toast
 • Coffee or juice

Valid during breakfast hours only. Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer.

EXPIRES Oct. 3, 1993

The Journal
Come out to our first meeting
tues. 7:30

QUEEN'S Journal

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
Specialists for the University Community
186 Princess Street, Kingston
(corner of Montreal & Princess)
549-3553

OUSA membership "crucial" to Queen's, AMS says

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Alma Mater Society OUSA Coordinator Miles Clark says the proposed 95-cent student interest fee is "absolutely crucial" to the long-term survival and effectiveness of the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance.

Queen's will be voting whether or not to pay an annual student fee to the two-year-old student lobby group in a referendum on Oct. 13 and 14.

"The AMS cannot sustain the long-term funding of OUSA through its budget," said AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed.

She went on to say that if Queen's were to say "no" to the OUSA student fee referendum, then "we'd have to go back to referendum" again to get the fee passed.

AMS OUSA Coordinator Linda Shin said that a "no" vote would still "not affect our membership" in OUSA.

"It is crucial that we're part of an organization," Pirmohamed said.

The AMS is working by its constitution to submit any increase in student fees to a referendum.

The proposed 95-cent student fee at Queen's will net just less than $12,000 for OUSA next year if the fee goes through, Pirmohamed said. She compared this amount to the $36,000 she said Queen's handed over annually to the Ontario Federation of Students when it was a member.

All of OUSA's member schools are to contribute the same amount of money per student to the organization.

Money to help fund OUSA during the past summer came from the AMS Academic Affairs Commission budget, Pirmohamed said, and amounted to $4,000.

She said the cash goes to help cover a "bare-bones administrative structure," and to pay OUSA's part-time lobbyist in Toronto, Titch Dharamsi. Pirmohamed said Dharamsi acts as a liaison between the student governments and Queen's Park, and is a former vice-president of the University of Toronto's student government.

Shin said she was confident that Queen's will vote in favour of OUSA. "It is misleading to believe that OUSA doesn't have widespread support at Queen's," she said.

Shin said 76 per cent of the student body voted to leave OUSA in 1992. "It was clear then that change was wanted," she said.

Shin added that membership in OUSA was unanimously approved by AMS Assembly in early 1993, and that the past two AMS executive teams have been decidedly pro-OUSA.

But both Shin and Pirmohamed conceded that the average student on campus probably doesn't have a clear idea of what OUSA is all about.

The AMS has taken steps to change that, though, Pirmohamed said, including a soon-to-be-installed OUSA info-line. The line will have an answering machine to give out OUSA information and take messages and questions from students.

Both Shin and Pirmohamed conceded that the average student on campus probably doesn't have a clear idea of what OUSA is all about.

The AMS has taken steps to change that, though, Pirmohamed said, including a soon-to-be-installed OUSA info-line. The line will have an answering machine to give out OUSA information and take messages and questions from students.

Please see OUSA on page 4

Vicki Mitsopolis (Eng '95) enjoys a pint at the Blood Donor Clinic on Wednesday. Derek Yarnell

Graduate, professional students upset by COU proposal

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

This summer, undergraduate students in Ontario universities were dismayed by the Council of Ontario Universities' proposal to increase tuition fees by 50 per cent over the next two years.

But under the same proposal, Ontario professional school students and graduate students face hikes more severe than that.

According to Graduate Students Society Acting President Andrew Duggan, graduate students in Ontario would pay approximately $4,500 for their tuition — an increase in excess of 100 per cent.

And law school, med school and other professional school students would face even greater fee increases. Law Students Society President Mal Moorthy said that under the proposal the law school tuition fee would jump to "$6,000 plus."

Tuition for med school would rise to the same amount under the proposal.

However, Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser was quick to note that the 50 per cent jump in undergraduate tuition fees represents the maximum increase that could occur under the proposal. In fact, he said, there would be a 30 per cent increase in the standard formula fee, and any additional increase would be left to the discretion of the individual university — up to a maximum of 20 per cent.

The same ratio holds true for the grad schools and professional schools, Fraser explained, but were multiplied by factors of 1.5 and 2.0, respectively.

According to Fraser, COU's proposal diverges from the Queen's Blueprint for Action, which was published in 1988-89, in that it is the "first proposal that talks about differential change."

He noted that like the Queen's Blueprint for Action, the COU proposal advocates tuition hikes complemented by an assistance program and public accountability.

However, the rate of tuition increases and the period of time over

Tricolour yearbook manager fired

BY ADAM EMERY
The Queen's Journal

The Tricolour Yearbook's business manager may have been fired, but he is staying on as editor-in-chief of last year's yearbook.

Rob Yee was recently fired from his position as this year's Tricolour business manager by the Alma Mater Society. Yee is working as editor-in-chief of last year's yearbook, which will come out later this fall.

Yee, who is currently appealing the AMS decision, expressed reluctance to comment. "According to AMS procedure, this shouldn't have gotten out before the appeal process is over with. I will make a comment once the appeal has gone through," he said.

Eric Jabal, media services director of the AMS, echoed Yee's statement: "All I can say at this time, because Rob has appealed the process, is that he has been dismissed. I can say that he has taken his complaint to the second level of appeal, to Catherine Emmerson chair of AMS Board of Directors."

Jabal described the position of business manager as an individual who "must work closely with the media services director and the editor, and must also meet with other directors. The business manager acts as a link between the AMS and services."

Jabal also said that "once [AMS Board of Directors Chair Emmerson] has considered the appeal, if [Yee] does not agree with the decision, he has the right to appeal to the Judicial Committee."

Yee stated that "I was acclaimed to the job of business manager and Eric [Jabal] is contesting that."

Jabal said if the appeal is denied, Yee would not receive his honorarium. "[Yee] is an honourarium employee. He would not get paid for work done this summer," said Jabal.

Yee is concerned with his work term as editor-in-chief. "Because of this situation, the publication of the Tricolour Yearbook may be delayed. We won't know for sure until this business is resolved one way or the other," he said.

Since being fired, Yee says he has been denied access to documents and facilities he considers necessary to complete his duties. He said, "I've been working out of my house. My job is to see this book through to completion."

Said Yee, "the Tricolour application states that I have the job until completion of the yearbook and I plan to see it through."

Jabal promises further clarification on these issues. "We will make our final decision late on Thursday, Sept. 30. After that, I will be free to comment," he said.

A decision had not been reached when The Journal went to press.

Please see COU on page 5

Quote

"In country where one in five adults can't read the instructions on a medicine bottle, it is ill-advised to tax reading."

—Chris Taber, Campus Bookstore Systems Manager

Inside

NEWS AMSOC 3

FEATURES TIBET 14

ENTERTAINMENT ACID TEST 18

TRICOLOUR EXPRESS THANKSGIVING BUS SCHEDULE

Tickets on Sale Now

	Toronto	Ottawa	Montreal
DEPARTURES: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7th
West Campus	1:55 5:30	5:30
Victoria Hall	2:05 5:40	5:40
JDUC	2:15 5:50	5:50
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 8th
West Campus	1:55 5:30	5:30	2:50
Victoria Hall	2:05 5:40	5:40	3:00
JDUC	2:15 5:50	5:50	3:10
Drop-Off Points:
	Ottawa: Union Station, Shearson/Thorn Centre, & Bus Terminal	Kanata: T.C. Finlayson, Centre, & Bus Terminal	Kirkland: Shopping Plaza & Bus Terminal
RETURNS: MONDAY, OCTOBER 11th
	6:00 8:00	8:00	5:45
Pick-up Points:
	Union Station	Bus Terminal	Bus Terminal

No Refunds and No Exchanges

FRANCO'S

ALL YOU CAN EAT
ITALIAN BUFFET

(Located in the Skylight Dining Room - on the second floor of the JDUC)

JUST $6.50

YOU ASKED FOR IT -
YOU GOT IT!

This is value! Join us Monday through Thursday between 5:00 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. Treat yourself to unlimited quantities of:

- Soup
- Bread Bar
- Salad Bar
- 4 Types of Pasta Daily
- 4 Types of Sauce Daily
- 1 Protein Entree
- 2 Vegetables
- Dessert Bar

(Beverages and taxes not included)

NOMINATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF PRESIDENT OF THE GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

WILL BE OPEN ON SEPTEMBER 29TH, AND WILL CLOSE ON OCTOBER 6TH, AT 1 PM.
NOMINATION FORMS ARE AVAILABLE AT
THE GSS OFFICE, OR FROM YOUR DEPARTMENT'S GSS REPRESENTATIVE.

Coalition fighting GST on books

BY RUSSELL VANCE
The Queen's Journal

By now, you have probably completed your annual book-buying ritual. You have probably also finished complaining about the seven per cent Goods and Services Tax (GST) that you have had to pay on every (already expensive) textbook. But this year is different. It is an election year, and your complaints may be noticed.

The Don't Tax Reading Coalition, based in Toronto, has started a major campaign to make the GST on books an election issue. They claim that "the federal government has severely damaged Canadian education and hurt students by taxing reading under the GST."

Chris Tabor, the systems manager at the Campus Bookstore, said Queen's students annually purchase about $2 million worth of books from the Campus Bookstore. This works out to a campus contribution of $140,000 in GST to federal coffers, on bookstore purchases alone.

In addition, Sharon Musgrave, from the Acquisitions Department of Douglas Library, said although the library gets two-thirds of the GST rebated, they still must pay $70,000 per year in GST for books. Musgrave added, "that's $70,000 less for book purchases." This figure does not include the tax paid on periodicals.

Tabor expressed his dissatisfaction with the tax, noting that although "leisure" book sales have decreased, it is hard to separate the effects of the recession from the effects of the GST. Textbooks are usually obligatory purchases, and thus a decrease in sales is harder to detect.

Tabor added: "In a country where one in five adults can't read the instructions on a medicine bottle, it is ill advised to tax reading. Illiteracy is costing us quite enough."

Many students at Queen's also oppose the GST on books. Chris Chapman, a fourth-year biology-statistics major, said "the GST on books just doesn't make sense. It's a regressive tax on learning."

Some students expressed other concerns. "I'm still pissed about them taxing tampons," said Judy Stott, a fourth-year phys-ed student.

The Don't Tax Reading Coalition says that in the first year of the GST, book sales dropped 15 per cent nationally, and have now stabilized at levels 10-12 per cent lower than before the GST.

The coalition has been encouraging people to send postcards to the Prime Minister's Office to protest the tax. Over two million postcards and letters have been sent to the Prime Minister on the issue in 1989. An Environics poll in 1989 showed that 83 per cent of Canadians opposed the GST on books.

The GST was introduced on January 1, 1991, after Brian Mulroney broke a bitter Senate deadlock by appointing eight extra Conservative senators. The GST replaced and augmented the old Manufacturers Sales Tax, which never applied to books.

Most other major industrialized countries - including the US, UK, Ireland, Mexico, Australia and Switzerland - do not tax reading material. Furthermore, the United Nations Educational, Social, and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) has asked Canada to remove the GST from reading material.

The Liberal, New Democratic, and National Parties have all promised to remove the GST from books. Mary Ann Higgs, NDP candidate for Kingston and the Islands, told The Journal "the GST is regressive. We would phase it out in five years, removing the tax on books ... in the first year."

A faxed statement from local Progressive Conservative candidate Barry Gordon's office defended the tax on books. It read that "it would be unfair to exclude reading material from the tax without providing similar relief to other media for transmitting information."

GST on books a heavy burden on students.

Derek Yarnell

Queen's spearheading Vote Education

Campaign sure of purpose, unsure of funds

BY DUFF WALLIS
The Queen's Journal

Queen's has positioned itself as a central figure in the Vote Education campaign, a national operation designed to make education a key issue in the upcoming federal election.

But, according to Alma Mater Society Academic Affairs Commissioner Taz Pirmohamed, the Queen's contingent is not yet certain where the resources will come from to fund the campaign.

The Vote Education campaign, now over two weeks old, is a joint venture of over 19 university and college student governments across Canada.

In the initial stage of the campaign, universities distributed surveys to every candidate running in the national election. The results of the surveys, which cover a number of education issues, will be used to educate the electorate through the media.

"More [completed] surveys are coming in," she said, "so, we're really in the follow-up stages."

However, Pirmohamed did note that Queen's is having to pay for its dedication to informing the student body.

Pirmohamed told The Journal that Queen's is having to play a larger than average role in the campaign, as Carleton and the University of Ottawa are not participating.

"Ottawa is a big area," she explained, "but there aren't any schools there involved in the campaign. Also, Ottawa is an important strategic area for [the Vote Education campaign]."

Pirmohamed confirmed that the AMS was picking up a larger-than-average portion of costs to compensate, but could not elaborate on how much more.

Pirmohamed also did not specify what the total cost of the campaign would be to Queen's students.

She did, however, assure The Journal that part of the campaign's funding was coming from the private sector, with another significant portion coming from the AMS's Special Projects Fund.

She pointed out that "we're still waiting to see if [the AMS] will approve [the Special Projects funding]."

When asked where the money will come from if the funding is not approved, she responded, "we'll fundraise."

Despite this financial uncertainty, Pirmohamed remains enthusiastic about the campaign, and hinted that there was a strong chance that the CBC would make Vote Education part of its election coverage. "It's really important," she concluded, "to educate the students about electing a Prime Minister in this country."

AMS Orientation Committee to restructure

BY BRETT HOUSE
The Queen's Journal

The Alma Mater Society Orientation Committee (AMSOC) and the Faculty Orientation Committee (AllFac) are about to undergo a restructuring for next year's frosh week.

The changes are contained in a report to AMS Assembly written by AMS Orientation Committee Chair Silvia Lulka and AMS Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell. The report has been delayed as Lulka and Mitchell continue to consult with faculty orientation leaders and members of the Senate Orientation Activities Review Board for more suggestions on how to streamline the various committees that run frosh week.

Lulka was quick to emphasize that the report's proposals "will not change what the frosh and orientation leaders see at all. People get nervous when someone starts talking about changing frosh week, but the face of the week isn't going to change. We're trying to make the lives of all the organizing committees a lot easier."

Lulka noted that there was tension between the faculty orientation committees on AllFac and AMSOC during this year's frosh week preparations.

"The problems we encountered weren't a result of the people involved, but the structure behind frosh week," said Lulka.

"Previous AMSOC chairs experienced similar problems."

AMSOC is responsible for organizing the AMS's orientation events, as well as many of the logistics behind frosh week. It also works through AllFac to prevent conflicts between faculty and AMS events.

Lulka explained that "a number of questions arose about my role as chair of AMSOC and AllFac. I was expected to act as a speaker for AllFac at the same as I was supposed to represent AMS concerns to the faculty orientation committees."

"This created a number of conflicts of interest," said Lulka. "It was unclear whether my role as chair or liaison should take precedence."

A number of other logistical conflicts occurred because of the overlaps between AMSOC and AllFac. Lulka observed that the mandate for AMSOC has not been revised since 1988 and is seriously out of date.

"A number of our responsibilities are no longer relevant. AMSOC used to be involved in doing things like allocating damage costs from frosh week, but we just don't do that anymore," she said.

Lulka said that one of the report's proposals will be to redefine AMSOC's role in frosh week.

"The organization of next year's frosh week should be a huge improvement over this year's," enthused Lulka. "I'm really excited. The structure we're proposing should be so much better for next year's AMSOC," she said. "Most people have said this should have been done five years ago."

The annual Women's Take Back the Night march will happen tomorrow, Saturday, Oct. 2, starting at 7 p.m. from 66 Rideau Street. The march is sponsored by the Kingston Sexual Assault Crisis Centre and the Disabled Women's Network Kingston. For information, call 542-4948.

The Ontario Friends of Schizophrenics in Kingston will be holding a walkathon to raise money and awareness. The walkathon is on Oct. 16 at 9:30 a.m., starting in front of City Hall and finishing at Botterell Hall. For information and sponsor sheets, contact Pat Forsdyke at 549-2485 or Lori Jackson 531-9727.

Professor Mary Frances Richardson, the visiting scholar in the department of chemistry, will also be the scholar-in-residence in Victoria Hall from Oct. 3-8. Prof. Richardson teaches both chemistry and women's studies at Brock. She also brews her own beer, and is a recognized judge at beer contests. She will be available for informal discussion in the Scholar's Apartment of Victoria Hall on Oct. 5 from 4 to 6 p.m. For information, contact the Office of the Dean of Women at 545-2533.

Don't forget to vote

BY STEFANIE CECCHINI
The Queen's Journal

As Election Day draws nearer, some eligible student voters might be waiting to become magically registered to vote, and questioning the whereabouts of their revision cards.

The Elections Canada Returning Officer for Kingston and the Islands, James Keenleyside, told The Journal that the preliminary voters list from the 1992 fall referendum is being used for this year's federal election.

The Queen's University area is considered a "target revision area"

— a specific area that is targeted to locate any changes that may have occurred. Keenleyside said, Elections Canada is still processing some changes, and others are under revision from last year. "We feel confident that we have all the voters that have moved," he said.

If you have not yet received your Federal Voters List Revision Card, don't panic. Names can be added as late as Election Day, October 25, at one of the nine Queen's University polls located around campus.

A revising officer will be located at most of these polls and if not, there will be one close by that you will be directed to.

For Students who were registered for the referendum in a riding other than Kingston, there are two options. You can vote in Kingston, or vote by special ballot in your home riding. Contact Elections Canada at 530-2911 for information.

If you are unable to vote on Election Day, there is an advanced poll available for students on Oct. 16, 18, and 19. As for the location and times of advanced voting, more information is printed on the Revision Cards.

Errors or omissions can be reported to the Elections Canada office at 530-2911 on weekdays between 9 a.m. and 9 p.m. In turn, a pair of revising agents will be sent to your house to add you to the Voters List.

And for those fortunate enough to have been sent a card already, don't forget to vote!

STAND-BY FOR TAKE-OFF.

At Canadian Regional, we understand how difficult it is for students nowadays to make ends meet.

That's why we're offering a year-round student stand-by fare at 65% off the regular economy fare anywhere that Canadian Regional flies.

So, if you thought a flight home or a chance to get away was beyond your budget, then think again.

For more information, call your travel agent or Canadian Airlines and simply stand-by.

Canadian Regional

Canadian is a registered trademark of Canadian Airlines International Ltd. Fares available on a one-way or return basis. Fares applicable for students between the ages of 12 and 24. Proof of age is required. Travel is on a stand-by basis only.

Enviro-expert speaks

BY LAURIE NORTH
The Queen's Journal

Dr. Arthur Hanson, president and chief executive officer of the International Institute for Sustainable Development (IISD) in Winnipeg, spoke at Dunning Auditorium on Tuesday afternoon.

Hanson recently co-authored A New Kind of Sharing: Why We Can't Ignore Global Environmental Change with June D. Hall. Hanson's book follows up on the historic 1992 Rio Earth Summit, at which world leaders discussed economic and environmental problems such as climate changes and biodiversity conventions.

Hanson said the IISD is "trying to bring the environment into an equal status with economic development, as well as recognize the links to the well-being of the people."

The IISD's mandate is to promote sustainable development in decision-making within the government, business and daily lives of Canadian individuals.

Hanson stressed that "the north must reduce its over-consumption and redirect its resources to assist the south, and the south and basically everyone in the world has to come to grips with problems of poverty alleviation."

Countries must redirect their budgets "to create the most economical expenditure funds to try and deal with the problem and secondly, to create wealth through other means," Hanson explained.

He said that we must acknowledge poverty as a serious problem in Canada. "Whether it's indigenous peoples or urban poor, poverty problems can lead to government instability and environmental degradation."

Hanson said that the international private sector must examine sustainable development and make consistent efforts to achieve new ways of doing business.

"This means looking at the regulatory structure and seeking out eco-efficiency; pollution prevention approaches that are not just simply cleaning up messes, but which really strike at the core of how businesses operate," Hanson explained.

In Hanson's view, Canada is a world leader in its use of and access to resources. He said our country must maintain its leadership role through the messages we send out to the global community. Nevertheless, Hanson said, at the present time we are not adequately practicing sustainable development in our forests and fisheries.

Canada may profess to be the leader of the fishing industry, but according to Hanson, has seen a "serious decline in the fisheries, as a result of problems that are more complicated than simply over-fishing. It is environmental fluctuations. We are demonstrating to the world that Canada doesn't know how to manage its fisheries."

Hanson said that Canada's treatment of its indigenous people sends a negative message to the world, citing the Crees' campaign against the James Bay hydro project in Quebec.

The IISD pays attention to the needs and views of indigenous peoples throughout the world. The institute has worked with indigenous peoples in Canada, U.S.A., Mexico and India in developing a sustainable development network, and reporting the actual implementation of the developments.

Another area IISD is working on is trade and environment. "The trading systems, up until the North American Free Trade Agreement, have virtually ignored the environment as a theme," Hanson said.

He said trade can seriously damage the environment, but stressed it is "essential in opening markets, to allow poverty alleviation to take place, especially in south countries."

In the Canadian federal election campaign, Hanson said, "it's up to us to ask hard questions of the politicians about what they will do in this area of sustainable development."

We must also examine creating new jobs related to environmental protection, both at home and abroad, Hanson said. For example, he cited "eco-tourism," or nature tourism, which makes considerable money from Canadians vacationing in southern paradises like Bermuda, Nassau and Mexico.

Hanson stressed global change starts with the individual: "We can't lose sight of the role of the individual and the choices the individual citizen makes in daily life."

Dr. Hanson was a guest lecturer at the Environmental Issues Seminar Series, organized by Queen's Environmental Network.

OUSA fights proposal

Continued from page one

"OUSA and its policies are open to all students," Pirmohamed said.

Shin added that "since we're here [on campus] we're accessible to all students."

OUSA was formed in 1992, and its current membership includes Queen's, Western, Waterloo, Laurier, and Brock Universities. U of T's student government voted Sept. 21 to suspend its membership in the alliance and postpone a referendum on the subject until the spring.

OUSA advocates tuition increases as long as they are accompanied by a revamped student aid program, and greater contributions from government and the private sector.

Pirmohamed said OUSA's plans currently include waging a "large-scale campaign" against the Council of Ontario Universities' proposed tuition fee increases.

A soon-to-be-released document prepared by OUSA will "outline the conditions under which any discussion of fee increases can be entertained," Pirmohamed said.

"The provincial government has made it clear that tuition fee increases are inevitable," Pirmohamed said. "OUSA is actively seeking solutions to mitigate the negative effects of these increases on students."

COU recommends hikes

Continued from page one

which they would occur were different under the terms of the Queen's proposal, he said.

In addition, he explained, while the Blueprint called upon government to match the increase in fees from students, the COU proposal does not.

The Council of Ontario Universities (COU), which is comprised of all university presidents in Ontario, plus an academic colleague from each university and its own secretariat, proposes that these changes take place over a period of two years.

Principal David Smith and Dr. Robert Pike represented Queen's on the council.

Fraser explained the COU likely built upon work done by Dr. David Stager at the University of Toronto, who suggested that professional programs usually costs more to run and that graduates of professional programs usually make more money.

Don Carter, the Dean of Law, agrees with the thinking of the COU.

"I don't think there's any guarantee" of a law grad getting a job with a higher income, he said. "Lawyers are subject to the marketplace like any Arts and Science student."

The proposal "assumes all lawyers are going to find a pot of gold." Carter also took exception to the argument that the cost of a law school education justifies the higher tuition.

"It costs a lot less to educate a law student than a medical student," he said, noting that the COU proposes to hike law school and medical school tuition to the same amount.

"Tuition has to bear some reasonable relationship to the cost of educating the student."

Carter expressed a concern that the COU proposal will compromise accessibility.

"We are trying to encourage individuals from disadvantaged groups to law school," he said, but to put up "high financial barriers" will hurt accessibility.

Brian Kwon, president of the Aesculapian Society, agreed. "Obviously one of the first concerns" is accessibility, he said.

"Medicine is under-represented from the lesser socio-economic status to begin with," Kwon said, adding that "[the tuition hikes] make it more difficult."

Responding to the suggestion that medical school tuition should be higher because med grads stand to make more money in the future, Kwon acknowledged, "that's always the argument."

But Kwon said that while "government takes great pleasure" in hitting med schools and law schools, students must stand together on the issue.

"It's true that it's meds and law now," he said, "but who knows what it'll be tomorrow."

He urged "students to stay together" because "the federal government is pulling out ... of education."

It is a "myth that all medical students and law students are wealthy—some are carrying extraordinary debt," he said.

The Queen's Entertainment Agency's Jane Mundell, Todd Murphy, and Jayson Duggan present the Kingston Regional Cancer Centre's Dr. Andrew Padmos a cheque for $1,800 last week to go towards cancer research. The money was raised at the QEA's frosh week charity concert.

Derek Yarnell

Could Galileo have been wrong?

Growth of Debt 541-Pool

Bentley pulled open the refrigerator door to find nothing but disappointment. Unfortunately, it had become a sight that was all too familiar; one lone pickle marinating at the bottom of a murky jar, eight containers of yet another batch of his mother's jam and something of unknown origin lurking in the vegetable drawer. But like most students, Bentley continued to peer into the refrigerator for several minutes as if a clubhouse sandwich was about to materialize. Once he realized this was an exercise in futility, he closed the door to come face to face with another unpleasant reminder of his financial predicament - the phone, cable and P.U.C. bills magnetized to the door. What was Bentley to do? There was no money in his account and his credit rating was so abysmal that he couldn't even qualify for a Bendito Video card. Luckily, however, Queen's students have been contributing to a bursary endowment fund through the Queen's Challenge to help students in Bentley's position.

With the cost of post-secondary education on the rise, there is an even greater number of students who are in need of financial assistance. In order to ensure the availability of such assistance, additional monies are being funnelled into the endowment fund to aid financially strapped scholarship and bursary programs. The student contribution to the endowment fund is targeted at $200,000. Without students helping students, Bentley and many others like him would be unable to attend Queen's. Don't let Bentley down.

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

QUEEN'S HILLEL
Sukkot Dinner
 Sunday, October 3rd, 7:00pm at Hillel House, 124 Centre St.
 $8 (non-members)
 $4 (members)
 $10 membership fee
 For more info call Tamara
 547-6619
 Come and join your Jewish Community

"Have you ever considered being in movies?" Bentley was taken by surprise. A woman had eccosted him just as he was walking out of the Sidewalk Cafe and presented him with this question. Naturally, Bentley was flattered and proceeded to tell her of the time he was an extra on Polka Dot Door and how people often mistook him for Robert De Niro and Al Pacino (actually, it was Don Knotts and Marty Feldman but Bentley often twisted the truth). She explained that she was in Film Studies at Queen's and was in the process of filming a documentary on "lethargy" and wondered if he could be interviewed. Bentley gave a deep sigh and said he couldn't be bothered.

The Film Studies Department at Queen's University has long been in need of proper equipment in order to effectively provide students with the necessary means to further their education. The 16mm camera that the Department had previously been using was rendered obsolete over 15 years ago and has actually been placed in a museum in New York as one of the first 16mm cameras that could be physically lifted. The Queen's Challenge Campaign has earmarked the Film Studies Department for $53,400 to purchase a new 16mm camera. Yet another example of students helping students. Queen's Challenge money at work. Please-

SUPPORT THE QUEEN'S CHALLENGE

VOLUNTARY MEAL PLAN PARTICIPANTS AT QUEENS UNIVERSITY WIN BIG!

ABOVE (LEFT TO RIGHT): JAMES FOULGER, GENERAL MANAGER FOOD SERVICES, TRACEY McDONALD, JEFF BOYD, DR. GRAHAM BROWN, DIRECTOR OF RESIDENCE LIFE

OTHER WINNERS NOT SHOWN: DONALD McDUGALL, KARRYN SHERIDAN AND CHANDRA WEGAND

YOU STILL HAVE AN OPPORTUNITY TO WIN ONE OF FIVE REMAINING GRAND PRIZES.
NEXT DRAW: OCTOBER 11, 1993

FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-2953 OR COME TO THE FOOD SERVICE OFFICES AT THE JDUC

BILLBOARD

John Deutch University Centre
COMMUNITY BUILDING!

THIS MONTH IN THE JDUC

Mon, Oct 4 - Wed, Oct 6
AMS United Way Committee, Indo Pacific Sale
Lower Ceilidh

Tue, Oct 5, 9:00am - 4:00pm
Queen's Marketing Association, Resume Building/Interview Workshop
McLaughlin Room

Wed, Oct 6, 10:00am - 3:00pm
Career Planning and Placement, Education Forum
McLaughlin Room

Thu, Oct 7 - Fri, Oct 8
AMS Education Commission, Hidden Hunger Awareness
Lower Ceilidh

Sun, Oct 10, 6:00pm
Pot Luck Thanksgiving Dinner (please pick up free ticket in advance at International Centre)
International Centre

Tue, Oct 12
AMS Education Commission, Anti-Discovery Day
Lower Ceilidh

Wed, Oct 13 - Thu, Oct 14
AMS Women's Issues Committee, Women's Issues Awareness
Lower Ceilidh

Thu, Oct 14, 9:00am - 3:00pm
Career Planning and Placement, Professional Schools Forum
Mac-Corry Student Street

Mon, Oct 18 - Tue, Oct 19 and Thu, Oct 21 - Fri, Oct 22
Queen's University Muslim Students Association Display
Lower Ceilidh

Wed, Oct 20, 9:00am - 3:00pm
Career Planning and Placement, MBA Forum
Lower/Upper Ceilidh

Thu, Oct 21 - Fri, Oct 22
AIESEC, Career Planning and Placement and the International Centre, Crossing Borders Work/Study Abroad Fair
Throughout the JDUC

Mon, Oct 25
Association of Baha'i Studies Display
Lower Ceilidh

REGULAR MEETINGS

Sundays, 7:30pm
Sunday Evening Worship with Canterbury Centre, Geneva Fellowship, Newman Centre and Queen's Christian Fellowship
Wallace Hall

Tuesdays, 8:00pm
Internationalist Socialists
Third Floor Common Room

Wednesdays, 11:30am - 1:30pm
Student Health Wellness Sessions
John Orr Room

Wednesdays, 7:00pm - 11:00pm
AMS Coffeeshouse
Lower Ceilidh

GET INVOLVED IN REINVENTING YOUR UNIVERSITY CENTRE!

What do students, faculty, staff and alumni want in their university centre and how can the building better accommodate their needs? Those are the basic questions being posed in two consultations to be undertaken by the John Deutch University Centre Council in 1993-94.

The JDUC review committee will advise JDUC Council on the present state and future direction of the John Deutch University Centre as a student service at Queen's.

The JDUC building planning committee will offer advice on a comprehensive master plan for the building that will establish a framework for decisions on the allocation, alteration and development of space.

Nominations for the review committee and the building planning committee are now being invited from students, faculty, staff and alumni. Please submit nominations by Friday, October 15, to Jack Sinnott, director of the JDUC.

Interested individuals may obtain terms of reference for the consultations through the JDUC general office.

Sidewalk Cafe

(located in the John Deutch University Center)

Purchase any slice of pizza and receive a free order of french fries

or

1/4 Pound Burger and Fries with a 16 oz Soft Drink

Regular Price: $5.05
Special Price: $3.99

(This offer ends October 8, 1993 and is not valid in combination with any other offer)

Skylight Dining Room

(located on the 2nd floor of the John Deutch University Centre)

Save 10% on the purchase of any Deli Sandwich

or

Have a free 16 oz. Soft Drink with the purchase of any burrito from our Mexican faire.

(this offer ends October 8th, 1993 and is not valid in combination with any other offer)

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter

Managing Editor
David Pavao

News Editor
Jeff Gray

Production Manager
Colin Ho

Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse

Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor

Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland

Photography Editor
Marika Glickman

Graphics Editors
Richard Dubois
Joey deVilla

Features Editor
Alison Masekann

Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis

Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols

Backpage/Misc. Editors
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla

Assistant News Editors
Breck Marland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson

Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down

Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petrie
Ryan Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens

Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn

Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yamell

Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Business Manager
Chris X. Ritchie

Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielsen

Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer

Sales Representatives
Fiona Macauley

House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice-weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contributions from all members of the Queen's Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printing Ltd., Smiths Falls, Ontario.

Editorial & Advertising
telephone: 545-2800
Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

Ash Baker, Skip Bitman, Rob Camp, Stefanie Cecchini, Adam Emery, Sarah English, Steve Fruitman, Brett House, Ben Jones, Michael Kavanagh, Laurie North, Des Olsen, Mark Opashinov, Geoff Owen, Leroy Rodrigues, Russell Vance, Duff Wallis, Marc Walton, Anne Youn

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

The numbers don't add up

Queen's plummets to 32 in the third annual Maclean's university survey! Just before you toss out all of your Queen's paraphernalia, the issue doesn't grace us with its presence until November. It is unlikely that Queen's will do poorly in the rankings - but does that mean anything? The greatly hyped, sensationalized issue of Maclean's has become standard reading material for parents, high school grads and their all-knowing guidance counsellors.

Avid readers of the Maclean's issue will notice that some universities have decided not to participate this year. Carleton University's president feels the survey is a useless exercise. Memorial University, known for its non-competitive nature, has called the survey "fatally flawed."

It seems interesting that these schools, which have ranked poorly in the past, are finding fault with the survey. Queen's administration, however, gladly hands over numbers and figures to Maclean's for their inspection.

It is difficult to be sure whether these opt-out schools are genuinely convinced of the illegitimacy of the survey. They seem to think that no representation is better than bad representation. It is just as difficult to be sure whether Queen's is genuinely convinced of the legitimacy of the survey.

The intention of the survey needs to be questioned... again. Many have denounced Maclean's for simply wanting to sell magazines. And they have - both previous issues set records for number of copies sold.

Maclean's defends its university issue, saying it is meant to create a sense of accountability for Canadian universities. Clearly, the survey produces debate and discussion over university quality. Universities are pressured, perhaps, to improve the quality of their school.

Maclean's does not adequately qualify as an educational authority. More to the point, however, is who qualifies as an educational authority. Who has the knowledge, experience and insight necessary to compare all of the universities? And how will that person or organization know what students needs are in order to know what to complexes and fosters elitism. Many of us will remember the "we're #2 - you're #13" chant at the Queen's/Ottawa U. football game just a few days after the first issue hit the stands.

But few of the high-spirited Queen's students knew why they were number two.

Ranking the universities in such a blatant fashion tends to devalue the degree and emphasize the university from which it came. Suddenly a Bachelor of Arts degree from U of T is more valuable than a computer science degree from Waterloo because the former was higher on the list than the latter.

What makes a university "good" is much more than class size or mark requirements. The university experience is unquantifiable. Every university offers something different to every applicant. If a student appreciates a small town, a concentrated student housing area and a considerable pub-to-student ratio, then suddenly McGill isn't so great.

Unfortunately, it is difficult for anyone to be aware of this potentially crucial information without visiting the campus or talking to someone who goes there.

While the Maclean's university survey serves some purpose other than financial gains for the magazine, it is important to be suspicious: suspicious of would-be objective rankings and suspicious of people who believe them.

Much needed exposure is created for schools which many of us haven't heard of. However, the survey does seem to disfavour universities with non-conformist philosophies like Carleton and Memorial. In fact, because it compares all the universities along the same lines - albeit in three categories - it stresses conformity, and punishes those who deviate from their selected norm.

It also seems questionable that a news magazine judge the quality of Canada's universities.

pare and how to rank what they compare?

Linda Frum's Guide to Canadian Universities avoids these pitfalls by having recently graduated students do the write-ups on their alma maters. However, although her books do capture more of the flavour of the university experience, they are lacking in substantive information.

Is it imperative to rank the universities? It would appear that this practice produces inferiority com-

Uh, is this going to be on the exam?

"Lecture courses probably do very little for most students, given that lectures traditionally last 50 minutes and the attention span of the average person is only 20 minutes. Good research tells us that young men are thinking of sex two-thirds of the time and young women think of it at least half the time, so that gives an uphill task to anyone trying to persuade students that their houses don't exist if they're not there to see them."

-James McSherry, professor of family medicine at the University of Western Ontario, in a letter to the Globe and Mail entitled "University lectures: They don't work."

The lecture, as a method of teaching and a means to learn by, is often criticized by professors and students alike. Upon arrival at university, students are thrown into big rooms with hundreds of other students - most of them fighting for the seats closest to the back. Is this an atmosphere conducive to learning? Or is this an atmosphere conducive to reading newspapers, making friends and sleeping?

Obviously the lecture deserves some of the criticism it endures. But the lecture is not imbued with only faults.

There is something reassuring about going into a lecture hall with a couple of hundred other first year students on the first day of classes. There is something reassuring about not being forced to state your views in a small group of people you've never met before. There is something reassuring about being there, being part of the process without actually having to be there.

It is not reassuring, however, to be treated like a first-grader just because you are in first year. Maybe it is precisely because it is easy to tune-out in lecture halls, but too many professors teaching first-year lecture courses consistently place very little confidence in their students.

Sometimes the lecture provides the perfect format for sitting back, listening to a wealth of information and reflecting upon that which you hear. Sometimes. But sometimes not.

Maybe the problem with the lecture lies not in the format, but the topic or the lecturer. Some topics are more suited for the lecture than others. A course containing new information not covered in high school courses is sometimes best introduced in lecture form. (The tutorials - and, oh, what a lot of help they are - are supposed to be for applying what was learned in the lecture.) On the other hand, some courses, like Shakespeare, are better covered in a smaller, more intimate setting.

The lecturer, and not the lecture, is often the real root of the problem. As we all know, many professors are academics and not teachers. This cannot be pointed out often enough, as it points to a fundamental problem in our university system. Some professors just recite what they wrote the year before, sounding profound but allowing for little flexibility and innovative analysis.

The solution to aspire to, the counterpart in the lecture debate, is the seminar. Universities with smaller classes are held high above those with huge lecture halls as better learning institutions. But just how great is the seminar? Is it really the pinnacle of the learning experience?

Perhaps the seminar is given more credit than it deserves. Often the seminar is fruitless. Students wax profusely, enjoying the sound of their own voices. Professors wane when students pretend to be

Opinions

AN OPEN LETTER TO ALL STUDENTS

The Editor,

Upon reading the article about OUSA in the The Journal on Tuesday, September 28, 1993, I became extremely concerned over the misrepresentation of one of my comments and the editorial that it precipitated. The article read that even if the OUSA referendum fails, the AMS "could find the money within the budget" to support it. This quote was, however, only part of my response. Presently, there is some AMS money being spent on OUSA but the resources that are required to sustain it in the future need to be guaranteed through a student levy.

The bigger problem is that the editorial staff of The Journal chose to respond to the quote by writing an entire article that the referendum will be a farce. I question the judgement of the editorial board in printing such allegations without ensuring that the facts are straight. I have repeatedly informed the Journal that I am always available for comment. It would have been very easy for them to check that their editorial was based on complete information.

The facts are that the Queen's Alma Mater Society will remain a member of OUSA, but the effectiveness of its membership is questionable if OUSA does not have the financial resources to support a central communication base and lobbyist. A levy of 95 cents per student would not guarantee the funding. Our membership in OUSA will remain in its present form as dictated by the mandate of our election and the vote of support for OUSA by your elected representatives on AMS Assembly until after.

Katherine Philips
AMS President

Job Opportunities in Rehab

The Editor,

I am writing this letter to clarify a point which was misquoted, or rather fabricated in Friday's Journal in the article by Geoff Langdon ("No growing pains in the School of Rehab"). Mr. Langdon stated that I told him that "many second and third year students receive lucrative job offers, mainly from the United States." I do not know where he got this idea. If these job offers do exist I am not aware of them. The closest thing to this type of solicitation that I have seen is pamphlets and notices from recruitment companies in the School of Rehab.

Lee-Anno Mennie
OT '95

Real Live Slacker

talking heads

"Students contribute a significant amount of money for the operations of JDUC. Do you think we are being well served by JDUC?"

"I personally love the JDUC. In fact it is one of my favourite acronyms of all time. I say we choke 'em with money."
Jonathan Souza
Arts Sci '95

"The JDUC isn't big time, so I floored it and gave it the Johnny sauce, that is to say I like to shoot pool with Rannie Young but other facilities are not well marketed."
Charles Larms
Med 96

"I don't even know what the JDUC does, and I think that says something. Actually the only thing worth going to is the Quiet Pub."
Alfredo Garcia
Art Sci '94

"Yes, I think the money is generally being well spent; however, I'd like to see the addition of a computer centre and more tables in the pool hall."
Susanne Soliman
Arts Sci '96

Craig Fraese
Angela Baker
MA History

Joey deVilla

Response Disrespectful to Marriott Staff

The Editor,

As a new student at Queens this year, I was surprised to read "Marriott Defended" (Journal, September 28), the letter from Heather Moore, Part-time Marriott Supervisor.

I am glad that Ms. Moore feels that she is treated fairly by Marriott Food Services. With so many women working in low-wage jobs where they are treated unfairly, it's nice to know that there are some women who do not face this situation.

However, I am alarmed at Ms. Moore's dismissal of the experiences of Marriott workers who are feeling disempowered and devalued in their workplace. In her letter, she tells one concerned worker that "you obviously have an attitude problem and you were probably not a good worker..."

It is precisely this kind of flippant and disrespectful response which makes the workplace more stressful, and causes employees to feel devalued. This not only has a negative effect upon employees, but also upon the services Marriott provides to students.

If Ms. Moore's response is indicative of the style in which Marriott management treats its workers and resolves conflict, then it comes as no surprise that so many Marriott staff are dissatisfied with the corporation.

I also found it interesting to note that Ms. Moore signed her letter with the title of "Supervisor". I am not familiar with the internal structure of Marriott, but it is my understanding that "Supervisor" indicates a position of power over other workers. As students, we should keep in mind that when workers unionize, it is not uncommon for some supervisors and managers to make attempts to publicly discredit the union and those workers who are the most outspoken. I am skeptical of Ms. Moore's — or any supervisor's — second-hand comments against a union leader, particularly right before contract negotiations.

Many of us pay plenty of money to Marriott for on-campus food services. If Marriott refuses to treat its workers fairly and responsibly, we should encourage the University to provide food services through an employer who treats employees with dignity and respect.

Ruth Gayle
Education '94

Write an Opinions Spotlight

If you have a strong opinion about a current issue, write a short essay and send it to us...we'll make you famous.

QUEEN'S FENCING CLUB
EXPERIENCE THE ART
& SPORT OF FENCING

FRIDAY 4:30 - 7:30
DANCE STUDIO
SUNDAY 6:30 - 9:30
BEWS GYM

EVERYONE WELCOME

CALL JOHN AT 545-9516 FOR INFORMATION

NOTICE

APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE

FOR THE ASSISTANT WORK BURSARY COORDINATOR

APPLICATIONS CAN BE PICKED UP AT THE AMS OFFICE, AND ARE DUE OCT. 15. INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD ON OCT. 16, FOR FURTHER INFORMATION PLEASE CALL THE SERVICES DIRECTOR AT 545-2725.

NOTICE

EDUCATION INFORMATION FORUM

Wednesday, October 6th, 11:30 - 2^{PM}.

Representatives from the following schools will be at the McLaughlin Room in the John Deutsch Centre to present information on applying to their programs:

- Brock University
- Nipissing University
- University of Ottawa
- Lakehead University
- Queen's University
- Canisius College, Buffalo N.Y.

An agent from TEACH - Canadian Graduates/Teacher's Colleges Abroad will also be available to give information on British Teacher's Colleges.

- Answers to questions on admission requirements
- Information on programs offered
- Advice on teaching prospects, and working out of province

GRECOS GRILL & WINE BAR Kingston's Only Authentic Greek Cuisine

International Wines by glass or bottle
Lunch from $5.50, Dinner from $7.95

Kingston's newest Greek restaurant opened its doors one month ago to offer customers a total dining experience with a taste of Greece. Exposed brick, stucco white wash walls, earthy forest green tones, photos of Greece and Greek music all add to the ambiance of Grecos. The owners cook up a large selection of fine Mediterranean cuisine from their native Greece. Start with a platter of appetizer selections - they made us a special platter of delicious bites of each. We had chicken brochettes and broiled salmon steak for dinner. Both were beautifully presented and very tasty. You must try their house specialty "saganaki" - pan fried cheese that is flambéed at your table and melts in your mouth. End your meal with a decadent piece of homemade authentic baklava - it's nutty, rich and dripping in honey. Perfectly cooked food, excellent service and a friendly atmosphere are featured at Grecos, 167 Princess St. Open seven days a week.

Dining Out - August 5th, 1992
Food Writer
Wendy Hernick-Miller

Serving Daily from 11:00 am to closing
167 Princess St. 542-2229

We give good Smokers
531-5300

Tonight & Sat. Night
come help us welcome back

THE HOPPING PENGUINS

Special guests tonight, all the way from Vancouver "Shine"

Guests Sat. "Easy Access"

Hey! Come early - Cheap-a-mundo 7:30-9:30!

Every Thursday don't miss our Dipsomania party Cheap all nite long! Great tunes compliments of D.J. Humble Tim Can't fly to Miami Mon. nite? Catch the game here!

*2 Big Screens
*Stereo Sound
*QBI on N.T.N.
*20¢ Wings
*Friendly Wagers
This Week Wash. at Miami

Coming Soon

- Oct. 6 Yuk Yuks
- Oct. 7 Dipsomania Party!
- Oct. 8 The Watchmen
- Oct. 9 Foreign Journey

EVERY SUNDAY

5pm
Getting Tired of ordering from that 1-800 clown?
Check out our 2 for 1 chicken dinners!
Pure poultry in motion!

Wild Blues
Yonder
Rockin' Blues.
Great Party! No Cover!

Keg Party Economics (101)

+ PARTY = MONEY

- Save on your keg parties with us!
- We make beer Affordable!
- FREE Keg & Tap rental
- FREE Keg delivery
- FREE Keg Pickup
- FREE Refills (H2O only)
- FREE Tax (only 26¢/L)
- FREE Pictures of Bob Rae for the bottom of the toilet bowl.

Choose the right personal brewery and BE satisfied

BREW NOW FOR HOMECOMING!

The Brewing Experience 407 Counter St Unit 160 Tel 542-2187

BOOK YOUR SCHOOL EVENTS
WITH THE #1 NIGHTCLUB IN
KINGSTON!
CALL 544.6885 AND ASK
FOR A MANAGER
NOBODY BEATS US!

	YES	NO
MONDAY.....N.F.L. MONDAYS OVER 40 TV'S + POOL TABLES LITE NITE ALL NITE / NO COVER	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
TUESDAY.....ALL REQUEST TUESDAY with DJ chris ALL YOUR FAVOURITE TUNES LITE NITE ALL NITE / NO COVER	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
WEDNESDAY...ALL STAR LITE NITE LADIES PAY NO COVER SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	MAKE
THURSDAY.....OCT. 7TH LOWEST of the LOW OCT. 14TH ONE	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	THE
FRIDAY.....HURRICANE FRIDAYS COME GET SWEEP UP IN THE FUN REAL DEAL TILL 9 / SUPER LITE NITE TILL 10	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	RIGHT
SATURDAY....THE OFFICIAL SATURDAY NITE PARTY NON-STOP UNTIL 3 AM REAL DEAL TILL 9 / SUPER LITE NITE TILL 10	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	CHOICE!
SUNDAY.....THE SUNDAY AFTERNOON POOL TOUR. SIGN UP BY 3:00PM IN MICKEYS GREAT DAY FOR RELAXING	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

178 ontario street, 544.6885

It was just a summer job.
Now it's the rest of your life.

Remember when your biggest career concern was running out of paper cups? And when it was easy to handle any summer job because it was just a summer job? Now you're graduating. You want a career that will challenge you every day and offer a variety of responsibilities. You want to work where the learning curve doesn't flatten out after a couple of years.

At Andersen Consulting, our challenges change daily, like the world in which we work. Our job is to help clients do what they do. Only better.

Where we go from here.

Come talk to us about a career with Andersen Consulting.

Andersen Consulting is an equal opportunity employer.

Information session Tuesday,
October 5th, 5:30pm at the Faculty Club.

Please join us for wine and cheese and take the opportunity to talk informally to some of our Queen's graduates.

THE MARKET SALON ACADEMY

offers

50% OFF

Haircuts for men and women. Licensed stylists taking advanced training offer you 50% off regular Market Salon Prices.

	ACADEMY	REGULAR
CUTS	$20	$40
PERMS	$40	$80
HIGHLITE	$40	$80

Please differentiate between Academy and Regular Market Salon Prices

327 King Street E., Kingston. 549-2110

ASUS

Elections for the following positions will be held October 13th and 14th:

97 Year Society
1st Year ASUS Rep to the AMS
1 Year ASUS Senator

If you are interested in any of the above positions
call the ASUS Core at 545-6278
or come to an Open Forum, October 7th, 1993 at 11:30am in the Lower Ceilidh of the JDUC.

Class of 98? sound scary?

The Search is on for the Arts &
Science Orientation
Committee of 1994

Available Positions: Head Gael
Academics, Operations,
Socio-Cultural and Treasurer

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE and must be received no later than October 13th at 4:30pm.

Frosh Week is always BEST the next time around!

Features

The tragic tale of Shangri-La

For many, Tibet conjures up images of the mystic Orient, the Shangri-La nation nestled high in the Himalayan Mountains. Tibet is certainly an exceptional country. With a fascinating religion that permeates every aspect of daily life, the people of Tibet are profoundly spiritual and peaceful.

Yet few people are fully aware of what the Chinese government and military have done to Tibet during their 45-year occupation of the country. While the nightly news brings us daily reports from Bosnia-Herzegovina, Somalia, and the Middle East, we only occasionally hear news from Tibet, and almost never see television footage. This makes it rather difficult for most of us to appreciate the magnitude of damage caused by the Chinese.

Consider that 1.2 million Tibetans have died as a direct result of the Chinese occupation. Reflect on the human rights abuses which continue on a massive scale - including arbitrary executions, torture, and the forced sterilization of women. Or try to imagine being outnumbered two to one by foreign colonizers in your capital city.

Many Tibetans have fled from their country since China invaded in 1959. Most have relocated in India and Nepal, while a few now live in countries such as Switzerland, the United States, and Canada.

In Kingston, there is only one Tibetan refugee. He is Jurme Wangda, an MSc student at Queen's. Wangda was born in Tibet, but fled in 1959 at the age of 10. In 1987, he returned to Tibet briefly, where he saw his mother and brother for the first time in 28 years.

Recently, during a presentation on Tibet sponsored by Canadian Crossroads International, Wangda expressed great concern for his country, and his hope for the future. He compared himself to an endangered animal, saying "I am one of those to be saved."

"We were invaded by a stronger nation and oppressed of freedom and human rights," he said. "This is a tragedy."

History of independence with a regional superpower, preferring to be quietly independent, and relatively unknown to Western countries.

In 1949, the People's Republic of China sent an army to invade Tibet. This invasion was denounced at the time by virtually every free-world country, including the U.S. For

Jurme Wangda, a Tibetan-in-exile living in Kingston

Genocide and human rights abuses

The statistics on Tibet are stunning. The Chinese government in Beijing is effectively pursuing a policy of mass genocide. The estimated 1.2 million Tibetans who have died because of the Chinese represents one in five Tibetans.

In 1960, before many of these killings, the International Commission of Jurists spoke of the Chinese "genocide" of Tibet, and said that 16 articles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights had been violated. Furthermore, China is attempting to wipe out Tibet by overwhelming the country with foreigners. The government has sent in enormous numbers of Chinese colonists to live in Tibet, thereby making Tibetans a minority in their own country. Estimates suggest that there are 7.5 million Chinese in Tibet, and only 6 million Tibetans. In Lhasa, the capital and largest city, Tibetans are outnumbered two to one.

Tibet is often referred to as "the rooftop of the world." Its altitude is, on average, the highest in the world, and it shares Mt. Everest with neighbouring Nepal. For the Chinese government, this rooftop is the ideal launching pad for nuclear weapons. This explains Tibet's strategic value for China. Since 1967, the Chinese have been conducting nuclear tests there, including tests which expose

The Potala Palace in Lhasa, Tibet.

In terms of human rights, Tibet's situation is deplorable. Freedom House, a New York-based human rights group, found that, among occupied territories, the situation in Tibet is the worst in the world.

Women in Tibet often avoid going to hospitals, despite serious medical problems, because hospitals practice mass sterilization of women. In addition, forced abortions and infanticide are commonplace, particularly for a second or third child.

The torture of Tibetans has similarly been on a huge scale. Often Tibetans are accused on the grounds of "anti-state activities" (often for practising Buddhism, since the communists have outlawed the religion), imprisoned, and tortured. The torture includes suspending people by their thumbs, putting sharp bamboo chutes through the fingertips, and sexually violating women with electric cattle-prods. Approximately one of every ten Tibetans has been held in a prison or forced labour camp for between 10 and 20 years.

Cultural destruction

The fascinating culture of Tibet has been the subject of many books and studies. For many Westerners, it holds a mythical appeal. This culture is severely threatened by the Chinese. Of over six thousand monasteries 40 years ago, only seven remain. Centuries-old architecture and art has been ruthlessly destroyed, or sold to private individuals for profit by the Chinese government.

Tourists who visit the remaining monasteries are charged admission fees, and may witness "restoration projects" which exist only to impress them; no actual restoration work has been done.

Nuclear buildup and territorial infringements

The Dalai Lama is quite likely the most-loved leader of any nation on earth. The feelings Tibetans have for him are, for most Westerners, impossible to relate to. Although he has not been in Tibet for 34 years, he is revered by old and young alike. Visitors to Tibet know to bring dozens of photographs of the Dalai Lama - these are more valuable to Tibetans than money or other souvenirs.

"D a l a i Lama" means many different things to different people, as the leader himself admits in his 1990 autobiography Freedom in Exile. For some, it means he is "a living Buddha," a reincarnation of the Bodhisattva of Compassion. For others, it makes him a "god-king." But to all, it signifies the spiritual and political leader of Tibet.

For Tibetans, the Dalai Lama is a reincarnation of Chenrezig, the Bodhisattva of Compassion, and also of all previous Dalai Lamas. The process of discovering a Dalai provincial" borders, always taking chunks of Tibet and assigning them to a different province. Now more than half of Tibet's original territory is considered by Beijing to be other provinces' land. As a result, what China calls the "Tibet Autonomous Region" is only a fraction of actual Tibet.

Environmental damage

In 1949, Tibet had a great diversity and wealth of wildlife. The Buddhist belief in the interdependent relationship between humans and nature led Tibetans to treat their natural environment respectfully. But today much of Tibet's wonderful wildlife is gone. The snow leopard, an endangered species, is hunted with machine guns. Travel companies offer special tours to hunt rare blue sheep, Tibetan gazelle, and red deer.

Wide-scale deforestation has led to flooding, soil erosion, and the loss of virgin forests. And great mineral resources have been removed by the Chinese, since Tibet is home to great reserves of uranium, iron ore, coal, and gold.

Hope for Tibet's future

In recent years, there have been signs of hope for Tibet. In 1989, the Dalai Lama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts on behalf of Tibet. The award was said to serve two purposes: bring attention to the plight of Tibet, and rebuke the Chinese Government for the Tiananmen Square Massacre.

In 1991, the U.S. Congress passed a bill recognizing Tibet as an "occupied territory"

Lama is complex. The government, itself run along traditional Tibetan Buddhist lines, selects a search party. This party usually begins a search for the next leader a few years after the death of the last Dalai Lama. The search uses auspicious events and symbols, to determine the heir to the leadership.

The Dalai Lama's Five-Point Peace Plan

- 1) Abandonment of China's population transfer policy which threatens the very existence of the Tibetans as a people.
- 2) Respect for the Tibetan people's fundamental rights and democratic freedoms.
- 3) Restoration and protection of Tibet's natural environment and the abandonment of China's use of Tibet for the production of nuclear weapons and the dumping of nuclear waste.
- 4) Transformation of the whole of Tibet into a zone of peace.
- 5) Commencement of earnest negotiations on the future status of Tibet and of relations between the Tibetan and Chinese people.

self as a servant. He then played with the youngest child. But the child quickly identified him, and even called out the name of Kewtsang's monastery.

The group left, but returned a few days later with a formal deputation. This time, they brought a number of items, some of which belonged to the previous Dalai Lama. The infant correctly identified the items belonging to the last Dalai Lama, saying "it's mine, it's mine." Soon the party was convinced they'd found the new incarnation.

Looking back on the years before Tibet was invaded, the Dalai Lama remembers "the best years of my life ... And although there is clearly no use indulging in feelings of nostalgia, still I cannot help feeling sad whenever I think of the past. It reminds me of the terrible suffering of my people."

The Dalai Lama resides in Dharamsala, in North India. He travels often, speaking around the world. Over the past summer, he addressed the United Nations Conference on

Human Rights, in Vienna, Austria. (The Chinese delegation protested his speech, and almost succeeded in preventing it altogether.) Recently, the Dalai Lama visited Canada.

The Dalai Lama gives an audience to those who have a genuine interest in meeting him. If you're planning to be in India, and can make arrangements six months ahead, you may have a chance to meet the leader. People who have met him speak of a charming, radiant man who leaves an unforgettable impression of wisdom and compassion.

In 1989, the Dalai Lama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, in recognition of his tireless work for the people of Tibet, and his adherence to non-violent means of action.

The Dalai Lama with the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1988.

Or contact the Tibet-Canada Committee in Ottawa at 748-7469.

Brock Martland is a third-year English student who developed an interest in Tibet while delinquently travelling in Asia last school year.

Tibetan monks, in ceremonial regalia, perform sacred chants. The monks have the amazing ability to produce two or even three vocal tones simultaneously - thus each monk can harmonize with himself, while some can sing a musical chord! The effect of nine such voices is intense, though the chanting may not suit all ears. The monks of Ganden Jangtse, a monastery-in-exile in South India, will be performing in Kingston tomorrow. The performance will raise money for refugees arriving at the monastery from Tibet. For information, call 379-5133, or stop by the Queen's Box Office in the John Deutsch University Centre.

The Dalai Lama

The Dalai Lama is quite likely the most-loved leader of any nation on earth. The feelings Tibetans have for him are, for most Westerners, impossible to relate to. Although he has not been in Tibet for 34 years, he is revered by old and young alike. Visitors to Tibet know to bring dozens of photographs of the Dalai Lama - these are more valuable to Tibetans than money or other souvenirs.

The Dalai Lama's Five-Point Peace Plan

- 1) Abandonment of China's population transfer policy which threatens the very existence of the Tibetans as a people.
- 2) Respect for the Tibetan people's fundamental rights and democratic freedoms.
- 3) Restoration and protection of Tibet's natural environment and the abandonment of China's use of Tibet for the production of nuclear weapons and the dumping of nuclear waste.
- 4) Transformation of the whole of Tibet into a zone of peace.
- 5) Commencement of earnest negotiations on the future status of Tibet and of relations between the Tibetan and Chinese people.

self as a servant. He then played with the youngest child. But the child quickly identified him, and even called out the name of Kewtsang's monastery.

The group left, but returned a few days later with a formal deputation. This time,

Lama is complex. The government, itself run along traditional Tibetan Buddhist lines, selects a search party. This party usually begins a search for the next leader a few years after the death of the last Dalai Lama. The search uses auspicious events and symbols, to determine the heir to the leadership.

The Dalai Lama's Five-Point Peace Plan

- 1) Abandonment of China's population transfer policy which threatens the very existence of the Tibetans as a people.
- 2) Respect for the Tibetan people's fundamental rights and democratic freedoms.
- 3) Restoration and protection of Tibet's natural environment and the abandonment of China's use of Tibet for the production of nuclear weapons and the dumping of nuclear waste.
- 4) Transformation of the whole of Tibet into a zone of peace.
- 5) Commencement of earnest negotiations on the future status of Tibet and of relations between the Tibetan and Chinese people.

self as a servant. He then played with the youngest child. But the child quickly identified him, and even called out the name of Kewtsang's monastery.

The group left, but returned a few days later with a formal deputation. This time, they brought a number of items, some of which belonged to the previous Dalai Lama. The infant correctly identified the items belonging to the last Dalai Lama, saying "it's mine, it's mine." Soon the party was convinced they'd found the new incarnation.

Looking back on the years before Tibet was invaded, the Dalai Lama remembers "the best years of my life ... And although there is clearly no use indulging in feelings of nostalgia, still I cannot help feeling sad whenever I think of the past. It reminds me of the terrible suffering of my people."

The Dalai Lama resides in Dharamsala, in North India. He travels often, speaking around the world. Over the past summer, he addressed the United Nations Conference on

Human Rights, in Vienna, Austria. (The Chinese delegation protested his speech, and almost succeeded in preventing it altogether.) Recently, the Dalai Lama visited Canada.

The Dalai Lama gives an audience to those who have a genuine interest in meeting him. If you're planning to be in India, and can make arrangements six months ahead, you may have a chance to meet the leader. People who have met him speak of a charming, radiant man who leaves an unforgettable impression of wisdom and compassion.

In 1989, the Dalai Lama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, in recognition of his tireless work for the people of Tibet, and his adherence to non-violent means of action.

The Dalai Lama with the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1988.

Or contact the Tibet-Canada Committee in Ottawa at 748-7469.

Brock Martland is a third-year English student who developed an interest in Tibet while delinquently travelling in Asia last school year.

Tibetan monks, in ceremonial regalia, perform sacred chants. The monks have the amazing ability to produce two or even three vocal tones simultaneously - thus each monk can harmonize with himself, while some can sing a musical chord! The effect of nine such voices is intense, though the chanting may not suit all ears. The monks of Ganden Jangtse, a monastery-in-exile in South India, will be performing in Kingston tomorrow. The performance will raise money for refugees arriving at the monastery from Tibet. For information, call 379-5133, or stop by the Queen's Box Office in the John Deutsch University Centre.

Sports

Intramural Action

BY ROB CAMP
The Queen's Journal

Courage, dedication, perseverance. These are just some of the traits of the runner. The ability to go out no matter what the weather, braving ferocious dogs and sadistic drivers, are but some of the trials a runner must face. For what glory, none but the completion of an arduous journey. NO LONGER! Win fame and fortune by competing in the Harrier. Impress members of the opposite sex (or the same sex, or both sexes).

Yes the Harrier is the place to be. How do I participate you ask? Simply show up at the sign-up at 5:30pm, Tuesday, October 5th out at the tennis courts at West Campus. The race begins at 6:00pm, winner takes all.

Perhaps you heard the pitter patter of rain drops on your roof on Sunday. This unfortunate weather phenomena caused a slight delay in the Bewic Softball Tournament. Games will be played on this Saturday. The schedule is more or less the same but it should be checked on the BEWIC board. A quick prediction for the toumey has PHE and Emotional Ketchup Burst playing in the finals in a game too close to call.

Finally the Golf tournament is taking place today so if you don't already know check your tee-off times down by the men's changeroom. Also all league sports are well under way so check the boards for game times. Take it easy and I'll see you at the game.

Soccer Shorts

BY SKIP BITTMAN
The Queen's Journal

Last week's Soccer News:

The first skirmish took place on Saturday (the 18th) against the U of T Blues. Queen's faced a very skilled and disciplined Toronto squad that made no effort to hide their aggressive attacking game plan. Queen's Captain Marc Labrom categorized the Gaels effort generously as a "sub-par performance at best". The Gaels lost this one 2-0.

The next day, Erik Igel was the embodiment of the Gaels' intense passion as he opened the scoring with a brave header. Rookie goalkeeper Liam Stevenson was inspirational. With approximately five minutes left to play in the first half, Erik Igel again displayed his fortitude as he challenged the York defence with a lunging shot that produced goal number 2. An unfortunate lapse in concentration by the Gaels defence allowed York to bring themselves one goal behind, however, further challenges proved fruitless because the final whistle came almost immediately after the goal.

The final battle Queen's football

faced over the week was against the Carleton Ravens; which, as expected, turned out to be nothing short of a war. The Gaels' forwards were wholly ineffective on the day and the only player who did not seem to waiver in the face of the Carleton onslaught was rookie defender Brendan Johnson, who fought tooth and nail for every ball that came his way. The final score stood 4-1 Carleton, Coach Dr. Walker found the overall performance of the team quite upsetting and expects improvement.

Gaels' best player is Mr. Unknown

BY GEOFF OWEN
The Queen's Journal

In his teammates and coaches' eyes, Paul Kozan is everything that is right about team sports. He is immensely talented. He is a leader on and off the field. He is eager to learn new positions. Above all else, though, he is the quintessential team player. Putting the good of the team ahead of personal accomplishments comes so naturally to Kozan that it is little wonder that the best Gael this season remains largely anonymous. Brad Elberg, right or wrong, has received, and will continue to receive, the lion's share of the media's attention. But Kozan, not Elberg, leads the team in receiving and is second in rushing and scoring behind Rob Weir and John Thelen, respectively.

Before the season began, offensive co-ordinator Bob Howes moved Kozan out of the fullback position and made him a slot back. Howes figured this would enable Kozan to establish himself as a star. (Despite the fact that Kozan was an all-star last year, the nature of the position doesn't allow for fullbacks to be highly recognized.) So far, the move has reaped huge rewards for the Gaels. Howes rates

Kozan among the elite slot backs in the O.Q.I.F.C. and figures that at the rate his prodigy is learning that the latter will become one of the dominant players in the country. Kozan has consistently beaten smaller, quicker defensive backs in the Gael's passing game and he retains the size and strength (6'0 205lbs) to be a punishing blocker when Elberg and co. run the ball.

Although Howes says that the slot position is "the best position for [Kozan]," the change also acts as a measure of gratitude to Kozan for being so enthusiastic about playing positions other than tailback (where he was recruited out of high school).

Kozan has "stepped up" as a leader for the team this season. He is one of the most popular players on the team and is, in Howes' opinion, "the type of guy players want to go to battle with." Elberg is the team's offensive captain, indeed he embodies the very notion of 'captain.' Kozan, likewise, is also one of the team's captains. These two friends from Regina complement one another perfectly as players and as leaders. When Elberg runs, Kozan blocks, when Elberg runs a deep pattern, Kozan runs a clearing route underneath, when Elberg is vocal and intense, Kozan is subdued and jocular.

The exciting part for Queen's football fans is the number of extraordinary players on the offensive side of the ball this season. As the season progresses, the offensive line will become more stable and either Rob Weir or Steve Othen will exert himself as the starting quarterback.

These developments should allow for the running and passing games to improve. Brad Elberg will improve on his solid performance against Carleton but it is unfair to expect him to duplicate last season's brilliant achievements. Ed Kidd is looking like an All-Canadian and this trend should continue. Paul Kozan, however, is going to continue to learn and improve. After only three games at his new position, Howes describes Kozan as a "classic slotback." Kozan is slowly emerging from the shadows of anonymity where he thrived as a fullback. He should no longer be thought of as the other guy. For this team to win, Paul Kozan has to continue to be the guy. If, for the good of the team, that is what is required of him, then he will undoubtedly produce — it is the nature of this team player.

Jays have hands full with White Sox in ALCS

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

The pretenders have folded—bring on the contenders! Well, the two best teams have won their divisions, and they'll get right to it and determine the champion. No need to spend another two months on playoffs, rendering a 162-game schedule meaningless.

The Toronto Blue Jays will meet the Chicago White Sox in the best-of-seven American League Championship Series, starting in Chicago next Tuesday with the first two games. After an off-day next Thursday, action will shift to Toronto for the next three, then will return to the Windy City for the last two, if necessary, after another off-day.

Almost too close to call
The Jays and Sox could hardly be more evenly matched. Through Wednesday's games, Toronto's record was 93 wins and 65 losses, while Chicago had posted an 91-67 mark. The champions were the only AL teams to be above .500 both at home and on the road—the Jays were +15 at home and +13 away, while the Sox had +11 at home and +13 on the road.

In head-to-head play, the teams split 12 games right down the middle, each winning three at home and three away. However, it's worth noting that in the most recent meetings, home-and-home series over ten days in early July, the Jays were in the midst of their worst stretch of the season, losers of 10 of 11 games when the two met in Chicago. Earlier, during home-and-home series in late April, Toronto had starting pitchers Dave Stewart and Al Leiter on the disabled list, with Jack Morris pitching horribly and about to go onto the DL. Morris is now on the DL—again—and finished for the year after a brutal season, and since his last start on Sept. 9, the Jays have won 15 of 17 games without him, through Wednesday.

Toronto has the best basestealers in the league. There should be an interesting duel between Jays' speedsters Rickey Henderson, Devon White, Roberto Alomar and Paul Molitor, who've combined for 159 SB, and Sox catcher Ron Karkovics' throwing arm, thought by many to be the strongest in the AL. Sox ace Black Jack McDowell has a great pickoff move to first base. On the other hand, the Sox have some speed of their own with Tim Lincecum, Lance Johnson and Joey Cora (74 SB total). Jays' pitchers do not hold runners well, and Toronto catcher Pat Borders' arm is average. Most of Borders' 13 errors have come on throws. Henderson and Raines rank 1-2 in stolen bases among active players.

George Bell returns

Chicago DH George Bell is coming off knee surgery and has had a subpar year by his standards, with a .228 average, 13 HR and 63 RBI. Bell, of course, starred with the Jays for the best years of his career, including his 1987 MVP year when he hit .308, slugged 47 HR and drove in 134 runs. The often-cantankerous Bell left as a free agent after the 1990 season, finally having to accept the DH role he rejected in Toronto.

Continued on next page

Continued from previous page

since the All-Star break. However, he has thrown an AL-record 26 wild pitches, and issued 107 walks balanced by 189 strikeouts (2nd in AL). Stewart, definitely a big-game pitcher, has a career record of 6-0 in ALCS play. Hengen, at 19-9, still has a chance for 20 wins in his first full major-league season, but he has never pitched these many innings in a season before (as of Monday he had logged 212.1 IP), and could be tiring. Stottlemire has been hot in the last month. All four Jays' starters are right-handed.

The Sox have indicated they will also go four pitchers deep in their rotation, and they have four good ones, with probable Cy Young winner Jack McDowell (22-10), Alvarez (14-8), Alex Fernandez (17-9), and hotshot rookie Jason Bere (11-5), whom the Jays have never seen. Chicago's pitching depth gives them their best chance of winning the series.

Indeed, Chicago could grab several of the major postseason individual awards. In addition to McDowell, so far the only 20-game winner in the league, first basemen Frank Thomas (.316, 41 HR, 126 RBI) figures to win league MVP, as the Jays' four five candidates Olerud, Molitor, Carter, Alomar and Duane Ward will split the vote. Bo Jackson has a good chance to take Comeback Player honours after returning from hip replacement surgery to hit 15 HR in limited duty.

The SkyDome roof will be closed for all postseason games on the order of AL president Bobby Brown. That should help the Jays, since they have won nearly two-thirds of home indoor games since the Dome opened in 1989. With the roof open, their winning percentage is just over .500. Strange, yet true. One theory used to explain this is that in the SkyDome, a hitter's park, the ball carries better with the roof open. Since the Jays' pitching staff is composed of hurlers who get a lot of flyball outs, the dead air indoors helps keep the ball in the park, within range of Gold Glove centerfielder Devon White and the other Jays' flycatchers.

A recent media barrage has focused on Toronto DH Paul Molitor's cocaine use in the early 1980's, when he played for Milwaukee. This shocking escapade has stayed pretty well submerged until now. It will be interesting to see if its publicity has any effect on Molitor's play—he has had his best season at age 37 with a .332 average, 117 runs, 21 HR, and 107 RBIs.

Both go with four in rotation
Toronto hits .283 against righthanded pitching but only .265 against lefties, explaining their sub-.500 record of 21-24 against southpaws. That statistic means that Wilson Alvarez, Chicago's only lefthanded starter, could play a key role. However, Alvarez leads the league with 115 walks. Jays' manager Cito Gaston has announced a four-man starting rotation of Juan Guzman (14-3), Dave Stewart (12-8), Pat Hengen (19-8) and Todd Stottlemire (11-1). Gaston decided to go with four starters because Stewart and Stottlemire have both spent time on the DL this season, and he figures an extra day of rest will help everybody. Guzman, with a lifetime record of 40-11 and a 3-0 post-season mark, has been rounding into form, having lost just

Jays lead in experience

Toronto has a big edge with manager Cito Gaston over Chicago's Gene Lamont. Since Gaston was hired in May 1989, the Jays have finished a grand total of TWO games out of first place at the end of the season. That came when they finished second to the Red Sox in 1990. They won the division in 1989, 1991, 1992 and this year. Although Gaston has been maligned in the media and especially on call-in sports radio shows, all the guy does is win. Contrast that with a team like the New York Yankees, baseball's proudest franchise, which has not spent ONE day alone in first place since 1983! This is manager Lamont's first post-season.

Not only do the Jays still have many core players from their 1992 World Series team, but the players they've added since—Dave Stewart, Rickey Henderson, Tony Fernandez and Paul Molitor—are all leaders who have tremendous post-season experience. On the Sox, Tim Lincecum, Steve Sax, Tim Belcher, Kirk McCaskill, Ellis Burks, Mike LaValliere and George Bell have all seen post-season action, but with other teams. Of particular importance will be the Sox's young pitchers' reactions to playoff pressure. Closer Roberto Hernandez and starters McDowell, Fernandez, Alvarez and Bere are talented—it's a matter of how those young nerves stand up. They could do very well.

Jays in seven games

In conclusion, the Jays have more ways to win games, with their recently improved pitching, their speed, their defense, and their power. Give Toronto a small edge with their deeper bullpen, aided by Mike Timlin's return to form. Chicago's starting pitching is excellent, and if Frank Thomas gets hot he could almost win the series himself, but Toronto's experience under fire should prevail. The big IFs for the Jays are Joe Carter and Mike Timlin. If Joe catches one of his torrid streaks, Toronto will almost certainly triumph. If not, Toronto has enough threats to win, but the series will be closer. TORONTO IN SEVEN GAMES, as Pat Hengen wins game seven on the road, where the Jays are 11-3 in games he starts.

ODYSSEY GROUP TRIPS

Ski Groups
Odyssey Travel has, for years, been organizing Group Trips for both Students and Faculty at Queen's University. We have developed special relationships with Ski Hills in both Quebec and the U.S. Call us for a quotation for your Ski Group trip this winter!

Sun Groups
Odyssey Travel offers a wide selection of Sun Packages for groups. We offer excellent prices and will generally offer a free or subsidized trip for group leaders. Come and see us. We can help you decide the best value for your group!

5% off most packages

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

Cards of Distinction

Queen's Student Special
7 Months Special
for only $229.00

XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX
SUPERIOR NAUTILUS

Aerobics, Nautilus, Free Weights, Cardio,
featuring ... Star Trac 2000 Treadmills,
The Step, The Slide, StairMaster,
Windracer, Concept II Rowers

Where your name means something
80 Princess St. 544-6222
Inquire about our Queen's Alumni Club

With winter coming on, we want to give you something to think about!

Personal, quality service. Our endorsement of superior equipment. Value for your energy dollar.

Our continued reputation as Kingston's oil specialists.

ROSENEUES

5 Cataragul Street
Kingston
546-4242
We take your home comfort... personally!

FRIDAY AFTERNOON
COMEDY

Alfie's Pub
PRESENTS

ROYAL BLOOD

THIS AFTERNOON

OCTOBER 1st
DOORS OPEN AT 1:00

Entertainment

Band passes the Acid Test

Acid Test
Stages
BY SARAH ENGLISH
The Queen's Journal

Late last week I was bemused to notice the billboard outside Stages proclaiming "Monday: The Big Drop" under which read "Acid Test Tuesday." Ha, the irony. My mental idea of the band included words like dance music, girl singer, some guitars, dance music, and dance music. Nonetheless, I braved the cold of Tuesday night to go and check it out.

Stages is a big venue. I was reminded of this when I walked in and noticed the lack of people. Still optimistic, I was happy to see that the band was ready to go on.

The band began with their single, "Drop", off their recently released album of the same name. Lucy Di Santo took this opportunity to point out that Much Music, who brag incessantly about their devotion to Canadian and independent bands, won't play their video (for reasons unknown). She encouraged the rather sparse audience to call in and request "Drop", then the band kicked into the song.

This band has energy; an intense, off-handedly serious, kick-ass feel. Di Santo, the vocalist, exuded total confidence and attitude that reminded me of Kim Gordon of Sonic Youth (probably due to the long hair and slinky, black bass guitar). Pure was another band that came to mind, solely because of the keyboard player with his shaved-with-long-bangs-hair-do-and-constant bouncing. The ultra-high stacks at the back of the stage added a terrific touch to their stage presence. Their DJ/keyboard player was perched on top of these, over-

Nice outfit. Can you do that in a plant holder?

Des Olsen

seeing the whole show in an on-chant, "I am King" way.

As the set continued, what I had expected to hear (dance/pop music with a few guitar riffs) was blown out the side door by the noisy, heavy sounds of Acid Test. Di Santo's vocals were strong and rather whiny, and totally fit the band's sound. Her range was impressive and in several instances her voice took on a sweet and pretty tone, proving she is not just your average crooner, and appreciates varied vocals.

After the feedback from "Push On" cleared, the band gave Mike Harland the opportunity to show his stuff with a turntable. With his skater-style clothing and super-short hair, and especially with the added funky drumming from their drummer, Jim, I was totally tempted to scream out the lyrics from an old Beastie Boys' tune. This urge continued into "Shake", a wicked song in which Harland's scratching blended perfectly. This song also gave me a wired sense of déjà vu. Perhaps a flashback to The Inbreds' days with DJ Rave.

As the show thundered on, I finally ripped my eyes from the stage long enough to take a gander around the bar. A few more people had wandered in, but the place was still disappointingly dead.

Soon my attention reverted to the stage, where Acid Test was finishing up a B-52's cover and launching into its "hit", "Mr. Skin" is a love it or hate it tune, repetitive but catchy. The band received somewhat of a break when Bruce McDonald included it on the soundtrack of his film Highway 61. It then received quite a bit of radio airplay. In any case, they performed the song with enough deviation to make it interesting, but straight-edged enough for people to recognize it right away.

Announcing it as their tribute to punk rock, they dived into "Touch Me". DJ "Jus Rite" (Harland) came down from his throne to play bass so that Di Santo could have more freedom to flail around (and play tambourine). A wicked track, it pounded on to a huge finale during which the keyboardist sealed the stacks of monitors at the front of the stage to scream the closing lyrics, then scrambled on top of his keyboard to end the song in a barrage of noise.

After two more songs, then an amazing Beatles cover, Acid Test left the stage, leaving one final screech of feedback which lasted at least three minutes (yes, I timed it!).

Despite the fact that the keyboards seemed rather overwhelmed by the rest of the band, Acid Test presented an amazing wall of sound which was really impressive.

Rumours of an international tour abound, as well as dates with Front 242, shows which will no doubt garner a stronger following. Here's hoping that next time they pass through town, they'll get the audience they deserve.

Ukrainian dance troupe dazzles Kingston

Hopak Ukrainian Dance Company
The Grand Theatre
BY MEGAN NICHOLS
The Queen's Journal

With an explosion of sound and a medley of colours fuelled by tremendous energy, the Hopak Ukrainian Dance Company burst on to the stage of The Grand Theatre Monday night, ready to entertain the audience with elements of both contemporary and traditional Ukrainian culture.

The full cast of the company opened the evening, performing a vibrant, upbeat dance that immediately established a festive atmosphere. The women wore traditional costumes, and with their immaculate, brightly coloured dresses and painted, smiling faces, resembled china dolls; the men were dressed in traditional white embroidered blouses and colourful trousers.

Though I enjoyed the dancing most of all, the orchestral and vocal performances were wonderful as well. I think my appreciation of the traditional folk songs, performed by Tatiana Onistchenko and Olga Trinko, would have been enhanced if I understood Ukrainian. I especially realized this when I heard the elderly Ukrainian woman sitting near me singing along softly, yet passionately, with some of the melodies. The songs were lilting and beautiful; the performers had rich voices that sang of lost loves and disappointments, as I was informed by the Ukrainian gentleman beside me. Ukrainian music has been heavily influenced by the East, which is why many of the songs are performed in minor keys that evoke the sad, sorrowful element that characterizes them.

The violin solos were similarly soulful and lamenting, although they varied to incorporate playful waltzes as well as foreboding tunes. The two violinists were impressive with their dexterous fingers, which literally flew during an upbeat piece, while the rest of the small orchestra kept up as well. The music permeates both the dance and the songs of the Ukrainian culture, and is an essential ingredient of its richness and vibrancy.

The dancing itself was very different from anything in the West, and had the audience in awe. Some dances were very traditional, and in the custom of certain mountain civilizations and villages in the Ukraine, such as wedding dances, while others were original contemporary pieces. Most of these featured the dashing male troupe and were comic, centred around the idea of competitions, parties and skirmishes, in which they would attempt to outdo each other through their dancing prowess. One young man had a particular talent for spins, of which he would do about twenty in succession; others had impressive leaping skills; others had a peculiar acumen for performing almost entirely in a squatting position. One dance centred around an arm-wrestling competition; another around a sword fight.

The women's dances were more traditional - they didn't seem to

Please see HOPAK on page 22

Romania's Tree of Nihilism

Le Chene (The Oak)
Directed by Lucian Pintilie
Princess Court
BY IAN PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

This film is a journey through successive catastrophes... What good will be left in a human being, in a community, when they try to adapt to the Apocalypse and treat it as normal, uncontrollable and banal? And when does cynicism and black humour - of which we Romanians are so proud - cease to be a shield?

-Lucian Pintilie

A casting call Romanian style.

Romanian filmmaker Lucian Pintilie's comments on his latest film, Le Chene (The Oak), are worth citing simply because, unlike the bulk of "behind the scenes" materials which accompany every release, they get to the heart of the matter. That Pintilie finds that heart to be dark and empty explains the unrelenting starkness of this drama, an often harrowing (though also blackly comic) road trip through Romania.

The film opens in Bucharest in 1988. In a dank apartment, a young schoolteacher, Nela (Maia Morgenstern), chain smokes as her father (whom she reveres) dies of cancer beside her. Scratchy home movies from happier times play on a wall.

After her father is cremated, Nela sets out (with his ashes in a Nescafe can) for her new job in a small town.

Thus begins the cycle of catastrophe: a flood wipes out a bridge en route; Nela's first experience in the town is as the victim of an attempted sexual assault, which leads to callousness at the police station and taunts at work.

Nela's only friend proves to be Mitica, a rebellious doctor who, as it turns out, drove off her attackers. Idealistic and outspoken (this is a bad combination in Romania under Ceausescu), Mitica is imprisoned for giving an inspector a kick in the ass.

Upon his release (secured, of course, through the intervention of a higher-up - not through justice), Mitica, too, has a loved one to lay to rest, a spiritual colleague.

The remainder of the film is comprised of two journeys made by Nela and Mitica: first, to bury his friend's body in his home village, and second, to bury Nela's father's ashes at the foot of an oak tree, in accordance with his last wishes.

Trains provide a central motif in the film. Nela's journey begins on a train, and, shortly after her arrival, she is assaulted by a group of rail workers.

Furthermore, her recollection of her father's heroism is persistently challenged by allegations that he lay his arm on the tracks

Please see ROOTLESS on page 22

Queen's film-makers shine at Telefest

Renee Hill (right) schmoozed with Highway 61 star, Valerie Buhagiar at Telefest

Mike Kavanagh

TV Ontario Telefest
BY MICHAEL KAVANAGH
Queen's Journal

Queen's film studies has proven once again that size isn't everything. Competing against students from 20 colleges and universities, including "big" film schools with excellent reputations as Ryerson and York, Queen's film-makers walked away from the TV Ontario Telefest awards last Thursday with some impressive awards.

First place in the long drama category went to Purple Jesus, a film about student drinking, produced by Michele Lawson and directed by Tom Costain, both fourth year Queen's film students. Reflecting upon her award, Lawson said that "it is an honour, and also a nice chance to thank the people involved in the production."

"Queen's film has a strong tradition of producing socially relevant material, and although Queen's has a reputation for being a theory-oriented program, the many production awards we have won over the years, proves we can do both just fine thank you."

The award for Purple Jesus was presented by Canadian film director Patricia Rozema (I've Heard the Mermaids Singing) and Steve Paikin, a CBC Anchor. The Telefest judges said that they were "tremendously impressed," and that Purple Jesus "communicated its message without self-indulgence."

But that is not all. Queen's also took first place for the educational video Put Me In, Coach, produced by third year film students Rob Lindsay and Blair Latta. This tape, sponsored by The Lung Association, shows children how asthma can be managed when playing sports. Its characters include a hockey-playing rhinoceros from the planet Lindros. The rhino was unavailable for comment. The judges raved about this film commenting that: "There are many, many things about this production which are innovative, clever, funny and fascinating."

A number of other awards were given to Queen's. Lorin Raine took second place in short drama for his Ruins, produced in his fourth year at Queen's. Michele Lawson (Purple Jesus) also won third place in long documentary for her third year film, Capital Punishment. Sara Pickett and Renee Hill took third place in educational video for their birth control film, What Did He Do Wrong? All the videos were projects for a Queen's film course, except Purple Jesus, which was a fourth year honours thesis project.

The gala ceremony for the TV Ontario Telefest was held on Thursday night at the Phoenix Club in Toronto. Queen's students spent the evening schmoozing with celebrities from the Canadian Film industry and admiring their free TV Ontario T-Shirts. Among the stars out for the evening were Valerie Buhagiar (Highway 61) and Rick Green (Four on the Floor, Prisoners of Gravity).

Don't forget to watch TV Ontario on October 14 at 8:00 p.m., when the winning films from the festival will be featured on the program Blood, Sweat, and Tape.

BEER FAX

SEVEN (7) DAYS LEFT TO BREW FOR HOME-COMING!

BREW-HA-HA

544-1443

237 PRINCESS STREET

save $15 on your first brew!

with this coupon

valid until Oct 15, 1993

BREW-HA-HA 237 PRINCESS STREET 544-1443

DOMINO THEATRE
370 King Street West

OPEN AUDITIONS CHARLEY'S AUNT

By Brandon Thomas
Directed by Richard Linley

CAST REQUIRED: 3 men ages 40-70 yrs
3 men ages 19-24 yrs
1 woman age 45-55 yrs
3 women age 17-22 yrs
(Ability to speak with British Accent)

AUDITION DATES: Mon., October 4 & Tues., October 5/93
7:00 PM - 9:00 PM
In the Domino Theatre Lounge

PLAY DATES: December 2 - December 18/93
For more information call 374-3323

JJ'S BISTRO Bar
We inspire eating!

Hi Boys and Girls!!
Today's Subject: Mathematics

When is the following true?
 $(\text{Apple} + \text{Banana}) < \text{Money}$

SOLUTION: When $\text{Apple} = \text{great}$ and $\text{Banana} = \text{JJ's atmosphere}$
= Poutine, Salads, Draft, Cappuccino
Steak and Chicken Sandwiches

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

BRIGHT EYES

Glowing face. Lively mind.
Give your family and friends a portrait that shows you as you really are — animated, vital and ready for the world.

For the most important photograph of your life, make an appointment now at Sparks Studios, where imaginative, innovative photography captures the unique spirit of the individual in every portrait.

Packages to suit all needs and budgets.

Sparks Studios
330 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6.
Phone: (613) 549-5560 Fax: (613) 549-4268
AN OFFICIAL TRICOLOUR PHOTOGRAPHER

Ig came, Ig saw, Ig conquered

Iggy Pop
American Caesar
Virgin
BY STEVE CAIN
The Queen's Journal

One of the larger miracles of the late 20th century is the fact that Iggy Pop is still alive.

Nearly as miraculous is the fact that he is still putting out listenable music in 1993, while many of his peers are dead—physically or creatively.

American Caesar is Iggy's (if I'm counting right) 15th album as a solo artist and 43rd(!) release if you count his work with The Stooges since 1969. Really a stunning achievement when you think about it. Of course, it hasn't all been Funhouse, Raw Energy, Lust for Life and The Idiot the whole time through; there were also the low points... like Instinct, or Zombie Birdhouse.

Still, Iggy's looking good these days. 1990's Brick By Brick brought him back into the mainstream again with production by Don Was and guest appearances by Slash, Kate Pierson and other notables. All of the sudden Iggy was out Rockin' the Vote, appearing on charity albums, getting rotation on video channels... was this the Idiot, the Iguana, the psychopathic jester we all knew and loved? Fans were known to chant "Gimmie back my Ig!" all the while humming along to "Candy" and "Home."

If Iggy followed contemporary trends American Caesar would be his retrenchment album. A "kick out the jams", self-mutilation, larynx ripper of an album. The cover, featuring a barechested and pumped-up (the still pale) Ig and the label: "Parental Warning: This is an Iggy Pop Record" would seem to substantiate this expectation.

If Iggy followed contemporary trends American Caesar would be his retrenchment album.

Well, put away your instruments of self-laceration, Iggy's still huggable and even Pearl Jam fans can handle this stuff.

American Caesar is a confessional album of sorts. Leading off with the instrumental track, "Character", which nonetheless has lyrics printed on the innersleeve, Iggy shows his resentment about how things have changed since his Stooge days: Well I'll tell you one good thing about some of these junkies—they had some character. They may have driven me nuts sometimes and screwed up, but at least when they played the damn

States: on one hand admiring the freedoms and ideals behind the constitution, but on the other railing against the perversions and injustice rampant in their practice. I don't know what it says about music in the '90s but, to be honest, the video (long version) is even better than the song with its cut and soundbite effect, along with printed commentary that includes Iggy's reminiscing about his early days in the music biz and an unnamed woman discussing her relationship to the U.S. All this and more... Iggy comments on singing with Debbie Harry on the Cole Porter tribute and her wry response to Iggy's melancholia: "Iggy, you have got a

Please see IGGY'S on page 22

FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1993

IS THE FINAL DATE TO ADD A FULL COURSE OR A FALL TERM HALF COURSE (WITH PERMISSION OF INSTRUCTORS)

The AMS Committee on Racism and Ethnic Discrimination is looking for directions.

Do you, your class, your committee or your collective have ideas or directions?

Join us this Wednesday, Oct. 6, at 5:30pm in the Memorial Room in the JDUC. Or, you can call the AMS Education Commission at 545-2725.

Labels: POLICY CHANGES, ADVOCACY, INTEREST GROUPS

The good, the bad and the Bora

Bands that play covers are Laskin for it

Bora Laskin
The Toucan
BY MARK OPASHINOV
The Queen's Journal

The rock 'n' roll creation is pretty simple. The typical rock 'n' roll song is composed of nothing more than a hook, a couple of riffs, a bridge, a chorus or two and a snazzy ending. The typical rock 'n' roll instrumentation is, at its core, nothing more than guitar, bass, drums and voice. From these few elements thousands upon thousands of songs have been created. Complexity is not the musical hallmark of rock 'n' roll as a body. The reason anybody stays interested in rock 'n' roll past high-school is because rock 'n' roll, based on its simple constituent elements, is a huge, endless (as long as record companies are out there throwing millions at its most marketable practitioners) variation on a theme. In other words, you know one or five or six rock 'n' roll songs, you know all of 'em.

This is why it's the creative variation that is interesting. This is also why I hate cover bands—on principle. In fact, the more accurately a cover band renders a cover of a song, the more I hate them. The further away from the original version of a song a band takes their cover, the more interesting it becomes. Witness Laibacha's cover of the entire White Album. Or their seven versions of "Sympathy for the Devil". The creative variation of the rock 'n' roll theme is a process of re-discovery or re-invention and the post-pubescent delight in rock 'n' roll comes from this process. The rendering of a perfect cover of a song is a process of re-production. This I can do better than any cover-band with my CD-player. The faint pleasure of recognition that one gets from listening to unoriginal covers is a primitive delight I can do without.

This brings me to Bora Laskin. Bora plays well. Bora grooves about with sufficient rock 'n' roll spastic energy (if a little self-consciously). Bora has white rock 'n' roll sex-appeal. Bora, unfortunately, does covers. When Bora does covers, they do them well, usually too well. Their sets on Sunday night at the Toucan contained too many of the perfectly-executed re-productions that I detest and too few of the different, re-interpretive covers I rather admire.

Bora, happily, also does a few of their own songs. Each time they did one of these, I imagined for a while that it was a cover I didn't recognize but that, for some strange reason, was much better than all the others. Each time, I was tickled pink (not my natural colour) to hear: "That was a Bora original." I'm positive it wasn't my imagination, or my desire to fit the facts to the theory—these songs were many times better than the covers and made coming to hear Bora worth the hassle.

This band ought to do a shorter set of all originals (well, perhaps a few innovative covers) rather than spill their seed in the re-productive process to no creative avail. Their own songs really were very good, and each throbbed just right in a rock 'n' roll sort of way. Each was foot-poundingly interesting because they were a solution to the old rock 'n' roll problem of how to put together a song about sex, or love or drugs (really the same thing) or rock 'n' roll (ditto) in a way no one has done it before, with the same instruments and the same elements.

Bora is well seeing in exact proportion to the number of originals they do. Scream at them to do their own stuff. It really is better.

RADIO DAZE

CFRC 101.9 FM
STEREO 101.9 FM
CFRC 101.9 / 90.9 Cable

Special events this coming week include:

Live coverage of Queen's Golden Goals vs Concordia U at Richardson Stadium 12:30 on Saturday, October 2nd.

Dig Circus and Whethermon Groove Tube exclusive interviews on Heated Edge: Friday, 3pm

Tune in for the news that pertains to Queen's and Kingston Mon-Fri at 5pm on CFRC Notebook

Express yourself on CFRC Call-in Mon-Thu at 10pm

Due to unforeseen printing difficulties the new Program Guide will not be available this coming week as intended. To assist you here is a listing of some programs.

After Stonewall—Lesbian, gay and bisexual magazine show—Sunday, 7pm

Top Rankin—Reggae, ska, African and Worldbeat—Saturday, 4:30pm
Classics by Request—as it implies—Sunday, 12 noon

Blues Inc. Cajun to Texan Blues and more—Friday 6pm

The Jazz Connection—Big Band, swing and contemporary Jazz—Sunday at 9pm

Topping the Ether—metal, loud rock—Saturday, 12 midnight

Coolidge—Punk, grunge and noise—Sunday, 12 midnight

If there is an announcement that you would like to have read on CFRC-FM, drop it off at the station or mail it (inter-campus mail it is free) to "Happenings" c/o CFRC FM, Carruthers Hall. Please type the message and include a contact name and phone number.

Pizza Hut*
Delivery & Take Out

NEW

21 BIG SLICES

TWOFOOT PIZZA
TWO SQUARE FEET WITH A NEW THIN CRUST

$11.99 one topping $13.99 up to 3 toppings
Take Out Only Delivery and Take Out

MINIMUM ORDER $7.50 + TAX.
(AFTER ALL COUPON REDEMPTIONS)

FREE DELIVERY
JUST CALL 549-FAST

572 PRINCESS ST.
DRIVERS CARRY LIMITED CASH.
BILLS OF $50.00 AND LARGER CANNOT BE ACCEPTED.

SAVE $3 OR $2

$3 off a large 3+ topping pan pizza / $2 off a medium 3+ topping pan pizza

Pizza Hut*
DINE-IN, DELIVERY & TAKE-OUT

LARGE FOR MEDIUM CHARGE

order any large pizza and get it for the medium price

Pizza Hut*
DINE-IN, DELIVERY & TAKE-OUT

$8.99 MEDIUM

Any one of Canadian, Hawaiian or Triple Crown.

Pizza Hut*
DINE-IN, DELIVERY & TAKE-OUT

$7.99 MEDIUM PEPPERONI PIZZA

Pizza Hut*
DINE-IN, DELIVERY & TAKE-OUT

CANADA ON SALE!

	TORONTO	MONTREAL
	OW Return	OW Return
FROM
Vancouver	199 339	229 359
Calgary	169 299	189 349
Edmonton	169 299	189 349
Kingston	69 98	59 109
Saskatoon	179 299	179 329
Winnipeg	139 229	149 269
St. John	149 289	129 229
Halifax	159 269	129 209
St. John's	199 379	169 329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel

549-3553 549-3561

UNITED WAY SPONSORED

SWEATER SALE

MONDAY, OCTOBER 4
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6

Iggy's got a biggie

Continued from page

biggie!" Iggy's chorus also gets my vote for 1993's best literary allusion in a punkish song for "Exterminate the Brutes!"

But is Iggy a modern day Kurtz, isolated from the real world but commanding large legions of dangerous subversives? Well, like Conrad's character, Iggy is thin and pale (Copala's corpulent Kurtz was not textually valid) and a sometime poet.

Iggy does spend much of the time examining his own emotional/physical states on the trilogy of tunes: "Hate", "Jealousy" and "Sickness," but he also goes on to give his world view on the current state of U.S. from race issues, to drug problems, and politics as well as revealing his attitude to his own history. Where Iggy stands to view all this, however, is still in question. On tracks like "Mixin' the Colors" he seems to be a godfather of the youth movement, no longer part of, but willing to comment on, their attitudes; I like kids with the opened-up faces! I like the kids with the ways of their own! If you leave the hate alone tonight! Music's gonna get you home tonight.

Mostly, however, he talks about himself. On the raucous, yet lyrically powerful, "Perforation Problems" Iggy sings about his heroin past while on the Woody Guthrie-like "Highway Song", he makes it known that: I've played the clown when down he fell! But bein' down ain't bein' a loser.

Indeed, the once-down Iggy can still rock in places. "Boogie Boys" sounds almost Stoogish with its sloppy guitar and inane lyrics (I like to eat spaghetti with tomato sauce... while "Hate", in part, moves towards the band's more experimental moments like "1970" - without the primal screaming.

He moves elsewhere on the musical map with "It's Our Love", recalling his synth work on Blah, Blah, Blah - an underrated period in Pop's musical experimentation. His two ballad/social commentary songs "Fuckin' Alone" and "Social Life" make nice peaks on the album, the former being a great mood piece featuring simple observational recitation over a light bongo and acoustic guitar track. Steve Jones co-writes "Beside You", showing that Iggy's not the only punk to mellow out in his old age. The song is musically, the closest to his work on Brick By Brick, being the most poppy song on the album. It builds nicely and features pleasant vocals by Lisa Germano, albeit singing sappy lyrics.

Pop ends the 71 minute album with a hit and a miss. "Caesar" is a seven minute dirge/guitar loop piece over which Iggy shows he's watched a PBS show on the Roman Empire and takes on the persona of Caesar - throw them to the lions stuff. It sucks.

"Louie Louie", however, is a delight. Apparently an old Stooze standby, the tired Kingsman frat-sung actually regains some energy through sloppy guitar and piano, and Iggy's new lyrics are more fun (and more intelligible) than the original.

At this point you can't really call Iggy for selling out his sound. I mean, what really does define his sound, the proto-punk thrash of Funhouse or the pure rock and roll of Brick By Brick? American Caesar falls somewhere in the middle of these two. A mediocre album with a few standouts, the lyrical honesty and introspection make it worth more than few spins to the average listener, and at least a dozen more for the fans.

25 year I been sittin' in my bedroom thinkin' stuff up, and thinkin' how I feel. You tell how you really feel, you get burned. I'm ready to go down in flames, but I don't want to. In normal life I bottle things up and smile. Only in this world, the music world, can I deliver something worth living for to my life. I tried to make this album as good as I could with no imitations of other people and no formula shit. This is individual expression. If you want to know more about me, write me and I'll reply. Love Iggy.

Cafe Max

LUNCH AND DINNER

FROM 11:30 am TO 10:00 pm.

10% OFF EVERY MEAL. (SUNDAY TO THURSDAY)

ASK FOR YOUR 10% OFF CARD, VALID UNTIL MAY '94

LUNCH FOR $6.45

DINNER FROM $7.95 TO $12.95

EVERY MEAL COMES WITH SMALL SALAD, AND GARLIC BREAD.

39 Brock Street, 547-2233

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	Saturday	7:00	Kingston Folk Club
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE	The Oak	9:00	Blue Monday
824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442	World's Best Commercials	9:00
Sleepless in Seattle	Sunday	7:00
Age of Innocence	World's Best Commercials	9:00
Jurassic Park	The Oak	7:00
The Good Son	The Oak	9:00
Manhattan Murder Mystery	World's Best Commercials	9:00
Striking Distance	STUDENT FILM THEATRE
The Real McCoy	Ellis Auditorium
	Friday	7:00 9:00 12:00
CAPITOL THEATRE	Boyz 'n the Hood
223 Princess St. 546-5395
The Program	CLUBS
Searching For Bobby Fischer	AJ'S HANGAR
True Romance	Friday	The Hopping Penguins
Airborne	Saturday	The Hopping Penguins
The Fugitive	Sunday	Wild Blues Yonder
The Man Without a Face	THE TOUCAN
The Firm	Friday	The Smartest Monkeys
Undercover Blues	Saturday	The Mahanes
	Monday	Fo! Spider
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA	THE WELLINGTON
394 Princess St. 546-FILM	Friday	Gerry D'Kane
Friday	Saturday	Gerry D'Kane
The Oak
World's Best Commercials

Rootless Romania

Continued from page 19

to avoid combat duty. (The most striking use of a train in a film by an Eastern European director might be, in Runaway Train, the American film directed by Russian Andrei Konchalovsky; only a Russian would conceive of life as a runaway train - its course is predetermined, but the speed is out of control.)

Another noteworthy aspect of the film is its portrayal of the Romanian armed forces. In the West, we were always of two minds about the former Eastern European regimes - we were amused by their exploding TVs yet frightened by their missiles.

Here, the Romanian military forces are initially presented as laughable and even lovable, making the film's conclusion - which Plintjie dubs "the massacre of the innocents" - all the more shocking.

An oak, of course, dominates the film's final images, standing as the sole counter to the rootlessness which dominates the proceedings. Le Chene - and, by extension, life in contemporary Romania - is relentlessly grueling.

Grimly compelling, yet oppressively nihilistic, Le Chene is worthy yet disheartening to the point of being nearly unwatchable.

Hopak celebrates the Ukraine

Continued from page 18

have the opportunity to express themselves as the men did - but their precision and grace were very admirable, and often included some very fancy footwork. Many of the dances involved the formation and reconstruction of patterns, especially those that included the entire company.

During one of the vocal duets the female dancers and one male dancer entered to act out the lyrics of the song. The tale centred around the trips of two young maidens to a well, which is the traditional place for a young woman to secretly meet a man. Here the two maidens meet the same young man - and of course a rivalry ensues, which results in flirtation, seducing and huge simpering eyes. Another dance featured two men and a woman, and acted out the story of the woman's husband being the guiled into leaving the house so that the other fellow could attempt to seduce her, against her will.

The 45-member troupe concluded as they began, with a number performed by the entire cast, full of energy and zeal. The gentleman beside me described the evening as an example of Ukrainian hillbilly culture; folk primitivism polished to a diamond sheen. With an element of contemporary choreography and humour added, the Hopak Dance Company provided Kingston with a whirlwind night of Ukrainian culture, replete with powerful musical-voluptuous voices and a refreshingly different style of dance.

FOCUS ON FASHION

Eyeglasses, selection & quality second to none.

Contact lenses, all types, certified fitters.

Lenses, thin, ultra violet screen & scratch resistant.

Binoculars, Telescopes & Magnifiers.

Sunglasses, Vuarnet, Ray Ban, Tone Ray & many more.

Special attention to Difficult Prescriptions

549-2020

324 King St. E, Kingston, Ontario

Marc F. Raymond OPTICIANS LTD.

(Across from Market Square)

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

WORD PROCESSING: $1.75 per page. Pick up and delivery. Essays, thesis, anything usually 24 hour service. Call Jennifer at 634-1151.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money-back guarantee. Call MEDLAW SEMINARS at 531-9016.

NOT POLITICS AS USUAL! National Party at Queen's founding meeting Tuesday, October 5th, 7:30 p.m., lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Guest speaker: Kingston National Party candidate Chris Papadopoulos. All welcome!

THANKSGIVING DINNER at the Art of Cooking School, October 5th, Dilled Trout; smoked turkey, apricot-cranberry coulis, wild rice pancakes; passion fruit sorbet in chocolate phyllo cup, fruited caramel sauce. 546-2880.

CAN'T SLEEP Call the confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators Monday - Thursday 6 - 9 p.m. 545-6000 ext 4444 or leave a message.

STUDENTS - TEACH ENGLISH OVERSEAS - Teach conversational English year round, short term or for summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Korea. Excellent pay. No experience or qualifications needed. For details and how you can apply pick up our free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or send a self-addressed stamped envelope to Asia Facts (Q.J.), P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

MUSIC LESSONS. Private or group. Piano, flute, guitar, theory, composition. Experienced, qualified instructors. Reasonable rates. Located in beautiful downtown studio. Call 530-2146.

LONG WEEKEND checklist from Soapberry Shop... 122 Princess Street. Travel size and earth friendly shampoo, conditioner, shower gel. Citronella natural insect repellent. Sun lotion, lip-block. 545-1028.

STUDENT FILM THEATRE PRESENTS "Boys in the Hood", Friday, October 1st 7 and 9 p.m. and midnight. Free giveaway courtesy of CFRC 101.9 FM. Only $3.50 - Cheaper than cheap beer. Ellis Auditorium.

CHEAP PHOTOCOPYING! 5 cents per single-sided copy, includes all taxes!! Stop by the Grey House (51 Queen's Crescent) and check out our hours, or call 545-2958. Service with a smile.

GET INVOLVED! Volunteer to be a buddy to an elderly person - join Triple "A" (Awareness of Aging and Alzheimers). To join, drop by the CORE at 183 University or call 545-6278.

MEET YOUR NEIGHBOUR B.B.Q. Sunday October 3rd 3 - 5 p.m. Bring a mug and a friend.

NOT POLITICS AS USUAL! National Party at Queen's founding meeting Tuesday, October 5th, 7:30 p.m., lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Guest speaker: Kingston National Party candidate Chris Papadopoulos. All welcome!

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!!! Individuals and student organizations wanted to promote the hottest Spring Break destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013.

HAVE SOME TIME BETWEEN CLASSES? Drop by the GREY HOUSE, 51 Queen's Crescent! Relax in its quiet and comfortable atmosphere. Eat lunch, read the paper, have some coffee. All welcome

STAR (Student Team on Alumni Relations) needs 2 drivers to deliver cakes to Queen's students in student area. Please phone 545-2060 ASAP. Paid position, need own car.

FOR SALE: Smith corona Wordprocessor (great condition) $200 or best offer, downhill skis $20 or best offer, dysfunctional Norco mountain bike FREE! Call Nicole at 542-9059.

PARKING Next to new library - $35 per week, small cars. Call 546-4797.

LOST: Keys lost during Orientation Week on ASUS key chain are my life on a ring. I must have them back - call Mike at 546-7427.

LOST: '96 Artsci jacket at Alfies last Thursday. Please call 547-6756, it's getting cold. Reward offered.

TO WHOEVER: Thanks for returning the keys that were in the pocket of the jacket you took on September 11th, however, I would also like the jacket back. Call 531-3213.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Winters coming! Please call 547-4106.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Left in Dunning, after Tales by Gaels. Call 542-6870.

GLEN: Saw you at Girdy's a few nights ago. Up for some action on the pool table? Hope to see you there soon...

HEY GORGEOUS! Guess who? It's me, your ...Rrow. This weekend isn't coming fast enough. Mousgli

Her name is MUERTE... as in DEATH! and she's officially OVER THE HILL today. Happy 21st Birthday, Banshee! Love and asparagus, Roo If it's lingerie... I'm not afraid to laugh!

HEY LIMEX! Help me, my PUC bill is skyrocketing. Get the light for me on the way in and don't forget the cards. Solitaire is no fun anymore.

MacGYVER and SLOVAK. Boys, the first month deadline is fast approaching. Before you know, the three amigos will ride again.

PHILTHY, GRUMPY, WRECK, AND THAT LAZY BUM ON THE COUCH (KILLER): Your house is a sty and you all smell! When are you guys going to clean-up? Froots can't handle it any more. He might snap! He's even started hanging out at the Journal! Do something!!!

SOUL SISTERS! Where do you buy your boots? Sorry I missed Alfie's. Hope you two are in sync soon. Don't fret one week isn't too much to overcome!

SQUISH: When are we going to get together for rounds? (I'm all wet) Heart. Star. Diamond. Stinky.

HARPIST AND BASSOONIST

required for the

Queen's Symphony Orchestra
Call 545-2066 (School of Music)
Dr. Duane Bates - Conductor
for further information

HOT TUB 'N' FUN RENTALS

Rent the Hottest Party you'll ever have!
Out self-contained units wheel easily into your yard.
Call 377-1095

Westair Space

Learn to Fly

Private Pilot Ground School
For information call 389-9323

HAS YOUR WORLD SERIES SEATS!

THE SPORTS BAR

FRI., OCT. 1	7:30 - JAYS - ORIOLES
	10:00 - FRANK BRUNO VS LENNOX LEWIS (Tentative)
SAT., OCT. 2	1:30 - TIGERS - YANKEES
	4:00 - NCAA FOOTBALL
	7:30 - JAYS - ORIOLES
	10:30 - LA KINGS - ISLANDERS
SUN., OCT. 3	11:00 - NFL PREVIEW
	1:00 - GREEN BAY - DALLAS
	1:30 - JAYS - ORIOLES
	4:00 - VIKINGS - 49ERS
	8:00 - GIANTS - BILLS
MON., OCT. 4	11:00 - WHITE SOX - INDIANS
	1:00 - SOCCER
	9:00 - REDSKINS - DOLPHINS
TUES., OCT. 5	8:00 - 1992 WORLD CHAMPION JAYS vs CHICAGO WHITES SOX GAME ONE
WED., OCT. 6	3:00 - BLUE JAYS - WHITE SOX GAME 2
	8:00 - BRAVES - PHILLIES GAME 1
THURS., OCT. 7	1:00 - WHALERS - CANADIENS
	8:00 - BRAVES - PHILLIES GAME 2
FRI., OCT. 8	1:00 - CANADIENS - PENGUINS
	8:00 - WHITE SOX - JAYS

The section that lost its faith in nihilism!

MISC.

Cervisophile by Ash Baker

Beer: How to actually drink the stuff

Drinking anything, let alone something as simple and noble as a fine beer, may not seem like a tremendously complicated exercise, and indeed the physical act itself is as natural as breathing. However, there are ways to bring out the best in beer, and raise the drinking of it from mere pleasure to an almost religious experience. Of course, much of the effectiveness of these methods depends on the beer you are drinking. Old Milwaukee tastes about the same whether it is served cold, hot, or in a bowl with bearnaise sauce. But a fine lager, or better, a pale or bitter ale, can be greatly improved in the enjoyment by taking the care to drink it as it should be drunk.

Good beer contains alcohol just like any other, and can intoxicate just as quickly, but surely this is not the reason we drink it. Only a boor would waste a 1959 Burgundy on getting wasted; the same is true of a good beer. Fine ale is meant to be savoured and enjoyed: the person who drinks it quickly and in great quantities might as well go the whole Phillistine (or was that Fill-a-stein? -ed) hog and use Mechlun lace to mop up the mess afterwards. The most important part of good drinking is to savour and enjoy the liquid you are consuming. Alcohol is a pleasant part of beer, but it is by no means the only part. If intoxication is your only aim, drink Purple Jesus or something. If you want an epiphanic imbibing experience, good beer is for you.

Having said that, fine beer should never be drunk from the bottle or can, but always poured into a glass or other vessel. As with wine, the nose of the beer is an integral part of the liquid, and adds much subtlety to the taste. Smell and taste are closely linked - this is why it is almost impossible to taste anything when your nose is plugged (try it sometime). To drink from the bottle is to simply inject beer into the mouth and down the gullet. The aroma never really reaches the nostrils, and a good measure of the taste, and therefore, the enjoyment, is lost.

Ale, then, must be drunk from an open vessel. Preferably that vessel should be made of glass. It should be at about the same temperature as the beer that will be drunk from it (more on that later), and the glass should be clean and wet. If you don't have a glass vessel, glazed stoneware is the next best thing. It should be prepared in the same way as the glass. No extensive ritual is necessary: simply keep the clean vessel in a cool place, and rinse it with cold water before drinking. Plastic and metal, however, should be avoided if possible. They have a tendency to lend a flavour of their own to the beer - this is highly undesirable.

It is the custom in Estonia, among other places, to drink from a tankard of unvarnished aromatic wood, such as cedar. This adds a wonderful flavour to the beer. I find that lager works best. It is vital, however, to soak the tankard in water for a night at least, to allow the wood to swell. If this is not done, and you attempt to drink from a dry tankard, you will end up with beer spilling in all directions, through the seams in the dry wood. The same principle applies to mahogany launches, which must actually be filled with water for a time, before they may be relied upon to float for more than two minutes.

Whether you drink beer on its own or with food is largely a matter of personal taste. I tend to lean more towards the "on-its-own" camp, but a good bitter can be nice with roast beef, and a cold lager goes well with barbecued chicken. There are some who say, however, that good ale must be drunk on its own, without the corrupting influence of food, to be truly savoured.

The question of what temperature beer should be is a bit of a contentious one. North American taste seems to lean toward iced lager, but it seems to be that this is not the best way to fully appreciate the taste of the beer. The coldness tends to anaesthetise the taste buds a bit, which is surely counterproductive. Ales and stouts especially should be served at cellar temperature, that is, cool, but not actually cold. Forty-five to Fifty degrees Fahrenheit is probably about right for ales, and a little colder for lagers.

In any case, there are my recommendations for the care and feeding of really fine beers. Feel free to disagree, but I have found that they give the most pleasurable drinking experience. Cheers!

Finally, a bit of news: the first Visiting Scholar of the year, Mary Frances Richardson, will be giving a lecture on "How To Make Good Beer At Home" on Wednesday, October 6 in Frost FG15 from 3:30 to 4:30 PM. Take note, cervisophiles!
▲ Ash Baker is cultured enough to know that drinking beer with your pinky extended is outré.

Cyberspace Cadet by Derek Walker

Dial "P" for Privacy

Is there a down side to having pizza and sexual fulfillment only a dial away? In the first part of an ongoing series, we look at the issue of privacy in our harmless-looking phone system.

There's been a lot of discussion these days about privacy, and the implication new technologies have for it. I had followed these discussions with fleeting interest until a few days ago I was galvanized into action.

I had done something simple enough, something everyone must have done thousands of times in their lives: I called a store to see what time they were open 'til I got the information I needed and thought that was the end of it.

But it wasn't. A few minutes later I got a phone call. It was the salesman, who asked me if I wanted something specific. I asked him how he got my number.

"Oh, we've got call display on our phone," he replied. I was in shock, this was my first experience with the invasion of my privacy by a new technology.

I called Bell to find out how to stop my number from being displayed on other people's phones. To my chagrin I discovered the service must be requested, and then a prefix code has to be entered each time a call is made. So if a caller gets call blocking installed, he or she still has to remember to enter the prefix code before a call is made, otherwise the call is displayed at the other end.

Call blocking is offered free, all you have to do is request it. But this was not Ma Bell's original plan. In the first proposals to the CRTC, Bell was to charge for this service. Understandably, there was an uproar that Bell would make people pay for their privacy and the company was forced to back down.

There was also much concern voiced over anonymous help phone services. If someone called into an AIDS help line, and their number were recorded and then somehow became public, the information would be disastrous to the person. Further, it was feared that women calling food shelters would then be subjected to harassment from their husbands or boyfriends who could reconnoiter the number being displayed on their phone.

While call blocking helps avoid some of these occurrences, its availability has been kept the key by Bell, who is desperately trying to convince us that we all need this new call display service (which we pay for, of course). When Bell had a booth at the Barrie St. A&P, where they were trying to sell their new phone services, I asked for some information on call blocking. After an hour of searching, the Bell employee present scrounged up a tiny pamphlet on the subject. Clearly people are being kept in the dark on how to maintain their privacy.

The new Vista phones that accompany the call display feature also have a multiple number memory. If you call one of these phones, forget to dial your prefix first to turn on call blocking, let it ring once and then hang up, the phone still has a record of your call.

Obviously knowing who's on the other end of the phone line can be very advantageous. It can help prevent obscene phone calls and abuses of public services like 911. But people must also be informed on how to maintain their privacy.

Imagine this scenario: You call a stereo shop and forget to dial your prefix first. Now the stereo store has your number and automated call-back computers call you up for months on end every week or so to tell you about the store's latest special.

Sound ridiculous? That's probably what people first said about junk mail years ago, and now it's a fact of life that your address is a commodity. Many companies will sell the information on a returned registration card to companies who specialize in collecting databases of addresses and information on their owners. It has even been rumoured that Queen's University sells the contents of its mailing list to mail-order companies whose target market is students.

By cross-referencing with other databases, some have managed to collect all sorts of information of people - everything from marital status to income to the kind of toilet paper a person uses. Watch out for those A&P Super Saver cards - they don't enter that info in the computer for nothing! So be careful with who you call, you might get more than you bargained for and look into call blocking if you value your privacy.

Bell's customer service line in Kingston (which is ALWAYS busy) is 548-1818. To enable call blocking, the prefix to dial is *67 (and then wait for the dial tone to call the number). But don't forget you have to call and request it first.

In the next Cyberspace Cadet: Have you ever called the police, used a cellular phone or sent out a message? You're probably broadcasting your call. We look at electronic peeping toms, student-ghetto-street-revenge and one guy who took on the National Security Agency.
▲ Derek Walker pretels smoke signals or messages in battles (carrier pigeons can't be trusted).

AT HANGAR
RESTAURANT & BAR

Wed. Yuk Yuk
Thurs. & Fri. The Watchmen
Sat. Foreign Journey
Sun. Wild Blues Yonder

QUEEN'S Journal

McDonald's
DELIVERY
1-800-663-2233

Volume 121, Number 11

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Tuesday, October 5, 1993

INTERESTED IN CONTRIBUTING? JOURNAL OPEN HOUSE

COME OUT TO THE JOURNAL HOUSE AT 272 EARL, TONIGHT AT 7:30PM. PERKS BEYOND YOUR WILDEST DREAMS!
LIKE FREE DONUTS!

Women claim night

March focuses on disabled women

BY TANIS ROBINSON
The Queen's Journal

The annual Take Back the Night march took place Saturday, with an emphasis on the inclusion of handicapped and disabled women.

The event, which protests violence against women, drew a crowd of about two hundred women to a dark parking lot.

"The idea is that there could be one night of the year when women could be safe," said organizer Cathy Kelly.

After the parking lot rally, the women marched and a dance for women of all abilities took place.

"Disabled women are more likely than non-disabled women to be assaulted," said Diane Tysick, chair of the board of directors for the Disabled Women's Network Kingston (DAWN), and an organizer of the rally and march.

"We wanted the dance to be accessible to as many as possible differently-abled women," Tysick said.

The event was sponsored by DAWN and the Sexual Assault Crisis Centre.

Take Back the Night is an international event that originated in Great Britain in the late seventies, and has since grown and broadened its scope.

Men are not allowed to participate in the event. As Tysick explained, "it's the one night of the year when women can walk safely without a man. We want to be free Kingston women march to Take Back the Night on Saturday.

Marika Gluckman

Student opt-outs skyrocket

BY GEOFF LANGDON
The Queen's Journal

The annual ritual of opt-outs at Queen's proved a very popular activity this year. Tentative numbers available at press time indicate a sharp rise in the number of students opting out of the various student activity fees.

Hardest hit was the Queen's Challenge, a student donation to the $70 million fund-raising campaign.

Nearly a third of the 12,215 students processed opted out of at least part of the $45 fee. This year's figure of 3,838 students who opted out is a 70 per cent increase over last year's number.

Ron Turley, Alma Mater Society business administrator, pointed out that not all of those students opted out of the whole $45 fee, though he conceded that probably "99 per cent did."

Other voluntary fees suffered similar fates. Both the Refugee Fund, which provides funding for several students at Queen's, and the United Way, had large increases in the number of opt-outs.

The AMS Health Plan was also a target of student opt-outs. 4,129 students provided proof of alternate coverage this year, compared to 2,791 students in 1992, and 2,120 in 1991, representing a doubling in two years.

Turley said there was "a definite move to opt-out this year," and cited the economic situation, as well as a streamlining of the opt-out procedure, as causes for the sharp increase in numbers.

While admitting "times are tough," Chris Gilbert, AMS deputy commissioner (internal affairs for operations), criticized the students'

Please see STUDENTS on page 6

AMSOC to dissolve

"Huge" changes for Orientation Week

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

The Alma Mater Society Orientation Committee will soon be a thing of the past, if the proposed changes which passed first reading at Assembly Thursday are implemented.

"It's a huge step forward," said this year's AMSOC Chair Silvia Luika.

Under the proposal, largely put together by Luika and Campus Activities Commissioner Alison Mitchell, AMSOC would no longer exist, and the events it organized over the week would be taken over by residence student governments, faculty orientations, and AMS commissions.

"It just makes a lot more sense," said Luika, who has been working on the proposal since February. She said a major attraction of the proposal will be the reduced costs involved.

Under the proposal, AMSOC's army of walkie-talkies and vans will no longer be needed, Luika explained, as the Main Campus Residents' Council and the Jean Royce Hall Council will not be running events all over campus like AMSOC did.

estimated that the facilitators' budget will be under half that.

MCRC Vice-President (Operations) Blair Bertrand said MCRC is "pretty excited" to take over where AMSOC has left off. He said that an MCRC orientation committee will be struck, consisting of one representative from each residence house, to plan events during the two "residence days" at the beginning of frosh week.

MCRC has "a lot of people who are keen" to get involved with frosh week, Bertrand said. Although, he said, Residence Life doesn't allow floor seniors to be orientation leaders. But with more events being run by MCRC, the floor seniors will be able to take a bigger part in orienting their frosh to residence life.

When asked whether the events would change noticeably from past years, Bertrand said "they might be different ... but the goals [of frosh week] will remain the same."

Bertrand said there might be a smaller focus on orienting frosh to their floor or house. He also said that off-campus first-years would be involved in the events, as they could be paired with residence frosh in an "adopt a floormate" program.

Mitchell said she was excited about the changes. She said the new set-up will save money, and probably result in better events for the frosh. This year, AMSOC received $8,500 from the Campus Activities Commission. Mitchell

Inside

NEWS
QUEEN'S CHALLENGE 6
LITERARY LAPSES
STEPHEN HAWKING 13
SPORTS
GAELS LOSE 16

Please see TAKE on page 5

Hey all you shagmeisters! You haven't forgotten about our Shag Tape Contest, have you?

The entries have been coming in by the bucketful! If you haven't heard about the infamous Shag Tape Contest, here's a quick recap: we're looking for a list of tunes you think should be found on a tape of, shall we say, romantic mood music. Whether you prefer light kissing or (like you "umble editors) love it down and out with chains, Chaz Whiz and card tricks, we want you to send us a list of tunes you think should be on a shag tape. You should also add short notes or a short message describing your set of songs. We will reward creativity (something they almost never do at Queen's). Don't forget that some songs (such as the dreaded Staying to Heaven) have been disqualified; check a back issue (MISC 3, Friday, September 24th) for the complete list. The prize has been expanded - you get the two best persons in this fine publication (a mind-mangling $10 value) plus a free sample bottle of Tabasco sauce (really!) to put on a sandwich, your partner or both! Drop your submissions at the Journal House (272 Earl Street, between University and Division) or send it via campus mail - just make sure it gets to us before 5:00pm Friday, October 8th and to the guy who "only needs the Kilted Vikings Anthem": c'mon, it's not even three minutes long. Think about baseball!

SHAGGING WEATHER
TONIGHT - CLEAR HI 12 LO 8
SATURDAY - BASKETBALL SIZED HAIL HI 10 LO 7
SUNDAY - CLOUDY HI 12 LO 5

HI, ANNE!

BURGER KING

YOUR WAY RIGHT AWAY

$1.00 OFF POUTINE

Crispy order of fries smothered with delicious melted cheese and gravy.

Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer.

BURGER KING
EXPIRES Oct. 15, 1993

Less is More

Ever notice that in our hurry to get more good things, we so often end up with less? Less satisfaction, less fulfilment, less peace. So we try still harder to fill that void ... with more.

The Christian Reformed Campus Ministry called Geneva Fellowship can help you reverse that demanding spiral this year at Queen's, by showing you the lasting satisfaction of life in Christ. We focus on how to integrate the Christian faith with academic living, in Bible studies, group discussions, special lectures and a cross-denominational Sunday Evening Worship on campus.

We also help keep body and soul together with a drop-in student supper every Wednesday evening.

GENEVA FELLOWSHIP

Please join us ... at Geneva House, 104 Queen's Crescent or call Campus Pastor Bill Van Groningen at 545-2962. Christ's offer requires less but delivers much more.

ASUS

ATTENTION ALL ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS!

SURFACE REFERENDUM

will be held October 13th and 14th
There will be an open forum on October 7th at 12:30pm in the Lower Ceilidh of the JDUC.

All Arts & Science students are welcome to attend!

TRICOLOUR EXPRESS THANKSGIVING BUS SCHEDULE

Tickets on Sale Now

	Toronto	Ottawa	Montreal
DEPARTURES: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7th	$20	$16	$25

West Campus	1:55 5:30	5:30
Victoria Hall	2:05 5:40	5:40
JDUC	2:15 5:50	5:50

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 8th

West Campus	1:55 5:30	5:30	2:50
Victoria Hall	2:05 5:40	5:40	3:00
JDUC	2:15 5:50	5:50	3:10

Drop-Off Points:

RETURNS:
MONDAY, OCTOBER 11th

Pick-up Points:	6:00 8:00	8:00	5:45
	Union Station	Bus Terminal	Bus Terminal

Tickets on sale at the box office 545-2558

No Refunds and No Exchanges

Mayor Cooper resigns

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

Kingston City Mayor Helen Cooper announced her departure from City Hall on Thursday. She is leaving to chair the Ontario Municipal Board in Toronto, a lucrative $110,000 per year post.

Cooper told The Journal that she received the offer in the summer, and found it "too good to turn down." Her interest in planning matters, which many consider dull, makes her "very excited about it," she said.

Cooper is leaving office with a year remaining in her term as mayor. There is some criticism that she is jumping ship, leaving behind unfinished business and, as the Kingston Whig-Standard reported, leaving "councillors in open strife."

However, Cooper argued that "there's always too much left to do there's always a list of problems that have to be solved." She feels that the present is "not considerably different" than any other time, in terms of ongoing projects and problems being tackled by the city government.

When asked if she'd be involved in the choosing of a successor, Cooper said, "I'm not going to get involved in that debate."

For Cooper, the OMB post is ideal, given her enthusiasm for planning matters. She recalled her first OMB hearing in 1977, when she made presentations concerning comprehensive zoning bylaws, and said that such issues "got in my blood at an early stage."

The mayor described "dramatic changes" with regards to Queen's over the years she's been involved in municipal politics. The homecoming street parties of 1981 and 1984 were a sight she'll remember, as she witnessed them "wearing a trenchcoat with my pyjamas underneath, at three or four in the morning."

As councillor for Sydenham Ward, which includes Queen's, she had considerable involvement in housing issues and student-related issues. She expressed satisfaction with some of the changes in town-gown relations, but was quick to say that any credit must be shared with the many people who have helped out.

As high points in her time as mayor, Cooper listed the redevelopment of the inner harbour ("a pro-active, constructive planning exercise," she said), and the city's 1984 relief fund for starvation in Ethiopia, which involved some "intensive, hard work."

As for low points, Cooper cited the city's lack of money, a result of low transfer payments from the province. She said that lack of funds has meant many see their taxes rising while their services are scaled back.

"I couldn't have chosen a worse time in the economic cycle to become mayor," she said.

Cooper was born in Australia, but grew up in Kingston, attending local schools. At Queen's, she was involved in CFRC radio and collegiate curling, and graduated with a BSc in 1968. After a year working in Hamilton for Procter and Gamble, she spent two years in East Africa, working for CUSO.

She then took an MSc at the London School of Economics, and stayed in England to teach awhile, before returning to Kingston. Cooper worked at Queen's under Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser, who was then in the economics department.

In the late seventies, she got involved in local politics, and was elected councillor for Sydenham in 1980.

Cooper was elected mayor in 1988 and again in 1991. Recently, she has been teaching a course at the Queen's School of Urban and Regional Planning.

Cooper is planning to rent an apartment in Toronto, but commute home to Kingston on weekends. Her resignation takes effect on Oct. 31.

The mayor expressed gratitude to the many people at Queen's who have worked with her. "There's been some marvellous people at Queen's over the years," she said, mentioning that she keeps in touch with many of them.

Cooper feels that Queen's students have been active in social issues, and that as a result such issues "got brought forward earlier."

"Certainly having Queen's in the community makes Kingston, for a city its size, one of the most interesting cities in North America," she said, adding that the school "makes life more interesting for a municipal politician."

The Waterloo Warriors drag down the Gaels to a 19-17 defeat. Derek Yarnell

For those seeking information about the Ontario Undergraduate Students Alliance, there will be a debate between members of the University of Toronto's No to OUSA campaign and representatives from the Alma Mater Society Academic Affairs Commission. The debate will take place Thursday, Oct. 7, at 3 p.m. in the Upper Ceilidh of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Concerned about the direction of policing in Kingston? The City Police are holding an evening of public consultation on Oct. 18 between 7 and 9:30 p.m. at Ecole Cathedrale, 301 Johnson Street. All members of the public are invited to make a short presentation to describe what they feel should be the main goals of the police, and what programs should be established or increased. Contact Dan Murphy at 549-4660 for further information.

At AMS Assembly on Thursday, Rector David Baar announced that Jill Harris, who is responsible for coordinating the grievance process at Queen's, will be spending two mornings a week in the Rector's office to answer informal questions and give specific advice to students. Harris will be in the office from 9 a.m. until noon, on Wednesday and Friday.

The Centre for Canada-Asia Business Relations Speaker Series is presenting Professor Charles Burton, Director of the Brock Centre for Canada and Asia Pacific Studies, and Associate Professor of Politics at Brock University. Burton will be speaking on Tuesday Oct. 5 (today), from 2:30 to 4 p.m. in Dunning Hall, room 14. His speech is entitled Canada-China Relations since the Tiananmen Square Massacre: An Insider's Perspective.

OUSA Facts

The Queen's Journal

So, what is the Ontario Undergraduate Students Alliance?

Queen's students will be voting on a 95 cent student interest fee to go towards funding OUSA on Oct. 13 and 14. But many don't seem to know much about the organization.

OUSA's origins and membership

OUSA was formed two years ago by the student governments of Queen's, Brock, Laurier, Western and Waterloo universities, after those schools decided to leave the Ontario Federation of Students. The University of Toronto also joined, but on Sept. 21 of this year its full-time undergraduate student government voted to temporarily suspend its membership in OUSA and postpone a referendum on the issue until the spring.

OUSA's policies

- OUSA advocates a "partnership approach" to solving the funding crisis. In their initial policy paper entitled Students for Change, they call for tuition increases of 20-30 per cent, as long as they are matched with greater contributions from the government and from the private sector, and student aid reform.
- OUSA's proposals include an Income-Contingent Loan Repayment Program, whereby student loans would be given out to all students who request them, and be paid back as a percentage of the borrower's income after graduation.
- OUSA is currently planning a campaign to oppose the Council of Ontario Universities' recent proposal to increase tuition up to 50 per cent, and will be releasing a response document soon.
- OUSA opposes compulsory fees that are not regulated by the government, like the $100 levy that Queen's students paid at Queen's this year.

MBA Society has Orientation Week woes

BY SHARON TROFIMUK
The Queen's Journal

While sexual overtones in frosh week activities have come under heavy scrutiny in recent years, it seems that the MBA Society still has some problems to iron out.

Part of this year's orientation for mature students involved a pub crawl—an event which, according to Ken Wong, chair of the MBA program, included bar games of "questionable taste."

Although no official complaint was lodged against the society,

Wong said he had heard a rumor from a faculty member that there had been complaints surrounding the event.

Wong requested that the Orientation Board issue letters of apology to first-year MBA students in attendance. The board, according to Wong, was more than willing to comply with the request.

Wong explained that "it was not a case where the orientation committee was deficient ... but only that they can't be everywhere." He added that "the problem was that the games did not go over the way they were presented in the proposal," which was submitted to the review committee in the spring.

Wong said that some of the games had sexual overtones, which he said some might consider "vulgar." One game required students to pull a condom over their head. Another necessitated students to sit on a team-mate's thighs so as to pop a balloon.

Wong said the nature of the games was "not acceptable."

The review board, according to Wong, will consider dropping the pub crawl from the orientation activities planned for future years. "It is not clear to me that we need alcohol to ensure group bonding," he added.

Adam Prusin, president of the MBA Society, was reluctant to comment on the issue, but said "we are trying to keep it out of the press ... it's a negative issue where we're concerned because it will be negatively construed whether we're [at fault] or not."

Tom Elmer, MBA Chair of Orientation, chose not to comment.

Wong said that he was satisfied that no one meant any offense with the games, but that "once people started drinking things got out of hand."

When asked why he thought the games got out of hand, he responded, "unfortunately some people saw [the games] as an opportunity to treat it as an initiation or hazing—they didn't understand the committee's stance, that hazing was not acceptable."

Bruce Clark, owner of the Toucan, admitted "we've had trouble with MBA in past years."

"I don't want to make it out like it was something unbelievable that I've never seen students do."

ASUS

Elections for the following positions will be held October 13th and 14th:

97 Year Society
1st Year ASUS Rep to the AMS
1 Year ASUS Senator

If you are interested in any of the above positions call the ASUS Core at 545-6278 or come to an Open Forum, October 7th, 1993 at 11:30am in the Lower Ceilidh of the JDUC.

NOMINATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF PRESIDENT OF THE GRADUATE STUDENT SOCIETY

WILL BE OPEN ON SEPTEMBER 29TH, AND WILL CLOSE ON OCTOBER 6TH, AT 1 PM. NOMINATION FORMS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE GSS OFFICE, OR FROM YOUR DEPARTMENT'S GSS REPRESENTATIVE.

BY ANDREA HUNCAR
The Queen's Journal

Queen's faces "a major challenge" in funding its programs on par with other universities, according to Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser.

In an interview with The Journal, Fraser compared Ontario university funding per student with colleges and universities in America, Europe and Japan.

Fraser said "it would appear as if we're lower... for a country with our level of wealth and resource."

"The key issue is: do we, as a university, think that what we are trying to do is provide a quality of education that gives students in Canada the option of staying in Canada, to get a university learning experience that is amongst the best in the world?" he asked.

If so, Fraser said, "that means we've got a major challenge on our hands... we're saying that we're not going to be satisfied with being at the level of funding of the other [approximately] 54 universities in Canada."

Fraser's first question when he considers the underfunding dilemma at Queen's University is: "What is the reasonable level of funding?"

To determine a "reasonable level," Fraser cited four main objectives in university programs at Queen's, and argued the current lack of funds hinders their development.

Fraser's objectives include developing "the ability to think critically," "communication skills," "confidence in the ability to make judgements," and the "transfer of knowledge." He considers the first three "the principal objectives."

While Fraser said that knowledge transfer is easily achieved by lectures and readings, "you need to have much more interaction amongst the students, and between the students and professors," to achieve the other goals.

For instance, Fraser said, having "too many students in a seminar situation... restricts the student's ability to fully exploit his or her talents."

From 1977 to 1987, while Ontario spending per client in hospitals, schools and prison systems was increased, there was a 15 per cent decrease in university funding, according to Fraser. He said that if these statistics had been continued into 1993, they "wouldn't have changed very much at all." At one stage, Ontario's expenditure on universities [compared to other provinces] was in the top three or four ranks. By the end of the 1980s [it had] fallen into the ninth or tenth place," Fraser explained.

Queen's will focus on "maintaining the best student faculty ratio," increasing hands-on experience, and improving equipment, according to Fraser. To do so, the university must take a "multi-faceted approach."

Fraser outlined the areas where the problem of underfunding can be battled. The alumni and development offices have been restructured, he said, in hopes of "doubling" the annual flow of dollars to [Queen's] from the private sector.

Fraser pointed out that "the principal suppliers of money" are "the government... and students and their families, via tuition." Reports such as the Queen's Blueprint for Action, as well as proposals from the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance, have investigated this area.

Similarly, the income-contingent loan repayment scheme, whereby students pay back government loans depending on their income level, has caught on, and is being explored.

In addition, Fraser said, there is "existing support for a fundamental re-examination of the way we deliver the curriculum."

Fraser said there are "a number of things going on" with the non-academic services, which involve university staff. In the long run, he said, the services "would do things more efficiently so that we'd get roughly the same kind of service from fewer people." He said layoffs were not part of this plan.

Finally, Fraser said that Queen's would develop "opportunities for providing continuing education," in which companies are prepared to cover the total cost of courses taken by their employees.

Other initiatives Fraser mentioned include educating government members about Queen's, and student fundraising.

The funding crunch at Queen's

Stop throwing it all away courage municipalities, businesses, and people to intensify their efforts to reduce waste. A lot of us have started using blue boxes, but now we have to examine how we can do more," Scanlon said.

"We're trying to emphasize that reduction comes before reuse and recycling in the 3 Rs," observed Scanlon.

She noted that "each day of the week has a focus. Reduction, composting, zero garbage targets, conservation, and reuse are our daily themes."

CUSEN and ASUS will be in Mac-Corry from Monday to Thursday handing out information on reducing consumption and waste output, recycling, composting, and conservation. Members of these groups will be available to help guide you through such things as the recycling guidelines in Kingston.

Blue boxes will be on hand for anyone in the student area who doesn't yet have one. Mugs and other products that can help you cut down on your use of disposables will also be available. CUSEN can be contacted on 548-3838 for more information.

KARC will be running daily waste reduction seminars, culminating in a community cleanup day on Saturday. Further, KARC will be holding an Open House on Saturday to highlight its recycling and composting activities.

Household hazards, such as paint, can also be taken to KARC on Saturday for safe disposal. KARC can be reached on 546-4988 for more information about these activities.

The Queen's Waste Management Coordinator, Rebecca Spaulding, can advise you of what the administration is doing on an ongoing basis to reduce waste on campus. She can be reached on 545-2525.

"Waste reduction is probably one of the easiest things we can do to help the environment," emphasized Scanlon. "It is easy and has a tangible, immediate impact."

Scanlon pointed out that "the Ministry of the Environment and Energy estimates that by 1995, one half of all Ontario residents will have no place to take their garbage as landfills close or become filled."

Take back the night!

Continued from page one

and not need a man to walk with us."

"How are we supposed to escape that fear if we don't show women's solidarity?" asked Trish Vanvieren, a first-year arts student.

There were several speakers at the rally before the march. One woman described her experience of being sexually assaulted by a wheelchair bus driver.

"We are strapped to our seats and are totally dependent on him for our safety," she said. When she reported the assault, she said, "I was told that the driver had rights too, and there was nothing that could be done." The driver is still driving wheelchair buses today, she said.

The woman started and ended her speech with a rallying cry of "We are women!" which drew applause and shouts of support.

Another woman described the fear she feels because she is blind. "It's a terrifying experience not to be able to see what is going to happen to you," she said. "It takes every ounce of my courage every day just to leave my house."

She asked the crowd: "Are we going to remain passive and dependent?" The crowd responded with a resounding "No!"

Another speaker, SAAC volunteer Denise Lamb, cited statistics, saying 54 per cent of women experience sexual assault before the age of sixteen, 17 per cent are victims of incest before that age, and 96 per cent of perpetrators of child sexual abuse are men.

"The violence is all around us. It becomes a normal part of our society," she warned.

The march, which included participants as young as nine, lasted about half-an-hour. Women carried signs bearing slogans such as No Justice, No Peace, Rape Won't Stop Till Men Stop Raping, and Our Bodies, Our Minds, Our Choice.

Kelly defended the Take Back the Night march against recent criticism from author Katie Roiphe. Roiphe's new book, The Morning After: Sex, Fear and Feminism on Campus charges that the march is "an umbrella march covering fear in general, frustration in general and the belief that men are out to get women in general." Roiphe said that the event's actual result is to instill fear in women.

To this, organizer Kelly responded that "none of that stuff holds up against a fist in your face." Roiphe, she said, "is missing the point. The point is the fear is already there."

BY BRETT HOUSE
The Queen's Journal

Consider this: a television set will operate for three hours on the energy saved from recycling an aluminum can.

Monday marked the beginning of Ontario Waste Reduction Week, and a number of groups in Kingston want you to think twice about the waste you're producing.

Debbie Scanlon of the Queen's chapter of the Canadian Unified Student Environmental Network (CUSEN), explained that the idea for the week came from the Recycling Council of Ontario, a Toronto organization supported by business and government.

The Recycling Council provides information on recycling, composting, waste reduction and other issues to industry, municipalities, and environmental groups.

Scanlon explained that the Recycling Council is helping to facilitate a number of education campaigns in cities throughout Ontario. "Thousands of people across the province are working to help individuals reduce their waste this week," she said.

In Kingston, the Kingston Area Recycling Corporation (KARC) is planning a number of events throughout the week to educate the community.

CUSEN and the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Environmental Committee will be working "to ensure that students are directly involved in finding ways to reduce their waste output as well," Scanlon said.

The goal of the week is "to en-

the Cocambo

SPECIAL EVENT
LOWEST OF THE LOW
THURS. OCT 7TH
178 ontario street, 544.6885

MON	TUE	WED	THUR	FRI	SAT	SUN
N.F.L MONDAY FREE ADMISSION 40 TV'S POOL TABLES LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALL REQUEST TUESDAY with ALL YOUR FAVOURITE TUNES AND THEN ? LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALL STAR LITE NITE WOMEN ADMITTED FREE YOU NEVER KNOW WHAT YOU MIGHT WIN SUPER LITE NITE ALL NITE	ALWAYS THE BEST IN GREAT LIVE ENTERTAINMENT... THURS. OCT 7TH MAKING ANOTHER VISIT TO K-TOWN LOWEST OF THE LOW THURS. OCT 14TH 1 STUDENT SKA BAND ONE DOORS OPEN AT 8	HURRICANE FRIDAYS SATURDAY NITE DANCE PARTY SUPER LITE NITE UNTIL 10 THE REAL DEAL AT 8 PM FRIDAY & SATURDAY NON STOP UNTIL 3AM		THE DAY MADE FOR RELAXING. TAKE PART IN THE SUNDAY POOL TOURN. ENJOY GREAT TIMES & MUNCHIES

BOOK YOUR SCHOOL EVENTS WITH THE #1 NIGHTCLUB CALL 544.6885 AND ASK FOR A MANAGER

THREE (3) DAYS LEFT TO BREW FOR HOME-COMING!

544-1443
237 PRINCESS STREET

save $15 on your first brew. OFFER VALID WITH THIS COUPON. SEE STORE FOR DETAILS. 544-1443

BREW-HA-HA 237 PRINCESS STREET

ODYSSEY GROUP TRIPS

Ski Groups
Odyssey Travel has, for years, been organizing Group Trips for both Students and Faculty at Queen's University. We have developed special relationships with Ski Hills in both Quebec and the U.S. Call us for a quotation for your Ski Group trip this winter!

Sun Groups
Odyssey Travel offers a wide selection of Sun Packages for groups. We offer excellent prices and will generally offer a free or subsidized trip for group leaders. Come and see us. We can help you decide the best value for your group!

5% off most packages

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

UNITED WAY Ghetto Food Drive

Please Give

Collection for Thanksgiving
Volunteers appreciated
Come to the AMS Office
5:00 Wednesday, Oct. 5

THE FLAVOUR OF INDIA IN DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

Featuring Tandoori, Curry, and Vegetarian Dishes

25% OFF Regular menu items
with this coupon

Buffet Regular $7.95
With Student ID $5.95
Please present your
ID in advance

EXPIRES MAY 30, 1994

With winter
coming on,
we want to give you something to think about!

Personal,
quality service.
Our endorsement of superior equipment.
Value for your energy dollar.
Our continued reputation as Kingston's oil specialists.

ROSENEVELS

5 Cataract Street
Kingston
546-4242

We take your home comfort ... personally!

Queen's fundraising campaign meets Challenge

Queen's, McGill first two Canadian universities to raise over $100M

BY JEFF McCORMACK
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Challenge Campaign, launched in January of 1990 with a $70 million goal, wrapped up this past April, having accumulated a total of $100.8 million in contributions from private sources.

Last Saturday, the final report documenting the results of the campaign was released at a celebration where Campaign Chairman (and Chairman and CEO of the Royal Bank of Canada) Allan Taylor and Queen's Principal David Smith spoke.

The cornerstone of the Queen's Challenge is the Stauffer Library, currently under construction at the corner of University Avenue and Union Street.

The Challenge received significant corporate donations ($18 million) and $26 million from foundations such as The Joseph S. Stauffer Foundation, whose donation of $14 million is specifically for the new library.

The library's total projected cost is $42 million.

Individuals and the campus community also accounted for a sizeable chunk of the Challenge, adding nearly $43 million to the total. In addition to the $27 million raised from alumni donations (including wealthy industrialist Alfred Bader, who contributed over 100 Old Master paintings, and the Herstonceux Castle Estate in Sussex, England), private individuals ($6 million), parents ($1.5 million), students ($3.4 million), faculty and staff ($2 million) and the Board of Trustees ($3 million), added to the tally.

Various others were listed as donors, each fitting into an amount-bracket. Queen's Chancellor Agnes Benidickson donated between $250,000 and $499,999 and Principal David Smith donated somewhere between $10,000 and $49,999. The City of Kingston contributed $1 million or more to the campaign.

Despite the completion of the Challenge, Queen's has not given up its quest for private funding. Four mini-campaigns are still being planned.

$16 million is the goal for a bio-science complex, $11 million plus for the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, $6 million for the International Studies Centre at the Herstonceux Castle, and about $1 million for the Ban Righ Foundation that will provide support to women and mature students.

About 26 per cent of the total $100.8 million will be allocated for equipment (such as the refitting of labs in rock mechanics and mineral processing), 26 per cent to Human Resources, 23 per cent to buildings (such as the new library) and 15 per cent for student support.

Queen's has become only the second university in Canada to raise more than $100 million in private funds. Last week, McGill University announced it will be undertaking the largest fundraising campaign in the history of Canadian universities. The McGill campaign's goal is to raise $200 million by the fall of 1995.

"We began planning [this campaign] two years ago by going to those in our McGill community," said Nicholas Offord, the executive director of development at McGill. "Because of the size of the goal ... a lot of people were sceptical about our ability to raise the funds," Offord said, so they went "to those in our McGill community closest to the university to seek their support, to demonstrate the commitment of the community to the initiative through advance gift pledges."

Offord said that the board of governors, faculty and staff, as well as some traditional donors, were approached first in the advance phase of the campaign.

To date, they have raised just over $98 million in advance pledges, far exceeding their $90 million goal for the advance phase.

Charles Bronfman donated $10 million to establish "an institute for the study of Canada," and the J.W. McConnell Foundation (a traditional supporter of McGill) has also kicked in $10 million. Other donors include the Webster family ($3 million), Gerald and Marjorie Bronfman ($2 million), and the faculty and staff, who contributed about $3.8 million.

A donation from the Royal Bank of Canada ($2 million) will be split evenly between an "executive management institute" and a centre for "university teaching and learning." A music library will be built using $5 million from an anonymous donor.

The main emphasis of the campaign is the awarding of fellowships and scholarships, Offord said.

Students pinch pennies

Continued from page one

attitude towards opt-outs. "The money they are getting is coming out of services they use," he said. "What is a cheque now, is less service later."

Michele Leger, a second-year Arts and Science student, defended her opt-out. "That cheque buys a bunch of groceries." She also called the procedure for opting out of the health plan "a big hassle."

Gilbert identified the recent increases in tuition and student fees as a main cause for the flurry of opt-out activity, calling the increases "an across-the-board squeeze on students."

Turley explained that this was the first time that the record-keeping was fully computerized, enabling receipts to be issued immediately, as well as allowing quick tabulation of the numbers. It also reduced the traditionally long line-ups, making the process much smoother, he added.

The reduction in money available "shouldn't hurt, as we budeted very conservatively," Turley said, though he raised the spectre of more increases by saying "there might have to be a premium increase" for services to cover the shortfall next year.

"That cheque buys a bunch of groceries."

—Michele Leger, second-year Arts and Science student explains her reasons for opting out

Students opt-out

ACTIVITY FEE	Number of opt-outs
	91-92	92-93	*93-94
Queen's Challenge	2388	2264	3838
Health Plan	2120	2791	4129
Tricolour Yearbook	651	1202	2025
Concert Fee	848	1526	2826
Refugee Fund	707	1227	2319
United Way	587	1155	1827
OPIRG	n/a	1573	2893

*All 93-94 numbers are tentative and subject to change

ASSEMBLY REPORT

BY BRAD ELDER
The Queen's Journal

The second Alma Mater Society Assembly of the academic year finished in a lightning-quick two hours and 50 minutes last Thursday. Despite its breathless pace, Assembly tackled a number of issues, including the status of the Ontario University Student Alliance in the wake of the University of Toronto's temporary withdrawal, and the striking of a brand new orientation committee to replace the AMS Orientation Committee.

OUSA Referendum Debated

AMS President Katherine Philips defended the OUSA referendum, which will ask students to contribute 95 cents toward the continued membership of Queen's in OUSA. If "we don't have the money, our membership in OUSA is not as effective," she said.

Philips explained that OUSA needs resources to pay the salary of a lobbyist and to ensure that Queen's has effective involvement in the alliance.

Greg Smith, the president of the Theological Society, noted that the referendum marks the first time that Queen's students have voted on the OUSA question.

He suggested that if the referendum fails, perhaps the AMS should question the commitment of Queen's students to the alliance.

"Certainly if students don't want to pay 95 cents [toward funding OUSA]," he said, "I think that says something about how the students feel about membership in OUSA."

Smith also expressed a concern with U of T's withdrawal from OUSA.

He said he thought that "it's more serious than we've been led to believe."

Philips said that U of T consists of a "complex web of student governments," only a portion of which withdrew from OUSA. "I really don't think that it discredits OUSA at all," she said.

Asked by Rector David Baar how many students are represented by the portion of U of T that withdrew, Philips said that the full-time undergraduate council, which has withdrawn, represents 30,000 students, while the part-time undergraduate council, which is still a member of OUSA, represents 10,000 students.

Philips stressed the importance of being part of a greater student organization with important provincial government decisions in the near future.

"Nobody else will be standing up for students," she said.

Philips also made reference to articles printed in The Journal concerning the OUSA referendum, saying that she was misquoted and misrepresented.

When debate was closed, Assembly voted on whether it should take a "for" stance on the referendum question, "Do you agree with the establishment of a student interest fee of $0.95 that will support the Queen's AMS continued membership in OUSA?"

The motion was carried, with

Smith opposing, and five abstentions.

Orientation week changes

Silvia Luika, chair of the AMS Orientation Committee, announced her proposal to amend AMSOC. Under the proposal, what now exists on AMSOC in the AMS Constitution would be deleted, and replaced by a new program, which shifts the control of the first two days of frosh week from the AMS to the residence councils.

Luika said that the proposal represented "a big change, but a huge improvement." The proposal passed its first reading and will come before Assembly again in two weeks.

AMS Housing Task Force

AMS Communications Commissioner Dera Nevin announced her desire to strike an AMS Housing Task Force, noting that there "hasn't been consistent AMS policy on housing."

Nevin said that students need to know about some "down-right dirty things coming down at the municipal level." She explained that she has defended the student voice at City Hall, but called this "problematic."

"I'm speaking on behalf of 12,000 to 15,000 students ... [but] I'm not an elected member — I don't feel I have the backing."

Assembly passed the motion to strike the task force, and elected three members from Assembly. Two students at large will be added at a later date.

Funding for Special Needs

Todd Minerson, AMS vice-president (university affairs), urged Assembly to take a "for" stance toward the referendum question which asks students to maintain a $3 fee to fund the needs of the 350 students registered at Queen's with special needs.

Assembly was informed by Minerson that the fee is not a new one, but one which has to be ratified every five years. He said that the funding is particularly important now because the Special Needs Office will take a 10 per cent cut in this year's budget.

Baar then asked if this was a case of students substituting money for the university, but Kathy Beers, administrative assistant to Vice-Principal (Operations/University Relations) Tom Williams, fielding the question from the floor, explained that it was not a university cut, but a government cut.

The motion to take a "for" stance was carried by Assembly.

Of note...

Assembly denied a motion introduced by Jean Royce Hall Council President Steve Morelli, who asked for a second Assembly representative from JRHC Main Campus Residence Council President Warren Flannery argued against the motion, saying that "one of the principles embodied in the whole Assembly is that if you have more people in your [organization], you have more votes. To pass this resolution would be in violation of that principle."

Law Students Society President Mal Moorthy announced the creation of an Articling Task Force. She said that the 35 per cent figure quoted in The Journal did not represent the number of law graduates who did not find positions on a national level, as reported, but the number of law graduates who participated in the Toronto matching process.

ASUS Vice-President Heath Grant announced that ASUS will take a "yes" stance on the funding of Surface in the upcoming referendum.

Rector David Baar met with a roar of approval from Assembly when he declared himself "the king of point of information."

RADIATION THERAPY PROGRAMS

LONDON REGIONAL CANCER CENTRE

ONTARIO CANCER / PRINCESS MARGARET INSTITUTE HOSPITAL

and the

TORONTO-BAYVIEW REGIONAL CANCER CENTRE

Invite you to

INFORMATION SESSIONS

London Regional Cancer Centre
School of Radiation Therapy
790 Commissioners Rd. E.
London, Ontario
Wednesday, November 3, 1993
6:30 - 8:00 pm
For further information call
(519) 685-8666
Attendance by RSVP only

Ontario Cancer Institute/
Princess Margaret Hospital
School of Radiation Therapy
500 Sherbourne St.
Toronto, Ontario
Saturday, November 27, 1993
10:00 am - 1:00 pm
Pre-registration required, call
(416) 413-2027

Toronto-Bayview Regional Cancer Centre
School of Radiation Therapy
2075 Bayview Avenue
North York, Ontario
Saturday, November 13, 1993
1:30 - 3:30 pm
For further information call
(416) 480-4561
* Students with a BSc may be eligible for the 24 month program.

Become part of a dynamic team of health care professionals in cancer management where your professional development becomes a priority. Your professional qualifications will enable you to work throughout Canada and many other countries (Australia, England, New Zealand, etc.)

PROGRAM FEATURES:

- * Accumulation of General Bachelor of Science Credits
- * 24-36 month programs
- * Admission requirements vary for each program

Editorials

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter

Managing Editor
David Pavao

News Editor
Jeff Gray

Production Manager
Colin Ho

Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor

Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse

Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis

Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland

Graphics Editor
Joey deVilla

Richard Dubois
Photography Editor

Marika Glickman
Backpage/Misc. Editors

Derek Walker
Joey deVilla

Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols

Features Editor
Alison Masemann

Assistant News Editors
Brock Marland
Brad Eider
Lori Thorlakson

Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down

Assistant Entertainment Editors
Ian Petre
Ryan P. Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens

Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn

Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yamell

Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Business Manager
Chris Ritchie

Advertising Manager
Andrew Nilsson

Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer

Sales Representative
Fiona Macaulay

Asst. Sales Representative
Stuart Kedwell

House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printing, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario.

Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728

Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST). Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

Tricia Bauman, Steve Cain, Dave Carpenier, Dave Coleman, Nicholas Garrison, Goran, Pete Harris, Brett House, Andrea Huncar, James Keast, Tara Lynn Keats, Corinne Kepper, Mathew A. King, Geoff Langdon, Mike Lewicki, Jason Lewis, Jeff McCormack, Francis Marinette, Mike Moss, Sandro Pasquini, Chris Price, Geoff Owen, Tricia Rickwood, Patrick Robbins-Madill, Tania Robinson, Rob Thompson, Ross Thomson, Sharon Trofimuk, Chris Zabel

Democracy in action?

Student government at Queen's does not serve as a textbook example of democracy in action. In all fairness, however, this isn't a problem limited to Queen's alone.

The current executive was elected into their positions in a close and bitter battle - but elected into their positions by only 32 per cent of the Queen's undergraduate student population. And what a narrow victory it was - only 31 votes separated the two teams.

But what else separated the two teams? That is a difficult question to answer. One thing is for certain: both teams threw their weight behind the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance.

OUSA presents itself as a viable, realistic alternative to the Canadian Federation of Students - Ontario which advocates zero tuition.

In its Students for Change proposal, OUSA advocates a 30 per cent tuition hike, as long as it is coupled with matched government funding, increased private investment and a reformed student aid package, including an income-contingent loan repayment plan.

Traditionally, The Journal has supported OUSA. But now we are concerned about the democratic landscape on which it is being played out. That landscape has been scarred by assumed acceptance and undaunted certainty.

The current student government believes that Queen's students support OUSA for two reasons. Alma Mater Society OUSA coordinator Linda Shin said "it is mis-representatives on AMS Assembly... (Queen's Journal, Oct. 1, page 9) First of all, 31 votes in an election in which 32 per cent of the Queen's population voted can-hardly be considered a mandate. Secondly, what choice were students given? Students did not dictate their desire to be in OUSA by voting Philips, Minerson and Wilson into office. Both teams advocated support for OUSA. Only had a third team ran with an anti-OUSA stance could anyone believe students dictated their desire to be members of OUSA. Apathy should not be mistaken for acceptance.

In their Sept. 16 editorial, the Brock Press wrote that "Brock students can expect a referendum on OUSA membership in the fall."

the U of T Students Administrative Council until the spring. "It bothers me that the organization that represents me doesn't let me vote," said Anusia Govindasamy, a third-year part-time student at U of T. (The Varsity, Sept. 20, page 3)

On cancelling the membership referendum, The Varsity editorial board wrote, "If the SAC board wants to prove it speaks for those who elected them, they should vote to reschedule the referendum - or step aside and let students speak for themselves." (The Varsity, Sept. 23, page 4)

U of T students are currently being denied the opportunity to vote on an issue central to university itself - its accessibility.

Queen's students are offered the opportunity to vote. We get to vote on whether or not we want to finance the long-term survival and effectiveness of OUSA.

When asked what would happen if Queen's voted No to the 95 cent student interest fee, Taz Pirhamed, AMS academic affairs commissioner, said "we'd have to go back to referendum." (Queen's Journal, Oct. 1, page 1)

If at first you don't succeed, try again? Is this democracy in action?

OUSA offers students a realistic alternative to unfeasible zero-tuition proposals. Let's hope it isn't mismanaged to the point where students vote against it on the basis of its marketing - as opposed to its content.

Cross Campus Editorials

The Gazette

University of Western Ontario, 4 Sept.

With an unprecedented number of students bidding for first-year places at Ontario Universities, most other Ontario schools - McMaster University in Hamilton, York University in Toronto and the University of Guelph among them - raised their cutoff averages dramatically in order to maintain their first-year class size.

This is a standard procedure universities employ to moderate things like class size and student-professor ratios. It also serves to create an "academic indicator" to students, who judge the quality of a school by its cutoff mark.

Western, however, failed to see the writing on the wall, and left its cutoffs down. The result? Hundreds more students than anticipated, a below-average cutoff rate and, ultimately even more sullied academic reputation.

...It's official - we're below average.

And we - as should you - want to know what Western's administration is going to do about it.

The Varsity

University of Toronto, 23 Sept.

SAC and the Association of Part-time Undergraduate Students seem to believe that the point of SAC's referendum, (Queen's Journal eds note: on OUSA membership) whenever it is held, is purely self-serving. Since both organizations' by-laws don't mandate that membership in external organizations has to go to a campus-wide vote, the only reason to hold one, they say, is to exact a levy. But when a student lobby group has been advocating policies such as increased tuition hikes, even if those hikes are contingent on matching government funding and an income-contingent loan repayment plan, students have to have a voice.

Unless our student government is afraid that a referendum now does not give them enough time to address these criticisms, and would reveal them to be out of touch with what students are thinking, they should not change the rules of the game at the finish line. If the SAC board wants to prove it speaks for those who elected them, they should vote to reschedule the referendum - or step aside and let students speak for themselves.

The McGill Tribune

McGill University, 8 Sept.

While university communities should constantly strive to maintain and renew an environment of intellectual introspection and self-flagellation, several student governments and administrations have recently lost touch with their raison d'être.

Last spring, the Alma Mater Society at UBC rewrote the terms of reference under which the student newspaper The Ubyssy must operate, placing stricter controls on the editorial content of the paper. This move prompted the entire editorial board of The Ubyssy to quit. The

Opinions

Exclusion challenges democracy

The Editor,

While I appreciate and support some of the sentiments expressed in The Journal's main editorial of September 28, "Straining to hear; fighting to be heard," I wish to point out a glaring factual error in the piece, and offer a few comments on the issues raised. First, contrary to your editorial, the National Party of Canada has officially registered 171 candidates for the upcoming federal election, not the forty-one you reported. National Party candidates will be running in every province of Canada, unlike the Reform Party and the Bloc Quebecois, who have chosen to deliberately exclude areas of the country from "their" Canada.

I would like to point out to readers that the "parliament excuse" referred to as the basis for the exclusion of the National Party from the television networks' debate is only a part of the story. That potential participants had to represent parties already having a seat in parliament is, indeed, merely an excuse. Were Canada's two independent members of parliament invited to participate on this basis? Did the Reform Party or the Bloc Quebecois elect any of their members under their party banners in the 1988 federal election? The sad truth is that the negotiations for staging the event were conducted behind closed doors and involved only the representatives from CTV, Global, CBC, and the five parties who were eventually allowed into the debate.

The National Party of Canada, other officially registered Canadian political parties, and the voting public were all excluded from these negotiations. This was the CRTCC while all this was happening? We, the public, may never know the real qualifications for inclusion, no less the specific rationale behind the decision to exclude specific parties and the public from the process.

Particularly galling is the participation of the CBC in this anti-democratic farce. Does Canada not already not have enough private, corporately owned media monopolies controlling the messages that tell Canadians about public affairs and events? Why has our government funded public broadcasting company sacrificed its integrity for the sake of expediency in following the corporatist lead in this matter? Consider who had the power to appoint the leadership of the CBC and the commission of the CRTCC these last nine years. Now, ask yourself, does the CBC now represent the public interest alternative to commercial television that it was intended to? I think not.

Unfortunately, I cannot say that I am as confident as our Journal editorialist that the "Town hall meetings" staged for this campaign will in themselves somehow shift politics out of the "backrooms" of the historically dominant parties and bring much more democracy to Canada's political system. Canadians are justifiably concerned about the future of their country and angry about the many ways that our elected politicians have mismanaged the federal government. On the positive side for democracy, a majority of voters have rejected the Canadian political establishment and their slick and cynical Charlottetown accord last October. Since that time, many have started to join political parties to try to bring new approaches and ideas to the Canadian political scene.

The main point that was missed in the editorial was that the only way to bring an enhanced degree of democracy to Canada and restore the confidence of the voters is to fundamentally reform Canada's electoral system. Among other things, we need to challenge the corrupt standards of election campaign financing by banks and foreign multinational corporations, restrict the influence of paid corporate lobbyists in Ottawa, demand access to government commissions public opinion polls and many other kinds of government information, and mandate that nation-turning issues such as the NAFTA can be put to a binding and fairly operated referendum, not the kind of shabby charade of a plebiscite that we saw last year.

—Richard Kirksee
MA 1

Real Live Slacker

talking heads

"How well informed do you feel about the candidates and issues in the federal election campaign?"

"I've seen the commercials and they're fan-fan-ish. They're superficial like a sideshow."
Samantha Walker
Arts '96

"Absolutely ignorant. I've seen shallow media coverage. You can't believe what the media tells you."
Vanessa Watne
Arts '95

"With school-work there isn't enough time to find out what is going on. We are isolated at the university. They should get a candidate to speak at the university to give a first-hand view."
Annette Paul
Arts '97

"I think the problems are really big and the candidates are just aiming to win the election. I'm surprised they are not addressing the real issues more seriously. The parties don't take into account the global changes. The campaign is simplistic."
Ahmad Masound
PhD Elec. Eng.

"In the campaign we're getting to know the personality and the image of the candidates, but not the issues."
Kerry Fless
Comm '94

"The campaign is not all that visible right now. The debates and more critical parts of the election are yet to come."
Andrew Balten
Arts '93

Joey deVilla

The Trouble With Tricolour

The Editor,

I am delighted to see The Queen's Journal's investigative news reporters pursue stories that will "sell papers". However, I would be turning a blind eye were I not to express my disappointment with the false impressions created by some of the remarks found in the front-page article entitled "Tricolour yearbook manager fired" of the Friday, October 1, edition.

As one of the two people quoted in the article, my dismay arises not so much with what I was quoted as having said; quite frankly, I was very impressed with the meticulousness with which the news editor himself verified my statements before putting them onto paper. I feel it necessary, however, to comment on some of the remarks Robert Yee is quoted to have said, since I did not get a chance to respond to these in the article itself (and his allegations regarding the delays of the 1992-93 Tricolour Yearbook's delivery are not only pertinent to my current term in office as Media Services Director—since the delays now become my responsibility to rectify—they appear to establish a relation that is quite simply false).

Mr. Yee says that "he has been denied access to documents and facilities he considers necessary to complete his duty"; he adds that "I've been working out of my house". As much as Mr. Yee may be working out of his house in order to complete a yearbook that, according to contract, should have been completed by May 4th, it is his decision to do so—not the AMS', nor Karen Kilcullen's, the current editor-in-chief. I explicitly stated, at the meeting during which we discussed his dismissal, that he would retain his keys to both the AMS and Tricolour Yearbook offices in order to complete work that is long overdue.

In saying this, he hopes to establish a relation between the reality that the yearbook's delivery will be delayed a minimum of 2 months, and his dismissal—a relation that is groundless.

Robert Yee remained in Kingston this summer in order to complete the book. Yet according to the representative, of the yearbook's 304 pages, 33 were submitted to him by Mr. Yee on March 26th; 52 on May 3rd; 104 on August 4th; 27 on September 16th; and 26 on Sept 23rd—leaving 62 pages currently outstanding. It is because of Mr. Yee's careless work schedule, not the printers—or the AMS' decision to relieve him of his responsibilities as acting business manager—that the delivery of the yearbook has now been pushed back to late November or early December.

These facts were not conveyed by last Friday's Queen's Journal article when Mr. Yee chose to remark on this matter. The falsehoods which Mr. Yee uttered, fabrications that attempt to erroneously substantiate a relation between his dismissal and the inevitably late yearbook, could have been clarified had The Journal's news staff been more careful in what it told its readers.

I'll be the first to admit that there always are three "truths" to an issue: one side, the other side, and the real side. However, facts are incontestable; remarks are not. Especially those which find their way to the front-page of a publication that has been "serving the Queen's Community since 1873", should be checked, double-checked, triple-checked...

I hope this letter clarifies any misconceptions created by last Friday's article.

—Eric Jobak
Media Services Director

High on education

The Editor,

I was glad to see The Journal opening the dialogue about marijuana use in university. I must confess that I was surprised to see the topic brought up—even in an editorial of the Queen's Journal. For many years the issue of marijuana or hashish (or any drug use for that matter) has been sufficiently stuffed to the bottom of the deck, especially in accountable offices such as those of The Journal. Whether you agree or disagree with the use of the "evil weed", it is an issue that most students should come to grips with during their years at university.

I was not and am not surprised to find that "officials" are reluctant to talk about pot smoking. Although many people who try marijuana find it is not their intoxicant of choice, most people who have any knowledge of it would, in my experience, have a hard time branding it as criminal or even illegal.

When one has experienced a few "typical" nights at any local pub, one realizes that the characterization of pot smoking as deviant behaviour is ridiculous. (But perhaps that is part of its appeal.) Looking at other widely abused drugs in the university setting, such as nicotine, caffeine or alcohol it is hard to believe that people of reason could label pot smokers deviant.

Any substance that affects the way a person functions can be and will be abused (across anyone?). I guess one of the crucial tests any young adult faces is the conflict between using and abusing.

—Geoff Fallow
Arts & Culture

ARE YOU HAVING SEX IN THE DARK?

AIDS AWARENESS WEEK OCTOBER 4 - 10, 1993

- Some say ignorance is bliss.
- When it comes to sex, ignorance is far from bliss. It's just plain dangerous.
- If you want to do the smart thing, get out of the dark.
- Find out how HIV/AIDS and other STDs are transmitted.
- Use condoms. Not occasionally, not usually, but always.
- Talk. Talk to your partner. Your friends. Your doctor.
- If you're embarrassed about buying condoms, remember that after you've bought them once it will be much easier. Being embarrassed is a small price to pay for your health.
- If you know someone with HIV infection or AIDS, reach out to them and break the silence. No more fear. No more ignorance.

For more information call the Ontario Ministry of Health AIDS Hotline: 1-800-668-2437

Salomon Brothers Inc

Investment Banking Information Session

All undergraduate students interested in learning about Salomon's two-year Financial Analyst Program are cordially invited to attend our information session.

Tuesday, October 12
5:30 pm - 8:00 pm
Quiet Pub

Put A Little Love In Your Heart
proudly present

MERYN CADELL with special guest BOB WISEMAN

Thursday, October 7, 1993
Dunning Auditorium 8:30 pm
$5 at the door OR
Tickets available from the QEA office or the Education Commission of the AMS.

All are Welcome

THIS IS NOT POLITICS AS USUAL!

National Party of Canada / Parti National du Canada
FOR THE ANGRY, THE DISAPPOINTED, AND THE OPTIMISTIC.
You are invited to attend the founding meeting of
THE NATIONAL PARTY AT QUEEN'S

Guest Speaker: National party Federal Election Candidate for Kingston and the Islands

CHRIS PAPADOPOULOS
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, LOWER CEILDH,
JOHN DEUTSCH UNIVERSITY CENTRE
7:30 p.m.

*NIGHT CLASS ON TUESDAY? We will stay past 10:00 to answer your questions.
ALL STUDENTS, STAFF, FACULTY, AND MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC ARE ENCOURAGED TO ATTEND.
Members of the National Party of Canada will be present to answer your questions and discuss your ideas about Canada's future.
Authorized by Tony Pascoal, official agent for Chris Papadopoulos.

STUDENT HEALTH SERVICE

- New numbers to serve you better:
- CONSULTING NURSE SERVICE 545-6859
- MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS 545-6029
- 24 hour APPOINTMENT CANCELLATION LINE 545-6711
Please note that failure to cancel an appointment could result in a financial charge.
- PSYCHIATRIC SERVICES 545-2508
- INQUIRIES/ACCOUNTS 545-2506
- TELEPHONE for the DEAF (TDD) 545-6899
- HEALTH LINE 545-6000 ext.4444
Monday - Thursday, 6 - 9 pm.

REMEMBER TO BRING YOUR HEALTH INSURANCE CARD AND YOUR STUDENT CARD TO EACH APPOINTMENT

Music for a
Sunday Afternoon Series

Performing Arts Office
presents

L'ensemble Arion

"They stop worrying about the fact that they're playing period music and simply start playing music, period."
Boston Herald

A programme of 17th & 18th Century works by Leclair, Rameau, Quantin and Telemann

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

(plus GST)

$ 15 / $8 (Children/RMC & St. Lawrence students)
all prices are plus GST

SUNDAY 10 OCTOBER
2:30PM GRANT HALL

Tickets: Queen's Box Office, JDC 545-2558
(Union & University) Mon - Fri (11 - 4:30)

NOTICE

APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE

FOR THE ASSISTANT WORK BURSARY COORDINATOR

APPLICATIONS CAN BE PICKED UP AT THE AMS OFFICE, AND ARE DUE OCT. 15. INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD ON OCT. 16, FOR FURTHER INFORMATION PLEASE CALL THE SERVICES DIRECTOR AT 545-2725.

NOTICE

Literary Lapses

Accessible physics and Stephen Hawking

Black Holes and Baby Universes
Stephen Hawking
Bantam Books
$26.95
175 pages

The world of Stephen Hawking holds a firm grip on the fascination of lay people, perhaps more so than any scientist since Spock. His only previous book, A Brief History of Time, spent a trillion weeks on the New York Times bestseller list, and he has gained renowned attention for being the greatest scientific mind since Albert Einstein. And he's a great poker player. He recently appeared on Star Trek: The Next Generation as himself, to play poker with Data, Isaac Newton, and Einstein - an effort to see how history's greatest minds would interact. Hawking won, probably because he could bluff better than anyone. He speaks through a voice synthesizer, having had an operation several years ago that removed his ability to speak. Hawking suffers from ALS, otherwise known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

In his new book Black Holes and Baby Universes, Hawking diverges from the purely scientific to talk about the more personal issues that have affected his work in the last fifteen years. Taken from a series of lectures and essays, Black Holes moves from an exploration of the idea that we may soon come up with a complete unified theory - a theory of physics that will explain everything, immediately putting Hawking out of work - to discussions of Hawking's childhood, and how ALS has affected his work.

He even jokes about the nature of reviews that covered his last book, most of which ran along the lines of: Stephen Hawking is a scientist who has ALS. He's written a book about time. This is what ALS is, this is how it affects Hawking, isn't it remarkable that he has overcome all these things to write a book. Oh yeah, this is what the book is about, and I liked the parts that I could understand.

Hawking suspects that there is a certain contingent of people who have bought the book, and have it on their bookshelf merely to impress guests. But judging from his discussions of the problems that people have written to him about - including some amateur scientists who would like to point out where he went wrong - most people have read it, and understood a good part of it.

His new work is much more personal and much less scientific, a change that I myself welcomed. In fact, the only bit that lost me was the chapter dedicated to a further explanation of the concept of imaginary time - the same place where most people got bogged down in the last book. So much for my career as a physicist.

But Hawking's strengths lie in his ability to explain the inexplicable in a clear, precise and humorous fashion, an ability that comes across clearly in this book. Communication helps him to organize and hone his thought - contradicting the usual condescending attitude that Hawking would lead an isolated and lonely existence. He loves explaining science, and feels that if he can't explain it well enough for people to understand, he hasn't clarified it enough in his own mind.

Reading through what seem to be such personal revelations will give readers the impression that they know Hawking. He writes in such an open and intimate fashion, that you can't help closing the book and feeling like you've made a new friend. But the greatest sense that I received from the book is that Hawking just loves to talk about the world. Talk physics, talk music (Mozart and Wagner are favourites, although he has to spell the latter V-A-R-G-N-E-R in order to get his "uncultured" voice synthesizer to say it properly) but please don't talk about how much of a hardship his life is. He is doing what he loves most; he holds the Cambridge Chair of Mathematics (the post Newton held) and is extremely happy with his family and friends.

He considers himself lucky to be doing what he loves, and we should consider ourselves very lucky to have such an extraordinary human being amongst us.

James Keast believes that the moon landing was a hoax, and that the earth is flat.

A review copy of Hawking's book was provided courtesy of Printed Passage Books.

The further adventures of Bix/Gene/Christian

An Affair with the Moon
David Gilmour
Random House
$18.50
201 pages

Bix is back!

Or, if you prefer, Eugene H. is back.

In other words, if you're a fan of the two middle-aged, hard-drinking, pill-popping, fomenting characters from David Gilmour's two previous novels Back on Tuesday and How Boys See Girls, you'll be happy to know that you can add a third personage to that list, Christian Blackwood, the protagonist of An Affair With the Moon. Like his predecessors, Christian is also an aspiring writer, a divorcee, an ex-smoker and is willing to jet off to the Caribbean on a whim.

In fact, Gilmour hasn't even bothered to change the character motivation that much - "obsessive and neurotic" fits the bill. One wonders why he just didn't stick with Bix and make a trilogy of misadventures. Or he could have just called all three characters David, for, as he admitted last year, most of the contents of his books are autobiographical.

Then again, perhaps Gilmour is cultivating this repetitiveness. Indeed, he appears to have taken the positive review of his first book by Northrop Frye to heart and wants to prove Frye's theories correct by writing the same story over and over again with different names and scenery.

The topic of An Affair With the Moon is - as it was with How Boys See Girls - an obsessive relationship. This time up, the obsession is with the protagonist's childhood friend Harrow Winnup and, like Holly from the previous book, he's really a non-person - not very interesting and unworthy of the protagonist's attention. And once again, the book is resolved when Christian abandons his obsession.

An Affair With the Moon, however, has been quite spruced up plot-wise. There's a murder, as well as a strange triangular relationship between Christian, Harrow, and Harrow's mother Florence, with both Florence and Christian competing for Harrow's attention.

Gilmour brings the story off at a fast pace, moving from Christian's childhood relationship with Harrow, to his confrontation with Florence which "officially" ends his friendship with Harrow, rushes by high school and university antics and resumes again in middle age with Christian working part-time as a high school teacher and looking to find his old buddy to see what he's been up to. These days Harrow is still wealthy, has graduated from law school but refuses to practice, and is playing in a blues band at a strip club.

Harrow and Christian reunite and head down to Jamaica for a boozy weekend. A few weeks later Christian is invited over to Harrow's estate to find a dead body and a very weak alibi from Harrow. Things escalate, Christian feels alienated again. He decides to write a play.

Christian's subsequent decisions and revenge mark the more interesting portions of the novel in its exploration of male friendship, altruism versus cowardice, and the need to leave childhood nostalgia behind. However, for such a short novel it takes a while to get there, and ends pretty abruptly. Gilmour, it seems, is more interested in recounting drinking bouts, sexual conquests and drug abuse than getting into the "real" story at hand.

It can be argued that this pre-action is supposed to ensure the reader's interest in, and sympathy for, Harrow, as well as making us understand why Christian is friends with him - but it doesn't. A laconic, burly, gun-collecting, Walt Whitman wanna-be, Harrow just doesn't have the personality to carry the book through.

Before I go much further I want to make it clear that despite the criticisms I've made, An Affair With the Moon is an enjoyable read. Gilmour is unquestionably a very talented writer. His prose is crisp, precise and manages to capture the essence of every scene without resorting to the long descriptive passages that mar the style of so many writers. He writes the way clever people think - in tight metaphor, not through extensive verbosity. One example out of hundreds I could pick from the book is when Christian leaves the courthouse after Harrow's pre-trial:

A recess was called. Outside it was obscenely sunny. Leaves jumped and preyed against the courthouse wall. I got into my car and drove straight to the bar.

Gilmour's description perfectly captures the essence of the scene, of the main character, of everything. Even the simple use of "prey" with its implications as well as its relation to "pray" is fabulous.

Gilmour is also skilled at capturing a realistic emotional response to situations. The scene in which he discovers the body at Harrow's estate is suitably tense and claustrophobic and the foreboding which follows is also masterfully captured in simple images and lines:

In the afternoon, after school, I bundled him up and took him to the park but I couldn't shake off the malaise, a sense that something was wrong, a sense that I'd done something wrong. Left a stove on, been mean to someone, lost my keys, bounced an important cheque, what was it? I thought I saw omens everywhere. A man carrying a wolf-puppy in his arms; a blood-filled syringe in the grass, pigeons swarming like maggots at the foot of a tree.

But being a skilled writer isn't enough when your subjects are trivial. Admittedly, An Affair With the Moon is more complex than How Boys See Girls, but again, too much time is wasted on immaturity. Gilmour seems to belong to the Norman Mailer Advertisements for Myself school, as evidenced by his character becoming a journalist and interviewing George Harrison. His lengthy sexual descriptions then become just a high-brow form of locker-room jock talk. And of course, this all comes from an author who has admitted he only writes "in order to get laid."

Then again, why have I read all three of Gilmour's books, and if one came out tomorrow, why would I probably go out and buy it? Aside from the pleasure of reading skillful prose, I guess that knowing the books are autobiographical gives the reader a voyeuristic thrill, like reading a diary. And of course, I'm still immature enough to think that reading about drunkenness, drug use and promiscuity is interesting in a Malcolm Lowry/Henry Miller sort of way.

If you like that kind of thing, Gilmour's in the same category - just not in the same league.

Steve Cain's chapbook Shaving with Rusty Razors will be out this Christmas.

Class of 98?
sound scary?

The Search is on for the Arts & Science Orientation Committee of 1994

Available Positions: Head Gael Academics, Operations, Socio-Cultural and Treasurer

Applications can be picked up at the AS&S CORE and must be received no later than October 13th at 4:30pm

Frosh Week is always BEST the next time around!

CompuShoppe

273 King St. East 547-2230
Monday to Friday (Saturday)
10am - 6pm 10am - 4pm

Don't Miss Out
On These Prices!

486 335X 486 33DX 486 50DX

Intel 80486SX CPU 128K Cache 101 Keyboard 120M Hard Drive 1.44M Floppy Drive 4M High Speed RAM 284p Colour SVGA Monitor 512K Video Card	Intel 80486DX CPU 128K Cache 101 Keyboard 120M Hard Drive 1.44M Floppy Drive 4M High Speed RAM 284p Colour SVGA Monitor 512K Video Card	AMD 486DX CPU 128K Cache 101 Keyboard 210M Hard Drive 1.44M Floppy Drive 4M High Speed RAM 284p Colour SVGA Monitor 512K Video Card Heat Sink Fan Included
--	--	--

$1319 $1489 $1589

Multimedia

Zoltrix MITSUMI

Package #1 Package #2 Package #3

Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone Zoltrix Zx-55 Speakers Zoltrix Headphones	Mitsumi 700ms CROM CD ROM Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone Zoltrix Zx-55 Speakers Zoltrix Headphones	Mitsumi 250ms CROM CD ROM Zoltrix Audio Plus Sound Card Zoltrix UDM-32B Microphone Zoltrix Zx-55 Speakers Zoltrix Headphones
---	--	--

$79 $279 $339

Installation: $5
Installation: $20
Installation: $20

CD ROM Bundle $99

Grolier, World Atlas, Reference Library, Animals, and Game

Please Note:
Above prices CD white quantities lost and subject to change without notice. FREE installation of peripherals, including above Multimedia specials with the purchase of a system.

Poem for Sadie

Sadie
Sadie
Sadie
You asked for my cigarette
and instead of throwing it out window smoked
it...
You walked into my friend's home
for the first time
and lay down on the bear coat carpet...
You went and bought me take out lunch every day at school...
You seem to have some life to your stride...
Sadie Sadie Sadie . . . these are the types of things...
These and many more . . . You glide down dusk's streets like angels make love,
Like God smiles.

—Francis Martinette

Stirred.

The taste of your coffee-coated tongue
in cheek makes my mouth water.
Lying in the bath,
pubic hairs
swing and stay together
like a stirr of seaweed
in a bed.
Cleansheets in a cold room smell like your hair and warm to the touch.
That day
and that way that you touched me, there,
in bed,
after the bath,
before the coffee,
has stirred me since.

—Ross Thomson

Carmina...

Poetry from the Queen's Community

For My God

When my eyes are bloodless and their firepoints dead
I will dance for you in the twilight among the bracken and the leaves.

—Sandro Pasquali

Against the Season

The richest blood of golden crimson drips
From trees with molten orange fire ablaze.
The Earth of sweet leaf-filtered water sips.
We wander through the winding wooden maze
Warmed by the autumn sun that grows more bright,
Struggling against the season, as each leaf
Falls to the ground, revealing to our sight
A flash of boldest blue, for however brief
A moment, hidden again as we make our way
Beneath the friendly outstretched maple limbs.
There could not be but on this autumn day
A more perfect blue than the blue that trims
These ancient trees - nor could such purity
Reflect in my eyes if you were not with me.

—Matthew A. King

No more sad pomes

From this pome on,
no more sad pomes.
I mean it.
As of now, I write only about Swiss double chocolate coffee,
or wooden bridges,
or the girl with red as oranges hair who sells used books downtown the one whose name
I still don't know but should someday maybe run away to Sudbury with if she has time.
Because sad pomes
are bad therapy.
People read them, but they never say that was some sad pome. Do you think we should buy a pizza together?
And why write sad pomes
if you don't get to eat pizza
together?
Sad pomes just smear my grumbly days out like rubber cement full of adjectives.
And you need that even less than me.
So no sad pomes.
Just pomes beginning
O Swiss double chocolate coffee,
O windy days,
O Conquest of the Planet of the Apes,
O my friend Tara,
O standing in a rainstorm, clothes sticking to skin, too drenched to get any drencheder
(and O pyjamas afterwards),
O garter snakes,
and oh,
O all the things and people
and instant oatmeal flavours that keep me from wanting to write sad pomes in the first place.

—T. Alex

Thomas King and Arthur Black give rave reads

BY MEGAN NICHOLS
The Queen's Journal

Thomas King and Arthur Black visited Kingston on Tuesday to regale an attentive audience with excerpts from their new books — although both men are much more than just authors.

King is the Chair of American Indian Studies at the University of Minnesota. He has adapted many of his short stories, which frequently deal with native issues, for television and radio, and is presently working at the CBC as a story editor for an upcoming series entitled Four Directions, written by and about native people.

He enlightened the audience with a short story from his new collection, One Good Story, That One. The story was inspired by King's son's complaint that there were no stories written about him, and reflects upon the themes of alienation, communication and tradition in a gently humorous style. The narrator, like his own father, enjoys simply sitting alone in the bathroom with the lights off in order to have some peace and quiet; 18-year-old son Christopher cannot understand this. (Constipation is a problem that resurfaces throughout the story.)

Christopher has similarly been severed from his ancestors' traditions, which is evident in his misconceptions of life on a reserve. "I thought you guys lived in a teepee or something," he remarks. Upon learning that his father did not have television on the reserve, he asks: "Is that why you left?" The loss of his past and the way in which it is portrayed is at once amusing, endearing and sad.

"After Christopher graduated from high school he pulled a chair up to the TV and sat there for almost a month." His father has to wait for a commercial to come on before he can talk to his son about his future, about which he appears to be completely apathetic.

This is also a story about aging, as Christopher's father continually studies himself sideways in the mirror to examine his sagging flesh. King also reflects upon his own coming-of-age and relationship with his father, and explores how this compares to the conflict he is currently having with his son. It turns out that the actual struggle between generations to understand each other has not changed all that much.

Arthur Black hosts the CBC radio show Basic Black on Saturday mornings, as well as publishing weekly (he calls them "weekly") columns in scores of Canadian newspapers. His latest book, Black By Popular Demand, like its predecessors, is a compilation of his columns and radio monologues, which are usually humorous observations of things both ordinary and extraordinary, from zucchinis and kissing to egg advertising and square trees.

He began his reading in his typically whimsical style, giving "the story of my life in two-and-a-half pages double-spaced." He talked about how the earth did not tremble at his birth; how his parents decided to keep him because he was tax-deductible; and how he lost 27 different kinds of jobs before the CBC.

Black continued to read an array of his other pieces, including one about modern poetry, which he called "infuriatingly inaccessible" and concluded by nominating "Stompin' Tom Connors for Poet Laureate — and I'm only joking a little bit!" He also related a piece about his parrot "Jocko," who didn't talk but screamed ("It could have been in English."), and who had Arthur looking through the shotgun section of the Canadian Tire magazine after three weeks. He told a "shaggy dog story" about Bruno, a dog living in the Alps who never goes on rescue missions because he continually gets lost himself and needs to be rescued by troops of humans.

Between Arthur's cynical wit and King's wonderfully well-told story, the evening was both enriching and side-splitting.

Megan Nichols

Arthur Black's reflections

▼ On trends

"I'm always interested in trends like Spandex and Lycra. Where did these come from? My wife has a theory that you can tell when a sport is trendy because people buy gloves for it. Golf gloves, baseball gloves — Did Babe Ruth ever use a baseball glove?"

"The ultimate, of course, is that you can now spend $150 for a pair of — walking shoes! Oh, shoes you can walk in! What a concept!"

▼ On technology

"We get things so out of whack ... But after thousands of years, for all the equipment and the neat Lycra and Spandex, we're no further ahead ... There's a lot of veneer on us, but you peel it back and you get Bosnia! You get people shooting pregnant women because they've got the wrong accent."

▼ On the generation gap

"There's been a genetic leap forward ... I can fix the clock on my video, but what I have to do is dig out the damn book and turn to page 38 ... My son can come along to a machine he's never seen before, and I can say, 'Dan, this isn't working,' and he'll press a bunch of buttons and I'll say, 'It's working! What did you do?' and he'll say, 'I don't know.' My kids are post-literate ... They can't tell you what they did, but they can do it instantly. As an old guy, I know I'm getting left behind. I'm like the old Eskimo on the ice floe. 'Wait for me! Wait for me!' 'I'm sorry, you're too old.'"

▼ On lawyers

"I think lawyers are the ultimate sell-out ... I think they're pimps in ties ... Plus the really telling indictment of lawyers is that they almost always go into politics. That's really damning as far as I'm concerned. If you look back 99 per cent of our prime ministers have been lawyers. Kim Campbell just hasn't had time to be a lawyer yet. I'm sure it's coming."

▼ On the election

"I just don't have any feeling about it. Maybe I'm too old because I've seen all this stuff happen before. 'You want more swimming pools? More swimming pools from the Liberals!' 'Oh, we'll do one more swimming pool.' And then I know what's going to happen, ten months down the road we're going to say, 'Just a minute, didn't Kim Campbell say that she would (fill in the blank)?' Surprise, surprise! They lie! That's what it's all about! They lie, and we fall for it, and we vote!"

"The Rhinos were my favourite party, because they brought humour to politics."

▼ On Canada

"All I can say is that Canada is about more than the GST, Brian Mulroney, and the metric system, and all those things that drive us nuts. It's about more than that. I mean, we've been here for 117 years, dammit, against all odds, against all likelihood ... I want to be Canadian, and I want Quebec to be part of my Canada ... If they don't want to be I have to accept that, but it's like losing a lover, it's very hard ... Canada is like an on-going love affair. It doesn't make any sense, it's like a big family that squabbles all the time — you've got French Canada who's always threatening to leave the house; you've got the people out West like the silly spinster sister ... All these disparate parts who are always squabbling. But it's my family. And I don't want to be part of America. I don't want to slip into the void ... I can't explain it ... You can't analyze it, it just is — and that's what Canadianism is for me — it just is."

▼ On the CBC

"It has the potential to be the most wonderful thing, and it never has, but it could be, and that's why I hang around. I think it would be the best thing to happen to Canada."

"We've got so little that ties us together. We had a train system, but we fucked that up." Black tells a story, which he says is his "most poignant memory of the CBC," about a woman named Mrs. Eiman who lives in the extreme north of Ontario. When Black was travelling through the tiny mining town, she hunted him down to ask him to come and visit her. "CBC was her lifeline. Mrs. Eiman doesn't have 45 stations, she's got one station that keeps her from going mad."

"[CBC] TV is playing the ratings game. The [CBC] radio for a large part still has the idea that it should be giving people what they can't get anywhere else on the radio."

✦ The interview with Arthur Black was conducted by MEGAN NICHOLS, who admits she wouldn't have known about Arthur were it not for a certain person who constantly reminds her of the fact.

Printed Passage Books
FALL AUTHORS' SERIES 1993

invites you to meet

KEN DRYDEN

who will be in the store autographing copies of his latest book

The Moved & the Shaken: The Story of One Man's Life

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16th, 12:00 to 1:00 pm

If you would like an autographed copy but are unable to attend, please drop by or phone

50 Princess Street
at the corner of Prince & King
Telephone: (613) 546-7650 FAX: (613) 546-5638

Sports

Gaels handed disappointing loss

Elberg is escorted off the field in an unexpected 19-16 loss to the Concordia Stingers.

Marika Glickson

BY GEOFF OWEN
The Queen's Journal

It isn't supposed to be like this. The Queen's Golden Gaels were stunned, for the second week in a row, by a weaker team. On Saturday, the Concordia Stingers beat the Gaels 19-16 in a game that featured a little bit of everything. Queen's record is now 1-3. Not Carleton, Queen's. Not Ottawa, Queen's. The defending national champions boast a losing record. This is not right. To play with the effort that the Gaels do and fail three out of four times is very sobering and bewildering to a group of athletes accustomed to winning.

The score itself was peculiar. The combined 35 points were accumulated via three converted touchdowns, two field goals, three safeties and two singles. Ironically, Queen's scored two of the three touchdowns but were unable to match Concordia's mastery of the innovative single-point-safety style offense.

Concordia's kicker nailed two of seven field goals. Rob Weir, who doubles as Queen's kicker and quarterback, missed his first field goal attempt and had his potential game-tying second attempt blocked with no time left on the clock. Queen's head coach, Doug Hargreaves, had punter Dan Codaire concede two safeties in the first half instead of kicking into the wind; Concordia conceded only one safety.

Sadly, the point differential between the Gaels' and the Stingers' kicking game was enough to earn the visiting team a victory. While the bottom line is always winning, the Gaels' ability to get into the end zone is an indication of which team had a more competent offense and, likewise, a superior defense.

Early in the second quarter, Weir hit Brad Elberg for a nifty 40 yard touchdown pass and run play. The second touchdown came midway through the second quarter when Dan McCullough caught a 17 yard pass from Weir in the end zone. The Gaels came close to scoring a third touchdown in the fourth quarter when Steve Othen replaced Weir and marched the offense down field to the Concordia 4 yard line. They then proceeded to spin their wheels, missing three attempts to get into the end zone.

With only 1:16 remaining, Queen's put together a 78 yard drive which set up a potential 26 yard field goal. The kick was blocked, the game was over and it was Concordia, not Queen's, who celebrated the victory. It just isn't supposed to be like this.

Unlike the offense, the Gaels' defense resembled, for the first time this season, the dominant unit of last season. All day they bent but only once did they break. Concordia scored two minutes into the game after Queen's offense fumbled the game's first snap deep in their own end. Concordia, when they did not attempt a field goal, had their drives stall, compliments of big plays by the Gaels' defense. Mark Johnson stripped the ball away from Concordia running back Kevin Norris late in the game to set up the Gaels' last offensive series; Braden Dent picked off a Concordia pass, rookie Pat Causey was sensational in pass coverage, half-back Aron Campbell had several good sticks. The individual efforts, notwithstanding, were superseded by the oneness of the entire unit.

Defensive co-ordinator Bob Mullen said his players played "...well enough to win a couple of games out there".

Elberg injured
Injuries also played an important role against Concordia and will apparently play an important role for the rest of the season. Starting fullback Don Rorwick has been out since the season's first game. Jamie Lewin and Joel Dagnone, two defensive starters, are still week to week. Starting nose tackle, Kevin Buske, injured himself and may play next week. The proficiency of the offense diminished almost entirely when Elberg lay face down on the Richardson Stadium field pounding his fist into the ground, unable to move his right ankle.

Later in the game, Elberg emerged from the dressing room on crutches, with his ankle wrapped in ice. He was sent for x-rays after the game and is not likely to play next week against Carleton.

Despite his disappointing season to date, Elberg has a presence that makes the Gaels better; as well, the opposition set up their defenses specifically to contain him. Now, all of that may be gone.

The way in which the points were scored, the inconsistency of the offense, the dominance of the defense in a losing cause and the injuries all lead to one conclusion: this was a strange football game. After the game the Queen's players looked stunned and confused more than disappointed and angry. When asked to comment, Dent tried to make sense of the outcome, the game and the season. He struggled to express the confusion. "We've got the players," he dropped his head and shrugged "all we have to do is crank it up". He is right. Except for the Bishop's Gaits, the Gaels are the most talented team in the conference. Their 1-3 record, however, means that they must win their last three games to ensure themselves a playoff berth.

Gaels in a must win situation
They won the Vanier Cup last season. They won it handily. Now, for the first time in seven seasons, they have lost three games in a row. A loss is one thing, but a losing streak? The season is far from over; the mission is far from lost. But it was never supposed to be like this.

Ruck Over

Waterloo escapes with a victory.

BY ROB THOMPSON
The Queen's Journal

The Gaels were brought down from the realm of the undefeated Saturday. With three starters (Gareth and Steve Pettigrew, and Kevin O'Shea) away representing Ontario at the National Men's Rugby Championships in Calgary, the Gaels dropped a hard-fought decision Saturday to the Waterloo Warriors 19-17. The Gaels now stand at 3-1 after beating York 31-12 last Wednesday.

The game started optimistically for the Gaels. They were the first on the scoresheet as Ben Andrews brought in a try in the third minute. The try was a result of some fine passing and speed, and onlookers sensed a massacre in the making. Waterloo hung tough however, and applied solid pressure for the next 10 minutes, and got on the board in the 14th with the first of four penalties by Simon Lewis. Penalties were the order of the day, as each team counted four.

The Gaels stretched their lead in the first half on penalties by Ben Berger. He put two chip shots through in the middle of the half to extend the Queen's lead to 11-3. A Waterloo kick in the 30th minute kept them within a try. In injury time, Berger rounded out the first half scoring with another penalty. The Gaels had to settle for the three points after coming perilously close to counting a try. This was ominous foreshadowing for the rest of the day. The score at the half, 14-6 Queen's.

The second half was all Gaels early on, however, they didn't get any points to show for their efforts. The Warrior defenders repeatedly turned the Queen's offence away from within feet of the end zone, on one occasion they were actually in, but couldn't get the ball down to count the try. This was the opening the Warriors needed. They proceeded to chip away at the lead, making full use of the opportunities granted to them. In the 23rd minute Antony Beaty barrelled in for a try.

Tennis Gaels still #1

BY GORAN
The Queen's Journal

On Saturday, the men's tennis team hosted the University of Ottawa and UWO in a crucial double header at Kingston Tennis World. Playing team members were Peter Walker, Richard Thomson, Mike Harris, Chris Birthwhistle, Jason Christie and Dave McCallum.

Against the newly formed Ottawa team, the Gaels had no problems in sweeping the series 7-0. Peter Walker came up big with a three-set victory at the #1 singles, and teamed with Mike

The try was a result of a gamble by the Warriors.

Instead of kicking for an almost certain three points, they opted to run the ball in. The convert, kicked by Lewis, brought them within a point. Lewis' third penalty kick of the game in the 31st minute gave the Warriors their first lead 16-14. The Gaels didn't roll over and die and gave the fans a thrilling finish. They brought the ball deep inside Waterloo territory. After ten minutes of relentless pressure the Gaels finally reclaimed the lead on Ben Berger's penalty kick in the 40th minute. The penalty kick was set up by Sean Fauth's block of a Waterloo clearance deep in their own end of the field. The Gaels kept Waterloo bottled up in their own end in the dying minutes, and looked as if they were going to escape with the victory.

A strong clearance, and then a penalty call on Queen's gave Waterloo one final chance to steal the victory. Simon Lewis teed the ball up just inside the half, and, with a powerful wind at his back, nailed the penalty kick, as the referee sounded the final whistle of the game. The Waterloo benefit stormed the field to mob the star of the day, Simon Lewis. There is no question this will be the pinnacle of their season.

Coach Ferguson was disappointed with the loss and gave Waterloo credit on their play, while stating that the Gaels played a poor game, and couldn't close the door on a Warrior team that wouldn't say die. When asked whether the team missed the players away at nationals, he said it was the players who were on the field that lost the game, not the players in Calgary. He stated that one loss doesn't make or break the season, and the team will put this behind them and concentrate on next week's opposition, the UWO Mustangs. The game is on Friday in London. The team plays its final home game Saturday, October 16th, against York. As usual, the game begins at 1p.m. at Kingston Field.

BY CORINNE KEPPEL
and DREW HUNGERFORD
The Queen's Journal

The Golden Gaels Rowing Crew competed on Saturday in the Head of the Trent, where they met strong crews, a technically difficult race course, and depressing weather.

However, Queen's still managed to grab some golds, visit the beer garden and return to Kingston in time for dinner. The Trent race course in Peterborough is complemented by three bridges and an incredibly narrow canal, which demands skillful boat handling by both coxes and crews.

The Varsity crews competed in a five kilometer race, and the Varsity Development crews in a course about 750 meters shorter. The style of race is known as a "head race", where boats are released to race every fifteen seconds and are each individually timed down the course. A strong boat knows it is racing well if it increases the gap between itself and its follower and is not overtaken.

In a close race, the Heavy Men's Eight experienced an unusual defeat and came a tight third, after Trent and McGill. The recovery of the week must be given to the Men's Heavy Four, who flew to the finish and had a dramatic win of over thirty seconds.

After a disappointing race at U of T last weekend, the crew of An-

Row-row-row your boat

Men's heavy-eights miss first place for the first time in three years drew Hungerford, Gcoff Paisley, Martin Rydlo, Steve Flindall and cox Leanne Warren used all of the power they had and made a comeback to place first. They placed in front of Western, McGill, U of T, Trent and Ottawa, pleasing their coach Jonathan Rowley.

The Lightweight Men's Eight and the Lightweight Men's Four both met tough competition at Trent, and in close races, were defeated.

The Heavy Women's Eight placed third in two categories, demonstrating great stamina, strength and improvement. The Heavy Women's Four powered into second place. The FLightweight Women's Eight had a victory of their own and came second to U of T by seven seconds in a physically demanding race. The Lightweight Women's Four also had a strong race.

There were a number of successes among the small boats. Kristen Bridges conquered the Heavyweight Single event by over two minutes. Anne Butler, in the Lightweight Women's Single, also finished with a strong first. The two women later joined to compete in the Lightweight Double and came first, dominating once again. Chris Davidson came second in the Lightweight Men's Single.

In addition to these boats, another victory was seized in the Alumni category. The two Queen's Alumni boats, made up of both coaches and alumni men and women, placed first and second in the Alumni Boat Race, even though their participation was a last minute decision.

The Varsity Development Women had a second weekend of successful racing. The Novice 'A' crew of Shannon Wesley, Ira Cymbalski, Jill Besse, Mary Shiela Myers, Meredith Rainbird, Odette McCarthy, Jen Flynn, Sara Shoichet and cox

Emily Agard, placed first, almost a full minute ahead of the second placeboat.

The Novice 'B' boat was skillfully lead to a successful finish by con Kim Tompkins. The crew members are Steph Bonn, Lisa Cornell, Joanne Eddy, Sophie Low-Beer, Keira Miyata, Dorlena Pflugbeil, Rebecca Tocher and Heather Walzak.

For the Men's Varsity Development crews, Trent was the first chance to race against the competition. The Lightweight boat had a particularly strosing race and were able to surpass the Heavyweight crew. The Lightweight crew is composed of Adam Shultz, Matt Yasinchuk, Geoff Richards, Malcolm Chang, Stephen Parsons, Mike White, Ka-Hung Law, Anthony Brown and cox, Julie Kim.

The Queen's rowing crews travel to meet the competition once again next weekend in St. Catherine's at Brock University.

Head of the Trent is preparation for the rest of the season

Michael Hungerford

A TOUGH WORKOUT DEMANDS SERIOUS EQUIPMENT

Runners' Choice

THE SERIOUS CHOICE FOR ATHLETIC FOOTWEAR
260 PRINCESS ST. 542-2410

Cards of Distinction

Queen's Student Special
7 Months Special
for only $229.00

SUPERIOR NAUTILUS

Aerobics, Nautilus, Free Weights, Cardio,
featuring ... Star Trac 2000 Treadmills,
The Step, The Slide, StairMaster,
Windracer, Concept II Rowers

Where your name means something
80 Princess St. 544-6222
Inquire about our Queen's Alumni Club

FOCUS ON FASHION

Eyeglasses, selection & quality second to none.
Contact lenses, all types, certified fitters.
Lenses: thin, ultra violet screen & scratch resistant.
Binoculars, Telescopes & Magnifiers.
Sunglasses: Vuarnet, Ray Ban, Tane Ray & many more.
Special attention to Difficult Prescriptions

Marc F. Raymond
OPTICIANS LTD.
(Across from Market Square)

549-2020

324 King St. E., Kingston, Ontario

CANADA ON SALE!

FROM	TORONTO OW Return	MONTREAL OW Return
Vancouver	199 339	229 359
Calgary	169 299	189 349
Edmonton	169 299	189 349
Kingston	69 98	59 109
Saskatoon	179 299	179 329
Winnipeg	139 229	149 269
St. John	149 289	129 229
Hallifax	159 269	129 209
St. John's	199 379	169 329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

QUEEN'S SKYDIVING CLUB

The First Jump Class is Thursday, October 14th, from 7:00 to 9:30pm in M-C D214

Our first jump is set for October 16. The price will be $150 to $180 CASH, depending on group size.

CONTACT 549-6264 FOR MORE INFORMATION.

BY MIKE LEWICKI
The Queen's Journal

This past weekend our women's tennis team headed to Toronto to play the Varsity Blues and the Laurier Golden Hawks at the National Tennis Centre. With nine scheduled matches against each university we knew we were in for a long day (with further plans after that we knew we'd be in for a long night).

Once arriving at our destination, our matches got under way. The first match was a success, and from that point on everything snowballed. Our Gaels smoked the team from Laurier 9-0, and then we beat a good team in U. of T. 8-1. Everybody played well and the scores indicated this. Against Laurier, Moira Malustotto picked up her first win, while Heather MacDonnell and Nancy Ip were credited with their first singles wins of the season. Against Toronto, our team came out firing on all cylinders.

Tennis Anyone?

Bali "the Machine" Athwal was so smooth in a 6-0, 6-0 win, M.J. Young fought hard for a 3-6, 6-3, 6-3 victory, Nicky Myslivecek won 7-5, 6-0, Pam (are you on steroids?) Lewis easily won 6-1, 6-1, Andrea Mathew won easily 6-3, 6-2, and Miko Thomson pounded her way to a 6-0, 6-2 victory. In doubles action, Bali and Pam won 6-1, 6-0, Nicky and M.J. lost a tight three set match, while Lisa "Pops" Bradford and Miko won in three sets.

After that great display of tennis we opted to go for dinner and a movie (Yeah right!). We headed to Pizza Hut for one reason, Bali wanted the X-MEN cups that they give to the kids. Being very hungry, the women ate like savages, I like a gentleman, and then we got our cheque. (By the way M.J., it seems Andrew Shue called me and you are 115 per cent compatible).

After dinner we went the club route. That's right, we got down with our funky selves. Our first problem, how the hell are we going to parallel park "the Beast"? Our second problem, how are we going to get into these places when some of us (Miks and Lisa) forgot our identification in Kingston? Our third concern, why won't those nice men at Club Max leave us all alone? When we finally left, we toured the Skydome. The fact that it was 2:30 didn't stop us. On the way back to the hotel we had to prove our "guns in the air" to show Torontonians who's the boss.

When we got up Sunday, and believe me it was hard to wake up, we hit the trails for home. It was another very successful stop on our way to the Team Championships. Next week our women take rest, but on Saturday October 9, we play York at West Campus. All those interested in supporting the women are encouraged to come out.

Women take the cake at Laurentian

BY JASON LEWIS
The Queen's Journal

Like some demented Escher drawing, the humbling course at Laurentian University seemed to go ever upward in a series of connected loops. Even running backwards, the loops still went uphill. Despite this, the indomitable Queen's women's cross-country team won their race and continued their climb to the top of the National rankings.

Braving frigid weather and enduring an extended bus ride, the cross-country team made their way to Sudbury to participate in Laurentian's first ever University cross-country meet. It was an intimate affair whose guests included Guelph, RMC, Ottawa, York, Lake Superior State, University of Michigan, ourselves and the gracious hosts.

Did I mention the hills? Winning a cake for their efforts, the women's team dominated the race with an amazingly strong team. Kerry MacKelvie, who held the first ever cross-country retro sleepover the night before, led the women with a fifth place finish on the five kilometer course. Sharon Shew, who has just recently returned to the distance running fold, handed in a notable performance and came in seventh overall. The "rookie du jour", Kristy Johnston, placed tenth while the ever reliable Melissa Buchan posted an admirable thirteenth place. Ellen Fohran backed them up in seventeenth place. As a team they garnered a delightfully low score of 52 points, beating York with 60 in second place and Guelph with even more than that despite their first and second place individual finishes.

Coaches Jeff Brison and Dave Scott-Thomas claimed after the race that the women's team could "CRUSH ANYONE." This is not just coaches optimism speaking. Even without the usual complement of stars, the women have not lost to another Canadian team this year. Queen's strength, claim the coaches, lays in the sheer number of strong runners running for Queen's in both the men's and women's groups. While other schools may have a handful of excellent runners (i.e. Guelph's women and Laurentian's men), these schools do not have the pool of talent that runs eight to a dozen deep as we do here at Queen's. So far, the coaches have chosen not to peak for any of the early or mid-season races, or enter all the athletes at every meet. The payoff, hopefully, will come at the end of the season in the form of a consistently trained, well-rested and hungry team ready for the provincial championships.

Like the women, the men's team did not register all of the glory. However, unlike the women, the men's division did not reward us so kindly. The men's team placed fourth overall with 89 points. The hosts won the race by the tightest of margins with 49 points in front of Lake Superior State with 50. Our friends from Guelph raced well to a third place finish with 52 points.

Al Pribaz led the men's team with a tenth place finish after his customarily conservative start. Chris "I am the bubble," Minns was hot on his heels and placed eleventh. John Markell, sporting the latest of his byzantine hair styles, placed seventeenth. Ian Reid and Grant Strachan made up Queen's five qualifiers with 25th and 26th places respectively. The coaches were encouraged by the consistently strong performances of the younger runners such as Minns, Markell and Reid.

Next week, a small and concentrated Queen's team will be competing in a big meet in Pennsylvania. Though the men may be dropping in National rankings, they can be counted on to perform well down South and in the OUAA's.

A special thanks goes out to the MacKelvies for their support and generosity, and Grant (the driver) for his persistence, in spite of uncooperative gas stations.

Entertainment

The age of sublime savagery

The Age of Innocence
Directed by Martin Scorsese
Catarqui Cineplex
BY CHRISTOPHER ZABEL
The Queen's Journal

"You must see that this can't last."
"What can't?"
"Our being together — and not together."

Such is the conclusion drawn by Ellen Olenska in this screen depiction of the New York "aristocracy" of the 1870s. Nothing real can last in New York's world of childish illusion, and the illusions themselves are doomed by the perfidious hand of progress. Still, as deluded and savagely tribal as the upper class is, their story is made poignant by the stunning beauty of their precariously balanced innocence.

The Age of Innocence was originally the novel for which Edith Wharton won the Pulitzer Prize in 1921. Wharton grew up as a member of the New York "leisured class" (whose exploits she would chronicle throughout her career) and spent the first half of her life mixing with the high society of Newport, in Rhode Island. Her novel is, on one level, an autobiography of her confused upbringing.

The novel also extends to themes of duty to one's self-deceptions, the meaning of remembered love and happiness, and further lends itself to an allegorical description of the relationship of post-colonial America to its European heritage.

One's first reaction to the ads and trailers for this movie might be understandably sceptical. What has come to be known as the "period piece", generally characterized by elaborate costuming, tea drinking, and everyone acting as "British" as is humanly possible, surely must be viewed with suspicion. It just isn't we self-styled North American brainy types are really aristocrats at heart and are subconsciously bemoaning the fact that we weren't born a hundred years earlier when thought it to be. However, even if the setting is suspect, the characters still have much to offer modern audiences.

The Age of Innocence concerns an up-and-coming New York inner circle member, the recently engaged Newland Archer (Daniel Day-Lewis), who begins to question the basis of his well-dressed and well-fed life-style when he meets the Countess Olenska (Michelle Pfeiffer). Olenska has just returned from the continent and her acquired European sensibilities quickly throw the highly varnished airs of the New York establishment into chaos. The repressed and twisted love affair that ensues between Archer and Olenska goes on to complicate Archer's marriage to May Welland (Winona Ryder) and, as usual, the good at heart meet unlucky ends.

What separates this movie from its sister films of the Forester renaissance is that its characters are a good deal less obvious (which is unusual for Scorsese, whose street-wise New York characters aren't usually shy about expressing their emotions). For example, Day Lewis, as Archer, is nothing like he was as Cecil from A Room with a View, whose Edwardianisms were undercut so obviously that he, along with half the cast, had to be dismissed.

Although the stilted manners remain, they are done with a grace that forces us to view him with a terrible seriousness. He communicates pages of commentary with only his eyebrows and his relationship with Olenska is far too ambiguous to be readily understood. Unfortunately, those not familiar with the novel may easily confuse a highly charged gaze with blank and boring acting. And, as is usually the case, what is ambiguous in the novel is incomprehensible on the screen. Thus, quick perusal of Wharton is indispensable to a full appreciation.

Winona Ryder must not be overlooked in this movie. As May, the innocent victim of Newland's newfound mental liberty, Winona's girlish enthusiasm works wonders. Also, this movie represents a big step in Ryder's career (I'm pretending that Dracula never happened). Those teen-angst days that, with the exception of Heathers, can be difficult to defend in hostile company are apparently over, and she is taking on more critically pleasing roles. (Anybody who says that Ryder's performance is one-dimensional must be informed that she went the entire movie without once indulging in a quirky eyebrow wrinkling.) Although she was inherently perfect for the part, I will not be over-optimistic in predicting a brilliant and various career.

The Age of Innocence is exquisitely beautiful even just to look at. Scorsese hired an etiquette consultant to spend two years researching the period, and half of the rumoured $40 million budget would appear to have gone into the sets. Also, the precision with which Scorsese exercises the physical details of his work is mirrored in the minimalist acting strategies of his characters, which leave enough unsaid to nourish several viewings. Rarely does Hollywood turn literature into film, and almost never does it do it so well.

The ill-fated Winona Ryder and Daniel Day-Lewis share a dance.

natural that someone as relatively obscure as E.M. Forester should have nearly his entire corpus filmed within the space of a few years.

Perhaps the motivation is that we could double-think our way out of guilt before lunch and enjoy a pleasant afternoon of lawn tennis. If such is the case, then movie going is a greater mystery than anyone

Cocamo gets spiced up

Spice
The Cocamo
BY NICHOLAS GARRISON
The Queen's Journal

spice in, an aromatic pungent vegetable substance used as a condiment and for seasoning food.

Aware as I am that a band's name generally signifies nothing and is in fact an arbitrary word or phrase, I would suggest that the band Spice shares this much in common with its namesake: that they can be likened to a pungent olfactory condition.

Which is not to say that they stink. Spice is a tight band that obviously know what they are doing with their instruments. In fact, the keyboard player and one of the backup singers once earned their daily bread in the employ of Maxi Priest, and the guitar player is the direct descendant of the guitarist from the Merry Men. Thus, when they stick to basic reggae and soca grooves they smell like roses.

But there is still a curious hum off them. In their efforts to spice up the classics they turn the Caribbean beach party into the lounge of a Howard Johnson's.

The DJ had the place pumped but an uneasy hush came over the crowd as the band made their clouded entrance amidst the fake smoke which billowed out onto the stage. Their authenticity having been established by the announcement that they had come from the Barbados, they launched into an original tune from their new album, Camouflage. "It's just an Irie Feeling" is a song with a good groove, but musically, it is as every bit self-indulgent as its title — there is little in the way of melody, the song is simple a lot of fills being played over top of one another.

Next came a cover of UB40's "Fallin' In Love With You", which also seemed to groove alright, but the horns of the original were replaced (by necessity) with a synthesizer. This in fact was one of the band's biggest problems: the arrangements were good and the "horn" lines, if played by horns, would have been truly heavy. But in the Cocamo that night one got the impression that the song was ghost-written by Howard Johnson's.

The unquestionable low point of the evening was a ballad dedicated to the memory of Bob Marley, "Bob's Song." Maybe a Rastafarian would have liked this song, but I didn't see any in the Cocamo and the song sounded like Journey doing a cover of Rush's "Tom Sawyer." Get the picture?

But from here the show improved dramatically. The following song, "Rasta Man", was a truly danceable reggae number with some original percussion. The next tune, "Soca Boca" really got the crowd going, and not surprisingly, since soca is arguably the most infectious rhythm known to humanity. A little call and response broke down the fourth wall and got people hollering and waving their arms. It was the last song of the set and was quite an achievement, considering the inauspicious beginning.

It would be difficult to determine whether the crowd enjoyed the DJ's music during the break more than they did the set, but one factor to Spice's discredit is that they left the stage empty for more than half an hour, allowing the dancers to get rather more familiar songs, which made their return a slight annoyance to some. Whether to atone for this, or in complete disregard for it, the second set was taken up for the most part by a lengthy UB40 medley, comprised of "The Way You Do the Things You Do", "I Got You Babe", "Red Red Wine", "Rat in the Kitchen", "Cher-E-O Baby", and "Here I Am Baby." Not particularly spicy and a trifle wanting in the originality department, but most people were pretty drunk and everybody seemed to be quite into it. The playing was fine, but there is only so much one can do with UB40 tunes.

But, like a good stripper (or so I'm told), Spice saved the best for last. They launched into a couple of original soca numbers that finally put their combined talent to use without committing the sin of Onan, if you know what I mean. The dancing which seemed a little feigned at times was now an authentic rhythmic frenzy of gyrating pelvises, half-closed eyes and sweaty upper lips (and that was just me). The second song seemed to be called "Take Your Clothes Off" and, following the example of the lead singer, several members of the audience did just that, to a limited degree of course. The point is that the band was truly cooking...and yes, the dish was spicy.

And then it was over. It was last call, and the band was gone. We had heard two smokin' songs, but we weren't sure whether we wanted more. Pungent? Spicy? Vegetable? Odiferous? Difficult to say. Everybody had a good time. Let's leave it at that.

Contemplating the Spirit

Two views on Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives

Spirit Archives is an installation presently on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. Pat Robbins-Madill recently spoke with artist Julie Withrow, while reviewer Mike Moss offers a different perspective on the exhibit.

Julie Withrow
Spirit Archives
Agnes Etherington Art Centre
BY PATRICK ROBBINS-MADILL
The Queen's Journal

This past Sunday, the Agnes Etherington Art Centre hosted an opening reception for Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives, a collection of the artist's most recent works. The artist herself was on hand to answer questions and to provide information to the curious and the querulous alike.

According to Julie Withrow, Spirit Archives "is an installation that explores the spiritual aspects of life. The artifacts suggest various rituals, symbols, and magical interventions that human beings have always used to connect themselves with forces beyond the boundaries of time and space."

Perhaps what is most striking is how Withrow imparts a sense of continuity to the exhibition by using similar objects such as bones, shells, feathers and fertility goddesses in each of the pieces. Also, the materials she uses (such as altars, and paint), which are all finished in sombre hues, give the various works a sense of harmony. The pieces are also designed to be interactive. Perhaps the best example of this is That Which Remains, a wooden cabinet that contains twenty slender drawers. As the viewer opens each drawer, a new set of objects is revealed. With each successive drawer, the viewer is given a sense of peeling back the layers of time and hence, of discovering a new layer of meaning. Altars, as Withrow indicates, "looks at how we use spirituality to try to bind us to the mystical elements of the Earth." Through its formal arrangement and specific use of candles, books and pedestals, the work is designed to resemble an altar and hence, lends the piece its name. This piece places more emphasis on conventional ritual practices rather than shamanistic ones. The sense of order and proportion is more in line with a modern church than any ancient or aboriginal rite and its sense of convention is displayed nicely in the meticulous arrangement of its candles. In fact, one is almost tempted to light one. In other words, Withrow has explored the theme of veneration as a form of worship extremely well. Perhaps the notebooks that lie on each of the three pedestals, underscore the source of the complete earthiness of the fossil. As a matter of style, most of the works in Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives share a weather beaten, just recently excavated image which is supposed to be an attempt at primitivism. And the problem with primitivism is choosing between its geometric and spiritual value. Picasso did both, but he was also one of the first.

Altars by Julie Withrow

Withrow tries to pack a great deal of primitive spirit into her cabinets, but in vain; they are cabinets first, works of art second. Not having the benefit of Stone Age experience invests Withrow's primitive style with the contrived, looking at the spiritual world with the eye of an archivist causes the artist to lose touch with the reality of her work. Which isn't to say that she did not succeed in conjuring some dreamy images.

Her fertility "Willendorf" women (especially the woman in the cart) and enclosed or precariously balanced animals on pedestals are almost as striking as the death's head located in the twelfth shelf of That Which Remains. But again, we unearth the feeling of having to flip through a naturalist's scrapbook, the figures arranged into such well ordered and documented collections as they are. When Leonardo painted the Mona Lisa, he didn't include a textual explanation of a certain smile.

Spirit Archives will be displayed at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until October 13.

the complete earthiness of the fossil. As a matter of style, most of the works in Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives share a weather beaten, just recently excavated image which is supposed to be an attempt at primitivism. And the problem with primitivism is choosing between its geometric and spiritual value. Picasso did both, but he was also one of the first.

Withrow tries to pack a great deal of primitive spirit into her cabinets, but in vain; they are cabinets first, works of art second. Not having the benefit of Stone Age experience invests Withrow's primitive style with the contrived, looking at the spiritual world with the eye of an archivist causes the artist to lose touch with the reality of her work. Which isn't to say that she did not succeed in conjuring some dreamy images.

Her fertility "Willendorf" women (especially the woman in the cart) and enclosed or precariously balanced animals on pedestals are almost as striking as the death's head located in the twelfth shelf of That Which Remains. But again, we unearth the feeling of having to flip through a naturalist's scrapbook, the figures arranged into such well ordered and documented collections as they are. When Leonardo painted the Mona Lisa, he didn't include a textual explanation of a certain smile.

Spirit Archives will be displayed at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until October 13.

BY MIKE MOSS
The Queen's Journal

Kingston artist, Julie Withrow treads on thin ice in Spirit Archives. Whenever an artist messes with "forces beyond the boundaries of time and space", the museum goer is usually slapped with a comprehensive guide to the symbolic meanings behind the art. Often this manual is written by a loyal follower or critic, but as is often the case, the artist feels misunderstood so he/she takes a personal hand in the matter (take Dali's play by play dissection of one of his own paintings in the Chicago Art Institute).

Withrow takes the unusual step of designing her explanatory handbook into the architecture of the exhibit. A trilogy of titled books, "Spirituality", "Domesticity", and "Fertility" are artistic impressions by themselves, but also serve to complement the other pieces. And yet by stacking up the quantity of exhibited works (there are almost fifty individual articles), intentionally or not, she produces a catalogue effect. That brings us back to the artistic directory which such a great body of information demands, and thus the "archive" is companion word to "spirit", the other half of the exhibit's title.

But what about the spirit? Does it really invoke "common human spirituality", or, in the words of curator Jan Ellen, "a harmonious relationship with cosmic forces that shape daily existence?" After a survey of the three thematic sections - Altars, Dream Archives, and a group of cabinets, the most important of which is entitled, That Which Remains - the verdict is negative.

The problem is in the essentials. The artist's clarity of vision is crystal, the art itself is generally well crafted, and the style is sincere, only the concept on which everything hinges is flawed. Altars, for instance, looks like a bird fossil, and, then, there are the candlesticks. However the candle as ritual is a weak symbol when placed near the fossil because as an invention the candle is too sophisticated for this veneration. Entitled "Spirituality", "Domesticity" and "Fertility", each book contains a series of images with a caption underneath.

Again, the themes in these note books are apparent in Withrow's other works, particularly Dream Boxes. Once again, images of children, cattle, horses and fertility dolls combine with the previous images of the other pieces to unify Withrow's theme. Dream Boxes, however, "looks at how our unconscious continues our search for understanding even as we sleep."

Julie Withrow is a Centreville-based artist and acknowledges the Special Art Program at Toronto's central Technical School for providing her with the technical skills necessary to carry through her ideas as an artist. As I found out, Withrow is always good for a story. When I asked her about her days at the Ontario College of Art, she told me she used to bring her crocheting to class. "One day I forgot my crocheting at home," she said, "and I never went back." Perhaps one of Withrow's more memorable quotes from her previous exhibition Earth Artifacts is "I've always been a little put off by the word 'natural' — it always makes me think of nudist camps."

the complete earthiness of the fossil. As a matter of style, most of the works in Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives share a weather beaten, just recently excavated image which is supposed to be an attempt at primitivism. And the problem with primitivism is choosing between its geometric and spiritual value. Picasso did both, but he was also one of the first.

Withrow tries to pack a great deal of primitive spirit into her cabinets, but in vain; they are cabinets first, works of art second. Not having the benefit of Stone Age experience invests Withrow's primitive style with the contrived, looking at the spiritual world with the eye of an archivist causes the artist to lose touch with the reality of her work. Which isn't to say that she did not succeed in conjuring some dreamy images.

Her fertility "Willendorf" women (especially the woman in the cart) and enclosed or precariously balanced animals on pedestals are almost as striking as the death's head located in the twelfth shelf of That Which Remains. But again, we unearth the feeling of having to flip through a naturalist's scrapbook, the figures arranged into such well ordered and documented collections as they are. When Leonardo painted the Mona Lisa, he didn't include a textual explanation of a certain smile.

Spirit Archives will be displayed at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until October 13.

the complete earthiness of the fossil. As a matter of style, most of the works in Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives share a weather beaten, just recently excavated image which is supposed to be an attempt at primitivism. And the problem with primitivism is choosing between its geometric and spiritual value. Picasso did both, but he was also one of the first.

Withrow tries to pack a great deal of primitive spirit into her cabinets, but in vain; they are cabinets first, works of art second. Not having the benefit of Stone Age experience invests Withrow's primitive style with the contrived, looking at the spiritual world with the eye of an archivist causes the artist to lose touch with the reality of her work. Which isn't to say that she did not succeed in conjuring some dreamy images.

Her fertility "Willendorf" women (especially the woman in the cart) and enclosed or precariously balanced animals on pedestals are almost as striking as the death's head located in the twelfth shelf of That Which Remains. But again, we unearth the feeling of having to flip through a naturalist's scrapbook, the figures arranged into such well ordered and documented collections as they are. When Leonardo painted the Mona Lisa, he didn't include a textual explanation of a certain smile.

Spirit Archives will be displayed at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until October 13.

the complete earthiness of the fossil. As a matter of style, most of the works in Julie Withrow's Spirit Archives share a weather beaten, just recently excavated image which is supposed to be an attempt at primitivism. And the problem with primitivism is choosing between its geometric and spiritual value. Picasso did both, but he was also one of the first.

There must be some way to avoid doing the same thing for the next forty years.

You'll be getting your degree from a top school. And you're ready to find a great job. The question is: which job? And can it interest you for your whole career?

At Andersen Consulting, it's our job to help clients do what they do. Only better. For you, that means opportunity and challenge.

Part of our business is anticipating the future. So come talk to us about yours. Find out more about a career with Andersen Consulting.

Andersen Consulting is an equal opportunity employer.

Where we go from here.

Information session Tuesday, October 5th, 5:30pm at the Faculty Club.

Kingston's wet and chilly fest

Inclement weather fails to dampen crowd's spirits

Kingston Chili Fest
Confederation Park
BY CHRISTOPHER ZABEL
The Queen's Journal

It was a blustery Saturday that hovered malevolently over Kingston's third annual Chili Fest this year, thus making it difficult to drag the previously enthusiastic out of bed. However, more than three thousand community members opted to fly in the face of common sense in order to combat their digestive systems in support of Hospice Kingston.

It isn't completely sensible that a food renowned for little more than malodorous bodily unmentionables and spices of near unpalatability should generate excitement in our quiet Kingston community. Upon inquiry, bearded fellows who look as though they ought to have all answers only mutter something like, "It's beans" or the less helpful (and slightly unsettling) "My mama told me never t' mix possum tails with black eyed peas."

Perhaps it has something to do with there being no Taco Bell in the city. It could be that our Mexican friends from the south account for a larger portion of our North American collective unconscious than anyone knew. I've always enjoyed Speedy Gonzales cartoons, but have never hazarded a connection before today. In any case, folks turned out in droves, and it was not only the gastronomically impregnable university types, but real people as well, in great numbers and family units.

As for the chili itself, I'm reluctant to offer a true opinion, as this was a charity event. The basic problem probably was that, in fear of having their chili taste like someone else's, all of the restaurants

Serving up a regal chili...perfect for Montezuma's Revenge?

Tricia Bauman

went out of their way to create something bizarre. I detected brown sugar, cinnamon, curry, nuts, and a number of other ingredients that right-thinking people regularly don't mix with beans and beef. However, the culinary insecurities of a lowly reporter are not meant to deter anyone from this adventure for the taste buds.

The people's choice award for both a cool looking booth and great tasting chili was snagged by the Canadian Forces group, which according to the organizers was an unexpected twist. Personally though, I'd like to extend congratulations to The Shot, whose experimentation with black olives really paid off. But, there were forty-six entrants in this year's festival and one can only keep an open mind about innovative recipes for so long. The proverbial starving children who have no chili would have been upset at the procession of bowl dumpers shuffling towards the garbage can. Obsessive types who are looking to get over a chili addiction would have happily developed an aversion within the space of an hour or so. Indeed, most participants in this year's festivities will be probably be looking for alternative uses for their ground beef this month.

Also, in addition to the chili, this year's Fest added to its attraction by providing cool things to do while one was taking five. There was a classic car expedition, chili orientated games for the kids (?), and a local radio personality making bad jokes over a P.A. system. The high-

These two frail young girls, their pale faces outlined by the foreboding sky, jiggled with an enthusiasm which captured the hearts of the crowd.

The Hospice Kingston organization which benefited from the event is a dedicated group of volunteers who mind the needs of people with life-threatening diseases and of the terminally ill. Because the sick can be treated with greater dignity and cost efficiency in their own homes, the group specializes in personalized home care. To this end, the Chili Fest raised an estimated $12,000.

In spite of being the victim of the worst possible scenario for an outdoor event - drizzle mixed with skies of a distinctly eerie hue - the event went off incredibly well. Head organizer Richard Cilles (shouldn't he change that to "Chilles") concluded that the large turnout in spite of the weather indicates that the Chili Fest has great potential for generating money for worthy causes and will certainly become a Kingston tradition.

What can you get at JJ's for under $5⁰⁰ you ask?

EVERYTHING!

(Poutine, Salads, Stk & Chk Sandwiches, Draft, Cappuccino)

WARNING: EATING AT JJ'S CAN BE HABIT FORMING!

409 Johnson Street at University, Tele #: 547-3771

Gotcha!

If a Journal Photog has snapped a pic of you, then drop by the Journal and grab a copy of it. The cost is close to nothing, and the nostalgia is huge!

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS FORUM

Thursday October 14th, 11:00-2^{P.M.}

Representatives from the following schools will be in Mackintosh-Corry Hall (across from cafeteria) to present information on applying to their programs:

Chiropractic Medicine	Journalism
Speech Pathology	Theology
Library Information Science	Social Work
Industrial Relations	Medicine
Urban & Regional Planning	Optometry
Law

☞ answers to questions on admission requirements

☞ information on programs offered

Gaudibirds Shine

The Gaudibirds with Los Seamonsters
AJ's Hangar
BY DAVID CARPENTER
The Queen's Journal

The Gaudibirds (formerly Shine), along with opening act Los Seamonsters, put on a show that shook the house last Wednesday night at AJ's. Despite a moderate turnout, the faithful that showed certainly got their money's worth.

With the exception of a rather rotund, beer-swilling heckler by the pool tables, Los Seamonsters came on around ten o'clock to a sparse crowd that seemed to barely acknowledge the band's presence. With a gig later on that evening at the Toucan, Los Seamonsters could be in the running for the title of "K-town's hardest working band."

The band opened with a song called "Wonder", followed by "Tall Buildings", "Hurry", and "A.P. Inclined." Despite the steady vocal and percussion efforts of Billy Death and Harry Hollywood, along with the energetic antics of that lively little upstart, bass-player Sean Seamonster, these first four distortion filled ditties failed to get the dozen or so on-lookers on their feet.

The set progressed with highlights such as "Forefingers" (with a number of impressive rapid-fire drums rolls by Mr. Hollywood), along with a cover of the Alex Chilton penned tune "The Letter", bringing to life a song that was lifeless to begin with. In fact the crowd even began warm up to Los Seamonsters, who were quite obviously enjoying themselves no matter how many were listening. The group ended their portion of the bill with "AGD", clearly the most technically impressive song of the set and proving that Los Seamonsters have the ability to break a somewhat redundant three-chord mold.

With tongue in cheek, Sean Seamonster described their music as "hoodlum rock": a name befitting a band whose sound is reminiscent of the pioneers of this brand of straight-up, good-time rock, such as The Ramones, The Stooges, and of course the WKRP inspired "Scum of the Earth". You can't help but like these guys because, as Sean, Billy, and Harry attest, they "try not to take themselves too seriously." Working within a limited musical framework, Los Seamonsters have a style that is hard-edged, with a lot of distortion, yet without the pretenses of being angry about it. It is just unfortunate that there were so few people to share things up with a decidedly angst-ridden, highly energetic tune called "I've Been Used." With an extremely tight rhythm section, the band proceeded to crank out three distortion-based, pounding renditions of "For the Ride", "Green Spoon", and "Pull It Out."

Sporting a most impressive 1973 beer drinking shirt, one could not help but focus their attention on the stage presence which lead vocalist Justin "Moncton Guru" Macmillan commanded. He is a performer with limited actual physical movement, instead choosing to harness his abundant energy within dramatic hand and facial gestures that added theatrics to an entirely "bat out of hell" voice.

Justin Macmillan proves these 'birds are gaudy in this experience.

By the end of the fourth song, the dance floor was awash with gyrating bodies. Here the band decided to slow things down with a song entitled "Separate Parts." Unfortunately, the effect was lost on me as they entered a romantic void which reminded me of some of the dippier stuff off of the "Pretty in Pink" soundtrack. Fortunately, The Gaudibirds reignited the stage once again with their gloriously raunchy sound as heard in highlights such as "The Same" - a biting satire of mainstream music - and "Goodtime Girls", where bassist Doug Vallier and drummer Ron Prunster finked it up a bit. The Gaudibirds finished off their first set with the bam-burner "12-Gauge", filled with orgasmic, banshee-like lead guitar.

By intermission, AJ's was predominantly taken over by an inner core of appreciative fans mingling in small groups or near the dance floor. All were geared up for the second set. The Gaudibirds delivered with "Mary", a tune that, despite subtle Spinal Tappish allusions, contained an ominous bass line and military beat that sent vibrations pounding against the walls in a rock n' roll fury. Throughout the middle section of the set, the energy level of those on the dance floor continued to rise in sync with such performances as "For A Little While", "Truss", and "Nervous", the latter two confirming lead vocalist Macmillan and drummer Prunster as two of the most talented and theatrical musicians on the Kingston scene.

The caper of the evening came with The Gaudibirds encore performance, "No Exception." Here the band proceeded to teeter between no-nonsense rock and teasing dramatic pauses, overlapped by improvisational guitar riffs which culminated in a smash ending that was (to the pleasure of the audience) stretched to its limits. The Gaudibirds left the stage, Macmillan bid farewell with an uncharacteristically shy goodnight and left the crowd excited, exhausted, yet thoroughly entertained.

Without a doubt, The Gaudibirds are one of the more entertaining bands I have seen in this neck of the woods over the last couple of years. With a thoroughly audacious flare and a fusion of what guitarist Seahill describes as "the classic elements of rock", The Gaudibirds provide a brand of music that is unequivocally top notch.

Both Los Seamonsters and The Gaudibirds, like other local bands such as The Mahones and The Shermans, are products of the Funhouse Studio here in Kingston. For those interested, The Gaudibirds already have a self-titled album out under their former name Shine on the independent label Soulfuelers Music. Furthermore, they helped to produce the Los Seamonsters' Great Looking Hair EP which is expected to be released in a couple of weeks under the "collective security" of PF Records.

As Los Seamonsters exited the stage, cutting-edge grunge bunnies, interspersed with the regular Kingston bar crowd, began to fill AJ's in quiet anticipation of the top billing. After a short break, The Gaudibirds opened obviously had control of the crowd as their rhythm changes caused problems for those of us who lack co-ordination. They continued their second set with a song in which they used the delay on the guitars and vocals to send the bar into a psychedelic ska-land. This was a little easier on those of us who can't dance...

What sets this band apart from others is their ability to improvise. At one point the band asked for requests, and someone wanted to hear an Everly Brother's tune. They got through the song with some artistic interpretation and a great sax solo. The Everly Brother's might have objected, but the band was tight.

They slowed down into a blues song as the last call bell rang. All through their performance I had trouble with the extended solos that the two guitarists felt they had to do. However, the guitar fit beautifully in the blues jam.

It was great to see the Hopping Penguins back in Kingston. They put on a show full of energetic, Halifax-style reggae. These guys are tight performers and fantastic entertainers who are sure to be back soon. If you want ska, they are a definite source.

At the hop

A.J.'s Hangar
Hopping Penguins with Shine
BY PETE HARRIS
The Queen's Journal

While slipping into A.J.'s Hangar on Friday night I was struck by the screaming guitars of Vancouver's Shine. Surprised and confused, I quickly realized that this was the opening band for Halifax's Hopping Penguins.

Shine are definitely a different style of band than the ska-driven Hopping Penguins. With blasting guitars and a strong bass line, they brought to mind Montreal's Doughboys.

On a three week tour of Ontario and Quebec, this is the first time Shine have been in Kingston. Although the crowd was nothing more than a small gathering, Shine didn't have any trouble getting them to bounce. Still, it would take a band of Penguins to make them hop.

When the Hopping Penguins started into their set it seemed as though there was an instant gravitation to the dance floor. Suddenly there was a huge crowd. With a bassist straight out of Devo, the Hopping Penguins' stage presence is very pronounced. It was obvious they were charged for their first time back in Kingston.

I thought penguins were black and white they are at their best when the rhythms are fast and furious. While the drummer discussed some of his fetishes, the piano ripped through the beating bongos and added an extra dimension to their sound.

Although they had some technical problems at the start, by the end of the set they had covered it up and were moving on to some more ska. After a small break the Hopping Penguins burst back on stage with a cover of "Hawaii Five-O." They obviously had control of the crowd as their rhythm changes caused problems for those of us who lack co-ordination. They continued their second set with a song in which they used the delay on the guitars and vocals to send the bar into a psychedelic ska-land. This was a little easier on those of us who can't dance...

What sets this band apart from others is their ability to improvise. At one point the band asked for requests, and someone wanted to hear an Everly Brother's tune. They got through the song with some artistic interpretation and a great sax solo. The Everly Brother's might have objected, but the band was tight.

They slowed down into a blues song as the last call bell rang. All through their performance I had trouble with the extended solos that the two guitarists felt they had to do. However, the guitar fit beautifully in the blues jam.

It was great to see the Hopping Penguins back in Kingston. They put on a show full of energetic, Halifax-style reggae. These guys are tight performers and fantastic entertainers who are sure to be back soon. If you want ska, they are a definite source.

No need to get with the program

The Program
Directed by David S. Ward
Capitol Theatre
BY TARA LYNN KEATS
The Queen's Journal

Pressure surrounds them. Competition divides them. Glory unites them. A story of what it takes to survive.

With all the testosterone and steroids emanating from this poster blurb, it's no wonder there was such a large contingency of mammoth guys with tree trunks for necks in attendance for The Program.

True to the promise of jockstraps and glory, The Program depicts the triumphs and defeats of a tough college football coach and his Neanderthal family of players. James Caan stars as the patriarchal Coach Winters, a man who is very serious about football and who has spent the last twelve years perfecting his training program. His team is a band of stale characters who are more machismo than bite. The star quarterback, Joe Kane (Craig Sheffer), is a rebel, who sports a black leather jacket and - yes, you guessed it - rides a Harley. Then there's the new recruit, Darnell Jefferson (Omar Epps), a tough smartass from the 'hood who needs to prove his worth. And, of course, there are the token meatheads who live, eat and breathe football, one of whom is rather appropriately played by a WWF wrestler. Naturally, after a tough game and a few parties, the guys need girls, so Kristy Swanson (Buffy the Vampire Slayer) and Halle Berry fill out the roster by providing the film's love interests.

The acting is pretty mediocre, but then again, so are the actors. To give them some credit, however, there wasn't much material for them to work with. The dialogue, tending to get embarrassingly pliant about football. At one pre-game banquet reminiscent of a wake, one player gets misty as he reaches into the bowels of wisdom dom and grunts the revelation that "not everyone can play football...we're the lucky ones." James Caan (did anyone see For the Boys?) has been in a bit of a slump lately (well, actually, since The Godfather, but who's counting?) but what was he thinking? His character had little to do aside from drawing game plans and getting his players off easy for various crimes and course failures.

The Program wants to be a "feel good" movie about the wonderful world of football, but it pulls on frayed strings by using standard conventions of plot, dialogue and humour.

If you're dying for macho posturing and neat football tricks, then rent The Program when it comes out on video (which will be pretty soon, I promise). Or, you could just rent one of those Sports Illustrated "highlights" tapes and see the real thing instead.

Editor's Note: Maybe our beloved Golden Gaels should take in this movie for some play tips!

Please see Football pg.23

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Sunday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES	CLUBS
CATARAQUI COMPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442	ALFIE'S Wednesday The Sidemen
A Bronx Tale 7:05 9:40	AJ's HANGAR Wednesday Yuk Yuk's Comedy
Age of Innocence 7:00 9:45	THE TOUCAN Thursday Days of You
Malice 7:15 9:35	STAGES Tuesday Delicate Sounds of Thunder
The Good Son 7:10 9:10	THE COCOMO Thursday Lowest of the Low
For Love Or Money 7:20 9:25	THE WELLINGTON Thursday live jazz
Striking Distance 7:25 9:30	THE GRAD CLUB Thursday Doug Reamsbury
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395	DUNNING AUDITORIUM Meryn Cadell (special guest Bob Wiseman) Thursday 8:30
The Program 6:45 9:25	GALLERIES
A Thing Called Love 7:05 9:20	AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE
True Romance 6:50 9:35	Until 31 October
Cool Runnings 7:00 9:20	Spirit Archives: an installation by Julie Withrow
The Fugitive 6:55 9:30	Until 21 November
The Man Without a Face 9:10	The Art of Christiane Pflug (1936 - 1972)
The Firm 6:30 9:15
Undercover Blues 7:15
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-6188
Tuesday
The World's Best Commercials 7:00
Tommy 9:00
Wednesday
Wide Sargasso Sea 7:00
Tommy 9:00
Thursday
The Music of Chance 7:00
Wide Sargasso Sea 9:00

Football Follies

Continued from previous page

age of majority), get eyed by a table of nubie young women, and hang out with cool upper year players - all on his first night in town! The macho fantasy atmosphere of The Program is enhanced by the antics of its other leading male, Joe Kane, who maintains his bad boy image by playing chicken with a speeding train, getting into a bar fight, and driving drunk.

Amid the onslaught of football jargon and machismo, The Program attempts to compact all of the contemporary social issues it possibly can into the story. Date rape, alcoholism, drug abuse and academic dishonesty are each given about five minutes of screen time, but are quickly forgotten and never addressed again.

The acting is pretty mediocre, but then again, so are the actors. To give them some credit, however, there wasn't much material for them to work with. The dialogue, tending to get embarrassingly pliant about football. At one pre-game banquet reminiscent of a wake, one player gets misty as he reaches into the bowels of wisdom

EDUCATION INFORMATION FORUM

Wednesday October 6th, 11:30-2 P.M.

Representatives from the following schools will be at the McLaughlin Room in the John Deutsch Centre to present information on applying to their programs:

- Brock University
- Nipissing University
- University of Ottawa
- Lakehead University
- Queen's University

Canisius College, Buffalo, N.Y.

An agent from TEACH - Canadian Graduates/Teacher's Colleges Abroad will also be available to give information on British Teacher's Colleges.

- answers to questions on admission requirements
- information on programs offered
- advice on teaching prospects, and working out of province

STUDENT FEES CUT IN HALF!

TD Student Plan gives you unlimited banking at The Green Machine plus a whole lot more for just $2.50 a month. Find out how!

PLUS! WIN ONE OF 10 TRIPS FOR TWO TO FLORIDA!

Your Bank Your Way

*The Mark of The Three-Dominion Bank. *Valid at any participating TD Branch. Subject to qualifying criteria.

Alfie's THE PUB PAGE

clark hall pub sucks

I don't understand the music or the moshing, I had more fun at the Peach Pit and I want Dylan back!

Tired of lookin' California & feelin' Minnesota? Change the channel! Tell Kelly you're Clarkin'!

Open Mon-Sat 8pm - 1am & for Friday Afternoon Ritual 12noon - 6pm - phone 545-6195
Clark: better plotlines, believable characters, tasty drinks!

THE PUB PAGE

WEDNESDAY
OCTOBER 6th
THE SIDEMEN
DOORS OPEN
AT 8:00

Alfie's
Pub

FRIDAY
OCTOBER 8th
THE FIRST EVER
ARTS '97 SMOKER
DOORS OPEN
AT 6:00

I HATE HAVING TO YELL! Go to the QP then Iggy...

Come Here...

THURS AFT. 4-8pm
Scent of a Woman
Untamed Heart
THURS OCT. 14
Kramer Look-a-like contest
SAT OCT. 16
Karaoke - Hosted by past & present Queen's Players
COMING SOON
Board Fridays
"Indecent Proposal"

THE PUB PAGE

Alfie's

Alfie's

THE PUB PAGE

WHAT'S UP?

Pick-up What's Up forms at the AMS office, Lower JDUC. Submissions for Tuesday publication due on Friday at 5pm.

Queen's Campus and Community Calendar Brought to you by the AMS Communications Commission • Phone 545-2132 for more information

October

5 Tuesday

AMS Coffee House: 8pm - 11pm, Lower Ceilidh, JDUC. This week featuring Scott & Tamsyh.

ARTSCI '96 - We need help painting the crest! Come out today in front of Ontario Hall. Give us a buck, we'll give you a brush. Proceeds go to Kids for Kids.

Queen's Marketing Association presents Ted Fletcher, President of Starter Canada. Dunning Hall, Room 12, 5:30pm.

6 Wednesday

French Reading Club. First Meeting, 8pm at The Queen's French Center, 96 Albert St. For more information, call 545-2534.

Incest: Why It Occurs, How To Detect It. A lecture for all interested students by Ph.D candidate Dianne Garrels. Etherington Auditorium, 5:30pm - 7:30pm. Presented by Medical Students for Social Responsibility.

Queen's Marketing Association presents Time Management Meeting at Mac-Corry Hall, Room D214, 7pm.

7 Thursday

QEA and LGBIC proudly present MERYN CADELL, with special guest Bob Wiseman. Dunning Auditorium, 8:30pm. Tickets are $5 (available at the QEA Office, AMS Education Commission Office, and at the door). All are welcome to attend.

"Hot and Healthy": A safer sex workshop for gay & bisexual men. 51 Queen's Crescent (Grey House), 8pm - 10pm. Sponsored by the Kingston AIDS Project and the Lesbian and Gay Association, Kingston.

8 Friday

Come and join us in our first "Quest for Unity". Everyone is welcome to attend the Association for Baha'i Studies gatherings every Friday at 5:30 in the International Center, JDUC. A dinner is served followed by discussion on different issues. We also organize many wonderful events during the year.

10 Sunday

Queen's University Performing Arts Office is pleased to announce that L'Ensemble Arion will perform their Kingston debut at Grant Hall at 2:30pm. Tickets are $15 Adult, $8 Children, RMC and St. Lawrence College students, $7 Queen's Students (all prices plus GST). They can be purchased at the Queen's Box Office, Monday through Friday, 11am to 4:30pm. Cash, cheque, Visa and Mastercard accepted. For further information, please call the Performing Arts Office at 545-2557.

Upcoming Events

International Crossing Borders - Work/Study Abroad Fair. International Panel Discussion, October 20th, 7pm - 9pm, Grant Hall. Information seminars, Informational Representatives, and Displays, October 21st & 22nd, 10:30am - 3:30pm, JDUC. Find answers to all your questions.

The Queen's First Aid Unit will be accepting applications for coverage of Alumni Weekend events only until Friday, October 15th. Applications are available outside the First Aid Office, Room 017, JDUC. It will be extremely difficult to cover events which have not submitted by October 15th.

Features

Housing Issues Committee of the AMS is looking for members. Please drop by the AMS Communications Commission Office, or call Greg Speirs at 531-8191.

HAVE A BAND? Want to play? Come play for AMS Coffee House! Pick up an application in the AMS Office in JDUC, or call 531-5414. Coffee House: Great Coffee and a Great Time.

There is currently a food drive in the Core at 183 University Ave. Please stop by to look at the displays presented. Non-perishable goods are welcomed. The drive will end October 22nd at 5pm.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet getaway, BLUEROOFF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

CREATIVE WRITERS AND JOURNALISTS. Discuss your writing with Douglas Fetherling, the Queen's Writer-in-Residence. For an appointment, call the Writing Centre at 545-6315.

LSAT-MCAT-GRE: Comprehensive 20 hour weekend course; experienced instructors; comprehensive study materials; simulated exam; free repeat option; full money-back guarantee. Call MEDLAW SEMINARS at 531-9016.

NOT POLITICS AS USUAL! National Party at Queen's founding meeting Tuesday, October 5th, 7:30 p.m., lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Guest speaker: Kingston National Party candidate Chris Papadopoulos. All welcome!

UNRAVEL THE MYSTERY of low fat foods, unintelligible labels and nutrient dense buying. Join a SUPERMARKET SAFARI at the Barrie Street A & P store. Free tours begin at 7:30 Wednesday evenings October 13th through November 17th. Call Diane Nolting at 545-6712 to sign up.

THANKSGIVING AT THE ART OF COOKING SCHOOL (October 5th) will be an easy do-ahead dinner full of fresh herbs, fish, and produce. Information: 546-2880. Brochures: Kitchen Cargo, Mike Mundell's, Hind Quarter.

SEXUAL HEALTH QUERIES? Call the confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators. Mon - Thurs 6 - 9. 545-6000 ext 4444 or leave a message.

STUDENTS - TEACH ENGLISH OVERSEAS - Teach conversational English year round, short term or for summer in Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan, Korea. Excellent pay. No experience or qualifications needed. For details and how you can apply pick up our free brochure at the Infobank, lower JDUC or send a self-addressed stamped envelope to Asia Facts (Q.J.), P.O. Box 93, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4V6.

NOT POLITICS AS USUAL! National Party at Queen's founding meeting Tuesday, October 5th, 7:30 p.m., lower Ceilidh, JDUC. Guest speaker: Kingston National Party candidate Chris Papadopoulos. All welcome!

FREE TRIPS AND MONEY!!! Individuals and student organizations wanted to promote the hottest Spring Break destinations, call the nation's leader. Inter-Campus Programs 1 800 327-6013.

HAVE SOME TIME BETWEEN CLASSES? Drop by the GREY HOUSE, 51 Queen's Crescent! Relax in its quiet and comfortable atmosphere. Eat lunch, read the paper, have some coffee. All welcome!

RUN TO STAY IN SHAPE WHILE REMAINING INJURY FREE! Seminar on workouts, technique, choosing running shoes, and more. Dress to run! Physical Education Centre, Wednesday October 6th, 5:30 p.m. Information call 544-8570.

ATTENTION ALL ARTS CI'S October is Hunger Awareness Month at the ASUS CORE. Come in and donate non-perishable food items to the Partners in Mission Food Bank. We need your spirit.

WILLDOTYPING my home $7.00 per hour, $3.00 per page. Call 547-3579 anytime except Monday or Wednesday a.m. Please provide paper.

BOTTLES BOTTLES BOTTLES Save those empty beer bottles, cans and pop bottles for the Kids for Kids bottle drive on Sunday October 24th. (Homecoming!)

TAKING RISKS with watercolour at Modern Fuel Gallery Queen Street October 20th - December 8th. $175.00 Call 353-6504.

SOAPBERRY SHOP'S energizing hair and scalp mud leaves scalp feeling tingly and give your hair more shine and manageability. Stimulates and promotes healthy hair growth. 545-1028 122 Princess Street.

HELP WANTED

CHILDCARE NEEDED for 18 month old downtown. Daytime hours, part-time with some flexibility. Call Mary or Brian at 547-3924.

HELP! I'll pay $50 to anyone who can take my and my kitten to Toronto and back for Thanksgiving. Call Ann at 547-9499.

WANTED: One Arts '95 or '96 jacket, mint condition and purchased in 1992-93 preferred, size 42 or 44. Help me spend my opt-out money! Call Dana at 547-1277.

FOR SALE

CUSTOM BUILT LOFTS Does your room suffer from a lack of space or originality? Rob builds lofts in one day. Low prices! Call 549-5084 now!

FOR SALE: 2 L-shaped/corner set of love seats. Good shape, ideal for apartment. Mainly brown in colour. Asking $119.00 or best offer. Call 549-5710 evenings.

FURNITURE FOR SALE OR RENT: good chests of drawers, nightstands, desks, desk chairs, book-cases, reading chairs, tables, chairs. Matched sets or single items available. Reasonable rates. Call 546-4534 (messages please).

FOR SALE: Arts 94 jacket size 40. Asking $150.00 or best offer. Call Melissa at 531-3225.

FOR SALE: Size 44 Arts & Sci jacket $120.00. Year can be changed! Awesome price. Call Ann at 547-9499.

PARKING Next to new library - $35 per week, small cars. Call 546-4797.

LOST & FOUND

LOST: Keys lost during Orientation Week on ASUS key chain are my life on a ring. I must have them back call Mike at 546-7427.

LOST: '96 Artsci jacket at Alfie's last Thursday. Please call 547-6756, it's getting cold. Reward offered.

TO WHOEVER: Thanks for returning the keys that were in the pocket of the jacket you took on September 11th, however, I would also like the jacket back. Call 531-3213.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Winter coming! Please call 547-4106.

FOUND: Queen's jacket '94 Applied Science. By the lake last week. Please call 547-9913 and ask for Alex.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Left Dunning, after Tales by Gaels. Call 542-6870.

PERSONALS

TIM: Thanks for all your extra help this issue. Everything looks great Megan.

SUE, JEN, KATH, MARN, LEE: I'm still alive, and living with you contrary to popular belief. Anyhow I'm just saying hello, and filling space!

DAN: Sorry bout the parts babe. my books, you're always numb. one. LUF, Mish.

NICKOLAI: Der schwinhundent deine floor ist ser grosse — vic eip pfsanta! My German vocabulary rather limiting...

ANIA: Stand us up again and we will have to kill you. Seriously, next time we will drink and be silly all night long.

STEPH: Let's polka sometime!

Back Page

CELEBRITY Recipes
Queen's: land of swimming pools, movie stars & students.

Microwavable Tuna Rice Loaf

By Jill Harris, Associate Secretary of the Senate

The Loaf
1 tin of tuna
1 egg
1/4 cup of butter
1 cup of minute rice
1 cup of milk (if doubling recipe, add 1 1/2 cups of milk)
Dash of pepper
Dash of basil (optional)

The Sauce
1 can of Campbell's Cheddar Cheese Soup
1/4 cup of milk

The Method

Beat egg in medium bowl. Add drained can of tuna and mix well. Add 1 cup of Minute Rice (uncooked). Heat 1/4 cup butter in glass measuring cup in microwave. Once melted, pour over tuna/rice mixture and mix well. Add a dash of pepper and basil. Beat 1 cup of milk almost to boiling. Pour into tuna/rice mixture, and mix well. Grease glass meatloaf pan with margarine and pour in tuna/rice mixture. Smooth the top. NUKE for 8 minutes on high (10 minutes for double recipe), or bake for 15 minutes at 350 degrees in the oven.

The Sauce (again)

Mix cheese soup in glass bowl with 1/4 cup of milk. Stir well until smooth. NUKE until bubbling. Pour over top of tuna/rice loaf and nuke another 3-4 minutes. Alternatively, sauce can be poured over slices of loaf in plate.

Jill Harris is Associate Secretary of the Senate. As a member of the University Secretariat, she attends meetings of the Senate and Board of Trustees, and serves as Secretary of several Senate and Board Committees. This year, in response to student concerns over the complexity of the University's appeal procedures, Jill will be focusing on making these procedures more understandable to students. On Wednesday and Friday mornings, from 9 am to noon, she will be available in the Office of the Rector to explain procedures to students, and to direct anyone with a problem to an appropriate advisor. Students with queries are encouraged to drop in and talk with Jill at these times, or at other times in the Office of the University Secretariat, B400 Mackintosh-Carry Hall.

PHOTO BY DEREK YARNELL

Horse's Arse by Joey deVilla

High noon at the Opinions section

Battle in the Opinions section of this fine publication is a noble sport dating back at least ten years, featuring vicious argument after acidic rebuttal about such issues as divestment, Surface and Golden Words, political correctness and what-have-you. In the past two years, an unacceptable truce seems to have been declared in our letters page, leaving only responses to stories and clarifications of statements made in earlier issues. As readers of The Queen's Journal (cue fanfare), as students and people who badly need something to do at 10:00 a.m. on Tuesday and Friday, we must bring back the fighting.

"But Joey," I can hear you say, "don't you like peace? Isn't it a wonderful ideal?"

Hell, no! To paraphrase Orson Welles in The Third Man: Italy under the Borgias had thirty years of bloodshed, corruption and constant warfare, but it also had Michelangelo and the entire Renaissance. Switzerland had 500 years of peace and love; what did they produce? The bloody cuckoo clock. The detence rests.

We now present a short primer on fighting, Opinions style. Rather than cloud the purpose of this article by picking a fight about a controversial topic, let's look at a short fight that took place in the winter term of '88. It began with an article about a fashion show which ran in the Entertainment section. The following are the relevant lines from this archetypal Opinions melee:

Friday, January 29, 1988
Fashion show in Ceilidh falters
Gobby Shaw & Chris Carter - Arts '90

"Queen's University, despite being the home of the overprivileged, is desperately in need of fashion guidance. Well, here is your weekly fashion bible to better you and your only change to glow in the Queen's social pressuredome [sic]."

"The show began with a display of furs, which seemed rather inappropriate for the Queen's student. It's not that they can't [sic] afford it, it's just that they'd rather spend their money on goretex [sic]."

"With the swimwear display, the models showed their courage in wearing next to nothing in the Lower Ceilidh. But were these suits appropriate for Mexico this February? They looked like something the Filmstones would be wearing. That is to say they seemed very out of date."

"Well students, don't despair, just keep an eye on what your trendy friends are wearing and join the clone atmosphere that seems to thrive here at Queen's. Dress right, study hard and you've got it made."

You might do well to read the credits of the next episode of Melrose Place; these two are either writing for the show or acting as stunt doubles. Aside aside, this article probably begs for a response. One reader took pen to paper and sent this missive (or should I say "missile"?)

Tuesday, February 2, 1988
Fashion show review seen in different light
Jane Zlatnik - Arts '90

"As an elite member of the Queen's community, I would like to extend my thanks to Chris Carter and Gobby Shaw for pointing out desperate need for fashion guidelines on campus in their enlightening article..."

"As Cornelia Guest rightly informs us in her classic, not to mention literary handbook, The Debutante's Guide to Life, 'if you're wearing furs and big jewellery at eighteen, what are you going to wear at forty?" Certainly I suggest this is an issue worth pondering."

"Let's leave out all discussion of irrelevant issues such as racism, sexism, disarmament, student loans, etc. to the plebian minority at Queen's and try to come up with some understanding of the best way to rip the liners out of our jeans - abusing denim in general, how best to carry floral print bags and where to buy leather jackets. See y'all at Alfie's!"

The attack is staged with the precision of a world championship chess match: a classic opening move (sarcasm - 5 points), followed by a one-two strike, first with the reference to an obscure but authoritative text (literary reference - 15 points) and finishing with a mention of the Big Issues and a swipe at Carter's and Shaw's "B.P." attitude (Big Issues - 10 points, final swipe - 5 points). Zlatnik's score: 35. The response...

Friday, February 5, 1988
Fashion Show Revisited: Writers thank their critic

"Queen's University has long since established itself as an institution that is composed mostly of students who are above average financially. In our article, we perpetuated this image in a humorous fashion which seems to be exactly the same tone as Miss Zlatnik's letter."

"Furthermore, if this writer is looking for late breaking news articles on such topics as racism, sexism, disarmament and student loans, then may we advise her not to look in the entertainment section of the newspaper."

"We would also like to extend our thanks to the writer for explicitly mentioning our names twice for those readers who weren't able to catch it the first time. Have fun in Acapulco..."

"* [their footnote reads:] Why not cash in your Acapulco trip for something more educational like a trip to Iran or Lebanon if you really want some news action?"

Vent, vidi, vici! This is a textbook rebuttal, flawless in execution. It starts with a derisive flourish (5 points), follows up with a logical rebuttal (10 points) and then with an unstop- pable coup de grace with the "Acapulco" remark (finishing off an opponent - 25 points). Shaw and Carter, not satisfied with a clean kill, went for disembowelment (ultra-sarcastic closer - 10 points). Zlatnik is, for the purposes of debate, finished; it's ugly, but that's the lead chain for ya. The final score is Shaw/Carter 50, Zlatnik 35.

Thus endeth the lesson. Now get out there and start writing!

Joey deVilla laughed his head off at the end of Old Yeller.

Buy a Whopper with cheese and regular fry, receive a Whopper with cheese FREE.

Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer. Expires Oct. 17/93

Buy a Whopper with cheese and bacon and a regular fry, receive a Whopper with cheese and bacon FREE.

Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer. Expires Oct. 17/93

BOUNCY BOUNCY BOUNCY

Shag Tape Contest

The deadline is this Friday at 5:00 p.m. See the Friday, September 24th issue for full contest details. Submit your entries to:

Shag Tape Contest
Queen's Journal
272 Earl Street

Don't forget to include an explanation of why you chose each song - creativity is the number one criterion!

VOTE

IN THE AMS FALL REFERENDUM POLLING STATIONS

LOCATION	WEDNESDAY OCT.13TH	THURSDAY OCT.14TH
BAN RIGH	4:30-6:30	4:30-6:30
DOUGLAS	11:00-4:30	11:00-4:30
JDUC	10:30-5:00	10:30-5:00
MAC-CORRY	10:30-5:30	10:30-5:30
PHYS ED CENTRE	11:00-3:00	11:00-3:00
WEST CAMPUS	12:00-6:30	12:00-6:30
BOTTERELL	10:30-3:30
BROCKINGTON	4:30-6:30
ELLIS	11:00-2:00
KINGSTON	11:00-2:00	11:00-3:30
HUMPHREY		11:00-2:00
JEFFREY		11:00-2:00
LEONARD		4:30-6:30
STIRLING		11:00-2:00

HOTEL BELVEDERE
a collection of twenty tranquil rooms
"Well deserved reputation as the place to stay in Kingston"
Houses & Gardens, Nov. 88
141 King Street East,
Kingston, Ontario K7L 2Z9
(613) 548-1565

QUEEN'S Journal

Come 'n' get your FREE 'Campus Faces' posters.

Volume 121, Number 12

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Friday, October 8, 1993

Surface debate rages

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Friends and foes of Surface battled in an open forum held in the Lower Cellar of the John Deutsch University Centre on Thursday, and neither side pulled any punches. Arts and Science students will be voting in a referendum on whether or not to fund the magazine Oct. 13 and 14.

The Yes side's Mike Perry began calling Surface a "source of pride for Arts and Science students."

"Things are changing at Surface," he said, adding that the magazine shouldn't be judged on its past issues. "Would you want to judge the Maple Leafs only on past seasons?" Perry said.

Perry cited the implementation of an ASUS/Surface Relations Committee, as well as a Surface working group as "progressive, proactive steps" in improving Surface's accountability.

Surface Editor Junipero Lagtapon spoke as well admitting that he would be "the first person to say some things in last year's Surface were wrong." He said that concerted efforts have been made this year to maintain a "critical base" in articles.

"If we do not have a forum to express these views... it amounts to censorship," Lagtapon said.

The No side's Michael Carnegie then took the floor and said that "just having this referendum is a victory for the No side."

Carnegie said "this is a financial referendum... it's about financial responsibility."

"We can spend the $6,000 [which Surface receives] better than they [Surface] can," Carnegie said.

Carnegie said he found the "overall sentiment [of Surface] quite admirable" but questioned

Please see DEBATE on page 5

Inside

NEWS
JEFFREY SIMPSON . . . 3
FEATURES
AIDS AWARENESS 12
ENTERTAINMENT
CYPRESS HILL 20

Queen's mourns loss of football legend

BY TUDOR CALDWELL
The Queen's Journal

Frank Tindall, a Canadian football legend and admired member of the Queen's community, died in Kingston this week, in the early morning hours of Tuesday, Oct. 5. He was 84.

Tindall was the "The Kindly Old Coach" of the the Queen's Golden Gaels football team for 29 years.

Former player and current Gael's coach Doug Hargreaves told The Journal that "there has not been another person in Queen's history who has had as profound an influence on Queen's University and its young people, as well as the Kingston community and even nationally... Everyone who came in contact with him felt better for it."

Rolf Lund, the chair of Athletics and Recreation, spoke of Tindall's impact upon the Queen's community. "The news of Frank Tindall's passing has touched everyone at Queen's University," he said. "Frank's courage and determination was evident throughout his recent illness. Frank Tindall epitomizes the athletic traditions of Queen's University and university sport in Canada."

A native of Solvay, New York, and a graduate of Syracuse University, Tindall firmly established himself as an integral part of the Queen's community over the course of his prolific coaching career. According to Bill Miklas, a professor in the School of Business and a former player and assistant coach with Tindall, he "was a Syracuse graduate, but he really became a Queen's person at heart."

Tindall was awarded with an honorary doctorate of laws from Queen's in 1989.

Principal David Smith commended Tindall for combining athletic and scholastic excellence. In a press release, Smith said "To Frank Tindall we owe much of Queen's philosophy of balancing athletic training with high academic goals. He trained his players for life, not just the next game. Everyone who had the good fortune to know 'The Mentor' will remember with gratitude his un-failing kindness, his legendary humour and his lifetime of devotion to Queen's and its people."

Tindall became one of Canada's most successful collegiate coaches, with a record of 111-84-2. Under his guidance, the Gaels won eight intercollegiate conference Yates Cup championships as well as the national College Bowl (now the Vanier Cup) in 1968.

Tindall's success as a coach at Queen's also extended to the basketball court, where he led teams from 1949 until his retirement in 1975. One of only two conference basketball titles achieved by Queen's was won by his 1956-7 team.

A star athlete in his own right, Tindall was recruited by the Canadian Football League's Toronto Argonauts after being named an All-Eastern guard and MVP for Syracuse.

In his rookie season, Tindall was 1933 All-Star and was later selected by the Argos to the All-Time All-Star squad (1921-1941). In 1985, he was elected into the CFL Hall of Fame.

Many of Tindall's former players also played in the CFL, including Ron Stewart, Tip Logan, Bayne Norrie, Lou Bruce, Jim Young, Gary Schneider, Stu Lang and Bob Howes.

One of those players, Ron Stewart, told The Journal that Tindall was "was more than a football coach. He was a very patient man and a very sincere man who had the loyalty of everyone he met. I

Please see TINDALL on page 7

OUSA criticized

BY JEFF GRAY
The Queen's Journal

Jaggi Singh thinks Queen's students should vote "no" to the referendum on a 95-cent student fee for the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance on Wednesday.

Singh is a founding member of the University of Toronto's No to OUSA Working Group.

U of T's Student Administrative Council recently voted to temporarily withdraw from the student lobbying organization, as well as postpone a referendum on the issue until the spring.

Singh and his group of about 30 members have been waging a campaign against OUSA at U of T.

"Usually student groups work in the interests of students, but OUSA looks like the students' worst enemy," said Singh.

"OUSA is just mimicking the line of the government and of the [Council of Ontario Universities], and not representing students," he said.

OUSA's policies include a 30 per cent tuition increase that would have to be accompanied by student aid reform and greater contributions to post-secondary education from both government and private corporations.

"If you tell the government what it wants to hear - that's easy," said Singh. "When you ask for tuition increases - you're going to get them."

In an interview with The Journal, Alma Mater Society Information Officer Greg McKellar said "OUSA has never asked for tuition increases. OUSA accepts that tuition has gone up steadily since 1972, and that it will continue to go up."

McKellar, a full-time employee of the AMS and not a student at Queen's, said OUSA is "trying to mitigate the effects of tuition increases," which he called "inevitable."

Please see OUSA on page 7

Quote

"[The debates] had a remarkable resemblance to Russian politics - brutal."

—Neil MacFarlane, Russian studies professor on Monday's federal election debate.

ELECTION '93

Kingston and the Islands Riding All Candidates Meeting

on the

North American Free Trade Agreement

Tuesday, October 12
7:30 - 10:00pm
at K.C.V.I.

All are welcome
Questions from the floor will be taken

Sponsored in Part by the AMS National Issues Committee and Queen's 101

Music for a
Sunday Afternoon Series

PRESENTS

L'ensemble Arion

"They stop worrying about the fact that they're playing period music and simply start playing music, period."
Boston Herald

A programme of 17th & 18th Century works by Leclair, Rameau, Quantin and Telemann

Only $7 Queen's Students!!!

(plus GST)

$ 15./$8 (Children/RMC & St. Lawrence students)
all prices are plus GST

SUNDAY 10 OCTOBER
2:30PM GRANT HALL

Tickets: Queen's Box Office, JDUCC 545-2558
(Union & University) Mon - Fri (11 - 4:30)

Staying in town for Thanksgiving? The Party's at AJ's TONIGHT

with

THE WATCHMEN

WOW! Super cheap 7:30-9:30!

Sat. FOREIGN JOURNEY

Oct. 9th
Doing the best of...
Surprise! Foreigner and Journey.
Still cheap 7:30-9:30!

Don't miss our 3rd annual THANKSGIVING PARTY
this Sunday night
with

Wild Blues Yonder
NO COVER!
Both Floors Open!

Thanksgiving
ORPHAN special-
2 for 1
Chicken dinner 5pm
(You can pretend it's turkey)

Tues.
N.T.N. Trivial
8:30 pm.

Mon.
20¢ wings
Mon. nite football!
Stereo Sound
Houston vs. Buffalo

Every Thursday!
Dipsomania Party!
*Cheap-a-mundo
All Night Long!
*Seinfeld and Simpsons in Stereo upstairs
in the Frog!
*Cool tunes with
D.J. Humble Tim.

Jeffrey Simpson criticizes Reform, Bloc

Author's night also features Ben Wicks

BY KRISTEN KUNNAS
The Queen's Journal

On Monday night, as part of Printed Passage's Fall Author Series, Ben Wicks and Jeffrey Simpson appeared before an intent audience at the Grand Theatre to discuss their new books.

Renowned Canadian pundit Jeffrey Simpson, the national political columnist for The Globe and Mail, criticized the Reform Party and Bloc Quebecois in discussing his latest book, Faultlines: Struggling for a Canadian Vision. The book is an analysis of new political forces breaking up the traditional political culture of Canada.

He humorously opened his discussion by referring to the English-language TV debate of the same night, asking, "what is that other event?"

In writing his book, Simpson said he avoided abstract theorizing, instead examining a mixture of people both in and out of public life, such as Preston Manning, Lucien Bouchard, Mary Eberts (a lawyer deeply dedicated to equal rights), and George Erasmus, the co-chairman on Aboriginal Peoples who first advocated aboriginal self-government in 1976).

Simpson said he hoped to "weave all different visions and faultlines to some kind of statement of where we are in this country."

Setting his sights on the Reform Party, Simpson called Manning a man who reassembles "old" Canadian issues and simply reinterprets them.

He referred to the Reform Party as a "middle class protest party of alienation," and related it to Ronald Reagan's platform of anti-tax, anti-crime, anti-immigrants, and a "return to moral values."

Simpson questioned the validity of the Reform Party by addressing what he considers its essential paradox. Manning says "I'm for one Canada," Simpson observed, yet there are no Reform candidates in Quebec.

Simpson questioned Manning's belief that Quebec should set its own priorities while "the rest of Canada" decides its priorities.

"It's clearly an explanation of the two nations theory, coded in the rhetoric of 'One Canada,'" Simpson said.

Referring to the Bloc Quebecois, Simpson said he believes that Lucien Bouchard is interested in a "dream sovereignty [and] not a sovereignty of the twenty-first century."

Furthermore, Simpson added, Bouchard fails to comprehend that the European sovereignties which he sees as "good" examples are moving more toward shared sovereignty - what Canada has now.

Simpson said he believes that issues such as French-English relations, language, and western alienation are "old" cleavages of Canadian society.

He added that "new" cleavages, such as aboriginal rights, free trade and the Charter of Rights, combine with the "old" cleavages, to break up Canadian political culture. He likened this process to a series of new currents crashing into the old river ice in spring-time.

"We're all groping for a set of new assumptions and conventions to replace the old ones," said Simpson, "and it isn't easy."

Because Canadians must deal with more political issues than other countries, he told the audience, it helps to explain why we are so dissatisfied politically.

"It's very difficult for us as citizens and our elected leaders to get a handle on [Canadian issues]."

Simpson explained his desire to reflect the different views of Canadians by incorporating people who have passionate visions of Canada.

Simpson stated that the Charter of Rights is the single most important national symbol in Canada.

"The Charter of Rights has gripped the imagination of the Canadian public - it has made us more litigious than before and more rights-conscious," he said.

Yet because "everything" is going to court, Simpson noted, the Charter has made interest groups more powerful, an impact which he referred to as "Americanizing."

As for the future of Canada, Simpson cautioned that Canada should not deal with its faultlines through constitutional reform, referring to the Meech Lake Accord as "a psycho-drama for Canada."

He suggested that Canada not cut social programs, but advance them to fit the economy of the twenty-first century.

"Canadians should ... concentrate on making arrangements. It better suits the essence of our country, [we're] not a union but a political arrangement for managing diversity," Simpson said.

Before Simpson spoke, Ben Wicks, a famous cartoonist and author, explored the adoption process in his current book Yesterday They Took my Baby - particularly the emotional reactions resulting from dislocation and separation.

Wicks said he turned to writing about adoption two years ago when an adopted friend of his found his birth mother. "It's a subject which really intrigues me... the separation and coming back together of lives," he said.

Wicks explained that he "put the word out" in British magazines, and after getting approximately eight-hundred replies, it occurred to him that there is a fascination with people who "find" each other. The greater the separation, the greater the fascination, he said.

Wicks attacked the prejudices of society, which denigrate women who give their children up for adoption. He said he feels these women are unjustly "made to feel so dirty" by society, and "the one stigma which remains today [which we cannot accept in society] is any mother actually handing over a child for adoption."

In the second part of his book, Wicks follows the process of babies being adopted and the adoptive parents' emotional reactions.

Wicks addressed the issue of adopted children wanting to find their birth parents. He related a story about an adopted girl who felt that she was merely "borrowing her adoptive parents' heritage and history," and consequently felt a strong need to know her own heritage, to know who she was.

Wicks also elaborated on why a birth mother might try to find a child she gave up for adoption. There is probably a strong need "to try to overcome a sense of guilt ... so they can say what I did [for the child] was the right thing," he explained.

He ended his discussion by stating that his book is about ordinary people, "people who have suffered in their own way and who are fighting to get back a little of what they've lost."

Queen's grad Jeffrey Simpson speaks at Grand Theatre.

Michael Wiercinski

On Thursday, Oct. 14th, the Institute of Women's Studies presents Dr. Nkiru Nzewgwu, an artist and scholar who has written and lectured widely on African art and culture, racism, and colonialism. Nzewgwu's work in progress includes Beyond Imperialism: Art and Aesthetics in the African World and Shades of Whiteness: Confronting Whiteness, Resisting Imperialism.

She is currently an assistant professor of philosophy and art history at Binghamton University. Nzewgwu will speak on Gender Equality in a Dual-Sex System at 7:00 p.m. in the School of Policy Studies, Room 202.

According to monthly statistics released by Queen's Security and Parking, security staff responded to 77 incidents in September, 1993.

Theft over $1,000	3
Theft under $1,000	8
Theft - Bicycle	3
Break & Enter	1
Mischief
Property Damage	6
Disorderly Behaviour	1
Other	3
Trespass to Property	2
Suspicious Person	1
Trouble with a Person	3
Medical Assistance	1
Fire Alarm	(Fire) 1
	(No Fire) 30
	(Malicious) 2
	(Other) 3
Safety Matters	3
Traffic Violation	1
Property Recovered	1

Over-exposure at Alfie's

BY ADAM EMERY
The Queen's Journal

Last Saturday night, several male patrons were asked to leave Alfie's after they were spotted sitting at a table with their pants undone and their genitals exposed.

Head Constable Sue Cameron said the matter deserves serious attention. "[The constables] are investigating this incident with Campus Security," she said.

There are also reports that a female off-duty Queen's security officer was seated at the same table as the male patrons.

The senior constable on duty that night, who wished to remain anonymous, is the only known independent witness to the events. "Five males and one female were sitting at a table," he said. "At least three of the five males had their genitals exposed, in plain view, for an undetermined period of time."

"As I was explaining the possible repercussions of such actions to these males, and the corresponding actions I would take if they did not comply, they proceeded to cover themselves."

Apparently neither the pub staff nor the constables noticed this indiscretion until people started to leave the bar at the end of the evening. "It was after last call and after I took their beer away that they were asked to leave," said the senior constable.

Pippa Stevenson, general manager of Alfie's, expressed concern over the incident. "What happened was completely inappropriate and Alfie's considers it unacceptable," she said.

Stevenson was also relieved that the incident went largely unnoticed. "No patrons complained to my knowledge. It is fortunate that no one appears to have seen them. Honestly, I can't believe they did it."

Sue Cameron was satisfied that the situation was handled properly by the constables working that night. Cameron said she agreed with the senior constable's statement that there wasn't "any manner in which the constables or the pub staff could have foreseen such an offence."

The senior constable also called the actions "entirely inappropriate and offensive," and added that they have "possible negative repercussions towards Alfie's Pub and its reputation."

Reports of a female off-duty Queen's security officer being a witness to the events were confirmed by Director of Security Howard Pearce.

"She was off duty. Security was not called to the scene," he said.

While admitting to not having yet read the constable report, Pearce said, "I don't think she was sitting at the table with them. But it's too soon to make any comments. We are currently investigating the matter in conjunction with the constables."

"I can't comment on whether or not action will be taken against the [member of security] present at the bar. We are treating the matter seriously," said Pearce.

Correction
The correct name of the Graduate Students Society Acting President is Scott Duggan. The Journal, on Oct. 1, reported that Andrew Duggan held this position. The Journal apologizes, and regrets the error.

Tricolour decision upheld

BY SHARON WILSON
The Queen's Journal

The Alma Mater Society has upheld an earlier decision to fire Rob Yee from his position as Tricolour yearbook business manager.

Yee was given notice of his dismissal at the beginning of fall term from AMS Media Services Director Eric Jabal. He chose to appeal the AMS decision and take his complaint to the second level of appeal — Catherine Emmerson, chair of AMS Board of Directors.

According to Emmerson, Yee was acclaimed to the position of Tricolour business manager over the summer, with the knowledge that the "positions would be re-evaluated in the fall."

Emmerson told The Journal that upon evaluation of Yee as business manager, it was decided that "he was not performing up to job standards ... and there were grounds for immediate dismissal."

Emmerson upheld Jabal's decision to terminate Yee's employment on Sept. 30, when she was given evidence supporting certain incidents which were pointed out by Jabal and Karen Kilcullen, the current Tricolour editor-in-chief.

Emmerson would not go into the specifics over the firing, because she said she did not want "to bias those who have to judge the case if it goes to the next level of appeal."

In an interview with The Journal, Yee said that he has made an appointment with Rector David Baar, to discuss taking his complaint to the next level of appeal, the AMS Judicial Committee.

Although Yee was given a list of specific reasons for being fired, he said he feels the letter is "unclear." As far as Yee understands, "I was fired for my work during the summer."

In The Journal on Oct. 1, Yee said he was being "denied access to documents and facilities" necessary to complete his duties as last year's editor-in-chief of the yearbook.

According to Emmerson this is "completely false." Yee had "free access to phones and equipment and is free to go there anytime," she said.

Yee agreed that his being denied access to Tricolour materials was "blown out of proportion." He said that because he was fired, there is a "formality" that, according to AMS procedures, he should not use their equipment, and thus he chose to make long-distance calls from his home.

At present, Yee is working to complete last year's Tricolour yearbook, which will be delayed.

In a letter to The Journal, Jabal stated that any "relation between the reality that the yearbook's delivery will be delayed a minimum of 2 months, and [Yee's] dismissal ... is groundless."

Although Jabal said the yearbook's date of completion was to be May 4, Yee said the Tricolour's scheduled arrival had always been planned for the Oct. 23 Homecoming weekend. When asked about the May 4 completion contract Yee said, "according to Eric [Jabal] that is procedure," but that he (Yee) was not aware of this.

Yee acknowledged that computer problems and delays in having yearbook pages for submission approved will delay the yearbook this year.

According to Emmerson, an honorarium will not be granted to Yee for the work that he did as Tricolour business manager this summer.

The position of this year's Tricolour business manager has been filled by Victoria Toll.

AMS revamps

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

This year's executive is undertaking a far-reaching reorganization of the Alma Mater Society.

According to Vice-President (Operations) Tim Wilson, "a lot of things are just becoming too expensive for us [the AMS] to do, we took on too much over the past few years."

The changes, which will be based on the findings of two committees, the Internal Corporate Structure Committee and the Internal Society Committee, could affect every part of the AMS. Wilson said there are "certain inefficiencies and ways that the system can be improved, and there are a lot of problems, a lot of ways that the flow of money can be structured differently. The management, basically everything" will be examined.

"The way we're going about this project is [that] there's a possibility for anything. Right now we want to go into it with a clean slate, nothing on our minds, we don't want to think about what's been talked about before, what's happened in the past," Wilson said.

Despite the fact that the committees will be evaluating the entire AMS, Wilson doubts any service will be drastically transformed. "To be honest I don't imagine the services changing a great deal," he said. "It's probably more the manner that they're administered."

Wilson acknowledged that "most of the things we do offer are necessary to the Queen's community."

He said that "the idea [for restructuring] evolved over the summer months." In early September, the executive set up two committees. The Internal Corporate Structure Committee will examine services and business aspects of the AMS, while the Internal Society Committee will look at the commissions and committees, he said. Wilson expects "a lot of informal communication between the two."

Wilson said that the AMS executive was reluctant to include students on the committees. "Because we're evaluating the internal structure of the AMS, [we felt] that Assembly members themselves represent members-at-large because they're not involved in the day-to-day functioning of this office," he said.

However, Wilson said the executive respects Assembly's decision to include students-at-large on the committees.

The committees will interview all parties involved in the AMS "to get general ideas from them ... any problems with the way things are run, or any ideas," Wilson said.

In November, the AMS will "start writing the report, so we'll begin with determining mandate, philosophy ... which services we should be offering, what it provides, the community," said Wilson.

"From there, we'll determine the managerial structure that'll best provide those services with the lowest cost," he added.

In late November the final report should appear, Wilson said. The changes will be implemented in early January, "because potentially there could be changes to the executive" which would need to be made before the next executive is elected.

Wilson said the AMS changes are overdue. "I guess the overall structure of the AMS hasn't changed in 15 years, close to 20 probably. It's just not sufficient considering how much the AMS has expanded during that time."

Earthquake relief

BY SHELLEE FITZGERALD
The Queen's Journal

Members of the Queen's Indian Students' Association are asking for your help in response to the destruction wrought by last week's earthquake.

The earthquake was one of the worst to hit India this century, causing widespread devastation which levelled several villages and caused the deaths of thousands.

"We are very concerned about all those affected by the earthquake, and hope people will give support," said Govind Rao of QISA.

The club has initiated a relief effort on campus to provide assistance to meet the urgent needs of earthquake victims.

"There are several ways members of the Queen's community can get involved," said Rao. Donations, principally of money, are being accepted for the Canadian Red Cross. A booth has been set up in Mac-Corry for this purpose.

"Whatever change you can give will be appreciated," said Rao, adding that "the booth may continue into next week if people are still contributing."

In addition, members of QISA will be visiting various classes on campus this week to heighten awareness of the Indian situation. A relief dinner has also been scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 15 in the International Centre (call 531-4472 for details).

Anyone interested in helping out is encouraged to attend a meeting on Tuesday October 12 at 6:30 in the International Centre.

Despite last week's tragedy, QISA remains excited about the line-up of social and cultural activities they have planned for the year.

Rao hopes that the activities will "allow us to create a strong Indian community and also allow us to share our culture with other members of the Queen's community."

Chief among the events planned are a Bangra (music) smoker in November, as well as a series of movie nights. In addition, events have been organized in celebration of Diwali (a religious festival).

QISA is also scheduling an education forum to promote Indian history and culture. All members of the Queen's community are well come to participate.

Surface controversy

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

In the week before the Surface referendum, controversy has arisen over the campaign material of the Vote No contingent.

Surface, which is funded by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, will be subjected to a referendum on its funding from Arts and Science students on Oct. 13 and 14.

Leaflets and posters from the No campaign around campus have printed without permission selections from past Surface issues. One leaflet carries the "How to Make Love to a White Boy" article from the "Sex Issue" of March 1993, while other posters carry single lines such as "All white men are rapists" and "People of colour shouldn't date white people."

"According to Surface Editor Junipero Lagtapon, all materials in the paper are copyright, and "you cannot print anything without the authority of Surface or its editors."

Lagtapon said this policy is stated clearly in the paper's masthead. And the No forces "never asked or requested" permission to reprint the material, he said.

Andrew Dick, head of the No to Surface group, said he was unaware of the problem. When asked about the copyright statement in the paper, he said, "I remember seeing that ... but it wasn't a conscious decision, it was just 'we're going to print this.'"

Dick argued that "if Surface stands behind every one of its issues," then reprinting selections should not be a problem.

ASUS President Jenn Steeves told The Journal "it's unfortunate ... students who have seen articles, or just one line, don't get the context in which the article was framed."

Steeves said this year's paper is "very significantly different from what we've seen in the past."

She hopes "students vote on the basis of this year's Surface — it's a new year, it's a new editor. Everything that's being printed in Surface will have a critical eye."

Dick disagrees with this. "What's in the first few issues doesn't matter. Surface realizes it's in a referendum."

Steeves stressed that this year's paper is different. "The first issues are representative for the year," she said.

Editor Lagtapon is "disappointed" about the incident, but said he "won't take any legal action ... I believe in freedom of speech, but I don't approve of [this]."

He compared the situation to academic plagiaism, and argued "it's common knowledge you don't reprint things without permission."

"Normally, this type of behaviour wouldn't be accepted or tolerated, but I'm tolerating it because I believe they have a right to say things," Lagtapon said.

The posters were approved by ASUS election officers, who expressed some confusion over exactly who approved the material. But, according to Jason Markwell, ASUS chief returning officer, "our process is more secondary," in that they look at the number of pamphlets and their physical size rather than the content.

If a problem occurs, Markwell said, his role is "absolutely reactive."

Chief Elections Officer Rob MacAlpine said "there hadn't been any approval [from me], but there needn't have been ... Anything that's put up, I review, but it doesn't have to go through me to go up."

MacAlpine is "currently reviewing the situation," and must "decide if what's happened is an incorrect procedure." There is a possibility that the issue "could put the referendum to an abrupt end," said MacAlpine, who added that it is too early to know this yet.

Debate in JDUC

Continued from page one whether "everybody else should pay the bill."

"It's an Arts and Science paper first and foremost ... and an Arts and Science paper should reflect Arts and Science views," he said.

"Individual students have been targeted," Carnegie said, referring to a collage in Surface's Sex Issue last year which contained pictures of prominent males on campus superimposed upon homoerotic images.

Carnegie called such targeting an "abuse of editorial power."

Lagtapon said he thought the targeting was "a mistake." "I myself have been targeted. I know how it feels," Lagtapon said. Perry pointed out that Golden Words targets individuals in its articles as well.

The No side's Darren Littlejohn said that Surface has printed "things I felt in my own opinion as a Christian were insulting."

"He said that people outside the university were 'appalled that students would print such smut."

"The paper should not be beyond scrutiny," Littlejohn said. "The people who are paying for the paper should have some say in what goes in it," he said.

"I'm not against minority rights," he added. Surface, Littlejohn said, "has done an injustice ... it doesn't reflect minority rights."

The floor was then opened to questioning. Arts student Amina Ally asked Littlejohn, "how can you represent minority views? ... You can take that home and think about it if you want."

Audience member Cindy MacNeil also defended Surface. She said that problems like racism and sexism shouldn't be "swept under a white man's carpet."

"If Surface offends you ... that's good," MacNeil said. Carnegie responded to MacNeil by saying "I'm not here to debate matters of opinion."

Jerome Poon-Ting asked why, if the issue is financing, all student fees, such as the one students pay for Golden Words, aren't up to the same scrutiny.

"This is a witch hunt," Poon-Ting said.

There will be another Surface open forum in the upper Victoria Hall common room on Tuesday, Oct. 12 at 6 p.m.

Profs, students react to federal debate

BY JONATHAN LEIGH
The Queen's Journal

The five major federal party leaders squared off in the English debate Monday night, and Queen's was watching.

Professors and students scrutinized the policies and style of Canadian party leaders, but not all were impressed by the night's unfolding.

Russian Studies Professor Neil MacFarlane observed that the debates "had a remarkable resemblance to Russian politics — brutal. I hope you make some sense out of the debates. I didn't."

With regards to education, Taz Pirmohamed, Alma Mater Society academic affairs commissioner and coordinator of the Vote Education campaign for Queen's, declared a minor victory for education.

However, she was disappointed that it didn't originate from the leaders, noting that three audience members asked questions about education. She pointed out the fact that none of the leaders addressed the issue of student aid, although Kim Campbell promised to raise the student loan limit.

"But the fact remains that it is still up to the institution to collect the loan," Pirmohamed said. She described Campbell's plan as "purely cosmetic," and that "larger, more fundamental problems with the Canada Student Loans program need to be addressed."

Canadian Politics Professor Janet Hiebert sympathized with Pirmohamed's concerns, but noted that it is "somewhat difficult to get a direct answer" from a federal politician on an area where they have no jurisdiction.

As for the quality of debate, Hiebert argued that "any debate is better than no debate."

Hiebert's colleague, Professor Ned Franks, was less impressed with the way Lucien Bouchard was handled by the other leaders, saying that the anti-federalist position "wasn't properly challenged," and that neither Jean Chretien nor Campbell effectively promoted the federalist position in Quebec.

Overall, Franks saw the exercise as "a bunch of tired old politicians debating the same, tired, old issues."

Thomas Orav (Arts '97) was disappointed that the debated deteriorated into shouting matches at times. He found the debate "pretty silly, because all they were doing was yelling and interrupting each other, so that was basically a waste of time."

One leader who wasn't present was the National Party's Mel Hurtig, who lost an appeal to the Supreme Court for a place on stage.

Richard Kicksee, campus representative of the National Party, was disappointed that his leader was not included. "The process of determining who participated in the debates was completely anti-democratic," he said.

Queen's students and members of the Kingston community will have the opportunity to see a local version of the debate at an all candidates meeting Tuesday, Oct. 12, starting at 7:30 in the auditorium at KCVI. All local candidates seeking the nod from voters are expected to be in attendance.

National Party comes to Queen's

BY JOSETTE BYRNE
The Queen's Journal

The National Party at Queen's held its first official meeting on Tuesday night as the newest political group on campus.

Chris Papadopolous, National Party federal election candidate

Chris Papadopolous

never get the policies we need if that process is distorted."

He criticized the power of money in the current Canadian election process. "Those who win campaigns have the most money. We want to change that," he said.

for Kingston and the Islands, spoke to a crowd of 20 Queen's students and Kingston residents about his party's alternative agenda.

Electing publisher-turned-politician Mel Hurtig as leader in November 1992, the National Party grew from 50 to around 8,000 members nationwide, and is running 170 candidates in the upcoming federal election.

Papadopolous told his audience his reasons for joining the new party.

"What I tell Canadians is that the only time to start a new political party is when the other parties have let you down time and time again," said Papadopolous.

He proceeded to condemn the Liberal and Conservative election policies as pushing merely "token changes" and argued that "we [the National Party] want to do something different."

Richard Kicksee, chief organizer for the National Party at Queen's, said the first priority of the National Party of Canada is "to change the system."

Papadopolous said there is a clear "structural problem in Canada." He argued that "we will meeting expressed this attitude in the statement, "What's after NAFTA? Disasters!!!"

Papadopolous defended the National Party's position in blaming free trade for the lack of jobs and investment in Canada. He added that new free trade agreements would be negotiated with Europe, Japan and the United States.

In an interview with The Journal, Kicksee outlined their education agenda.

"The National Party sees education as an investment rather than a cost," he said.

He said the party supports a policy of "free tuition" in which students would pay back post-secondary tuition fees after graduation through the income tax system over a period of years.

Reaction to the speech by Papadopolous was relatively positive. Heather Brennan, from Food Services, remarked that "it's probably the one [party] that covers most of the issues that are real."

When asked if she would consider them, while I will still look at the other party options."

Second year Law student Gene Pippic was most impressed by the National Party's policy on "the elimination of spending during election campaigns by introducing a number one levy on all taxpayers of voting age."

Pippic proceeded to say that "this is really the politics of inclusion — they've got my vote."

Kicksee said "getting out our ideas is right now more important than gaining power."

AMS referendum statements

The following pieces, which concern the issues which will be put to referendum on Oct. 13 and 14, have been submitted by the Alma Mater Society.

The OUSA question:

The student lobbying organization of which Queen's is a member is the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA). Queen's became a member in 1993 when assembly unanimously voted YES!

How did it all begin?

After leaving OFS, the schools who wanted to look at solutions other than zero tuition, joined Queen's in forming a breakaway group that had fundamentally different ideas about the role of a student lobbying organization. These schools were Laurier, Brock, Western, Waterloo, Queen's and Toronto.

What is OUSA saying?

Our whole approach to issues has been called refreshing and innovative.

Firstly, OUSA was established to address issues that are related to the academic environment of our schools. Here are some of our policies:

- Student aid must be progressive and flexible. It must be versatile enough to cater to non-traditional students who cannot rely nor be assessed by the current mode of means testing, i.e. utilizing parental income statements. Our organization supports the implementation of the Income Contingent Loan Repayment Scheme.

• It is crucial that all stakeholders collectively work together to ensure that universities are accessible to every eligible person, and that we strive to make all institutions accessible to traditionally under-represented groups. We have developed and proposed an integrated access program for Ontario.

• Accountability, both internally and externally is an issue that OUSA supports. We promote each institution to become more accountable to the taxpayers and to the students.

Why vote yes?

• We offer a low cost efficient structure which will save each student over two dollars from what they were previously paying with the OFS.

• In the upcoming months, it is crucial that Queen's is a part of a lobbying organization to fight increases to tuition.

already, the government has been willing to talk to us because we offer practical, realistic solutions.

WHEN OUSA TALKS THE GOVERNMENT LISTENS

The Queen's Student Constable question:

The Queen's Student Constable

(QSC) system is posing this referendum question to Queen's students because the QSC system employs students, who work with their peers, to provide a secure environment for the students and is essential to the well-being of the Queen's community.

As it now stands, the charge-out rate for the employment of Constables at events is $9.57/hour per constable + GST. This charge-out rate is particularly high and therefore prescribes that certain groups cannot use Constables at their event because they lack the necessary funds. These groups will face problems holding their event as it will be very dangerous and unsafe. It is thus evident that the charge-out rate must be lowered so that the service may become financially accessible to all members of the Queen's community.

Furthermore, the Queen's Student Constable system presently faces severe financial constraints. With a charge-out rate of $9.57/hour, the system will be incurring a loss in the 1993-94 operational year. Considering that the system is working to achieve a lower charge-out rate, the losses incurred in future years would evidently increase. The AMS cannot continually subsidize the losses of the system as the AMS's by-laws state that a service may be terminated if it is decided that the service is not financially viable. The Queen's Student Constable system cannot be terminated as it is a valuable service, upon which the members of the Queen's community depend.

The QSC system requires an alternate means of funding and thus we feel that we must pose this referendum question to Queen's students to ask them whether or not they will support a student interest fee to help fund the Constable system — a fee that will ensure that this service can continue to provide safety and security to the Queen's community.

Question: "Do you agree with the establishment of a student interest fee of $0.50, subject to individual opt-out, that will act as a means of funding to ensure that the Queen's Student Constable system of peer supervision can continue to provide safety at all Queen's events?"

The Special Needs question:

Over the past few years the number of students with special needs or disabilities enrolled at Queen's University has increased. In 1992-93, a total of 350 students were registered with the special needs office.

With the rise in the number of special needs students, there was an increasing need for greater accessibility. In the spring of 1988 the Accessibility Task Force was created to help meet that need.

The Task Force funds the purchase of new technical aids, contributes to projects that decrease physical barriers on campus, and initiates educational programs aimed at the entire student body. The task force aims not only to help those students with special needs who presently attend Queen's, but to ensure that future students will be drawn to the University because of its accessibility.

This is not an easy task, and because of their technical nature, many of the committee's projects require a substantial amount of funding.

In the last five years the AMS Accessibility Task Force has made a difference in many people's lives. We hope that you will support us by voting YES and help us to make Queen's a place for everyone.

BE SURE TO VOTE ON OCTOBER 13 AND 14.

ASUS Surface referendum and elections

The following statements, which concern the referendum and elections on Oct. 13 and 14, were submitted by the Arts and Science Undergraduates Society.

Surface Referendum

"Yes" side

YES, SURFACE IS CONTROVERSIAL! YES, SURFACE WILL CHALLENGE YOU! YES, SURFACE IS BOLD! YES, SURFACE CAN BE ALARMING! SURFACE will not pretend to be liked. That's not our job! SURFACE is a forum for discussion and discourse! SURFACE is about the voice that does not get heard! SURFACE is about trying to understand one another! "TO BRING INTO PUBLIC VIEW" VOTE YES

"No" side

Surface has spent over $25,000 of student money over the last four years. Now they want even more.

Surface belongs to all Arts & Science students, but is controlled by an elite who use your money for their agenda.

Surface claims to be open and responsive, but for four years students' concerns have been ignored while things went from bad to worse.

Surface is supposed to be an alternative voice, but the alternative it presents is racist, hateful and violent. Discrimination against men or women, regardless of race, is wrong.

It's Your Money, It's Your Choice!

VOTE NO

ASUS Senator

NOEL COPPING—We are facing a referendum that will change the identity not only ASUS, but all of Queen's. Surface was created to be a forum for groups or individuals whose opinions normally wouldn't be heard, because of their small numbers. If Surface is stripped of ASUS funding, we might send an alarming message that these people do not belong in ASUS, and that they have no identity. Surface makes their presence known, acts as a mouthpiece, and brings divergent views into the mainstream. It may occasionally offend, but it allows small groups to speak. On the other hand, if Surface is allowed to stay, it will need to change in order to prevent another referendum; it will need to mature as a campus magazine, and act more responsibly as the ASUS newspaper.

The result of this referendum will change ASUS. A Senator is needed who will listen to both "majority" and "minority" groups, who will act for inclusion, and who will represent the interests of all in ASUS. Vote Noel Copping for ASUS Senator.

MATTHEW GLOGOWSKI—The position of 1-year Senator involves attending and participating in all ASUS assembly meetings as well as Senate meetings which occur on a monthly basis. The Senate debates matters affecting student life such as academics and the operation of the Campus Bookstore. As a political science major and an enthusiastic member of ASUS, I am aware of the value of the different perspectives held by Queen's richly diverse community. It is because of this that I feel I can adequately represent the wishes of my peers. I am always open to suggestions and encourage you to vote in the upcoming elections. Thank you for your time and good luck in the future.

ANDREW BOGGS—I am Andrew Boggs. I've been involved heavily in residence life and government for the past two years, I've exuded school spirit pushing the bounds of human ability, and I've unsuccessfully tried to breakdance on the floor of Alfie's. Now I am running for Senate—what does this mean? Student involvement in the Senate demands participation. Effective participation requires and understanding of Queen's as a whole, knowledge of past issues, and experience within the university system itself. My experiences can be put to work for you in all three of these capacities. Voting Boggs is a vote for a voice.

ASUS '97 Year Executive President

TOOMAS ORAV—ODE TO ARTS/CI'S Arts and Science '97 student, Toom's running for Society President; My qualifications make me a good bet, as high school yearbook editor I have sweat. That's important because the Society's primary quest, is to plan out socials and make them the best; Not just Smokers, Cover your Crest, and organizations galore, but charities, sports, and oh-so-much more; You may question my use of rhyme, but I think it's an original way to waste your time; So don't let this limerick go to waste, vote (for me if possible) post haste.

ASUS Rep to The AMS

LORI SENGARA—Hello! My name is Lori Sengara and I am running for the position of first-year ASUS Representative to the Alma Mater Society. I would love to have the opportunity to represent the first-year Arts and Science students at Queen's and if elected, I will do my best to serve as an effective liaison between our faculty and the AMS. I look forward to getting to know as many of you first-year Arts/Sci's as possible, so feel free to ask me any questions you might have. Finally, please remember to VOTE!

ASUS '97 Year Executive Vice-President (position acclaimed)

DEREK BRANS—Upper Years may think we are cut-off in residence, too new to know what's going on, and too sick with Frosh Flu to do anything about it. We are the next generation of Queen's students. The decisions our assemblies make this year will be affecting us well into our university careers. We must start voicing our selves now. I will not be afraid to question the ideas of those in higher positions and of greater years than me. I will make certain our administration cannot ignore the voice of Arts and Science '97. Vote Derek Brans for ASUS Representative to the AMS.

ERIN EACOTT—FROSH! VOTE ERIN EACOTT FOR 1ST YEAR ASUS REP TO THE AMS!

During Frosh Week, I fell love with QUEEN'S! As a result, I want to represent you and your ideas. My experience which would assist in this position includes: years on high school Student Council (as Grade 9 Minister, Grade 10 Minister, Publicity Chairperson), O.S.S.S.A. Vice-President, and Chairperson for an all county Student Council board. As well, I am already involved in various Queen's Clubs and intramurals. I want Queen's to be my life in every aspect. Place your vote beside Erin Eacott for 1st Year ASUS Rep to the AMS on Thursday, October 14, and I will devote myself to working for Queen's, for fun, and for you! If you have any questions or suggestions, please feel free to contact me at 531-5247.

ASUS '97 Year Executive Vice-President (position acclaimed)

IVAN LANGRISH

OUSA questioned

Continued from page one

McKellar said the income contingent loan repayment plan put forward by OUSA is an integral part of OUSA's student aid plan. Under such a plan, loans would be open to any student who applied, and paid back as a yearly percentage of a graduate's income.

Currently, Queen's, Brock, Waterloo, Western and Laurier are OUSA members, while other universities remain independent or members of the Canadian Federation of Students-Ontario.

In 1991, when CFS-O was called the Ontario Federation of Students, Queen's voted to cancel its membership in this organization. OUSA has criticized OFS's zero-tuition stand as unrealistic.

Singh said the No Group at U of T has problems with the CFS-O's zero-tuition policy as well.

But he said that "OUSA has undermined the student movement in Ontario," by dividing it.

His solution is "let's re-federate." He said there should be middle ground between CFS-O's zero-tuition stance, and OUSA's proposed 30 per cent tuition hikes.

"Let's get together and concentrate on what unites us, not what divides us," he said. Singh said it was necessary to "present a united position" to the government.

Singh said the fact that U of T has postponed its referendum, and many students at other universities, supposedly in the alliance, aren't being given a chance to ratify their membership by a vote, indicates a lack of democracy.

The referendum question at Queen's is on student funding for OUSA, and a no vote "would not affect our membership," said AMS OUSA Coordinator Linda Shin.

Singh called on the student governments involved to "defend OUSA on its own merit."

"What are they afraid of?" said Singh.

Queen's Rock-Climbing Club scales the stones at Kingston Mills last weekend. Courtesy of Queen's Rock-Climbing Club

Tindall remembered

Continued from page one

never met anyone who didn't like Frank Tindall... he was always capable of convincing you to do your best."

Tindall's wife Mary passed away last year, and, according to Bill Miklas, the football team was a "family group" and "Mary was an important part of the whole process."

Tindall's presence is still felt everyday at Queen's by those who use Tindall Field, and every year when the Frank Tindall McDon-

CANADA ON SALE!

FROM	TORONTO OW Return	MONTREAL OW Return
Vancouver	199 339	229 359
Calgary	169 299	189 349
Edmonton	169 299	189 349
Kingston	69 98	59 109
Saskatoon	179 299	179 329
Winnipeg	139 229	149 269
St. John	149 289	129 229
Halifax	159 269	129 209
St. John's	199 379	169 329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

THE BEST DEAL!
FOR THE SCIENCE FORMAL ONLY

ANY TUXEDO $70.00 AND FREE SHOES

TUXEDO TOWN

WITH CAREER GIRL AND SPECIAL OCCASIONS. ONE BLOCK UP FROM THE CAPITAL THEATRES.

GOING ABROAD?
Attend THE INTERNATIONAL CENTRE INFORMATION SESSIONS

International Crossing Borders
Work/Study Abroad Fair

October 21 and 22 • JDUC 10:30 - 3:30

Among the Crossing Borders activities will be three work/study abroad information sessions which aim to make your sojourn abroad an optimal one

- GETTING STARTED
- PRE-DEPARTURE PREPARATION
- CULTURE SHOCK! WHAT IS IT?

The series of three sessions will be presented both October 21 and 22. Pre-register for your desired times at the International Centre's main office, JDUC just past the Quiet Pub, or at Career Planning and Placement, St. Lawrence Building, from October 4

Jointly sponsored by AIESEC, Career Planning and Placement and the International Centre

International Tenants' Day

Task force struck to examine housing issues

BY MICHAEL MOSS The Queen's Journal

If Monday's International Tenant's Day passed you by without your taking stock, don't be surprised.

"International Tenant's Day went unnoticed for a variety of reasons," said Alma Mater Society Communications Commissioner, Dera Nevin. But the lack of fanfare also says something about the housing situation for Queen's students.

"Most tenants are largely uninformed," said Nevin. There is no existing tenant's association at Queen's, and the Swedish organization which stages International Tenant's Day is "not a body that receives a lot of press."

"The fact that I don't know a lot about the organization," admitted Nevin, "is testament to the fact that others don't know."

Although there wasn't any large-scale planning for Monday's event, the AMS conducted radio interviews and sent representatives to visit the Housing Expo at St. Andrew's Church. As a calendar date, International Tenant's Day is relatively new, 1993 being only the second year it has been recognized in eastern Ontario.

"There aren't a lot of students involved at the provincial level, and that's unfortunate," said Nevin. Housing issues are a priority for Nevin's commission, and Sept. 30 marked the establishment of a Communications Commission Task Force on Housing Issues struck through the AMS Assembly.

Nevin said that since most student tenants or "transient renters" are unaware of their full rights as lodgers, the task force will concentrate on a specific mandate:

- to solicit input and information from the student body on housing issues and priorities
- to develop long-term policy for the AMS on housing issues
- to decide on specific programmes for implementation
- to create a specific body or position that oversees all housing related matters

"Housing issues do affect every student, and it's essential to have student input," Nevin said. The task force must submit its findings to the communications commissioner by March 30 of 1994. However, the Assembly does reserve the right to reject the task force's suggestions.

Two students at large are still needed to complete the task force's membership. Also involved in the task force are the Graduate Student

Editorials

Looking beneath the Surface

Editorial Board 93-94

Editor-in-Chief
Sarah MacWhirter

Managing Editor
David Pavao

News Editor
Jeff Gray

Production Manager
Colin Ho

Editorial Page Editor
Douglas MacGregor

Entertainment Editor
Rob Furse

Opinions Editor
Tara Hillis

Sports Editor
Joel Sutherland

Graphics Editor
Joey deVilla

Richard Dubois

Photography Editor
Mrika Glickman

Backpage/Misc. Editors
Derek Walker
Joey deVilla

Literary Lapses Editor
Megan Nichols

Features Editor
Alison Masemann

Assistant News Editors
Brock Marland
Brad Elder
Lori Thorlakson

Assistant Production Manager
Adrienne Down

Assistant Entertainment Editors
Jan Petric
Ryan P. Chen
Sian Beddoe-Stephens

Assistant Sports Editor
Jen Flynn

Assistant Photography Editor
Derek Yamell

Assistant Literary Lapses
Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94

Business Manager
Chris Ritchie

Advertising Manager
Andrew Nielson

Creative Staff Manager
Alex Hamer

Sales Representative
Fiona Macauley

Asst. Sales Representative
Stuart Keelwell

House & Systems Manager
Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contributors from all members of the Queen's Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printing, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
Circulation - 10,000

Contributors

Tricia Bunnam, Susie Biro, Jillian Boyd, Josette Byrne, Mike Cain, Jordan Caldwell, Lisa Chen, Wing, Prentis Clairmont, Christian deBrajin, Frank Dixon, Adam Emery, Sarah English, Shelley Fitzgerald, Drew Hungerford, Michael Hungerford, Ben Jones, Tara Lynn Keas, Kristen Kunnas, Jonathan Leigh, Jenn Livings, Nadya McElligott, Dan McNair, Rob McRae, Owen Minns, Deanna Naljak, Des Olson, Geoff Owen, Lee Petne, Denny Silverthorne, Matthew Sweet, Marc Walton, Michael Wiercinski, Sharon Wilson, Erik Woods, Christopher Zabel

The tyranny of the majority, the representation of minorities, reverse discrimination and freedom of the press are all issues that surround the upcoming referendum on the fate of Surface, the Arts and Science newspaper which has been the subject of much controversy over the past few years.

The Surface question is not an easy one. Those who speak out against the paper contend that as an ASUS publication, it should reflect the view of all Arts and Science students. Instead, Surface provides a voice for alternative views and minority groups on campus; a voice which is often radical, angry and accusatory.

But isn't the concept of a publication which reflects the views of all ASUS students a little idealistic? ASUS is composed of thousands of students from extensive backgrounds and with wide-ranging beliefs and values—the possibility of all of them reaching a consensus on any issue is no doubt nonexistent. Dissenters on campus maintain that if Surface cannot represent a consensual view, it should at least represent a majority view—but this delves into the issue of the dictatorship of the majority. We already have The Journal to present a relatively mainstream outlook on issues and to satisfy general interests. But there are many other important issues that seldom make the pages of The Journal because they only affect segments of the community. These issues can find their voice in Surface.

Another argument which counters the representation issue involves Surface's mandate to provide a forum for minority voices which do not seem to directly pertain to white heterosexual suburban males. But, this does not mean that there is nothing in Surface for them to learn from, to understand, to appreciate. Tolerance and awareness are increasingly lacking in our society these days. By stifling the voices of people who don't usually have an opportunity to express themselves in mainstream publications, this intolerance is only being propagated. Surface does have significance for everyone. The "average" Queen's student can at least become aware of, if not understand, the issues put forth. Not only that, but the paper has been known to occasionally shock the student population out of its apathy. At a university where there is little stu-

times—but this is part of the importance of its role in the Queen's community. The status quo needs to be challenged and questioned. People have to be angry sometimes, otherwise change will never be effected. In the social climate of "political correctness," radical views from both sides of the political spectrum have been stifled. Nowadays, if you don't stick to the middle of the groups that members of minority groups have to deal with every day of their lives. Perhaps by publishing these controversial pieces, the average student can understand what it's like to live in perpetual fear of racism and/or homophobia.

But despite the issue of the legitimacy of Surface's mandate, there is still the question of funding. Should students who don't agree with the paper's agenda be forced to support it financially? Some consider the financial issue to be a smokescreen for the real agenda to simply get rid of the paper. But nevertheless, should people have to support something they don't believe in?

Of course, once you silence Surface, or make it opt-outable, this places other media on campus in jeopardy as well—The Journal, CFRC, The Journal, CFRC, GW. This questions the importance of freedom of expression and freedom of the press. The significance of having a diversity of media on campus is that in this way we can come closer to representing everyone. The minute one publication is shut down, the legitimacy of the others becomes endangered. What does it say for the autonomy of the press if, from the result of a vote which reflects only the opinion of the majority, it can be disbanded?

The rule of the majority, discrimination and freedom of expression are terms that have come to encompass hidden, and dangerous, implications. They are double-edged. Sometimes it is hard to see beyond the language that is being used to debate an issue and actually address what is being contested. The Surface question is one of tolerance, one of awareness. The contribution Surface has made to Queen's, the voice it has given to minority groups, are all important issues that should be considered when you vote next week. Without Surface, we may be missing something crucial—something that prevents us from wandering around in blind ignorance, thinking that our middle-of-the-road mainstream perspective is the only one that exists.

But dissenters still raise their hackles at Surface. Is it in Surface's mandate to shock people, to give offense to people? That some of their articles which have been accused of reverse discrimination have made individuals feel personally upset and violated seems to be contrary to Surface's pledge to rebel against the perpetuation of such sentiments.

The Journal has upset people, too; but because it usually reflects a status quo perspective, its right to exist and to claim a portion of student fees is never questioned. Sure, Surface may cross the line some-road, you find yourself censored and without a voice at all. With this in mind, it is important to reflect back to the not-so-long-ago days when Golden Words was a viciously right-wing paper, renowned nation-wide for its intolerant slant. But look how it's changed! This suggests the possibility for Surface's mandate to become more tempered. Even this year, both the editor of Surface and ASUS President Jenn Steeves have emphasized that articles printed in the paper will have a "critical base" to back them up—and so far, they seem to be fulfilling this claim.

On the other hand, the feelings of revulsion and violation which have caused members of the majority to rebel against Surface are feel-

Opinions

AMS should opt-out

The Editor,

As a first year student at Queen's I was extremely surprised and disappointed to find out what a poorly-run and unthoughtful organization the AMS is. This was proven to me with the shoddy handling of the "opt-outable" portion of the student fees. One of the largest and most powerful organizations on campus has shown that bureaucracy continues to grow to pointless and wasteful ends, and that if something is made complicated and frustrating enough, perhaps no one will bother to exercise a right that is inherently theirs. I am specifically talking about the insurance portion of the student fees, an eight-six dollar "option," that I felt rammed down my throat.

Although I had filled out information pertinent to my insurance coverage in one of my innumerable information packages over the summer, and provided a policy number and face-page, when I arrived at registration I was given a Green Shield insurance card. When I explained to the person covering that part of registration day that I did not need this coverage I was told that if I did not accept the card when I went to "opt-out" I would have difficulty getting a "refund." I knew that part of my student fees were to be allotted for insurance purposes, but as I am fully covered and had sent information to this effect, I assumed that I should not pay this portion of my fees. I was told that this was considered a "withholding" of fees owed to the university. I was then informed of the dates on which I could opt-out. Strange that after I was told this important time I never saw a reminding advertisement.

The whole system seems to be designed to force students into paying for unnecessary items in the hope that they will forget to opt-out. Could information regarding insurance not be sent in advance in order to avoid wasting not only students time but the time of the people employed by the AMS? Perhaps this is the key, the more complicated something is made, the more involved the system becomes. Not only were there AMS workers handing out "opt-outable" forms, working computers to print out "receipts," and answering general questions, the AMS operated print shop was doing a fine business receiving faxes as proof of insurance at sixty-five cents a page. Why is this necessary if students provide proof of insurance in advance?

I would also like to add that while opting-out of my insurance I discovered that a portion of my student fees (forty-five dollars) was being donated to Queen's Challenge. The very idea of asking undergraduates for donations when they have not yet completed a degree is ridiculous, and to do it in such an underhanded manner as including it in their fees is beyond unreasonable.

—A.M. Johnson Arts '97

Australian Experience

The Editor,

Students in Australia are aware that your government is considering the introduction of an income-contingency loans-based system for the future funding of higher education in Canada. Further, we are aware that the government and some conservative student groups (namely the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance) are claiming that Australia's higher education funding system is one that Canada should emulate.

It is important that you are not deceived by claims about how great our scheme is supposed to be. Here are the facts from Australia:

1. Since the introduction of the Higher Education Contribution Scheme (HECS) in 1989, students have paid over 500 million dollars into the system every year. Meanwhile, the government has continued to reduce its own contributions. The introduction of HECS in Australia has been a mechanism for our government to continue to underfund higher education.

2. Even the government's own studies demonstrate that HECS disadvantages many students—particularly mature-age and part-time students, the majority of whom are women.

3. The income-contingency loans system was introduced alongside promises that the level of fees would not increase beyond inflation; this promise was broken after only one year. Today, students in Australia are campaigning to prevent another huge jump in the levels of debts that we accumulate in every year of study. The introduction of a new scheme will always be followed in years of increased levels of debt—don't let yourselves be put in this trap!

4. The most recent federal budget has brought in a new round of changes to HECS scheme which continue the slide to higher and higher levels of fees. Remember—once the HECS is in place, it will always be used to reduce the government's commitment to funding the system properly.

In Australia, students are campaigning for a restoration of appropriate levels of government funding for higher education. Australia and Canada are among the lowest-taxing countries in the OECD, and this should be the focus of attention, not the proposal to increase student fees.

Don't let your government do to you what ours did to us! Don't be condemned to debt by a government attempting to shirk its responsibilities.

—Toby Borgese! Education Officer National Union of Students Australia

talking heads

"What do you think about the upcoming Queen's referendum?"

☐☐☐ "I think it is long overdue because the Surface issue should have been dealt with last year."

—Joanne Vickeroy Con Ed '96

☐☐☐ "It is important because it would be a pity to lose Surface. It is important and essential to the Queen's community."

—Owen Rogers Arts '96

☐☐☐ "The opinions of students are very important. You should always get their input, especially considering that we pay eight to ten thousand dollars per year to go here."

—Adam Green Arts '97

☐☐☐ "They're having a referendum over a buck?"

—Rebecca Warren Arts '94

☐☐☐ "I think it's important for OUSA because it's a worthwhile group. We need more representation for students across Canada. I like OUSA's OSAP low repayment scheme of only having to pay back a percentage of your income."

—Jill McKinlay Arts '95

Real Live Slacker

TELEVISION ADS AND REALITY

① BELL'S "CALL DISPLAY" ADS PORTRAY DRUNK CALLERS AS SICKOS, BUT MOST ARE PHILOSOPHY MAJORS AVENGING THEIR PROF!

② "STAY IN SCHOOL" ADS SAY THAT EDUCATION GUARANTEES A JOB!!!

SORRY, MIKE - WE DON'T WANT DERRIDA DETRACTORS... WE NEED PROGRAMMERS AND SYSTEMS ANALYSTS!

③ HOW 'BOUT THOSE ADS FOR THE SHOES THAT LIGHT UP WHEN YOU WALK? THEY MAKE YOU LOOK REALLY COOL, RIGHT?

NAH! IT JUS' MAKES AININ' EASIER!

④ HERE'S WHAT WOULD REALLY HAPPEN IF SOMEONE REALLY TURNED INTO A BOTTLE OF RYE (THE ANTI-ABUSE ADS):

AW-RIGHT! LET'S FOUR JOHNNY INTO A BIG GLASS!

Joey deVilla

On Wednesday, Oct. 13 or Thursday, Oct. 14, vote Yes to Surface.

ASUS JACKETS

Forgot to order
a Jacket in
September?
Don't despair...

Wednesday,
October 13
5-10pm at
THE CORE

(183 University Ave.)

This is your SECOND chance to place
your order.

Bring your $160 deposit in CASH, CERTIFIED
CHEQUE, or MONEY ORDER.
PERSONAL CHEQUES WILL NOT BE ACCEPTED!

All students who missed the first order are welcome!

ASUS JACKETS

Right Student Government?

The Editor,

The Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance (OUSA), for which the Queen's AMS is campaigning for a yes vote for funding in the referendum next Wednesday, October 13 and Thursday, October 14, calls its policy paper, Students for Change—Better or Worse. If you care about affordability, accessibility and a decent public education vote 'No' to the referendum on funding for OUSA.

OUSA's support of tuition increases and a student loan system contingent on one's level of income after graduation is a step backwards for students concerned with growing barriers to accessibility and affordability. If OUSA and the AMS get their way, it will mean higher education costs for all students and lower accessibility for those under-represented in higher education—women, people of colour, international students, sole support parents and those students pursuing careers in fields in which incomes are low (i.e. social work and counselling).

OUSA purports to be representatives of "realist" tuition reform policy. What this means is accepting the logic of government cutbacks in education in order to "minimize" the damage. OUSA is saying, "Yes it is alright to underfund education, but we want to negotiate the terms of capitulation." How else do you explain OUSA's policy of a 30% increase in your tuition; a proposed increase in government funding; and increased corporate funding and involvement in post-secondary education?

The cornerstone of the OUSA plan is an Income-Contingency Loan Repayment Plan (ICLRP), a form of student loan which makes repayment contingent upon one's income after graduation or after one ceases to be a student. OUSA argues that "ICLRP's most attractive feature is its flexibility [and that it is] a realistic and workable solution to the problem of accessibility; for it successfully attacks the financial barriers facing Ontario students." If this were only true!

How can one claim to support universal access but at the same time push for increased tuition fees? ICLRP will just compound the problem. Students now pay 18-20% of their education costs. After ICLRP, this could leave students paying 100% of their costs! Moreover, in addition to higher tuition fees, interest payments on the debt would make the plan even more costly. And the ICLRP will cost lower-income more than those with higher incomes who will be able to repay their debt sooner. Finally, having to repay a loan over a long period of time, or as in the case of Sweden, until retirement, provides a strong incentive to go on with education.

OUSA often cite the cases of Sweden, Australia, and the UK to support their push for ICLRP. What they fail to mention is that in the UK and Australia, students vigorously opposed such schemes, rightly arguing that they would lead to poorer accessibility and increased costs. OUSA also conveniently neglect that Sweden and the UK have zero tuition policy along with their ICLRP schemes. In Australia, the successful zero tuition policy of 1974-1988, which succeed in raising accessibility for low-income students from 17% to 22% over 10 years and for Aboriginal, maori and women students, was replaced by an ICLRP which has led to marked decreases in government funding, affordability and accessibility. To paraphrase Emily Carasco, Vice-President of the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations: the ICLRP amounts to little more than a privatized, deregulated, user-pay system which only serves to axe public education in Canada and raise the financial burden carried by the student. OUSA is asking students to pay for a crisis in education which was not our making.

By increasing the financial demand on students, OUSA's plans would lead to higher student debts. By proposing that tuition be elevated so as to cover the full cost of education, it is promoting policies that will block access to many people. It will discriminate against students who don't earn decent salaries after graduation. This includes women, people of colour, international students, sole support parents and others. Studies by Les and Brinkman show that with every $10 increase in tuition there is at least a 1% drop in enrolment. If OUSA succeeds, there could be a drop of 7-8% in enrolment. Furthermore, the proportion of students who say that fees is the key obstacle to deciding to pursue post-secondary education are greater among those people who are currently under-represented.

Vote 'No' on the referendum next Wednesday and Thursday. Make your student government work for you, not against you. For those interested in more information or who want to fight OUSA's right-wing policies call 518-8954.

—Janice Hill
Queen's International Socialist

VOTE TO ELECT

The one candidate who will make a difference.

- He listens to all sides
- 13 years experience in government
- Barry continues to work for jobs here

Information 547-5862

Barry

GORDON

AUTHORIZED BY ROBERT KENNEDY OFFICIAL AGENT FOR BARRY GORDON

VOTE

IN THE
AMS FALL REFERENDUM POLLING STATIONS

LOCATION	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
	OCT.13TH	OCT.14TH
BAN RIGH	4:30-6:30	4:30-6:30
DOUGLAS	11:00-4:30	11:00-4:30
JDUC	10:30-5:00	10:30-5:00
MAC-CORRY	10:30-5:30	10:30-5:30
PHYS ED CENTRE	11:00-3:00	11:00-3:00
WEST CAMPUS	12:00-6:30	12:00-6:30
BOTTERELL	10:30-3:30
BROCKINGTON	4:30-6:30
ELLIS	11:00-2:00
KINGSTON	11:00-2:00
DUNNING		11:00-3:30
HUMPHREY		11:00-2:00
JEFFREY		11:00-2:00
LEONARD		4:30-6:30
STIRLING		11:00-2:00

Features

Silence equals Death

October 4-10 is AIDS Awareness Week in Kingston. Organized by the Kingston AIDS Project, the week is an attempt to increase the awareness about HIV and AIDS in our community, and an opportunity for people to educate themselves about living with AIDS. This feature is intended to provide some insight into the social, political, health and personal issues around HIV and AIDS. It is by no means a complete guide, and for further information and enlightenment please contact the Kingston AIDS Project, the Kingston General Hospital HIV and AIDS Clinic or the Queen's Birth Control Centre.

On Sunday October third, I participated in the "From All Walks of Life" walkathon for AIDS Awareness in Kingston. Held in conjunction with AIDS Awareness Week, similar walks were also held across the country to raise money for AIDS organizations. Approximately 50 to 75 people participated in the event, which started at Confederation Park, continued along King Street to St. Lawrence College, and back toward downtown along Johnson Street. The final leg of the walk consisted of a parade down Princess Street, with participants chanting "Hey, Hey, Ho, Ho, AIDS phobia's got to go!" and "What do we want? A Cure for AIDS - When do we want it? Now!"

The walk itself was preceded by a number of brief speeches by members of the Kingston community and local politicians. Greg Loftus, a person living with AIDS, spoke eloquently about his experience with the virus and the strength he has found within the community of people living with AIDS, whom he says have shown "love, compassion, and incredible strength." Although he said he found it "very difficult to express [his] feelings", Loftus was insistent on the need for speaking out. He said,

"people will wise-up one day and realise that people are not invincible, no one is." Outgoing Kingston mayor Helen Cooper also spoke at the rally. Affirming her support for the event, she said in her tenure as mayor she has "learned a great deal" about HIV and AIDS, including the need to "confront those people who refuse to understand."

Other speakers included Peter Milliken, MP for Kingston and the Islands, and Pat

DEBBIE MARTEL

Body Politics

To talk about disease is to conjure up images of the body. The body plays a central role in giving significance and meaning to particular diseases by providing a location for their existence. AIDS' locateness in the body is initiated by external bodies. In this respect 'AIDS Awareness' implies a certain body consciousness (as opposed to self consciousness which might be experienced when diseases are manufactured inside the body). This 'body consciousness' translates into an awareness of when and how other bodies intersect with our own and questions of whether particular bodies are safe. Unfortunately, questions about the safety of bodies are not easy questions to answer and frequently they are decided with reference to the identities attached to those bodies, with the homosexual body bearing the signifier of unsafeness. Although, repeated public information messages have focused on rebutting the mistaken belief that AIDS is something that primarily affects gay men, this idea seems to continue to be dominant (as evidenced by some people I have talked to lately).

But, this only partially explains the unfortunate role that identity politics has performed in AIDS awareness and AIDS activism. (Identity politics is when persons who are marginalized from society based on a particular aspect of their identity organize under this common identity and engage in political action under their common banner.) In North America the queer community has been the primary organizing force in AIDS activism. This is related to the mistaken idea that AIDS is their disease so they should be the ones who deal with it. It is fortunate that the queer community has responded to the challenge of AIDS, but the problem could be dealt with much more effectively if it was released from the prison of identity politics.

That AIDS is not a homosexual issue hardly needs to be said. The fastest growing infected group in North America is heterosexual women. Evidently, many women are being infected by men who engage in heterosexual sex. The alarming increases in AIDS cases might be ex-

O'Connor from the United Counties AIDS Project, who is living with AIDS and was walking with his wife and daughter.

Participants in the walk, including Queen's students, emphasized the need for increased awareness. The atmosphere of hope and exuberance about the long walk ahead (both literally and figuratively) was matched by a recognition that the fight against AIDS is often frustrating and discouraging.

Jalynn Bosley (Arts '96) commented on the need for such an event. She said, "people in our generation aren't aware enough. We may not know someone with AIDS now, but ten years from now we all will. People aren't aware enough to protect themselves." Bosley added that she thought it was incredible how people in her generation are still so ignorant about AIDS, and that "some people still think you can get AIDS from touching someone."

Other people emphasized the need for awareness to combat fear and prejudice. Marianne Becker, a Kingston resident, reaffirmed the slogan "visibility equals life and silence equals death," and commented on the "inspiring" atmosphere at the walk. In a similar vein, Lisa Goddard (Arts '95) said "the greater the visibility, the more comfortable people become with the issue."

ALISON MASEMANN engages in no-risk sexual activities.

SAFER SEX

No Risk Activities

- mutual masturbation
- social dry kissing
- hugging
- massaging
- body to body contact where there are no breaks or abrasions in the skin.

Low Risk Activities

- cunnilingus (oral-vaginal contact)
- 'French kissing'
- vaginal or anal intercourse using a latex condom (spermicides further reduce the risk)
- fellatio (oral sex)

High Risk Activities

- vaginal or anal intercourse without using a condom
- inserting the hands or tongue into the anus cavity
- sharing sex toys such as dildos, vibrators, etc.

CONDOMS

DO NOT

- do not use condoms after the best before or expiry date
- do not use condoms if the package has been ripped or torn
- do not use oil (such as vaseline) with condoms

DO

- do use a condom every time you have sex
- do learn more about condoms
- do store condoms in a cool dry place
- do use a water-based lubricant (such as KY) with condoms
- do carry condoms where they won't get damaged (never in your back pocket or wallet, never in a purse or pocket close to keys)

AIDS TESTING

WHERE TO GET TESTED

To get an AIDS test in Kingston, you can contact the Kingston, Frontenac, Lennox and Adirondack Health Unit. They provide confidential (but not anonymous) testing by appointment only. To make an appointment, call Liz or Dianne at 549-1232 or 1-800-267-7875.

Testing is also available at the Kingston General Hospital HIV and AIDS clinic, although the clinic's primary function is for medical and psychosocial counselling for people infected with and affected by AIDS. The clinic offers pre-test and post-test counselling including help in figuring out "who to tell and how to tell about the results," according to the clinic's social worker, Hannah Kaufman. After the virus has been transmitted it can take between three and six months for it to show up in the bloodstream. Thus Kaufman recommends that if you have come into contact with the virus you should get the test repeated after six months and after a year. In the meantime, use a condom to reduce the chance of unwittingly transmitting the virus to a sexual partner.

Queen's Student Health Services also provides HIV and AIDS testing for Queen's students. The testing is non-nominal or confidential. This means that the test is sent out with a code number that can be matched to a name only by the patient and his or her doctor. Student Health Services also provides pre-test and post-test counselling.

If you think you may have been involved in an unsafe sexual encounter with someone who may be HIV positive, please get tested.

TARA HILLIS is a Philosophy student who has a fabulous plaid shirt. [Ed. note: who doesn't?]

"... as a community, we can tackle this, and get rid of the myths."

First, a little bit about AIDS Awareness Week: what would you say the goal of AIDS Awareness Week is?

I think the aim this year is to bring communities together, to let individuals from whatever part of the community know that they're part of it, that AIDS affects all of us. I think the other thing is that as a community we can tackle this, and get rid of the myths and make it much easier for individuals who are living with AIDS.

Visibility equals Life

In an attempt to increase awareness of the issues pertaining to HIV and AIDS and the concerns of people infected with and affected by AIDS, Alison Masemann, The Journal's Features Editor, conducted an interview with John McTavish, the Support Service Coordinator at the Kingston AIDS Project.

If there was one thing that you wanted people to get out of this week, what would it be?

That AIDS can affect everyone, and that individuals need to educate themselves about the disease itself, and also hopefully can educate themselves around the issues, so they can be there for individuals who are infected... family and friends.

Can you comment on the health care system in Ontario and its responsiveness to the needs of people with AIDS?

There's been a great change. I think as far as our community doctors and physicians, they're seeming to take this on. There is more for individuals to get. We have a clinic here in Kingston that's run out of Kingston General Hospital, by Drs. Peter and Sally Ford, which is excellent, it offers excellent care to individuals in our area. I think there are some problems with our drug plan. Individuals who are on a disability pension and who receive drug cards, a lot of medications for them are taken off that, so I think the government needs to be looking at that and changing that.

I guess this is a related question, but a lot of the reading I've done has indicated a gap in attitudes between the medical profession, the medical bureaucracy and grass-roots AIDS organizations. Could you comment on that?

There still is a lot of, I think, fear in the medical profession. I think there are still a lot of doctors and nurses who have an attitude that's full of a lot of discrimination and they still are very biased. It's changing slowly. Your know, there are doctors and stuff who have taken a lot on and done a lot. So I think they're starting to get more involved, and I think the grass-roots organizations have really been pushing that. And also I think PHA's themselves, persons living with the disease, have started to say to the medical people, "look, start dealing with this." And they're not as passive, I think they're starting to stand up. I think we'll see a big change within the next couple of years.

Have there been any actions to counteract directly the kind of discrimination that goes on? Have there been any sanctions against doctors?

There have been individual PHA's who have sued doctors and dentists for discrimination, and have won. Also I think what's happening is we are taking more of an advocate role. I know for myself I have a patient that's in the hospital they can have a day to come in and go to the clinic and not have to worry about the children. And then we have a library here as well.

On the subject of discrimination against people who are HIV positive, how has it manifested itself in Kingston and on Queen's campus?

Well, I think some of the discrimination is because [it's thought to be] a 'queer disease'. I think that still is here. I think we have a lot of individuals who look at it and say, "It's not going to affect me - it's either queers getting it, or drug us-that I'm working with and they have some [problems], then I will go in on their behalf and see what I can do, whether it's with hospitals, or dentists, or just home care... And also it's against the law to discriminate against someone who is HIV positive: it's a disability. So I think letting people know that [is helpful]...

What kind of support exists in Kingston and the area for people who are HIV positive, or who think they might be?

We have the Project here: we offer individual counselling to individuals who are infected. We also offer counselling to their friends, family, partners. It can be individual, one-to-one, or it can be the person with the family; it can be in the office, it can be out of the office, it can be over the phone. We also offer some counselling for individuals who are thinking of getting tested - we will do some work with them and sit down and talk with them and then point them in the right direction for the actual test. Individuals who are just really worried about [AIDS], they can come in and talk to a counsellor, and get some of their fears answered, and some of their questions. We also offer a wide transportation program which is basically helping individuals get into the clinic from outside of Kingston, because we're covering an area of 100 miles... We also offer (with other groups) support groups for individuals who are affected and individuals who are infected. We have an emergency financial fund that individuals who are infected with the virus can apply for. The only problem with that is that all the money for that program has to be fundraised, there is no government help, so that's a lot of work.

We're also getting into areas with women and AIDS. We have a member of staff who is working on that program and dealing with the specific needs that come with HIV and women. Also we're looking at helping out with childcare for women who are infected so that and I don't fit into that, so I don't have to worry about it." I think that's a big one and I think it's still a big myth here. I know in the smaller areas that I work in it is, and I think it is even through Queen's, I think there's still a very homophobic attitude that "if I don't fall into those two categories I'm fine." I think some of the other discrimination is based on fear. I think most of us are afraid of the unknown, and until we start to look at it and face it, we're not going to challenge ourselves to learn any more... We're starting to see more people come forward and say they're infected, so all of us are starting to look at it and say "we damn well better start learning a bit more." Discrimination as far as medically, no, we have good doctors. We have doctors and dentists that will take individuals. That one is starting to slow down within Kingston. Occasionally we may hear some of the stories where someone may have been denied a service, whether it's a dentist or something like that, and we get to work on it.

"By the year 2000 more women than men will have AIDS."

To what extent is discrimination in the workplace based on HIV status going on in Kingston?

There has been some in the past but I think it's been very minimal. Our Education Coordinator has done some policy development with certain businesses around having HIV positive people work there and so on. So I haven't heard of a lot of it around, and it could be because a lot of the people who are being discriminated against haven't come forward or they've just decided they don't have the energy. And I think that's one reason why we don't hear a lot - individuals who sometimes are faced with this have to make a decision: do they want to go forward with it, or do they just want to say 'to hell with it' and not? And a lot of times they don't because they don't have the energy, it's more important for them to deal with their health.

What kind of reception did you have at the high schools?

Actually, very good. I do the speaks in the high schools as a gay man, and I'm allowed to do them openly. I've done Gananoque, Brockville, Prescott, Carleton Place, and I've even done a Catholic high school, twice - I've been invited back! And I think I've probably talked to over 2000 students, and I think there's been one who's been miserable.

Regarding the connection between homophobia and AIDS and people's reluctance to use protection because it's seen as a gay disease: how successful do you think AIDS awareness campaigns have been in that area?

I think it's been good, and I think one thing that we've been able to do is that we go out and we do a lot of homophobia workshops. We're into all the local high schools out-and the testing that goes on, is it difficult to get the test? Because I've heard of incidences where you really have to recount all of your sexual history to get them to give you a test.

I think in some of the smaller areas that's happening. In Kingston it's lucky, people can go to the Kingston Health Unit. They have to call first and make an appointment with the STD clinic there, and it's side of Kingston doing homophobia workshops, so we break down some of the barriers there, saying that it is not just a gay disease, saying that it's an unprotected sexual behaviour, it's not just because a person is gay... I think we've been able to break some of the barriers, but I still think there's a lot [of homophobia] happening, especially with people who are coming from small areas to Kingston to maybe live or go to school are who coming in with that mentality. That's where we're starting to work now, with our rural project, is getting out there. Most individuals are starting to look around and say that everyone's at risk. And I think with the new stats that are coming out... that it's becoming a number one killer of men and women, straight men and women. Also the new stats that are coming out from the World Health Organization [are] telling us that by the year 2000 more women than men will have AIDS.

Do you think that the presence of high profile celebrities in the media announcing their HIV status has helped the cause?

I think that it's helped just because it gives someone else to look at. Again I think what happens is if it's right in our area we don't look at it but as soon as someone comes on the media we look at it. In one way it has helped the cause... what I find troublesome with that is all the attention we put to them, when we have our own individuals in our little area who have come forward, and I think for them it's much braver. We have a young man in this area who writes a column in Kingston This Week about living with the virus. I have another gentleman I know in Cornwall who does that and to me they're much more "out there" than these big individuals, they just don't get the image. But if by Magic Johnson and whoever else have come forward, if it makes one person think about it, then I guess it's worth it.

"It's not going to affect me - it's either queers getting it, or drug users and I don't fit into that."

ASUS

Gifts & GRANTS Applications

ARE DUE OCTOBER 28th
IN THE CORE
(183 UNIVERSITY AVE)

Call 545-6278 for more info.

Arts & Science Orientation Selection Committee

Needs one member at large to help in selecting the 1994 Orientation Committee. Please submit a letter stating your interest in sitting on this committee to the CORE (183 University Ave) by October 19.

If you have any questions or need more information please call 545-6278.

Keg Party Economics (101)

+ PARTY = MONEY

Save on your keg parties with us!
We make beer Affordable!
FREE Keg & Tap rental
FREE Keg delivery
FREE Keg Pickup
FREE Refills (H2O only)
FREE Tax (only 26¢/L)
FREE Pictures of Bob Rae for the bottom of the toilet bowl.

SPECIAL
$50 PER BATCH (PLUS TAX)
ON SELECTED RECIPES

Choose the right personal brewery and BE satisfied

BREW NOW FOR HOMECOMING!

The Brewing Experience 407 Counter St Unit 160 Tel 542-2187

ASUS

is proud to present our newest addition

Leranna Designs

We are a custom-design clothing option for all your shirts, ballcaps and sweaters for residences, committees, and ghetto house designs!!

WE GUARANTEE THE LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICE AND THE BEST QUALITY!!

Positions Available:

- Business Manager
- (2) Marketing and Advertising Consultants
- (5) Member Sales Team

If you're an entrepreneur, or good at art and design, come join our team.

Applications for positions ARE AVAILABLE AT THE ASUS CORE, 183 UNIVERSITY OR call 545-6278.

Ring Days

October 21st, 22nd and 23rd

A representative from Jostens® Canada Ltd. will be at the Campus Bookstore for three days to take your order of a Queen's University ring. For over 20 years, Jostens® has been providing Queen's grads with lasting symbols of their time spent at one of the best known institutions in the country. Jostens®, with over 90 years of experience, can provide to you with personalized service and respected warranties. Jostens® products can be seen as the best value around. Why choose Jostens? Here is a list:

- > Full lifetime warranty
- > Free resizing for the lifetime of the ring
- > High quality production
- > Widest selection of styles including 8 different metal choices
- > No jewellery store mark-ups
- > Faculty crest customization available
- > Delivery to any location
- > Extended Service Agreement: an extra 3 years coverage should you ever lose your ring

JOSTENS
CANADA LTD.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

STILL AVAILABLE!

TWO BEDROOM APARTMENTS -unfurnished

AT An Clachan
(near West Campus)

(Queen's University Housing Service)

2 Bedroom - $602 per month

utilities included stove and fridge provided
1-year lease required
Free parking available

For leasing please enquire at the Housing Office
169 University Avenue

545-2501

First Priority: students

Faculty and Staff currently have the option to rent for a limit of two years.

ATTENTION QUEEN'S STUDENTS

Call Paul or Marg at 548-4477 to arrange for automatic oil delivery and service

TRIHEAT

Serving the Greater Kingston Area for over 100 years

9 Terry Fox Drive, Kingston, Ontario K7L 4Y8

Sports

frank and earnest

Queen's fan apathy rising fast

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

Two things really stand out from Saturday's football game. The national champion Gaels were disappointing again, losing their third straight game for the first time in six years, 19-16 to the Concordia Stingers, to fall to 1-3 on the year. But the Gaels at least have explanations available, having graduated a stellar bunch of All-Stars and losing a raft of players to injury, including All-Canadians Brad Elberg and Joel Dagnone. So cut them some slack after a glorious 1992 season.

Some 13,000 people who don't have excuses are the students of this campus, of whom a grand total of 57 turned out at Richardson Stadium to support the team on the student side of the field. I know because I counted them. Admittedly the day was gloomy, but it wasn't cold, although a few raindrops fell during the game. Now no one expects everybody to attend the game, although that did happen regularly a few years ago. Nothing is forever. But more than 57 fans watched the Sunday final of the 1993 Leonard Bowl, an annual intramural Leonard Hall tradition.

Those 57 hardy souls witnessed an exciting contest that went right down to the last play, a potential game-tying field goal which was blocked after a high snap. Their numbers paled in comparison to the combined forces of the Queen's Bands, the Cheerleaders, the AMS Constables, the Events Staff and the Kingston Police Force officers who were there to entertain, control and protect them. They were also outnumbered by Golden Gaels and Stingers players and coaches.

Why was the student crowd so small? Well, there are several reasons, the most important of which is not having a home Frosh Week game for the third straight year.

Not since 1990 has there been a home game on the Saturday that ended Frosh Week. Why is this significant? Well, at one time frosh and their leaders would attend that game en masse. Then many of them, having enjoyed the game, would attend for the rest of their years at Queen's. With no game for three years, three-quarters of Queen's undergrads have missed that experience. They haven't gotten into the habit of walking out to West Campus to watch the Gaels, although they certainly travelled in large numbers to Toronto for the Vanier Cup last fall, which drew 28,645 fans. So the interest and the spirit are intact, but perhaps people have gotten a bit jaded by the Gaels' success, and will no longer turn out en masse for a midseason game. Since there was no Frosh Week game, one suspects that many frosh don't yet know that Queen's has a national championship team, still more don't know that Richardson Stadium is located on West Campus, and most have no idea when the next home game is scheduled. (It's Sat. Oct. 16 at 1 p.m.)

There was supposed to be a Frosh Week home game this year, but it got the kibosh due to schedule changes initiated by the CFL, McGill and Ottawa, according to Bill Sparrow, coordinator of men's interuniversity athletics, who arranges all men's team schedules. Sparrow was disappointed with the small crowd, and said, "I don't know what to do to correct it. Having a Frosh Week game would be nice, I admit, but it isn't always possible because of schedule constraints. However, I have no doubt the Alumni Weekend game will be sold out."

Unlike most Ontario universities, Queen's levies no admission charge to any regular-season interuniversity sporting events, including football. So the cost of going to the game isn't responsible—there is none.

Gaels' head coach Doug Hargreaves was also disappointed with the crowd, and said, "It's unfortunate, but we're going to play anyway. If you're interested in the team, you'll come. The Reunion game is a social event, which explains why that game is packed."

Hargreaves had an interesting possible solution to the problem of having no home Frosh Week games. He noted, "Western didn't have a Frosh Week game last year, but their student government organized buses for their frosh to go to Guelph to watch Western play. That doesn't seem to be a priority for our Alma Mater Society."

While no one expects the Gaels to threaten Toronto Blue Jays' attendance records, it would be nice to see more than 57 student fans at a game. So a challenge is being issued to all Frosh group leaders—Gaels, Fries, Bosses, Teaches and so on—for the next home game: Organize your Frosh and come out for the Ottawa game. You've got 11 days to do it, and no excuses will be accepted!

The puck stops here

BY PRENTIS CLAIRMONT
The Queen's Journal

Attention all sports fans: HOCKEY IS BACK!!! Queen's is coming off one of its most successful post-seasons in many years. After clinching a playoff berth on the final day of the season, the Gaels reached the division finals. The team is counting on a mix of young talent and experienced veterans to make it happen in '93-'94.

Dan Brown, a first team Eastern league all-star defenceman returns this year after an amazing season. Brown led the team in scoring last year with an impressive 11 goals and 35 points. He also solidified an already imposing defence. Derek Morin, Jay Lee, Mark Eamer, and Shannon Storr are all returning this season. Together with Brown, they constitute arguably the best defensive corps in the league. Backing them up is returning netminder Bill Landry, who posted a solid 3.77 GAA.

Especially missed from last year will be high-scoring captain Brian Rogers, Randy Gregg and award-winner Chris Glover. Considerable pressure will be put on all lines to contribute offensively.

Queen's will look for Andrew Clark, Ryan Kantautas, and Mike Lobinwich to put some big numbers on the board. All three were among the leaders in team scoring last year. The Gaels are also expecting players such as Greg Fenton, Jeff Gosselein, Bill Budgell and Jaimie Dinsmore to lead the attack with a strong, disciplined forechecking game.

Head coach John Phelan returns for his fifth season with the Gaels. Also behind the bench this year will be long-time associate Kevin Macinnis, former captain Kevin Freeleton and Kingston area coach Chuck Stauffre.

The season runs from October 15th to February 19th. Queen's will compete in an exhibition tournament this weekend in Waterloo. The Gaels will open the season on the road with games against Ryerson, Laurentian, and McGill.

With a mix of young talent, returning veterans, and an experienced coaching staff, Queen's expects to be a force in their division. But they need your support! Attendance levels rose substantially last year, but the Gaels want to pack the arena this weekend! The team's home opener is on the Sunday of Homecoming weekend. Come on out to Jock Harry on October 24th at 2:00 to see your team crunch Concordia! T-shirts, pizzas, and other great prizes will be awarded at the game. It's exciting hockey and it's free with student ID

Women's volleyball team victorious

BY SUSIE BIRO
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's Women's Volleyball team is back! Under the direction of new head coach Lisa Eyles, the Gaels returned victorious from their first two exhibition matches of the season.

This past weekend the team travelled to Canton, N.Y., where they defeated Oneonta College and St. Lawrence University in straight sets.

In the first match against Oneonta, veterans Kathrin Schumacher and Marie Roberts led the attack with 9 and 8 kills respectively, sending the Gaels to a 17-15, 16-14, 15-12 victory. In the second match it was all Queen's as the attack was led once again by vets Schumacher, Roberts and Sally Thomas with 19, 8, and 11 kills respectively.

In both matches, consistent play by fourth year setter Dana Mendham and rookies Alison McConnell and Nicole Schwertner helped lead the Gaels to victory.

With a good balance of 8 vets and 5 rookies, and a talented new coach, this team is looking forward to a challenging and successful season.

You can catch the Gaels in action Oct. 15-17 at the Queen's Invitational in the Phys.Ed. Centre.

No horses in this polo

Men's waterpolo has a shot at the title

BY ERIK WOODS
The Queen's Journal

This past weekend, the men's waterpolo team travelled to Ottawa for two games against the region's university teams. The first game was against a weak but well disciplined Gee Gee's team. This was the first game for the new Gaels team and was to be a test of their team work.

The first period started quickly, with Tim Carr, the team captain, scoring early for the Gaels even though he was playing at a new position. The goal was followed by a lot of swimming back and forth by both teams, due to some memorable goal tending and a few mental lapses. The period ended with one more goal from the Gaels, giving them a 2-0 lead. The second quarter was a repeat of the first, but the score was a now 3-1.

With a quick pep talk, the Gaels regrouped for the second half determined to put the game away. Tim Carr and Mike Greenwood combined for three goals in the third period, and Stephen Gauldie, Tom Kennedy and Hart Orenstein closed the coffin on Ottawa with five more goals in the fourth. The final score was the Gaels 11, Ottawa 5.

Game two had the Gaels confronting the more experienced and tough playing Carleton team. The Ravens, having made the play-off last year and already competing in tournaments in the U.S., wanted to start their season like their football team—winning.

The Gaels on the other hand knew that Carleton stood in their way to compete in this year's playoff. The two teams collided in the pool, both desiring a big win.

The play was tough and goals were quick in the smaller Carleton pool. At the half, the score was 5-3 for the Gaels, but with no team distancing themselves from the other. The third quarter saw frustration setting in with a lot of near misses and a whopping five ejections, but the score was still close at 6-4. The fourth quarter saw the destruction of Carleton's chances of winning the game when one of their players was ejected from the game. The Gaels capitalized on the opportunity and scored five goals in the fourth, to win another hard fought 11-5 game. The Gaels' goals were scored by Stephen Gauldie (4), Mike Greenwood (3), Brian Dingle (2) and singles by Erik Woods and Jason Stern.

The Waterpolo Gaels have the Thanksgiving week-end off but are bound for Toronto in two weeks for a cross over tournament with Toronto, MacMaster, Western and York.

Coaching legend will be missed

BY GEOFF OWEN
The Queen's Journal

Frank Tindall, long time Queen's Golden Gaels football coach, passed away earlier this week. He coached the Gaels for twenty-nine seasons and will be remembered as one of the greatest coaches in LIAU history.

Along with these successes, Tindall transcended the notion of coaching and is oft spoken of as a man of infinite decency and integrity. He coached with the utmost respect for the game and he lived with the utmost respect for the people around him. Queen's is a world famous institution that has produced countless great minds. For the twenty-nine years he coached the Gaels, Tindall touched many of these people. Ronnie Stewart excelled for many seasons as a running back for the Ottawa Rough Riders after playing for Tindall at Queen's. Stewart once said "we're all better people for having known Frank Tindall. I have never met a man who didn't like Frank Tindall."

Tindall represents the essence of the pride, tradition and spirit that thrives at Queen's University. The school, indeed the world, is a poorer place now that Frank Tindall is gone. We are all richer for coming in contact with, if not the man, then with the legacy he left behind.

Field of Dreams

BY JILLIAN BOYD
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's field hockey team travelled to Ottawa this past Friday to compete against the Carleton Ravens in their eighth game of the season. Going into the game with a record of three wins and four losses, and having already won their previous game against the Ravens, the team was eager for another victory.

Playing under a new system, however, the Gaels were a little unsteady at the opening of the game. The Ravens were quick to take advantage of this and came on strong. The Gaels held their ground, however, and eventually settled down and dominated the play. Queen's steady offensive pressure ultimately prevailed as the alumni won the game 3-1.

Gaels scored off a rebound from a shot by Usha Kakaria.

The Gaels then returned to Kingston for a mid-afternoon game of Saturday against McGill. Playing just up the hill from our big yellow guys, the team was inspired by the proximity of the Queen's fans and hands on the field below. Indeed, the Gaels fiercely battled both against McGill and frustrating umpiring to finish with a scoreless tie.

Although disappointed by the tie, the team was happy to have still picked up a point from the game, due in part to the many excellent saves by goalie Jen Purdy.

With the game against McGill, the team entered into the second half of their season with the respectable record of four wins, four losses and one tie.

Continuing a Queen's field hockey tradition, the team played another game later the same afternoon against alumni players. Although the young team fought valiantly, wisdom and many years of experience ultimately prevailed, as the alumni won the game 3-1.

Earlier in the season, the Ravens were roasted. Marka Glickman

Thomas, McDowell can't beat Jays without help

BY GEOFF OWEN
The Queen's Journal

Chicago's Frank Thomas was the most valuable player in the American League in 1993. No question. He may have been the most valuable player in baseball. Barry Bonds had a great year but his team didn't win a thing, except 103 games. Thomas' stats (.317, 41 HR, 128 RBI) illustrate his thorough domination of opposing pitchers.

In spite of all his success, he is only one player on a team that managed to win their division. The Chicago fans and media would have you believe that Thomas will single-handedly cancel out the offensive production of the Blue Jays' Roberto Alomar, Joe Carter, Paul Molitor and John Olerud.

Undoubtedly, for the Sox to have a chance to win the American League pennant, Thomas will have to maintain his high level of play. In the first game of the series he reached base four times proving he is up to the challenge. But one player does not a team make. Thomas' supporting cast will have to step up.

Look for leftfielder Tim Lincecum to be one of these players. Raines has had a hall of fame type career; in baseball history, only three players have stolen more bases than Raines. He is a seven time all-star who has only played in the postseason once. Like the Jays' Molitor, Raines is especially hungry as the end of his career is creeping up on him and he does not have a championship ring to go along with his individual achievements.

Support may also come from two underrated, or at least unappreciated, veterans who are tend to be forgotten but consistently get the job done. Rightfielder Ellis Burks and third baseman Robin Ventura had solid seasons at the plate and have proven in the past that they are capable of dominating a game. Burks was once one of the most dominant outfielders in the American League a few seasons back when he patrolled centre field for the Boston Red Sox. Plagued by injuries ever since, this season served as a re-emergence for Burks as he hit .275 and drove in 74 runs. Ventura,

Please see JAYS—page 18

Cards of Distinction

Queen's Student Special
7 Months Special
for only $229.00

xxbnxx
SUPERIOR NAUTILUS
Aerobics, Nautilus, Free Weights, Cardio,
featuring... Star Trac 2000 Treadmills,
The Step, The Slide, StairMaster,
Windracer, Concept II Rowers

Where your name means something
80 Princess St. 544-6222
Inquire about our Queen's Alumni Club

City Sports

298 PRINCESS STREET (at Clergy), KINGSTON, ONT. Phone 542-4415

RACQUET & RUNNING SPECIALISTS

NEW ARRIVALS OF SHOES NIKE, ASICS HI TECH, ADIDAS, RYKA, CONVERSE	QUEEN'S HATS FROM $14.99
EXERCISE EQUIPMENT	Graphite squash rackets reg. to $119.99 SALE from $49.99
WORKOUT CLOTHING	STUDENT CARD & GOLD CARD HONOURED HERE

TEAMS ○ FLOORS ○ CLUBS ○ FACULTIES

Jackets ○ T-shirts ○ Rugby Jerseys ○ Golf Shirts ○ Sweats

Baseball/Football/Hockey Jerseys ○ Custom Cresting at Very Special Prices!

Men's soccer team travels to Toronto

BY DAN MCNAIR
The Queen's Journal

A well rested, emotionally charged Queen's men's soccer team strolled into Toronto's Birchmount stadium on Saturday, to face a skillful and unpredictable Ryerson soccer team. The Golden Gaels were afforded a full week's preparation that was designed to introduce some new offensive weapons into the teams existing arsenal.

The new system would complement the Queen's disciplined passing style of soccer by utilizing more accurate long balls that would bypass the teams midfield and involve the Gaels' forwards more often, producing a multi-faceted and well balanced offense. The Ryerson soccer team has been considered unpredictable because of the unexpected results they have recorded against other teams. There have been instances in which Ryerson was defeated by teams they were expected to beat, and then they have performed admirably against teams when the expected result was failure. While a win against Queen's wouldn't exactly be considered a giant killing, it would go a long way towards deflating the Gaels' hope of a playoff berth.

The Queen's Golden Gaels controlled the majority of the game, some well structured build ups, combined with a mixture of precise long balls, provided a number of opportunities in front of the Ryerson net. All, however, were squandered. This calls into question the overall effectiveness of the Queen's forwards and midfielders, granted, some of the Gaels' shots on net were saved expertly by Ryerson's OUA All Star keeper.

Still, the questions of doubt linger. Queen's new offensive system certainly provided more scoring occasions in front of the net, but for some unforeseen reasons each sortie to goal never reached its conclusion. The Gaels' lack of scoring prowess on the day was never more evident when a foul inside the Ryerson penalty box provided occasion for the go ahead goal.

An erroneously taken penalty by captain Marc Labrom failed to put Queen's ahead. This proved to be the turning point of the game, as the Gaels concentration began to waiver and Ryerson was allowed to score 2 weak goals. A late effort allowed defender Rick Boomgard to score and bring the teams closer, but it was simply all in vain, as the final whistle sounded, giving Ryerson an undeserved 2-1 win.

The following day the team travelled to York to meet the Yeomen and to answer some troubling questions concerning focus and desire. The pre-game speech by Coach Dr. John Walker was succinct. Simply put, it called for unwavering concentration, a display of desire, and above all, that the Queen's Golden Gaels perform indomitably. With the knowledge that the game against York was essential to Queen's' livelihood, the team was mercurial in its quest for redemption for the previous day's embarrassing loss.

A cold and very brisk wind provided an obstacle for both teams to overcome, as it makes high balls both unpredictable and difficult to control. However, it was the Queen's players' contention that nothing could besmirch their pursuit of a much needed win over York.

A lack-lustre York offense which provided very few threats to the Queen's defence (the only danger worthy of mention), was quickly distinguished when keeper Liam Stevenson pulled off a surprise save. Queen's performed with great voracity and fortitude, despite horrendous performance by the tending officials. Their efforts were soon rewarded when the Yeomen keeper failed to negotiate a powerful shot by Dan Cheney, and Pasa Milonas punched home the resulting rebound, 1-0 Queen's.

The only stain on the Queen's performance was a debatable record awarded to Jonathan Soller for what did not appear to be a punishable infraction. Regardless, Queen's returned to Kingston with their play-off hopes still alive.

WE ACCEPT MOST OTHER STORE'S DISCOUNT COUPONS

SAVE $20.00 THE NIKE "AIR CROSSTRAINER" NOW ONLY: $69.99

SOX SOLID WHITE KNEE HIGH TUBE SOCKS 3 PAIR NOW ONLY: $6.99

"ELIMINATOR" SQUASH RACQUET Specially Designed by The "Source" Exceptional Value! NOW ONLY: $39.99

MULTI-PURPOSE RUCANOR SMASH KNEE PAD Rucanor NOW ONLY: $19.99

SALE NOW $8.99

THE FAMOUS DON JACKSON "CONTI-CRACK" SUPERIOR FIGURE SKATE NOW $89.99

SALE $199.99

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON SOURCE FOR SPORTS

121 PRINCESS ST., KINGSTON S6Z-2B92

Blue Jays

Continued from page 17

who bats clean up, is very rarely mentioned among the elite fourth place hitters in the game but he belted 22 homeruns and collected 94 RBIs.

Both Burks and Ventura, however, can play defensive baseball with the best of them. Ventura will likely win the gold glove at third base. While Burks, who is naturally a centrefielder, has used his speed to get to balls that most rightfielders would not be able to.

It is Chicago's pitching, not their offense, however, that will win or lose the series for them. Like Thomas Jack McDowell has received much of the media attention because of his league high 22 wins. But unlike Thomas, McDowell did not come through for his team in Game 1. He gave up a 17 Toronto runs in 6 2/3 innings. The reality of the situation is that McDowell has never got the job done against Toronto.

McDowell is now 3-8 lifetime against the Eastern Division champions with an ERA over 6.0. The other starters, Alex Fernandez, Wilson Alvarez and Jason Bere, now have the pressure squarely on their shoulders. They average 23 years of age which may hurt them as they find their team returning to Toronto without losses, McDowell being responsible for the second.

Led by Fernandez, the Sox are extremely talented. Fernandez is a lefthander who was 3-1 with a 1.72 ERA against the Jays this season. He is, many scouts believe, the best pitcher on the White Sox starting staff.

Bere, a rookie phenom, who did not arrive until later in the season, won 12 games and has yet to face the Blue Jays. This is an advantage that certainly favours Bere. He is slated to pitch game 4 which is often thought of as the key game of the series as it will likely be one team up 3 games to one or even at 2.

The White Sox are more than capable of winning the ALCS but they are in a deep hole after losing Game 1. McDowell is duplicating Jack Morris's 1992 regular season success and post-season failure almost perfectly. Thomas continues to role along at his MVP pace.

Baseball is a team sport played by individuals and it is time for the other individuals on the White Sox to get it going elsewhere Atlanta or Philadelphia will be flying into Toronto later next week.

They're Mean & Nasty

BY JENN LIVINGS
The Queen's Journal

If you haven't heard, the Women's Rugby Team is off to a great start. This year, the team is organised, competing and is no longer considered a 'club'.

There are nine universities involved in the '93 season: Mac, Western, Guelph, York & U of T from the West division, and in the East, Queen's, Concordia, Trent & Carleton. Hopefully by next year Women's Rugby will be given a varsity team status by the OWIAA.

At Queen's, the enthusiasm and interest is so high that there are two teams with fifty members!

The firsts destroyed Trent two weeks ago in a huge 74-0 victory. Last Saturday they played Concordia, a dominating force in the league, Queen's lost 15-0 but without a fight. The seconds played Concordia on Sunday and although they lost 15-5, they played considerably well.

Queen's is away for their next game at Trent but will be back to Kingston Oct 23-4 to host the Queen's Invitational tournament so come out and show your support.

The team would like to thank Dr. Girdy's for hosting "Rook Night", everyone had a smashing time!

Midterms!

Be afraid, be very afraid...

It's that wonderful time of year again! Fear not for the Campus Bookstore has the solution to all your problems (academic problems at least). From flashcards to interactive tutorial software, the Bookstore has the material that might give you an edge. Use our study aids when the assignments just don't make any sense.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc. and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community.

study help

Clark Hall
Weekdays 9 to 5
Saturday 10 to 4

Entertainment

Don't see this for Love or Money

For Love or Money
Directed by Barry Sonnenfeld
Cataract Cineplex
BY TARA LYNN KEATS
The Queen's Journal

Alex P. Keaton lives! It's true! First he was spotted disguised as a sloppy time-travelling teenager in Back to the Future (all three parts), later he obtained a medical degree in Doc Hollywood, this summer he peddled kiddie talent in Life With Mikey and now Alex P. Keaton resurfaces in For Love or Money!

This new instalment is a romantic comedy set in the materialist mecca of upscale and uptowned New York, where money talks and pooper scoopers pick up whatever walks. This is the realm in which Douglas Ireland, played only as Michael J. Fox can, reigns supreme. Doug wheels and deals about town, buying expensive jewellery, getting orchestra tickets for the hottest shows in town, and securing tables at the most exclusive restaurants. Alas, poor Doug is not too cool to be a concierge - er, concierge - all of whose efforts serve the whims of the wealthy guests staying at the Bradbury Hotel. Doug, however, doesn't plan on wearing a brass nametag for the rest of his life. He puts his hundred dollar tips towards the construction of his dream, his very own luxury hotel. He just needs another three million dollars.

In comes Christian Hanover, a filthy rich English investor played by Anthony Higgins, who agrees to check out the prospectus for Doug's hotel in return for Doug's service as a babysitter for Hanover's mistress, a perfume counter girl named Andy, played by Gabrielle Anwar (the tango-girl from Scent of Women). The tidy business deal starts to unravel, however, when Doug falls in love with Andy and must decide between following his heart or his dream of big money.

The story begins on a somewhat Faustian note, as Doug sells his soul to money, forsaking his integrity and his dignity. However, it reads more like a Pretty Women "Lite" (if that's possible), where the poor use the rich, the rich use the poor, and somewhere in between someone falls in love. With Michael J. Fox as the lead, the story is kept very clean, no steamy sex scenes and no foul language (it's part of the Alex P. Keaton clause in the contract).

Michael J. Fox will forever be pigeon-holed into playing cute money-lovers trying to take the elevator on the ladder of success. Doug Ireland is really another reincarnation of Alex P. Keaton (as was his character in The Secret of My Success), just a little older and more cynical-perhaps due to the

Who says chivalry is dead?

Life With Mikey experience. It's hard to say whether Fox's ability to escape the character he created on the TV sitcom Family Ties is the result of the hesitance of producers to let him deviate from a formula they think works, or whether it is purely unintentional, and merely the result of Fox's limited talent. I can tell you though that I kept expecting Doug the concierge to suddenly slap his forehead and whine "Matory!"

Gabrielle Anwar reprises her role in Scent of a Woman by playing another lissome woman in a slinky dress. Her character is bubbly and infectious sweet, but pretty dumb. (Did she really believe that her married lover was really going to get a divorce?)

This is a very light film, full of funny one-liners and silly antics (like Doug jumping over tables at an exclusive dinner party to prevent Andy from making a scene in front of Hanover's wife). While it touches upon the morality of the power that money can (and can't) buy, it's Hollywood fluff that you'll forget you saw in a few weeks' time. If you want to relive your eighth-grade Michael J. Fox crush, then see this movie, it's vintage Alex P. Keaton.

Old Rovers: no new tricks here

BY BROCK MARTLAND
The Queen's Journal

The woman sitting beside me had a point. "I don't know why they're not cool for young people," she said. "It's such good music. But it sure is hokey!"

It's probably impossible to separate the presentation from the music at a live show. The Irish Rovers' music was fine, if predictable, but the presentation! The goofy sight-gags, the drawn-out jokes ending in one-liners, the Abbott and Costello routine, the endless prompting to sing, or clap, along - I felt like a grade-schooler.

But apparently I was in the minority. The band pretty much filled the Grand Theatre, with a 60+ crowd who were eager to sing and clap along. People seemed stunned that I was scribbling notes on the band, rather than joyously participating in the event.

Introduced as "the rollicking men of mirth and melody," the boys, who have been together for an astonishing 29 years, came onstage to "lift the spirits." They en-

But wasn't that a party

terained with songs from their latest album, The Boys Come Rolling Home, besides the old standards. They were strong on numbers such as "The Shadow of O'Casey", a more serious song featuring banjo playing and drums which nicely broke up the "blockiness" of the sound. And my favourite of traditional Irish tunes, "The Star of the County Down", which melded the tin flute with the accordion, while, unfortunately, drowning out the guitar.

"The Unicorn" was hugely popular with the crowd, but seemed to me to exemplify the predictability of the band. I had the impression that the lads were going through the tried-and-true formula once again.

This became more evident with the band's encore tune, "Wasn't That a Party". I suppose this has been their last song for years. But obviously this is for a good reason - the crowd went wild!

Everyone was clapping and singing furiously, and a few people got up to dance in the aisle. There was a bizarre couple who seemed to be doing Zeppelin-esque head-shaking just in front of me.

Musically, the band was quite enjoyable. They played, at various points, guitar, tin flute, accordion, banjo, bass, drums, harmonica, mandolin, and various stringed instruments. And their playing was impressively tight.

Their music is exactly what one expects of "Irish folk music." This can mean two things. On the one hand, they played the old favourites, and didn't recklessly surprise their faithful audience with anything too different. But on the other hand, the music was predictable - all the old favourites were played, as expected, and no new territory was covered.

The music suffered somewhat from a lousy mix. The bass overwhelmed while the guitar was buried. (Perhaps this is a guitar player's bias, but rarely could the tasteful guitar work be heard clearly.) And the vocals merged into one too often.

The show got really exciting, for me, when a bird somehow managed to fly into the theatre. I had visions of a great story developing.

But the bird managed to make it out quickly.

Bistro's a delight

Bistro Delight
308 Bagot Street
BY LEE PETRIE
The Queen's Journal

A few steps off the beaten track (that's Princess Street) is a delightfully unpretentious restaurant that aims to serve healthy versions of classic delicatessen food. Bistro Delight's location on Bagot between Princess and Montreal and its unassuming storefront prevent it from being an immediate eye-catcher, but it is worth a visit.

Breakfast at Bistro Delight begins at 7 a.m. and features egg, toast, and meat combinations, including eggs Benedict. On Monday and Tuesday, the restaurant closes at 6 p.m., but stays open until 9 from Wednesday to Saturday and serves dinners such as schnitzel and chicken Cordon Bleu.

The most comprehensive menu is available at lunch. A wide range of sandwiches are offered, including the ever-popular Montreal smoked meat which was generously piled with flavourful meat and garnished with a pickle. My pickle-connoisseur dining companion praised the flavour of the pickle but noted that it lacked a really satisfying crunch. Meat lovers also have a choice of other traditional deli fare like ham, roast beef, or Reuben sandwiches. For those whose taste buds aren't tantalized by a side of beef, a turkey or tuna sandwich with lettuce and tomato may be more appealing. The House Spread sandwich is a good choice for vegetarians: it is a flavourful mixture of cream cheese, sour cream, yogurt, chopped egg, pickle, onion, and spices.

All of the sandwiches are served on thick slices of light rye bread that is baked on the premises. The owners of the deli obviously understand that a good sandwich requires good bread. And this bread is good. It is robust, with a crunchy crust and substantial texture and, happily, you can buy a loaf to take home.

A good value is the sandwich and salad special: the chicken salad didn't skimp on the chicken and it is spiced with a lively shot of curry. The accompanying garden salad was not the typical iceberg lettuce with one piece of cucumber and one piece of tomato affair. The bowl was made to order and piled high with leaf lettuce, broccoli, green peppers, sprouts, mushrooms, onions, and radichio. The salad was tossed with Bistro Delight's own creamy dill dressing, and although it has considerably more personality

Please see Bistro pg.21

Attention all '97
Arts & Science students!

Year Society Elections
- October 13, 14 -

Open Forum: Oct. 12 at 9:00pm
Upper Vic
Polls will be open to all '97s for one hour following the meeting.

PUBLIC LECTURE
*Industrial Relations Centre/
School of Industrial Relations*
1993 Don Wood Lecture

Lee Dyer
Professor of Human Resource Management and Director, Center for Advanced Human Resource Studies,
Cornell University

Human Resources as a Source of Competitive Advantage

Thursday, 14 October 1993, 4pm
Conference Room, Policy Studies Building
(Union at Alfred Street)

BULLETIN

On Sept. 10/93, the Journal's
Food Critic claimed that Jj's was
"the most under rated off-campus restaurant!"

"Well, our 200+ regulars know the secret..."

Cool Environment + Great Food + Frugal Prices = SUCCESS!

* Catch the Blue Jays at Jj's *

409 Johnson Street at University Tele #: 547-3771

AMEY'S
TAXI
546-1111

NO THRILL ON CYPRESS HILL

Cypress Hill
Black Sunday
BY BEN JONES
The Queen's Journal

Rap music runs in trends - what constitutes a "phat" track one year is often merely passable or completely "wack" in the next. Consequently, successful rap artists must constantly update and rework their product to avoid falling behind the pack.

Cypress Hill's self-titled debut album, released in 1991, offered the hip hop enthusiast hard hitting beats, piercing whines and sirens, crisp samples, and the competent lyrical skills of rappers Sen Dog and B-Real. Black Sunday, the group's second disc, offers more of the same, albeit in a more polished format.

As on Cypress Hill's debut album, the most prominent themes in Black Sunday pertain to smoking "bud" (cannabis, marijuana, hemp, dope or whatever else you want to call it) and the alleged violent tendencies of rappers Sen Dog and B-Real. At times the two themes even merge, as when Sen Dog wams in "Cock the Hammer": I'll roll you up/And smoke you like cones! Split the seed/And grow you like cones.

Political statements are kept to a minimum. The only jab at government is found on the first track, "I Wanna Get High", where B-Real eagerly explains, Tell Bill Clinton to go and inhale. For the most part, Sen Dog and B-Real seem content to boast of their prowess with firearms and extol the many virtues of cannabis - the latter of which is the main political statement of the album.

Cypress Hill is clearly on a mission to kick what they feel to be the real facts about hemp. Again in "I Wanna Get High", B-Real asks: What's the commotion? I'm not joking around! People learning 'bout what they are smoking. This is an understatement. The album liner notes are a dope fact-book in which the following is typical of the nineteen points listed: "More than 400 000 Americans die from diseases related to cigarette smoking each year. More than 150 000 Americans die of alcohol abuse each year. But in 10 000 years of usage, no one has ever died from marijuana."

Unfortunately, the Hill's infatuation with "the phunky feel one" damages the potential of the album. After listening to fourteen straight songs about cannabis, I can't help but get tired of the subject. The overbearing style of DJ Muggs doesn't help much in this respect either. As skilled as Muggs is, he has a tendency of including the same sounds in each song he produces. Moreover, his work with House of Pain ("Jump Around") and Ice Cube ("Wicked, Now I Gotta Wet 'Cha") has undermined what was once an exclusively Cypress sound; what was a revolutionary style in 1991 has become another fading trend in 1993.

Despite my obvious disappointment at the lack of new material on Black Sunday, I must still concede that it is a good disc. "When the Shit Goes Down", "Cock the Hammer", and "Lil' Potos" are some of the best examples of their genre in hip hop; "I Wanna Get High" and "Hits From the Bong" are good for a laugh; "Insane in the Brain" will keep you jumping at Alfie's (even if it does sound suspiciously like "Jump Around").

Finally, those who own the Hill's debut album might also be interested in checking out "Hand on the Glock" which is basically a reworked version of "Hand on the Pump" (I prefer the original).

Black Sunday is a solid album, but I hesitate at recommending it over other, more original releases of 1993. So do yourself a favour and check out some releases by The Phareye, Lords of the Underground, or Diamond for now, and pick up Black Sunday for cheap on Boxing Day.

We have something for all your special occasions

Come in and visit us first!

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
255 PRINCESS STREET

CAREER GIRL

542-2026 SPECIAL OCCASIONS & TUXEDO TOWN

HOURS

MON-THURS-FRI-SAT 10:00 TO 9:00
WED-THURS 10:00 TO 8:00

Sidemen step to the forefront

The Sidemen
Alfie's
BY SARAH ENGLISH
The Queen's Journal

Blues music is depressing. Blues music brings you down. Blues music makes you want to cry. Then why was Wednesday night at Alfie's such a soothing experience?

When the band began rolling into their set, I sat dismayed. This was a blues band, no doubt, and I know next to nothing about this genre. Within a few minutes, however, I began to relax as the music took on a familiar, comfortable feel. Although most of the fair-sized audience had probably never heard Sidemen material before, their attention was immediately snatched and held in close guard.

The Sidemen switched expertly from their easy tempo mellow tunes to their slower, moodier tunes, which more closely fit my interpretation of "the blues." The guitarist's skills were especially highlighted during some of the more upbeat songs, and his devotion to the music was evident. With his eyes closed and head swaying slightly back and forth, it was obvious that his love for the music was his "raison d'être".

This same respect for the sound was shown by all the members; the vocalist indulging in knee-slapping and sporadic hand clapping (which, incidentally, never quite seemed to match any beat of the song) while the youngish looking bass player smiled slightly for most of the show.

Steadily gaining respect from the Alfie's audience, the Sidemen continued on with tunes that readily gave away many of their influences, including Johnny Winter and Freddy King. While retaining the characteristics of standard blues, they managed to add various music bites which made their style their own. On several songs, the bass lines had a funky groove and one or two songs had me thinking along the zydeco lines, reminiscent of Ry Cooder. No matter what the style, the drumming was incredibly precise and in control.

The band is notorious for their interest in audience participation, and it was nice to see this Alfie's show was no exception. An enthusiastic fan who had been dancing from the beginning was rewarded when the band broke into a unique version of "Happy Birthday" dedicated to him. I hope it was his birthday.

After about an hour, the band took a break and I was impressed to notice that the crowd had swelled considerably. By the time the second set began, the combination of beer and fun music was enough to get a dance-floor's worth of people up and moving.

Singing the Blues at Alfie's
Tricia Bauman

One of the highlights of the second set was their rendition of "Champagne and Reefer", a Muddy Waters original. The song was perfectly rendered: pauses and inclinations expertly timed. As it wound up, I noticed a blues expert friend grinning from ear to ear and giving a huge thumbs-up.

Two years ago on homecoming weekend, the Sidemen stole the show when they opened for rockers Bootsauce. If Wednesday's performance was indicative of their standard show, it is no wonder, and no doubt they will continue to impress in shows to come.

A Bronx Cheer for De Niro's Directing Debut

A Bronx Tale
Directed by Robert De Niro
Catalaqui Cineplex
BY CHRISTOPHER ZABEL
The Queen's Journal

Imagining Robert De Niro as a director conjures up strange visions. Even if you add a little pony tail and a flannel shirt, you've still got the guy who tried to use his fingers to plug up the bullet hole in his friend's head at the end of The Deer Hunter, the guy who scaled a cliff with the weight of imperialist Spain strapped to his back in The Mission, and the guy who did enough strange things in Taxi Driver to inspire a host of incongruous associations (not to mention nightmares).

Granted, De Niro has been acting up lately. It seems that one rarely browses the new releases shelf without coming across his face on yet another box. Also, the Tribeca TV series he produced seemed like an odd thing to do. With all of this in mind, my speculations on De Niro's directorial debut oscillated between two poles: something bitter, dry and pithy, or something that would scare off even Quentin Tarantino (of Reservoir Dogs fame).

But, in spite of the obligatory worries connected with stars attempting something they may not be qualified to do (Don Johnson's music career comes to mind), A Bronx Tale is a thoughtful and often humorous surprise. Perhaps this really isn't a surprise; no doubt

De Niro learned a few things about direction as an actor for the likes of Scorsese (five films), Coppola, and Cimino.

De Niro didn't forget to add the violence, but his real interest here is morality and the establishment of a young man's values. To this end, De Niro is graceful behind the camera and turns your basic "kid growing up in a quirky environment" scenario into something not to be missed.

The story is set in the Italian sector of the Bronx where nine year-old Calogero Anello spends his days sitting on his stoop, discussing the Yankees, and idolizing the neighbourhood gangsters that his hard-working bus driver father (De Niro) warns him to avoid (this qualifies as idyllic in the Bronx).

One day, while pursuing this lifestyle, he witnesses the head gangster, Sonny (Chazz Palminteri, who also wrote the screenplay, based on his play), shoot a man in the middle of the street, apparently over a parking space. When Calogero refuses to rat to the cops (I'm allowed to use this lingo - it's the Bronx), Sonny adopts him as the son he never had, and christens him "C" (I only mention this detail so I can stop writing out the long version). Thus begins C's education in the ways of the street; we then skip ahead eight years to a period when his "torn between two fathers" syndrome is full-blown. C has to decide whether or not the working man is a sucker and choose between the real father he needs and the adopted father he wants.

What makes this movie great is not the simple blurring of who the bad guy is, but rather the eloquence with which this is done. Scenes that have been done to death in The Wonder Years emerge striking and fresh. The film's conclusion - although the earnest honesty of bus driving survives, the excitement and vitality of gangsterhood is requisite to a well-rounded development - even has the ring of an original idea.

This movie might have been brilliant if it didn't lean on the crutch of gangster culture. Do interesting gangsters really exist, or has the fiction merely been repeated so many times that everyone thinks that they do? Although bad guys are fun to watch, one never leaves the theatre with the impression that something relevant has happened. Might yet another glimpse into the world of Italian crooks have been better spent on an ethnic minority that would benefit from representation? Is there a reason for my implicit assumption that it is important for everyone to have a thorough understanding of New York and criminals? I don't mean that this movie should have been about Swedish plumbers in Baltimore (think of it as Bergman meets Levinson) but the gangster thing has been done to death.

A Bronx Tale also veers into a Romeo and Juliet style sub-plot between the Italians and the neigh-

Please see De Niro pg. 24

Bistro lives up to name

Continued from pg. 19

than Thousand Island or Ranch, it is rather sweet and could benefit from a tangy element.

The hot lunch menu features three specialties: schnitzel, chili (Bistro Delight's chili was a runner-up in the recent Chili Fest), and potato pancakes. The latter are certainly not a healthy choice but these crispy fried pancakes topped with either sour cream or sauerkraut are a traditional northern and eastern European favourite. The bistro's version is appealingly spiced and contained an unexpected but tasty hint of rye.

Two soups are offered daily and vegetarians will be pleased to note that their vegetable soup is just that: no chicken or beef stock is used to produce the rich flavour which is far superior to the bland, watery broth that passes as soup elsewhere.

What's a meal without dessert?

Not much if you ask me. Bistro Delight's choices are limited: apple strudel and carrot cake were the only real desserts in evidence. The carrot scores highly; no nuts, a smooth cream cheese filling that strikes the right balance between the sweet and glaze elements, and a simple sugar glaze that prevents frosting overdose.

Bistro Delight's eastern European origins are revealed throughout the menu, especially in the hot menu choices and in the selections available from their catering service, but sandwich and salad enthusiasts won't be disappointed - the ingredients are fresh and the choices are varied, particularly for those whose diets include meat.

The staff is friendly and are happy to tell the customers exactly what ingredients are used in the various home-made dressings, spreads, and soups. This, combined with the reasonable prices, suggests that Bistro Delight's future is bright.

QUEEN'S SKYDIVING CLUB

The First Jump Class is Thursday,
October 14th,
from 7:00 to 9:30pm
in M-C D214

Our first jump is set for October 16. The price will be $150 to $180 CASH, depending on group size.

CONTACT 549-6264 FOR MORE INFORMATION.

With winter
coming on,
we want to give you something to think about!

Personal, quality service. Our endorsement of superior equipment. Value for your energy dollar. Our continued reputation as Kingston's oil specialists.

5 Catalaqui Street
Kingston
546-4242

We take your home comfort... personally!

Audience With The Mind Polygram House of Love

Audience With The Mind or Audience For The Mind, as it's called in the U.K. is the fourth official House of Love album. With only a year between releases and plans to go back into the studio, the band isn't like some other British bands who take oh... four years and counting to put out an album. Sorry a B-sides collection doesn't count. The HOL are now a three-piece band with Guy Chadwick now handling all the guitar work, Chris Groothuizen on bass and Pete Evans on drums.

As far as the songs go, the musical styles differ from stripped-down acoustic guitar, to the "shoe-gazers" sound which has grabbed so many British bands these days that it is hard to tell them apart. However, the combination of the two styles gives the album a different feel and the HOL pull it off without pigeon-holing themselves as folkies or shoegazers. Lyrically, the angry and melancholy HOL have always written good songs, following in the tradition of one of their influences: Leonard Cohen.

The standout track from the album is "Hollow", penned by Chris Groothuizen. The song is about reflections on, and having to deal with person after a bad romantic relationship. Groothuizen hides nothing back in the lyrics and gets his point across: 'I'm over you now! Don't know.../Miss you? Did I really kiss you?/Your so hollow?' The other track which specifically caught my attention was "Into the Tunnel", with its 7:10 of blistering electrical guitars and the angry ringing chrous of: 'But this is not for love! This is nothing more than killing time. The song really hits home. Other tracks worth mentioning are the acoustic title track and what is soon to become HOL's anthem: "Shining On."

The problems with the album is that it, like so much other music today, it is overproduced. As far as the rest of the album goes, not much else will jump out you. "Portrait in Atlanta" (which by the way is an awful title for a song) is simply boring, as is "Corridors", with its repetitive guitar riff. A band can only get by on its lyric writing for so long, but eventually the music catches up to you and that's when you crash. If you are a fan of the HOL you'll probably love the album, but on the whole, besides the tracks mentioned, the album is quite average.

B- Christian deBrujin

The Jesus and Mary Chain The Sound of Speed Blanco Y Negro/Warner

Ah, the Mary Chain! You can always depend on Scotland's Reid brothers to put out a quality release with at least three songs that have bass lines so familiar you'd swear you have heard them before. This album follows their pattern (Rush-like that it is) of releasing two studio albums and then a B-sides/rarities disc. This B-side collection, unlike its predecessor Barbed Wire Kisses is a fairly even work, with loads of incredible songs.

The disc kicks off with three supercharged anthems, the first, "Snake-driver", is a brand new song, and the first single. It is the Mary Chain at their feedback guitar best. The "Reverence (Radio Mix)" is next, and is a must for any fan. If you haven't heard this version, it's worth buying the album for this song alone; it is haunting, blissful and redemptive, all at once. Next up is an acoustic set featuring the beautiful "Teenage Lust (Acoustic Version)", "Why'd You Want Me", and "Don't Come Down". The first is an impassioned version of the song off of Honey's Dead, and the second could well be my favourite Mary Chain song (even though it appeared in Encino Man).

A number of brilliant covers also appear on this disc including Elvis Presley's "Guitarman", Leonard Cohen's "Tower of Song", Willie Dixon's "Little Red Rooster", and Macaulay Culkin's "My Girl" (arf! arf!). While all the covers are great in their divergence and celebration of the originals, the latter two shine, especially the stripped down acoustic feel of "My Girl", which is simply amazing.

In many ways this disc is proof of the evolution and the desire for change of the Reid brothers. Not content to release homogenous works, the Mary Chain have been able to produce four unique sounding albums, all immediately recognizable as their work.

And, happily, there are songs characteristic of each album here, from the Psychocandy-ish "Shimmer", to the Darklands-like "Don't Come Down", from the Automatic era "Penetration", to the newer songs reminiscent of Honey's Dead. In some ways then, this disc is a greatest hits, without all the hits, a box set without the box.

All in all, this album is one of those rare combinations, a collection of songs that were not originally intended to go together, but do so beautifully. One of the best aspects of the disc is the ordering of the songs—sometimes groups of acoustic songs, sometimes clusters of covers—they always seem to flow together as if they were meant to be heard this way. Besides being a great album, it is also a great value, clocking in at over 70 minutes, and it is a nice way to tie fans over until the release of the much rumoured (working with Bob Dylan!) acoustic album expected next spring.

A- Denny Silverthorne

Andrew Cash HI MCA

Plenty o' people have hailed this new release as a welcome return to form for the veteran Queen St. singer-songwriter, which harkens back to the days of his post-punk band L'etranger. Reportedly, Andrew Cash is once again angry and electrified (his guitar and otherwise).

Although Hi is an enjoyable enough album, with its own je ne sais quoi after a few listenings, what is striking is the continuity between it and Cash's previous solo releases. Sure, Cash is now on the management roster of Allan Gregg and Jake Gold (the braintrust behind the rise of The

Judgment Day Soundtrack Various Artists Sony Music

Rock and rap have flirted before: Public Enemy and Anthrax did a nasty version of "Bring the Noise" a few years ago, then there was Ice-T's hard-core experiment with Bodycount, and most recently Onyx's high energy, somewhat moshable hit "Slam." The newest addition to this mixing of genres is found on the soundtrack to the movie Judgment Night, which features the pairings of various rap artists with alternative bands. The result is interesting to say the least.

The eclectic couples include: Cypress Hill and Sonic Youth, House of Pain and Helmet, De La Soul and Teenage Fanclub, Onyx and Biohazard. The most absurd marriage is that of Sir Mix-A-Lot and Mudhoney and their song "Freak Momma." As strange as such a match-making may appear on paper, it works surprisingly well.

The majority of songs on the soundtrack are rough, thrashing products of angry rap and rampaging guitar. Ice-T and Slayer create a particularly monstrous song, "Disorder", which is a package of true musical violence and cacophony complete with reminders of "L.A."

92." After a while, hearing Ice-T and Slayer scream, Chaos, chaos! Don't give a fuck! Disorder, disorder...over and over gets pretty annoying.

However, there is relief from the head-banging. The best songs are more relaxed and grooving: "I Love You Mary Jane" by Cypress Hill and Sonic Youth, "Missing Link" by Del the Funky Homosapien and Dino-saur Jr., and "Fallin'" by De La Soul and Teenage Fanclub are all great examples of how rap and alternative bands can use contrasting styles to complement each other.

Although Judgment Night may be some people's worst nightmare, it's good to see such musical experimentation. I never understood the invisible boundaries of bias that separate the various genres of music from each other. Believe it or not, I like Sonic Youth just as much as I like Cypress Hill, and hearing the two fuse together is a welcomed treat.

B+ Stan Beddoe-Stephens

A RIOT THERE'S GOIN'

Meryn Cadell Bombazine Sire/Reprise

In the background of the Bombazine album cover, there seems to be a tangle of coloured smoke, but if you look closely, you realize that it's just a photographic trick: the smoke is Meryn Cadell in motion.

Cadell has never been easy to pin down. Although her first album, Angel Food for Thought, produced the "but-it's-so-true" hit "The Sweater", it also held bitter poems like "Clothes", and frail, beautiful songs like "Confide." Bombazine is no less varied. Cadell's playfulness is still here in songs like "Janet Clark", which begins: 'the glow around your face as you robbed the bank today, made me love you. But Bombazine also moves into realms which could never be funny. Its opening track, "Jonny and Betty", is a brave-face story about bashing.

As with any heterogeneous collection of work, the virtues of Bombazine are spread unevenly. I could have done without "Time o' Lives", a twangy hurrin' song about big city night-clubbing. Nonetheless, Bombazine is a stronger, more mature album than Angel Food. Cadell's humour has become wiser, more personal, and as a result, it is now brushed with regret.

Musically, Cadell's song-poems have bloomed. The hummed chorus to "Window of Opportunity" is catchier than influenza (but more enjoyable). All the same, Cadell is still primarily a poet. Her songs require listeners to pay attention to their words—and they reward those who do.

A- Tim Mitchell

Manic Street Preachers Gold Against The Soul Columbia

The Manic Street Preachers have an undeniable punk attitude. They have progressive political ideas. They appreciate the value of family. They write melodious, catchy pop songs. They have a song on their new album that deals with Tourette's Syndrome. As is probably obvious, they have a lot in common with Nirvana. But whereas Nirvana choose the more respectable alternative guitar medium, the Manics are unabashedly heavy metal riffsters. Does this, and should this, make a difference? The answer is provided by the Manics new album Gold Against The Soul.

Right from the opening riff of "Sleeptower", it's obvious that first-time producer and mixer, 21 year-old Dave Eringa has done a crisp and clear job. The drum and chime (a la Dino-saur Jr.) and ensuing musical break are almost enough to forgive the cheesy chorus and singing, until the reprise reminds us of their shortcomings.

The music and lyrics on the next track, "From Despair to Where", are considerably better, and more representative of the album as a whole. By the time the strings kick in at the end, despite any metal aversion, the listener is guaranteed to be tapping their toes and singing along.

B+ Denny Silverthorne

Altered Beast Matthew Sweet BMG

For awhile it seemed that Matthew Sweet was to remain the "unplucked gem", so to speak, of the Athens music scene—continually turning out quality music with some critical but little financial success. Although he played in bands such as OH-OK as early as 1982, his solo career began with Inside (1986) and was followed by Earth (1989). Although generally considered solid pieces, they failed to capture much of an audience. In fact, companies had so little faith in Sweet's marketability that his last album Girlfriend was rejected by nearly every major label before finding a home on Zoo Entertainment/BMG. The success of Girlfriend (which flirted with Gold status) seemed to prove what critics had always felt about Sweet's music—if people just had the opportunity to hear his music, they would like it.

Ultimately, the success of Girlfriend was due to the fact that Sweet had constructed an irresistible album of pure unadulterated pop. However, on Altered Beast, the Athens journeyman tries to silence the criticism that has plagued him from day one—that his music is in fact too sweet (ouch).

In order to give the album a harder edge, Sweet called upon the talents of three greats from the New York scene—Richard Lloyd (Television), Robert Quine (Lou Reed), and Ivan Julian (the Voidoids). The work of Lloyd and Quine in particular, definitely take Sweet's music in a new direction—the infectious harmonies are still there but they are juxtaposed with swirling dis-sets up the best track on the album by far, "Scream to a Sigh (La Tristesse Durera)." This song, with its candid portrait of old age, is simply brilliant, from the quiet falsetto of the opening verse to the piano and organ driven finale—it makes the album.

Other memorable moments on the album are the poppy "Roses in the Hospital" and the, for lack of a better comparison, I Mother Earth paced "Symphony of Tourette."

The Manic Street Preachers, it should be noted, have a rather unorthodox approach to their art. While Richy and Nicky (rhythm guitar and bass) write all the lyrics, they almost completely avoid participation in the actual recording of the songs, leaving guitarist/lead singer James Dean Bradfield and his drummer cousin Sean Moore to write all the music and play the instruments. The result is that Bradfield is allowed to shine with his intricate and melodious music, the element that truly makes this band.

Gold Against the Soul proves that the Manics have matured immensely since Generation Terrorists, and it is at times a very enjoyable album. For those with a fear of metal music, I must confess that at times I felt like I did when I first heard Guns 'n Roses: both attracted and repelled. Yet some of the songs, especially "Scream to a Sigh" are simply great pop songs, and therefore, any Axl Rose influences can, and should, be forgiven.

torted guitar work. In these songs, the listener is also treated to some pretty harsh lyrics to match the biting guitars, especially in "The Ugly Truth" and most notably in "Knowing People". Your desperate dreams are pathetic! I don't like knowing people! And I don't like people knowing about me.

However, the romantic ballads that played such a large role in the success of Girlfriend have not been forsaken on his latest work. "Life Without You" and "Someone to Pull the Trigger"—songs in which Sweet cuts the fancy guitar and gets down the emotional core, are perhaps the finest moments on the album. Unfortunately (or fortunately depending on your mood) his recent marriage seems to have left his opinions on the subject a little jaded. "On Devil With the Green Eyes" Sweet sings: 'The Devil With the Green Eyes! Said you were never meant to be mine! Cause I came up from a dark world! And every other love I've ever known is dead. Move over Morrissey.

Altered Beast, as the title implies, reveals that Sweet is not merely a happy-go-lucky one-dimensional "pop craftsman"—indeed, he has a darker side. The only problem I have with the album is that at times the angry guitar overdubs of Lloyd and company overpower rather than complement songs—a little less guitar would have created a more balanced sound. Because it is less "pop oriented," Altered Beast won't be the hit that Girlfriend was, but it is a satisfying album that seems to grow on the listener with each play.

B+ Mike Cain

rail t.e.c. Never Coming Down Intrepid/EMI

A couple of weeks ago, I read a piece in The Globe & Mail which berates 13ers for being lackadaisical complainers who refuse to do anything constructive with their lives. To a degree, such criticism is warranted. Nobody likes a whiner.

rail t.e.c., however, successfully debunks such attitudes. As Never Coming Down indicates, rail t.e.c. manage to wholeheartedly embrace the disaffected spirit of Generation X without succumbing to its paralysing nature; they ingeniously turn their self-pity and foreboding pessimism into a marketable consumer product. (And if that isn't being constructive, then I don't know what is.)

Never Coming Down abounds in such paradoxes. The first concerns rail t.e.c.'s musical style. With disillusionment as their overriding theme, one might be tempted to lump rail t.e.c. with outfits like Joy Division and The Smiths. But rail t.e.c. is pure danceteria. (Everyone is p.o.'d these days so it's pointless to say that one musical genre has a monopoly on angst.) For want of better comparison, rail t.e.c. do something analogous to the so-called Manchester bands—they heavily rely on programming to transform their otherwise blase sound into something invigorating. (Incidentally, they thank The Inspirational Carpets in their liner notes.) The discrepancy between the lyrics and the music produce some incongruous situations. Songs like "She So Clean", "Guilt" and "I'm So High" are alluring dance tracks, but the experience becomes perverted when one hears such lyrics as: 'i know you can't explain / and i don't think you really care; guilt not love (touches anyone) / do you feel it?; reaching past reality / i know there is nothing there.

The effect, obviously, is shocking. But the idea of dancing to songs with such depressing lyrics is more than a mindfuck. The experience is a cathartic one. Since dancing is an act of celebration, a sign that everything is alright, then dancing to songs which embody our anxieties and fears becomes an act of dismissing them, a moment of psychological release.

It seems appropriate that rail t.e.c. covers Bow Wow Wow's classic "I Want Candy." Never Coming Down is a kind of a candy for Generation X—it is a delicious product which pacifies whiny children (read 13ers). However, like all candy, the contentment derived therefrom is all too brief. When the sweet experience is over, you start craving for more.

B+ Ryan P. Chen

B Ian Petrie

STREET LIFE

These listings were correct as of Wednesday night. Call the cinemas/clubs to check listings.

MOVIES		CLUBS
CATARAQUI CINEPLEX ODEON THEATRE 824 Northwest Dr. 389-7442	2001: A Space Odyssey Tuesday Sleepless In Seattle 2001: A Space Odyssey Wednesday The Last Days of Chez Nous Thursday Sleepless In Seattle Friday Stepping Razor-Red X The Last Days of Chez Nous Saturday	AJ's HANGAR Friday Saturday Sunday	Chicago Blues: Blue Monday Tuesday The Bottom Dwellers Thursday THE GRAD CLUB Thursday THE DUKE OF KINGSTON Friday The Goudibirds Saturday GALLERIES BEN'S PUB Thursday AGNES ETHERINGTON ART CENTRE Opening Sunday until 12 December Neyo Nehiyaw: Crossfires of Identity Sunday 1:15 to 4:45 Drop In and Draw Open Studio (free materials) Until 21 November The Art of Christiano Plug (1936-1972) Until 31 October Spirit Archives: an installation by Julie Winthrow
CAPITOL THEATRE 223 Princess St. 546-5395	The Program A Thing Called Love True Romance Cool Runnings The Fugitive The Man Without a Face The Firm Undercover Blues	THE CARIBBEAN Thursday April Fool THE TOUCAN Friday Saturday Sunday	THE WELLINGTON Friday Saturday Sunday
PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. 546-FILM	Friday Twist The Music of Chance Saturday Twist The Music of Chance Sunday The Music of Chance Twist Monday Sleepless In Seattle	STAGES Tuesday Riff Raff (Tribute To AC/DC) THE COCAMA Thursday One THE WELLINGTON Friday Saturday Sunday	Gerry O'Kane Gerry O'Kane Kingston Folk Club

BRIGHT EYES

Glowing face. Lively mind.

Give your family and friends a portrait that shows you as you really are — animated, vital and ready for the world.

For the most important photograph of your life, make an appointment now at Sparks Studios, where imaginative, innovative photography captures the unique spirit of the individual in every portrait.

Packages to suit all needs and budgets.

330 Princess Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 1B6.
Phone: (613) 549-6560 Fax: (613) 549-4268

AN OFFICIAL TRICOLOUR PHOTOGRAPHER

De Niro's Slick Debut

Continued from pg 21
ethnic backgrounds can get along (except perhaps Spike Lee), but the actors are too charming and the film too slick for the theme not to be affecting.
For a film that is peopled almost exclusively by unknown and first-time actors, A Bronx Tale is remarkable. De Niro, the only big name in the movie (aside from a surprise cameo — watch the guy in the parking space dispute) gave himself a relatively small part. Although he is, as always, great, what makes this movie something to see is the grace and flow that ties it together.

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS FORUM

Thursday October 14th, 11:00-2 P.M.

Representatives from the following schools will be in Mackintosh-Corry Hall (across from cafeteria) to present information on applying to their programs:

- Chiropractic Medicine
- Speech Pathology
- Library Information Science
- Industrial Relations
- Urban & Regional Planning
- Law
- Journalism
- Theology
- Social Work
- Medicine
- Optometry

answers to questions on admission requirements information on programs offered

FACULTY OF APPLIED SCIENCE
CENTENNIAL LECTURE SERIES

DEPARTMENT OF CIVIL ENGINEERING
Water Management and Hydraulic Generation

by Joan E. Eaton
Manager - Water Resources
Ontario Hydro

October 12, 1993

7:30 p.m.

Dupuis Hall Auditorium

Management of water resources for hydraulic generation purposes will be reviewed. Topics to be addressed will include international and interprovincial agreements and institutions, diversity of interest groups and their concerns, aspects of ice management, interbasin diversion, global warming and Great Lakes water level fluctuations.

CFRC Radio Daze

Please note: Due to unforeseen circumstances, coverage of tomorrow's Golden Gaels Football game against the Carleton Ravens will not be possible. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause.

Special Events this coming week include:
Exclusive interview with Bob Wiseman tomorrow on Careless Memories at 11 am
CFRC Call-In: Have your say! Mon-Thu 10pm
Tue: The future of Surface
Wed: Queen's stories of the weird and strange
Thu: Trivia Night: Inbreds prize packages!
The program guides are ready, grab them at the Infabank. For your assistance here is a sample of some programs:

I Know Cosper: Grunge and garage — Mon at 12 midnight
Melamania: French Music — Tuesday at 8 pm
Pirateknix: rap — Wednesday 12 midnight
Heaven's Door: Folk — Thursday 3 pm
Blues Incorporated: — Friday 6pm

Think you can Handel reviewing classical music? Come to the Journal, join our contributors Liszt and go for Baroque!

Class of 98? sound scary?

The Search is on for the Arts & Science Orientation Committee of 1994

Available Positions: Head Gael Academics, Operations, Socio-Cultural and Treasurer

Applications can be picked up at the ASUS CORE and must be received no later than October 13th at 4:30pm.

Frosh Week is always BEST the next time around!

ASUS

Elections for the following positions will be held October 13th and 14th:

97 Year Society
1st Year ASUS Rep to the AMS
1 Year ASUS Senator

If you are interested in any of the above positions call the ASUS Core at 545-6278 or come to an Open Forum, October 7th, 1993 at 11:30am in the Lower Cellidh of the JDUC.

THE MARKET SALON ACADEMY

offers
50% OFF

Haircuts for men and women. Licensed stylists taking advanced training offer you 50% off regular Market Salon Prices.

	ACADEMY	REGULAR
CUTS	$20	$40
PERMS	$40	$80
HIGHLITE	$40	$80

Please differentiate between Academy and Regular Market Salon Prices

327 King Street E., Kingston. 549-2110

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR THAT SPECIAL MEETING or just a quiet get-away, BLUEROOF FARM offers you a spacious place to celebrate birthdays, anniversaries, or just to enjoy a quiet weekend. Gourmet meals, luxurious accommodations, log fires, good books, and fine films. Friendly Dalmatians and beautiful trails to walk and explore. Transportation can be arranged. Call 374-2147.

WORD PROCESSING: $1.75 per page. Pick up and delivery. Essays, thesis, anything usually

DO YOU HAVE A CHARITABLE CAUSE?

The MCRC is now accepting applications from charities who wish to participate in the SKIP-A-MEAL PROGRAM. For more information call Gillian @ 545-6216. Applications are due by 12pm October 22, 1993.

Graduate Studies in Physiology

OPEN HOUSE

Thursday, October 14, 7:30pm
Abramsky Lab
Botterell 3rd Floor
Meet Faculty and Graduate Students
Tour the Labs
Refreshments Available

24 hr service. Call Jennifer at 634-1151.

UNRAVEL THE MYSTERY of low fat foods, unintelligible labels and nutrient dense buying. Join a SUPERMARKET SAFARI at the Barrie Street A & P store. Free tours begin at 7:30 Wednesday evenings October 13th through November 17th. Call Diane Nolting at 545-6712 to sign up.

FEELING STRESSED? Call the confidential Healthline, a health information service staffed by Peer Health Educators Mon - Thurs 6-9, 545-6000 ext. 4444 or leave a message.

LAW SCHOOL BOUND! Take advantage of Canada's only complete pre-law educational program! Our books, seminars and courses cover all aspects of the process! Participate in our LSAT courses any weekend during the month of November. 1 800 567-PREP(7737).

ARTS & SCIENCE STUDENTS: Feeling the cold this time of year? Never ordered a Queen's leather jacket? Now is your chance. ASUS Jackets has a selection of jackets at DISCOUNT prices. Call 545-6278.

SOAPBERRY SHOP'S latest cosmetic innovation, eye liners made with beeswax to glide on softly and chamomile and lanolin soften the delicate eye area. Don't miss out! 545-1028.

WILL DO TYPING my home $7.00 per hour, $3.00 per page. Call 547-3579 anytime except Monday or Wednesday a.m. Please provide paper.

TAKING RISKS with water-colour at Modern Fuel Gallery Queen Street October 20th - December 8th. $175.00 Call 353-6504.

GUTENTAG, DONKASHEIN UND GESUNDHEIT! Try out your German next Friday, October 15th as Oktoberfest comes to Alfies for the Arts-Sci 95 smoker.

HELP WANTED

ARE YOU STILL LOOKING for a part-time job? How about raising money for your university at the Queen's Telephone? We are still accepting applications, available outside the AMS office or Rm. 303, Old Medical Building.

WANTED

ECONOMICS TEXT: "Money Banking and the Canadian Financial System", 3rd or 4th edition. Needed immediately. Call Robert at 354-0304.

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: Love the scent of Giorgio perfume? Not me. Medium size bottle, hardly used. Call Angela at 545-2617.

FOR SALE: 91 Art/Sci jacket, like new, purchased wrong size, men's 46, $140.00. Order your own year and crest. Call Bill at 544-0983 evenings.

FOR SALE: Foam double bed/couch, 13' x 10' green carpet, 10 place stoneware dish set, space heater, coffee table, rattan blinds, rugs. Phone 546-2113.

FOR SALE: 33 gal. aquarium with glass cover, screen cover and fluorescent reptile light. $50. Omasa brand triple beam balance scale, 2610 gram capacity. Negotiable. Phone 541-0839 evenings.

FOR RENT: One room available January. 5 minutes from campus. $230 per month everything included. Clean, scenic and huge. Call 545-4067.

LOST & FOUND

LOST: October 4th one black ladies watch and several rings. Tremendous sentimental value. If found please contact 547-2625. Reward offered.

LOST: My keys (aka my life!!) On October 4th, a black leather "Golden Gaels" keychain, 8 keys. Huge reward offered. Please call Megan at 546-9183. Thanks!

LOST: Blue and red Gor-Tex jacket from Co-Op in Mac-Corry, September 30th. Please call Lee-Anne at 544-7619.

LOST: Keys lost during Orientation Week on ASUS key chain are my life on a ring. I must have them back - call Mike at 546-7427.

LOST: '96 Artsci jacket at Alfies last Thursday. Please call 547-6756, it's getting cold. Reward offered.

TO WHOEVER: Thanks for returning the keys that were in the pocket of the jacket you took on September 11th, however, would also like the jacket back. Call 531-3213.

LOST: An XL dark green Patagonia shelled jacket, across the hall from the History Department in Watson Hall (2nd Floor), on Wednesday afternoon (September 15th). Writers coming! Please call 547-4106.

FOUND: Queen's jacket Applied Science. By the last week. Please call 547-9911 and ask for Alex.

FOUND: I.D. bracelet in parking lot of John Orr Tower on Saturday October 2nd. Call 531-4901 to identify inscription.

FOUND: Grey sweatshirt. Lost in Dunning, after Tales to Gaels. Call 542-6870.

PERSONALS

DESPERATELY SEEKING HELGA My little fraulein bring your beerstein to toberfest at Alfies, where can - a - polka. Next Friday October 15th at the ArtsSci smoker. Hans

BUSHY, You were right. I was wrong. Go Gaiters Go!! G'ner! -Kate

DESPERATELY SEEKING HELGA My little fraulein bring your beerstein to toberfest at Alfies, where can - a - polka. Next Friday October 15th at the ArtsSci smoker. Hans

CJV: Gobble Gobble... Hoping you, George, Butt, S... others slowly" In a follow-up article the author stated that his intention was to "speak out against [religious violence] and to express solidarity with my queer brothers and sisters - an act of politically correct" heresy, to be sure."

GIRDY: Even though you make up your mind, and leave your beeper at home, still waiting for that fateful when we can share a J. You're a crazy Egyptian and I'm crazy.

WINONA: I lov u, Johnny

BOUNCY BOUNCY

HOW TO MAKE LOVE TO A WHITE BOY:

A LOOK AT QUEEN'S MOST CONTROVERSIAL NEWSPAPER

The hotly debated issue of the ASUS Surface referendum taking place next week is being fought over coffee in the Sidewalk Cafe, in classroom discussions and in the pages of this paper. It is interesting to note that about one-quarter of the eligible voters (Arts & Science frosh) have seen only two issues and referendum propaganda; many more know only about Surface through Journal news stories and hearsay. If you're eligible to vote in the referendum, which is open only to Arts and Science Students (since it is an ASUS paper) — we present the history of Queen's most controversial newspaper.

1988-89: And The Lictor bogot Surface!

Political Science student Gordon Laird was Surface's founder and first editor. Laird's plan was to change the Lictor, ASUS's little-read and often bland paper for the black-turtleneck-and-beret crowd into a more news-oriented paper while still retaining the creative writing and art sections. The paper's focus was a few steps left of centre; the most outrageous item was a front-page photo of an amputee.

1989-90: No really means NO!

"Surface's mandate is to mediate the creativity, innovation, and knowledge of its contributors to a multicultural audience..." Surface very much resembled the now defunct Kingston bi-weekly Between the Lines, with a more artistic bent. Included in its pages were poetry, artwork, entertainment reviews, upcoming events, fiction, opinion pieces and politically conscious information pieces. Some of the topics that were discussed in feature articles were logging in Tomagami, the destruction of the Berlin Wall, censorship, abortion, social ecology, and South Africa.

This was the year after the infamous Gordon Omer incident and the year of barricading Principal Smith's office in protest. Surface responded to events by publishing a manifesto of a covert feminist group ironically named ROFF (Radical Obnoxious Fucking Feminists). "Why is it that there are certain privileged groups who are able to carry out actions that destroy property, and degrade certain kinds of people with the co-operation of this institution (eg. the Golden Tilt, April Fool's Day "Pranks"), whereas women and other groups who want to protest violence against them are obstructed by campus security (eg. the Valentine's Day signs placed around campus by the Queen's Women's Centre)?" (Ed. note: The Valentine's day signs were markers for locations on campus where women were sexually assaulted.)

And the subsequent response from a resident of Leonard Hall: "Anything good comes out of this whole disaster with the Gordon signs and the ROFF movement, and the sit-in protest, it's that 'NO really does mean NO'. I hope all the men of this campus have learned something. Rape is not a joke."

1990-91: Calm before the storm...

Issues featured this year were sexual assault, native rights, Apartheid, Palestine, political correctness, and funding of education. There were also several music reviews, of the industrial band Consolidated, of the Doughboys and another of the Tragically Hip. This rather quiet year saw Surface focusing more on the literary aspects of its mandate with philosophical essays, fiction and poetry.

1991-92: Jesus did WHAT?

Surface started off the year with a bang, by printing a poem entitled "A message from the Queen" in which the author stated Jesus [sic] was a flaming faggot and "we will kill any and all queer members slowly." In a follow-up article the author stated that his intention was to "speak out against [religious violence] and to express solidarity with my queer brothers and sisters - an act of politically correct" heresy, to be sure."

This poem created a great controversy and Surface received many letters from concerned members of the community. One such letter stated: "...This is an open attack to all those of the Christian religion, and infringes on their religious freedom to practice religion without persecution."

The cynical observer will note that Islam, another religion that does not condone homosexuality (read Hud, a chapter in the Qur'an), was not targeted. The editors probably didn't want another Atlantic Verses on their hands.

It is a pity that the debate was never carried any further, for many interesting questions were never asked: Why should Jesus be single and celibate? After all, it was unusual for a man of his age at that time to be unmarried. He was God in human form - shouldn't He have had human desires? If so, why should He

The deadline for the infamous MISC Shog Tote Contest is this afternoon at 5:00pm. You can still submit your list of 10 tunes that you feel should go on a tape of "make-out music" (don't forget to write down why you chose those tunes) at the Journal House (272 Earl Street, between University and Division). The prize for the best and most creative submission is two free personal ads (a killer $10 value) and a sample bottle of Tabasco sauce. Shog on, shog hard!

Dissidents by Wonderbread (Derek Walker) and Whole Wheat (Joey deVilla)

HOW TO MAKE LOVE TO A WHITE BOY:

A LOOK AT QUEEN'S MOST CONTROVERSIAL NEWSPAPER

necessarily be straight? If you're a non-homophobic Christian, can you accept the idea of a gay Christ?

Another, to be regularly featured column which had Queen's in an uproar was entitled Around Town with the Woman (sic) of Brown which was an attempt to break down colour-sensitive definitions in our language (i.e. white is good and black is evil): "Ra-goddess's contemplation for the issue: what's the difference between a 'dark cloud,' a 'black sheep,' and 'white bread?' A dark cloud brings forth rain which feeds the mother earth and nourishes the black sheep which gives forth warm wool while white bread just gives you gas and the runs."

This particular column was taken up by long-time campus agitator Marc Givens, who deemed the column to be racist. After much deliberation and debate, the grievance committee ruled that people of colour couldn't be racist (in a systematic way) because of their lack of power — an important component of racism — in this society. Surface, in its own pages, simply branded Givens as an "Uncle Tom".

Cynical observer time again: in literature, light and darkness imagery goes back as far as the Bible ("I am the light and darkness; I am fearfully and wonderfully made"), which was written by brown-skinned middle Easterners who cribbed their notes from black Sumerians. It is related to day (safe) and night (dangerous). Your 'umble editor suggests writers take this idea from a different angle — perhaps by listing things invented by people of colour (the decimal system by the Arabs and Indians, rockets and sanitary toilets by the Chinese, rap and peanut butter by African-Americans and the yo-yo by the Filipinos) versus those invented by whites (the mathematically useless Roman numeral system, pay toilets and the Guillotine by the French, Barney the Dinosaur and aerosol spray ham by Euro-Americans and fake "doggie-do" by the Yanks).

Of interest in this year's issues was Julia Lipinska's semi-regular column called Dyke Out and About. In a paper where many couples crushed themselves with their own weight, Out and About simply told the stories of everyday lesbian life, buoyed by Lipinska's trademark smart and witty fashion.

The letters to Surface, which used to be in the single digits now swelled to such an amount that they could not all be printed. Many were critical, but many were also in support.

This year, Surface decided to devote their early December issue entirely to women's submissions in remembrance of the Montreal Massacre. Included were poems, stories, and opinion pieces in which the contributors expressed their anger at a society which would allow the Massacre, as well as all the other things that women have to put up with in a day, to happen. The most controversial item that appeared was a graphic in the paper that included a picture of a gun with the words "you can't rape a 38" underneath.

1992-93: Taste the pain, white boy!

In this year, the editors continued in the directions laid out in 1991-1992. Every issue featured articles and poems by people angry and frustrated with the injustices of society. But every issue also had information pieces on topics like bisexuality, the Gulf War, native issues and AIDS.

Of particular interest was an article on the Marriot workers, who were trying to organize (and still are) into a union. Another fascinating article examined the life of Queen's only human mascot Alfie Pierce, after whom Alfie's Pub is named, and his Stepin Fetchits (look it up) treatment as a black man and token at Queen's.

The big controversy arose last year with Surface's Sex Issue in which a woman calling herself Iron Lotus described the torture and murder of white men in her now-infamous How to Make Love to a White Boy. The centrespread of the issue featured a collage of homoerotic imagery interspersed with pictures of prominent male Queen's community members, including MISC editor Joey deVilla (who is hurt that they didn't use a better photo of him). The disclaimer noted: "We interpret this collage as a simultaneous mild and fun critique of phallicism, and an attempt to draw attention to potential homophobic responses to the identification of presumably straight men with gay imagery. We urge you to take this in the spirit of fun in which it was intended." Some didn't and threatened to sue.

We're the buzz in this WASP's nest!

In fact, the paper almost didn't get off the ground last year. The editors were not properly elected and hence they were not allowed to spend any of the money in their budget. Anti-Surface elements in ASUS assembly ensured that Surface was not granted an interim budget until the situation was sorted out. Eventually the editors were properly ratified and Surface went ahead. Another obstacle was a petition signed by 700 Arts and Science students, calling for a referendum on continued funding for Surface. It was presented at ASUS assembly last March. It was passed — with stipulations making it non-binding. However, several hours into the meeting, it was discovered that the meeting itself had not been properly advertised and was therefore void. At the follow-up ASUS Assembly meeting, Surface was guaranteed funding at their current level until 1995. The referendum was still to be held, but its results were to be in no way binding.

That brings us to the present day. The referendum will be next week and ASUS President Jennifer Steeves stated in The Journal last week that though the referendum will not be binding, "...I ran on an 'ASUS works for you' platform, so if students don't want it, we won't fund Surface... We have to represent what students want. But I think Surface really contributes to the Queen's community — it would be a shame to lose it."

1993-94: Surface needs your support.

The best way to view Surface is to view it as one should look at rap. Yes, there is a lot of homophobia (in Meet the G that killed me by Public Enemy), sexism and even racism (Black Korea and others by Ice Cube), but the good messages far outnumber the bad. Underneath all the anger and bile of many Surface articles still lies the germ of a good idea, and that's the point. No other publication pushes the envelope on social issues the way Surface does. Yes, they stumble when anger sometimes turns reason into rant, but is any paper clean? The Golden Words of ten years ago was oftentimes a vile rag filled with booze-fueled redneck epithets and The Journal of yesteryear was an ivory tower of Polo-wearing AMS sycophants. Thanks to hard work, these (still imperfect) papers have evolved to make the change, and so will Surface. It's a good bet that current Surface editor Junipero Lagatapan (the other Filipino muckraker at Queen's) will use Surface's fire to clear dead growths and not burn down people's houses. Yes, they're pissed off, but for damned good reasons.

The choice is yours. Choose wisely.

Derek Walker is a white boy. Joey deVilla knows how to make love to him.

Buy a Whopper with cheese and regular fry, receive a Whopper with cheese FREE.

Buy a Whopper with cheese and bacon and a regular fry, receive a Whopper with cheese and bacon FREE.

Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer. Expires Oct. 17/93.

Not valid with any other coupon. Limit one per customer. Expires Oct. 17/93.

VANCOUVER 4862
 TORONTO 260
 Dr. Girdy's -
 MONTREAL 290
 EGYPT 9553

Save on gas.

Dr. Girdy's

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Saturday
Afternoon Football! 1pm Kickoff!	Mon Nite Football! 20c wings	Unplugged with Michael George & friends! On the 1st floor!	LITE NITE! 90120 & MP on the BIG Screen!	Theme Nite! Pitcher this in yer yap! DJ SUGAR	THE POST GAME HQ! Ride the free Girdy Shuttle bus.

Eat 'till ya BURST every nite! $2.⁹⁹ Spaghetti, Poutine, Nachos!

"The bar built for the student race."

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 Specialists for the University Community
 186 Princess Street, Kingston
 (corner of Montreal & Princess)
 549-3553

QUEEN'S Journal

McDonald's
 DELIVERY
 1-800-663-2233

Volume 121, Number 13

Serving the Queen's Community since 1873

Friday, October 15, 1993

New principal announced

BY BROCK MARTLAND
 The Queen's Journal

Queen's University's new principal will be Dr. William Leggett. The announcement of the appointment was made Tuesday at a press conference in the Faculty Club.

Leggett, 54, is a population biologist of international renown, and the current vice-principal (academic) at McGill. He will take over the position from Principal David Smith next September.

Members of Queen's administration spoke highly of the principal-elect. Smith described Leggett's "very impressive credentials" academically, and his "important experience in university administration at McGill," as qualities that will benefit Queen's.

"It's an excellent selection," he said.

"He's a very nice person too," Smith added. "This is clearly someone who interacts well with people."

Richard Stackhouse, chair of the board of trustees, said that Leggett is more than just an educator. He is also "a highly esteemed scholar, teacher, and researcher," Stackhouse said.

"He is a caring, capable administrator [and] a man of great serenity and wholesomeness," he said.

Leggett was chosen by a committee comprised of members of the board of trustees and the university senate. The senate members represented various faculties and schools, as well as the Alma Mater Society.

Leggett said he felt "a sense of honour and a sense of humility" at becoming principal of Queen's. He spoke of Queen's focus on teaching and research, and said "those goals merge well with my views of what a university should be."

The principal-elect said he "believes very much in an open style of governing," though he thinks it would be "premature" to comment on whether the current administration is "open."

Leggett described Queen's as "one of the best-kept secrets in the international scene," and said he'd work to improve Queen's international stature.

He said he'd like to see more international students at Queen's, and more Queen's students studying abroad for a term or a year. This would equip Queen's grads for international competition, foster an awareness of international issues, and make students "sensitive to the multicultural aspects" of Canada, he said.

Leggett foresees "enormous" challenges for Queen's, but said he feels "the expertise is here."

When asked about tuition increases, he said that "inevitably students are going to have to bear a greater cost of their university education." The alternative, he said, is "a lesser quality of education."

For Leggett, the more pressing issue is "how we structure systems of support to students."

He feels that "the universities which excel will be those which have significant public and private sector support."

Leggett said that while "no university can be all things to all people," he is "fundamentally opposed to [funding] faculties based on the number of students enrolled, because it doesn't draw a distinction on the basis of performance."

"Leggett will be meeting regu-

Please see LEGGETT on page 5

Local candidates square off

BY JONATHAN LEIGH
 The Queen's Journal

With less than two weeks remaining in the federal election campaign the seven local candidates clashed in the auditorium of KCVI high school Tuesday night, in an all-candidates meeting.

The meeting, sponsored by the Council for Canadians and other associated groups, was billed as a forum on free trade, but that was certainly not the only issue on the minds of voters or candidates.

CANDIDATE INTERVIEWS Pages 8-11

The opening remarks from the candidates focused on their ties to the local area and experience in business and politics. Subsequently, the meeting moved to questions from the floor, where the evening heated up considerably.

Barry Gordon, the Progressive Conservative candidate, was questioned by an audience member as to how his party planned to eliminate the deficit in five years when former finance minister Don Mazankowski's deficit figures for 1992 were more than $9 billion off.

"Nine billion may be an insignificant number to a Tory," the questioner contended, "but not to me."

Gordon replied that Prime Minister Kim Campbell's plan is solid and ready for any contingencies, but admitted that he had "a tough time" answering the question.

The Liberal incumbent, Peter Milliken, was questioned about his party's free trade policy. One audience member said that the Liberal party had "flip-flopped on free trade like a fish out of water."

Milliken said that Canadians had become impatient with the free trade issue. He also said the damage had already been done. "Will those jobs come back? I'm not sure they would," he commented.

Despite his initial opposition to the agreement in the 1988 federal election, Milliken said that "in the long run, the North American Free Trade Agreement and free trade should help Canada economically, even if it causes social disruption."

Sean McAdam, a Queen's student and the Reform Party candidate, supported free trade in principle, but said that "as long as

Please see NAFTA on page 7

Mervyn LaParo, reforms at Queen's, see story, page 21.

Yvonne Roche Johnson

University dips into res coffers

BY GEOFF LANGDON
 The Queen's Journal

In its search for new sources of revenue to cover rising costs and falling provincial transfers, Queen's is delving into residence budgets for financial footing.

Main Campus Residents' Council President Warren Flannery said various sums of money have been directly transferred from the residence budget to the general university operating budget over the past few years.

Flannery expressed dissatisfaction with the way the administration has handled the negotiations.

"They won't do anything out in the open," Flannery said. "[The university] takes money from the residences through the backdoor."

Flannery said the first he had heard of the latest attempt to transfer money was from Katherine Philips, Alma Mater Society president.

In a letter to Vice-Principal (Resources) Rod Fraser, Flannery, Philips and Steve Morelli, President of Royce Hall Council, expressed their disappointment with the university's attempt to bypass normal procedure to get the money.

"It is also unfortunate that Vice-Principal Fraser has not followed through with his commitment to consult the Ban Right Board regarding any further attempts to transfer money from the residence system to the central operating fund," the letter said.

In 1992, $165,000 was taken in accordance with a school-wide one per cent budget reduction mandated by the school administration. In addition, $125,000 was taken to pay for a portion of the mortgage on properties in the Clergy Street area, purchased by the school from landlord Daphne Dean. With a total gross budget of just over $16 million for the fiscal year of '92-'93, this sum represents almost a two per cent cut.

Flannery called the $165,000 transfer a "double whammy against residence students."

Students are already paying a one per cent penalty in the form of reduced class services, Flannery said, adding "just because they live in residence, they're being asked to contribute another one per cent."

After one year, the $165,000

Please see FRASER on page 5

Inside

NEWS
 CLAYQUOT 3
 FEATURES
 BODY PIERCING . . . 16
 SPORTS
 GAELS WIN 19

Quote

"[Clayoquot Sound] is the only remaining section of temperate rainforest in Canada large enough to support biodiversity."

—Stephanie Bertels, of CUSEN

THE HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE & THE FACULTY OF EDUCATION

PRESENT A LECTURE BY

PAULA J. CAPLAN

AUTHOR OF "LIFTING A TON OF FEATHERS" AND "THINKING CRITICALLY ABOUT RESEARCH ON SEX AND GENDER" CO-AUTHORED WITH JEREMY CAPLAN

MS CAPLAN'S BOOKS WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR SALE AT THE LECTURE COURTESY OF PRINTED PASSAGES BOOKS LTD. 50 ONTARIO STREET

OCTOBER 18, 1993 7:30 P.M. GRANT HALL

MBA FORUM

Wednesday October 20th 11:00-2 P.M.

Representatives from the following schools will be in the John Deutsch Centre -Upper and Lower Ceilidh- to present information on applying to their programs:

Canadian Universities

- University of Western Ontario
- University of Ottawa
- University of British Columbia
- Simon Fraser University
- St. Mary's University
- McMaster University
- Dalhousie University
- McGill University
- York University
- University of Windsor
- Queen's University

American Universities

- Harvard University
- Northeastern University
- Clarkson University

European University

- answers to questions on admission requirements
- information on programs offered

Everything I need to know I learned on Tuesday Nights at A.J.'s N.T.N.

Trivia Challenge

Grab a team and come on down and Challenge the bar!
All New Prizes!!
All-u-can eat spaghetti only $2.99!!

Tonight & Sat. night check out Road Apples

Kingston's very own tribute to Kingston's very own Tragically Hip! HEY! Come Early! Cheap 7:30-9:30!

Every Mon. 20 cent wings
Mon nite football
Big Screens!
Stereo Sound!

Every Sunday The best party in town with Wild Blues Yonder

Rockin Blues - no cover!
Also! 2 for 1 Chicken dinners 5pm!

Students rally against Clayoquot logging

Destruction of rainforest "suicidal" CUSEN says

BY KAREN HALL
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's chapter of the Canadian Unified Student Environment Network held an awareness-raising protest in the John Deutsch University Centre Wednesday.

The rally was part of a national day of awareness about the logging of Clayoquot Sound. Located on the west shore of Vancouver Island, it is the largest temperate rainforest left in the world.

"Destruction of the Clayoquot rainforest is downright suicidal," said Brendan Lau, an organizer of the event. "We cannot let government and industry go on destroying our ecological heritage."

The protest was focused on raising awareness and supporting the opposition to the logging.

"We are trying to send a message to students that Clayoquot is important [as an issue]," said Stephanie Bertels, a member of CUSEN. "It is the only remaining section of temperate rainforest in Canada [that is] large enough to support biodiversity."

The British Columbia government created a compromise solution between environmental groups and MacMillan Bloedel, the logging company. Environmentalists allege that the compromise leaves 74 out of every 100 trees unprotected.

"I don't think that the issue is being discussed here at Queen's," commented Lau in an interview with The Journal Wednesday. He continued that he was "surprised how many Students protest environmental destruction.

Marc Walton

people have no idea what Clayoquot is all about.

"Our goal is to make people aware and to motivate people to take a stand," said Lau. He was one of over seven hundred protesters arrested at Clayoquot Sound this past summer, in the largest mass arrest in Canadian history.

Bertels explained that "we are trying to bring those issues into the light," issues such as the British Columbia government's majority share ownership of MacMillan Bloedel.

"University is the place for social action," Bertels continued. "In the last few years, students haven't lived up to that. Now people are less complacent and are really starting to take an active role. Raising your voice has an effect."

"We are really pleased with the turnout today, with the number of people willing to listen and willing to lend support. We really feel that the message is starting to hit home," Bertels remarked after the rally.

After speeches by Nadia Carmosini and Lau, Brett House, also with CUSEN, emphasized the spiritual side of the movement.

"There is a spiritual and natural side to this issue, one of solidarity with nature," he said, stressing the need to keep activists "psyched up" and "keep the activist [movement] itself sustainable."

Organizers handed out chalk after the rally, which people used to write pro-Clayoquot graffiti outside the Union Street entrance of the JDUC.

Also, Lau said that 930 students put their names to a petition circulated yesterday calling for an immediate halt to the logging, and that this petition, along with over 100 handwritten letters of disapproval, will be sent to B.C. Premier Mike Harcourt.

Engineers get their hands dirty

BY CARINA BLOFIELD
The Queen's Journal

It's a competition with mud, water, endurance, team spirit, even engineers - but no, it's not the infamous greasepit.

For the past two years, dedicated teams of mechanical engineering students have competed in the Society of Automotive Engineering Eastern Mini Baja Competition.

The aim of the competition, attended by top engineering universities from across North America, is to design and build an all-terrain, fully amphibious vehicle.

This year, 13 engineers in their third or fourth year are once again undertaking the challenge of creating a faster, more versatile, and durable machine - from scratch.

For motivation, they need look no further than the excellent results last year's team achieved. In the university contest held last May in Orlando, Florida, Queen's entry, Thundermug II, placed 16th in a field of 48 entries. They beat such Ivy League names as Princeton, and, from home, McGill.

Last year's three-day competition consisted of nine driving events and a judging panel on design. The categories included acceleration, velocity, floating capacity, and, as the deciding factor, a three-hour endurance drive.

This year's administrative coordinator for the Queen's vehicle, Mike Robertson, said last year's car was decked out with steel tubing frame, foam-covered Kevlar fibreglass, a snowmobile clutch and, as a special feature, a Formula One racing seat. Some comfortably middle-aged professors trying to squeeze into the seat found it a tad too small, he added.

Thundermug performed consistently in all the categories of the competition, and was one of few entries that completed the competition with all parts intact, Robertson said. Only one third of the vehicles entered actually crossed the finish line in the endurance event.

Tested for its acceleration in the snowy wastes of winter in Kingston, and for its floating capacity in Lake Ontario, Thundermug was well prepared for any challenges the Gatorland course might provide.

Thundermug reached an impressive top speed of 38 miles per hour, propelled by a "glorified lawnmower engine" with a horsepower of eight, said Robertson.

The Queen's Baja team's commitment begins in September, eight months before the actual competition takes place. According to Robertson, "one of the biggest advantages of the project is the chance for real engineering."

The students must manage their time, find their own funding and sponsors, and, aside from the engine supplied by the competition organizers, produce a functional vehicle.

Robertson, who also participated in last year's project, estimated the time commitment to range anywhere from eight to 20 hours a week, per student.

This year, the mechanical engineering department has made the project part of a fourth-year elective, called Market Design. Also, the vehicle represents a thesis for five students on the 1993 team. However, the main incentive, Robertson pointed out, is the chance for students to gain hands-on, practical skills. "Usually everything is shown to you," Robertson said. "This is new for students."

Robertson also emphasized the teamwork involved, which includes "the policy that everyone gets to drive it, everyone who works on it."

Queen's Baja "will always be a campus production," he said, with work taking place in McLaughlin Hall. Robertson stressed the importance of "getting people acquainted with manufacturing methods," and "developing manufacturing ability."

One of the biggest concerns, team members agree, is the question of who will continue the "legacy of Baja." Because many of the students are in their final year, they are eager to pass on their expertise.

The experience is meant to give students an advantage in the job market. Two members of the 1992 team are now employed with Ford Motor Company.

Robertson was enthusiastic about the number of second- and third-year students showing interest in the project this year, and was sure the number would increase as more people become aware of the venture.

However, if it is sunny Florida the engineers have in mind, they may be out of luck. Robertson said Montreal wants to host the next event.

LEAF Kingston (Women's Legal Education and Action Fund) will host its fourth annual Person's Day Breakfast on Tuesday Oct. 19, from 7:30 a.m. to 9 a.m. at the Howard Johnson Hotel.

The guest speaker at the breakfast will National Action Committee for the Status of Women President Sunera Thobani.

Person's Day is a celebration of the 1929 Privy Council decision that women were considered legally to be persons. This decision ended the exclusion of women from being considered eligible to be appointed to the Senate. The first woman senator in Canada, Corinne Wilson, was appointed in 1930.

LEAF, established in 1984, sponsors cases in the courts contesting discrimination against women, and supports research and public education programs to promote the equality of women.

1993 at the Howard Johnson Hotel from 7:30 to 9:00 a.m.

Tickets for the Person's Day breakfast are $25 and must be obtained in advance. For more information, or to obtain a ticket, please call Tricia Sands at 353-1158.

The Queen's University Muslim Students' Association will hold a public display Oct. 18, 19, and 21 from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. in the Lower Ceilidh of the John Deutsch University Centre as part of an Islam Awareness Week. Islam awareness weeks will be held at Universities across North America to promote understanding and appreciation of Islam.

For more information, contact QUMSA.

Residents in the Kingston and the Islands riding will have a chance to question their federal candidates directly at a public forum sponsored by CBC's Radio Noon on Monday, Oct. 18.

The two-hour forum, moderated by Radio Noon host Dave Stephens, will be held at Memorial Hall in Kingston City Hall from seven to nine p.m.

The candidates scheduled to participate are Mary Ann Higgs (NDP), Barry Gordon (PC), Terry Marshall (Christian Heritage), Sean McAdam (Reform), Peter Milliken (Liberal), Chris Papadopoulos (National), and Chris Wilson (Natural Law).

Town-Gown builds bridges

BY MEGAN EASTON
The Queen's Journal

The friction between Queen's students and their neighbours in the Kingston community is often just a problem of "basic communication," according to Nancy Tatham of the Town-Gown Liaison Office.

The Town-Gown Liaison has been operating out of the John Deutsch University Centre since September 1991. It was established after a Mayor's Task Force Report recommended that Queen's establish a permanent office charged with improving student-resident relations.

Its mandate is to work with both students and members of the Kingston community, two groups which often have different interests, to fa-facilitate better understanding and cooperation between them.

"Let's face it," said Tatham, who currently runs the Town-Gown office on a part-time basis, "as a student, your priorities are pretty close to the reverse" of your non-student neighbours' concerns.

She said that from its inception, the office "hit the ground running," starting with a door-to-door survey in the areas immediately surrounding campus to gauge the general atmosphere in the community.

Tatham found that there was "a feeling of alienation within the neighbourhoods" coming from both students and residents. "They were not entirely happy with their housing situations," she said.

These findings prompted the Town-Gown Liaison Office to place much of its focus on the housing issue. Tatham believes that now "there is a heightened interest in housing issues," and this is a positive force in the effort to improve neighbourhood relations.

Reflecting this trend, last week the Alma Mater Society Assembly passed a Communications Commission motion to form an AMS Housing Task Force.

The Town-Gown Liaison Office provides information and advocacy for students with a variety of housing problems. Tatham informs students of their rights, often referring them to other bodies like Queen's Legal Aid, and she generally helps them work towards constructive resolutions.

"You're studying there [in your house], you're living there ... you're putting a lot of money into it - you don't need any added stress," she said.

Being "happy and comfortable" in the neighbourhood can make a big difference to how students view the community, according to Tatham.

In the past two years, Town-Gown has organized residence talks and distributed pamphlets on matters ranging from househunting advice to tips on choosing housemates.

Although inquiries come "overwhelmingly from students," the Town-Gown office also deals with landlords and Kingston residents. She said that many of the conflicts arise from simple misunderstandings. Often problems result from "well-meaning, well-organized landlords who felt that they were being clear, and yet weren't."

Another way the Town-Gown Liaison helps to reduce neighbourhood tensions is by acting as a depot for the distribution of Blue Boxes to students. Garbage is one of Kingston residents' major grievances, and Tatham said that providing students with information about municipal collection solves many of these problems.

Other Town-Gown projects aim at improving the public's perception of Queen's students' activities. "I won't take on formal PR" for students, said Tatham, but she said she will "get groups to promote themselves."

She acts as a link within the Queen's community to help clubs, associations, and committees involve the district or increase community awareness about worthwhile events.

Public relations and media coverage have been thorny issues for Queen's in the past. "When a handful of things go badly [at the university], that's what is on the front page of the Whig-Standard," said Tatham. Her job focuses on fresh, well-meaning, well-organized student-resident relations.

Often, Tatham said, individual or small groups at Queen's are taken to represent the whole student body. The Kingston Whig-Standard's coverage of this year's Orientation Week, for example, consisted of front page colour photos of a purple engineer and the Thundermug race (Sept. 9 and 10).

To help counter any negative images or misconceptions surrounding frosh week and homecoming, the Town-Gown Office tries to promote mutual respect between students and residents. In past years, projects included distributing flyers through local merchants urging "safe and sane partying."

Theology gets new principal

BY PAUL ZIMBALATTI
The Queen's Journal

Queen's oldest faculty saw a change in leadership this year as the Rev. Dr. Hallett Llewellyn replaced Dr. Clifford Hospital as principal of the Theological College.

Hospital had been principal of the College, which also includes the Faculty of Religious Studies, since 1983. He cut short his second term of office by six months in order to take his half-sabbatical at the same time as his wife, who teaches at LaTrobe University in Australia.

"I'm certainly very pleased in coming back and not having to be involved in administration," commented Hospital. "I did enjoy [administration] when I did it, but in retrospect I realize that there was always something awaiting your attention."

Hospital felt that his scholarly pursuits were having to be put aside for administrative concerns.

"I'm certainly looking forward to being creative in using my time in teaching and writing."

Looking back at his time in office, Hospital cited his role as a facilitator of decision-making, and his role in the refinement and maturation of religious studies and theology programs, as two of his most memorable accomplishments.

As well, he was pleased with the quality of the younger scholars recruited during his two terms, and with the atmosphere of tolerance for religious diversity that was created - especially the creation of the Jewish Studies Chair.

The goals of the new principal Dr. Llewellyn, are not dissimilar.

"We want to maintain our spirit of collegiality. We want the faculty to feel supported in their research, and the students to feel supported in their education," Llewellyn said.

He also mentioned administrative financial responsibility as a priority, saying, "it is a concern of mine that we have some financial security for recruitment and development."

Llewellyn has extensive experience in administration. He has served the United Church of Canada in many administrative capacities, the most recent being that of Secretary for Theology, Faith and Ecumenism of General Council.

After being approached by Queen's representatives who felt that he had the experience and the background in the church that the college needed, Llewellyn applied for, and was awarded, the position.

He was pleased with the combination of the Theology College and the Faculty of Religious Studies. "It is a strong relationship, but one that worked very well," he said.

Llewellyn feels that this is a key period for theological schools in general, and that the issues facing the Theological College at Queen's are global ones.

Of this college in particular he said, "I knew that one of the things they needed was a look at their long-range goals."

Llewellyn took on the responsibilities of principal in July. Prior to that, Dr. Daniel Fraikin held the post of Acting Principal, after Hospital left in December.

Llewellyn will be officially installed as principal during a special Convocation on Monday, Oct. 18.

Leggett joins Queen's

Continued from page one

larly with Principal Smith and Queen's administration throughout the year, to "become familiar with the issues." He will formally join the university on Aug. 1, 1994, which will allow for a one-month overlap before Smith leaves.

Leggett is a graduate of Waterloo University College (now Wilfrid Laurier), the University of Waterloo, and McGill. He worked as a scientist at McGill from 1970 to 1986, when he was appointed dean of Science. In 1991 he was made vice-principal (academics).

Leggett has won numerous awards for his research, which has examined inland and ocean fish populations. In his free time, he enjoys wood-working, wildlife biology, and conservation. He is married and has two sons.

Smith characterized his 10 years as principal as "an exciting life, very satisfying." He is planning to return to academic writing in the field of economics, saying "I have a lot of writing I want to get done."

Principal-elect Bill Leggett.

Smith expects "to be a little freer on the weekends" after his term ends.

Fraser defends transfers

Continued from page one

levy was eliminated in a compromise worked out between Principal David Smith, Vice-Principal Tom Williams (Operations and University Relations), Rod Fraser and Dr. William Cannon, Chairman of the Ban Right Board.

Flannery said he believes the deal was designed to keep the issue out of the media. "There was a motion about to go to senate to condemn this [the transfer]. The day it was to go to senate, Principal Smith and Bill Cannon negotiated a compromise, in that the motion would be withdrawn," Flannery said.

Along with the elimination of the $165,000 came a promise that in any future attempts to take money from residences, the MCRC, the Ban Right Board and the AMS would be consulted, Flannery said.

"That was our line in the sand," commented Flannery.

Flannery also criticized the university for taking money from residence budgets to fund measures that have nothing to do with the residences themselves.

"Despite the fact that these houses [the Daphne Dean properties] had no connection with the residences," the MCRC was forced to hand over the $125,000 annual sum, said Flannery. "It's the university's property, we just pay the mortgage."

In fact, the amount is only a part of the total annual cost of the internally financed mortgage.

According to Fraser, the administration's decision to take the money from residences was based on the fact that MCRC makes profits from conferences held in residence buildings.

While economic models provided by the university show the conferences making a modest profit, a model adopted by the MCRC actually shows a small loss, alleged Flannery.

The problem arises because the budget for Conference Services is lumped together with residences, with no separate accounting, said Flannery.

Rector David Baar believes this situation should be changed, and thinks there is a conflict of interest between the non-profit residences and the for-profit conferences.

"They [the university] need to develop a clear definition of what Conference Services is and what residence is," he said.

Baar said that he would like to see some kind of separate accounting done to separate the profits and overhead between residences and conferences more clearly.

One possibility would be Conference

Services sub-contracting facilities from residences, Baar said.

He considers the current Conference Services-residence situation as "underhand accounting to get money out of residences."

In an interview with The Journal, Dr. William Cannon, who was initially reluctant to comment on record, didn't support the view of the Rector. Cannon said that he doesn't believe there is a conflict of interest between conferences and residence.

By having the overhead of the administration of Conference Services and residence shared, he said, a significant amount of money is saved and "both sides gain."

On the subject of whether the conferences make or lose money, Cannon said he believed they do make some profit.

All of this appeared settled, with all sides reluctantly agreeing, said Flannery, until changes enacted by the provincial government again forced the university to take a look at the residence budget.

When the recently passed provincial social contract legislation forced the university to save a total of $9.2 million dollars, the administration went looking for sources of cuts, said Fraser.

"Unfortunately, one of the sources they looked to was the residences," explained Flannery.

With employees making over $30,000 a year having to take a pay cut, the MCRC and the University originally believed they could save $40,000 a year, money that would have to be paid back to the university, explained Fraser.

When it was discovered that the actual amount of money saved would be closer to $15,000, Fraser explained, the university allowed the money to stay in the residence budget. It would be used to fund capital projects, with the subsequent savings passed on to residence students, said Fraser.

Fraser said that he believes there is a "commitment to put into practice a more open consultation" between the university and residences.

"We are facing extreme financial constraints" and are looking for "fairness and equity in sharing of budget constraints," Fraser said.

Flannery didn't share Fraser's optimism. "I believe they'll continue to use backdoor methods [to transfer money from residences]."

Cannon said that "if nobody had squawked the money would have been taken ... we squawked."

The Essential Element of Cool

Smith of Diner 541-Pool

Doubles 8 Ball Pool Tourney • Sunday, October 17, 2pm • Call for more info.

ARE YOU

GREEN?

CONCERNED ABOUT LOCAL, NATIONAL, AND INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES?

WANT TO GET ON YOUR BUTT AND DO SOMETHING?

JOIN THE QUEEN'S ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION GROUP (QEAG).

CALL JOR (549-3428) OR TIM (546-8806)

GET INVOLVED. DO YOUR PART.

JOHN M. SHERWOOD
Memorial Lecture

Cynthia Cockburn
City University, London

Technology, Gender, and Creativity

Monday October 18th 1993
8:00 pm
School of Policy Studies
Room 202

VOTE TO ELECT

The one candidate who will make a difference.

- He listens to all sides
- 13 years experience in government
- Bary continues to work for jobs here.

Information 547-5862

Barry

GORDON

AUTHORIZED BY ROBERT KIRKNEY OFFICIAL AGENT FBI BARRY GORDON

SKI BLAST '93

EVERY SKI, BOOT, BINDING ON SALE!

ALL '92 DESCENTE 1/2 SKI WEAR PRICE

COMPLETE SKI PACKAGES FROM 249⁹⁹

KASTLE AIR HAMMER EXTREME SKI RACE ROOT -249⁹⁹

SMITH SUN VALLEY GOGGLES 19⁹⁹

NAT LACEN & COLUMBIA POLAR FLEECE JACKETS 49⁹⁹

NORDICA GOGGLES 9⁹⁹

SKI TUNE-UP SPECIAL $10.00

Dave Jones Sports

SALE STARTS SAT. OCT. 16 9 AM

86 PRINCESS STREET - 544-7544

The Queen's Court: the AMS Judicial Committee

Jury of peers gives students due process

BY CRAIG MARTIN
The Queen's Journal

Chances are the Alma Mater Society Judicial Committee is a body few Queen's students have heard of. Considering that there are so many bureaucratic bodies and committees at Queen's, and considering that the Judicial Committee doesn't even have its own office, that's no small wonder.

In spite of the committee's relative obscurity, committee member Ash Jaffer said he wanted to emphasize that "we are open and approachable" for any questions and concerns from the Queen's community.

The history of the Judicial Committee goes back to 1925, when the Alma Mater Society Court was adopted into the Constitution. The University Senate delegated the responsibility for non-academic offenses to the Court.

In essence, the university gave the right to the students to try and punish by a jury of peers. Appropriately, the committee is made up of a cross-section of the student population.

"Students can understand the problems of their peers better than a group of administrators, and this is more likely to produce an equitable solution," says one pamphlet put out by the AMS.

The Judicial Committee is set up to deal with infractions of the University Code of Conduct. An infraction can be basically anything that disturbs the interests of the university community.

The purpose of the committee is to act as a fact finding body and to resolve differences among undergraduates in as fair a manner as possible.

Rather than complex legal details, the committee wishes to only hear the facts from both sides of the dispute.

The committee deals with non-academic concerns only. It has no jurisdiction over such matters as grades and course work.

The role of the committee is to ensure that Queen's is a safe place for all students. For example, it would deal with such cases as fights at Alfie's, or, in extreme cases, sexual harassment, said Jaffer.

An obstacle the committee faces is that of perceived intimidation. In order to make students feel as comfortable as possible during the hearing, they deliberately make the proceedings less formal than a traditional court room.

The defending party may have a lawyer present, but it's not common. They continually strive to be a "fair panel," and that means being "fair to both sides," said Jaffer.

The Judicial Committee is a panel of peers, so no law background is required to get involved. Only the chair and deputy chair of the committee are required to be law students. Ash Jaffer was in his second year of life science when he was accepted for a position.

When there is a non-academic offence, first of all, a report of the offence goes to the AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner, Bob Adlerly. If he feels that the matter would be best handled by the Judicial Committee, it goes to the Prosecutor's Office.

The prosecutor then contacts the Judicial Committee clerk, who contacts the accused. Normally, Internal Affairs and the prosecutor will both try to resolve the issue "out-of-committee."

If the prosecutor is unable to come up with a solution that satisfies all the parties involved, the case goes before the Judicial Committee.

During the hearing, said Jaffer, "we basically hear the facts of both

Please see JURY on page 7

WITCH WAY TO

PHASE 2?

COME AND SEE OUR GIANT SELECTION OF
• COSTUMES

• MASKS • ACCESSORIES • MAKE-UP
• HATS AND WIGS
UNIQUE CLOTHING ALL AT LOW PRICES

shop
PHASE 2

MONDAY TO FRIDAY

9:30 AM TO 9:00 PM

SATURDAY 9:30 AM TO 6:00 PM

SUNDAY 12:00 PM TO 5:00 PM

QUALITY

RECYCLED CLOTHING

353 PRINCESS STREET

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

I.S.S. FALL 1993

THE BASICS & DEC THEORY EXAM

FOUR PROGRAMS

THE BASICS & DEC THEORY EXAM

PHYSICAL EDUCATION CENTRE ADMINISTRATION OFFICE

CLASSES START OCTOBER 25, 1993

REGISTER FOR FALL PROGRAMS

NOW AT THE

PHYSICAL EDUCATION CENTRE ADMINISTRATION OFFICE

CLASSES START OCTOBER 25, 1993

• FITNESS & PREGNANCY
• POST NATAL FITNESS
• JIVE
• SQUASH (BEGINNER)
• BALLROOM DANCE
• NCCP 11 TECHNICAL SPRINTS/MURULES
• SELF DEFENCE FOR WOMEN

★Scrap the helicopters

★Fight for jobs

★Save healthcare and education

KICK OUT THE TORIES!

Vote NDP • but it's time to build...

A REAL SOCIALIST ALTERNATIVE

PUBLIC MEETING: Tuesday 19 October, 8:00 pm
Third Floor Common Room, JDUC

International Socialists

NAFTA, deficit debated

Continued from page one

government spends like there's no tomorrow, and taxes businesses and individuals to death, there will never be a free trade agreement that works for Canadians."

He received the first applause of the evening when he stated that "interest groups should get their funding from the people they purport to represent - not the public purse."

The National Party candidate, Chris Papadopoulos, attacked the Conservatives for changing their position on free trade. "First we were told in 1983 by Michael Wilson and Brian Mulroney that anyone who entered into a free trade agreement would be a 'dead man.'"

New Democratic Party candidate Mary Ann Higgs called NAFTA a "corporate charter of rights," and said that Canada's social and health programs would be harmonized with the U.S. under NAFTA.

Queen's philosophy professor Jackie Davies blamed the Conservative party for the constitutional crisis, and criticized the government's use of closure (restricting debate on an issue) to move NAFTA through parliament.

While noting that Gordon had only been a card-carrying Tory for five months, and Campbell prime minister for only four, Davies asked: "Does this mean that we should not hold the Conservatives accountable [for the party's past actions]?"

Gordon replied that he wants politics to be done differently, and that finger-pointing isn't the answer to the country's ills.

Toward the end of the evening, Gordon was challenged by National Party candidate Papadopoulos, who took exception to Gordon's assertion that "we're not running a country here - we're playing a game called politics. We need to do politics better."

Papadopoulos stepped in with the comment, "I'm not up here playing a game. But when governments consistently don't listen to people, what else can we do but stand up for what we believe in?"

Milliken later came under fire from an audience member for not consulting his constituents on NAFTA. Milliken replied that he had planned a "NAFTA forum of local businesses so they could express their concern if they felt that it was in any way damaging to their business, but there was no interest."

When asked why only businesses were considered, he stated that it was his understanding that they "knew best."

At this point, NDP candidate Higgs jumped in, and said that "asking the Chamber of Commerce if they had any need for a public forum on NAFTA is showing your complete lack of insight given who will be affected by this agreement."

Reform's McAdam turned one of Gordon's analogies around after Gordon described the problem of the debt and deficit in terms of a speeding car heading for the brick wall of bankruptcy.

He described the Reform Party as simply slamming on the brakes "right now," while the Conservatives would "pump the brakes" to save health care.

McAdam added, to the applause of the audience, that "the Reform plan is not only to put on the brakes, but to fix the car."

Natural Law Party candidate Chris Wilson suggested an army of 10,000 Yogic Flyers as a way to "generate an indomitable influence of coherence... and harmony."

While stating that his party supports NAFTA as a beginning point, Wilson cautioned: "Don't put your trust in a piece of paper."

After the meeting, the candidates spoke to individuals on specific issues of concern to them. Gordon was asked by The Journal why he was making the jump from municipal to federal politics.

He cited his success in municipal politics, and said that "when you have that kind of success record, you feel like you know something that works that maybe they don't know in Ottawa."

The topic of the deficit was raised with Milliken, who stated the Liberal's plan is to reduce the deficit to three per cent of the Gross National Product within five years. He could not elaborate when asked to give a specific dollar amount of any cuts.

As for his party's $6 billion job plan, where each level of government would contribute $2 billion, he denied that it was in effect an example of what Liberals have criticized Conservatives for - placing the burden of debt upon lower levels of government.

Milliken responded by saying that the Liberal proposal would actually lower the burden on municipalities.

"What we're asking [the municipalities] to do is [pay for it] sooner than they otherwise would at two thirds off, so from the municipalities' point of view, this is a bonanza and they've been asking for this [type of infrastructure program]." He said he expects the plan to create 48,000 new jobs.

NDP candidate Higgs spoke about her party's plan for education funding. The plan includes reinstating the six-month grace period for interest to begin accumulating on loans after graduation, raising the loan limit, and making student fees tax deductible.

"It took me nine-and-a-half years to pay off my student loan - I know what you're going through," she said.

As for the NDP's chances of succeeding nationally, Higgs admitted that it did look somewhat dismal, but placed hope on NDP incumbents getting re-elected.

Jury of students

Continued from page 6

sides, and attempt to make a decision that is fair to both parties."

First, the prosecutor presents the case before the seven-member committee. The defendant will then respond to the charges. The hearings are open to the public, and results are published in press releases for the Queen's Journal.

Even when the committee arrives at a decision, it can be appealed to the University Senate Grievance Board.

The committee has no direct connections to either the Prosecutor's Office or the AMS. The only ties it maintains with the Internal Affairs Commission are the initial appointments to the committee, which are made by Internal Affairs.

"They are completely autonomous, and we're very proud of that," said Adlerly.

One reason for this is that the committee is also responsible for dealing with constitutional affairs of the AMS, clearing up discrepancies, and ruling on disputes.

The AMS Policy Book summarizes the role of the Judicial Committee with the following: "The Committee shall be governed by the rules of natural justice and shall follow such findings of fact as are reasonably necessary to ensure a fair hearing and a just decision."

For more information on the AMS Judicial Committee, contact the Internal Affairs Commission at the AMS office.

RUSSIAN PRINCE VODKA PRESENTS NEW STUFF

Russian Prince Vodka and Impact Magazine would like to expose you to some great new music. Be one of the first 125 people to respond to this offer and receive a NEW STUFF CD-FREE! There's a new CD every other month, available only through your subscription to Impact, Canada's new music magazine. Here's an act that previously appeared on a NEW STUFF CD and is now touring Canadian campuses.

- WHISTLER - October 11
- VANCOUVER - October 15 & 16
- CANMORE - October 19
- REGINA - October 22
- SASKATOON (U. OF SASKATCHEWAN) - October 23
- TORONTO - October 29
- DETROIT - October 30
- QUELPH - November 3
- WATERLOO (U. OF WATERLOO) - November 4
- OTTAWA (U. OF OTTAWA) - November 5

"MARBLES" - the new album by KING APPARATUS

Having stomped their way from Halifax to Hawaii and all places in between over the past few years, Toronto's KING APPARATUS released their new CD "MARBLES" to eager fans and new subjects alike. "MARBLES", written primarily by Vocalist Chris Murray and Bassist Mitch Girlo, features the single/video "MOTHER TOLD YOU" and the latest single "STRONG PHYSICAL TOUR".

Catch THE STRONG PHYSICAL TOUR when it muscles its way into your town soon!

Even if you are not one of the first 125, everyone who responds will be eligible to win:
• One of the following: a NIKKO Remote Mini-Stereo System, a NIKKO 5 Disk Drawer Stereo Remote Multi-CD Player, a NIKKO Portable Compact Disk Player, or a NIKKO Deluxe Integrated Telephone Answering System or
• One of fifty packs of TDK tapes

NIKKO
TDK

Mail completed coupon to IMPACT Campus Offer, Roll Magazines Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario, M6K 3T1

NAME: _____ AGE: _____
UNIVERSITY: _____
ADDRESS: _____

PHONE NUMBER: _____
POSTAL CODE: _____

No purchase is necessary. To enter and be eligible to win, a person must be a resident of Canada who has reached the age to purchase beverage alcohol and who is not an employee of, or a member of the immediate family of, or domiciled with, an employee of FBM Liquor Boards, their licensees, agencies, Roll Magazine Inc., advertising and promotional agencies, prize suppliers or the independent judging organization. Chances of winning depend on the number of correct entries received. For complete contest rules write to: Impact Campus Offer, Roll Magazine Inc., 219 Dufferin St., Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario M6K 3T1. Contest closes December 17, 1993. Winners will be drawn on January 10, 1993.

THE FLAVOUR OF INDIA IN DOWNTOWN KINGSTON

Featuring Tandoori, Curry, and Vegetarian Dishes

25% OFF Regular menu items with this coupon

Buffet Regular $7.95
With Student ID $5.95
Please present your ID in advance

EXPIRES MAY 30, 1994

THE JOURNAL URGES YOU TO DRINK RESPONSIBLY

Meet the Candidates

Federal Election '93

Members of the Queen's Journal editorial board interviewed the seven local candidates in the upcoming federal election.

The interviewers were Jeff Gray, Lori Thorlakson, Doug Macgregor, Brock Martland, Alison Masemann, Sarah Macwhirter and Brad Elder.

Barry Gordon

● Could you prioritize the issues as you see them in this election campaign? What policy initiatives are most important?

I believe that no solution to any problem is viable or is nearly as viable where we have a system of government where one party proposes a solution and five pledge to work against it...

I think that all parties need to recognize that we need to get a common consensus that we need to maintain our future choices. Another way of saying that is get control of the deficit...

If we can deal with the cooperation issue effectively, then we can run simultaneously on a number of fronts... including job creation, deficit reduction, health care, and overall quality of life. We can run common fronts because those things relate to each other they don't need to be dealt with in isolation... they do affect each other. What I would like to see is a common front, a common effort.

● In terms of the deficit, do you consider it to be as serious a problem as it has been portrayed? Is the deficit problem a myth?

I don't think it's a myth. It's an extremely serious concern. It goes to the root of our ability to have choices at all. We have far less choices today because we have a deficit and a huge debt than we would if we had none. If we don't get it down and out in the very near future we won't have any choices left in a very, very short few years.

● If elected will your party be reducing spending on the social safety net, including pensions, welfare and health care? If so, how? How do your plans for social programs integrate with your policy on the deficit?

The party's position is that there will be no cuts. My position is that we need to do everything we do better. My experience has been in municipal government in Pittsburgh Township, and in Pittsburgh Township this year we decided that we would cut our operating budget by 10 per cent without layoffs, without staff cutbacks. So what we did was we sat down and addressed process improvement. And we decided that if we could enlist the enthusiastic cooperation of our people, our employees could help us identify and find ways to do many, many things better. We took the approach that if you can do 100 things one per cent better then you can do things 100 per cent better, rather than trying to do two things 50 per cent better... Many other municipalities across the province are calling to see how we did what we did and what lessons there are for them.

● What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility to education? What are your specific policies?

The role in the federal government in education is not to try to duplicate what the provinces are doing, but help them do it better. Not acting alone, but by working together with unions, parents, teachers, business.

In terms of specific things, we suggest that the [Canada Student Loans Program] is in need of reform. Some students who don't need loans get them, while others who do need loans don't get them or don't get enough. Part-time students do not get nearly enough, even though we know that, increasingly, part-time study is more common and more necessary. In addition, we have a chronic and severe under-representation of women in Canadian doctoral programs, particularly in the areas of science, mathematics and engineering.

We suggest raising the loan limit from $3,500 to $5,100 per academic year for full-time students, and for part-time students, raising the limit from $2,500 to a maximum of $4,000 total, as well as providing deferred grants to the neediest students, expanding interest rate relief to low-income borrowers, pursuing defaulters more aggressively, and providing special opportunity grants for students with disabilities, certain students at risk, and to women pursuing doctoral studies.

The other thing with education in general, not quite really as related to the university scene, is that we need to get our education system better the whole way through...

We can't compete in the world by not getting education.

● How will your party be able to function in a coalition government? How does that probability affect your election strategy?

My kind of government, frankly, will survive in anybody's government because I think the problems that we have are this old style thinking that a party has to have all the solutions and everybody else has to work against the grain. I think that that is so nineteenth century in its thinking. It blows me away, really that we're dealing with that today. I've been in a municipal government structure, and I've been a speaker at the Association of Municipalities of Ontario on cooperation in government...

I think that any party that is more attached to the party and its walls and its boundaries than they are to simply helping Canadians make the best of their opportunities is carrying more baggage than is beneficial to the country...

The challenges are complex, they are neither caused nor solved by any one government or any one sector of the economy and we have to find a new approach to politics that doesn't pit party against party. We need to make government work so that more Canadians can.

● What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

I don't know... But there are some native people in the community, and this is a very important issue for them.

● Gay rights, and the Charter of Rights, specifically?

Well, let me say this: do I think that discrimination against homosexuals is wrong? Yes.

● Would you put it in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

To me that twists the question a little bit, and makes it a little more difficult for me to answer. I can tell you how I feel because I know how I feel as a person. But I don't know all the legal ramifications of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

● Abortion?

My personal view on abortion is different from what I would do as a politician... As a legislator I would not support any bill to re-criminalize abortion.

Mary Ann Higgs

● Could you prioritize the issues as you see them in this election campaign? What policy initiatives are most important?

I think we have to put people first, and I know that our jobs plan tries to do that. It is the business of government to create jobs when you've got massive unemployment. What you do in terms of job creation has to reflect all the other concerns that you have - that we do what we do equitably, that women have their share of the programming, that aboriginals are treated with respect, that our environment is integral to every decision we make.

● The deficit certainly has been a central issue in this election. Do you consider it to be as serious a problem as it has been portrayed?

I think it is serious, but I don't think it is nearly as serious as either the Tories or certainly the Reform would say. Obviously a country has to be mindful of what debt it is accumulating. However, we talk about the accumulated debt and the deficit and we fail to give ourselves credit for what we own. It is like half of a balance sheet. We are not a third world country without an infrastructure and carrying that debt. We have structures, we have government institutions, we have health care plans that give us some value for what's sitting there as debt.

But the level of debt relative to our gross domestic product is one of those indicators that investors look at, and they want to know that we are going to be able to service our debt.

We have had a bad record under the Tories of keeping interest rates low, and most of what is accumulated under the debt is because of their high interest rate policy. The Tories themselves will admit that social programs are not the culprits.

So when we go to a responsible alternative to increasing deficits and increasing the debt, we have to make a fair tax policy also part of it because the other 40 per cent or so of the debt is related to tax giveaways. Last year there were 63,000 profitable corporations that paid no tax.

● If elected, how does your party propose to alter spending on the social safety net?

In terms of social programs, as long as the receivers of it participate in the process, I'm convinced that we can have a fair delivered system, even with a reining in of the dollars

Christian Heritage Terry Marshall

● Could you prioritize the issues as you see them in this election campaign? What policy initiatives are most important?

In terms of getting into specific issues, we would be concerned with what you might consider moral issues, dealing with of course abortion, euthanasia which is now more or less in the news with some of the recent decisions from the Supreme Court... We just think that some of these things we need to question to decide where we are going as a society... In terms of other issues, we would be focusing our attention on the economy.

We are a party that believes that the government should be responsible with public finances. We would be looking for a balanced budget, and some effort to retire the debt... What we'd like to do, is to see a constitutional amendment made where they have to balance the budget at any level of government, except of course in a case of war or some type of national emergency. What it's saying is that we're going to be responsible and now we have guidelines on us that in a sense could relieve some of the pressure on [politicians] because people would realize the need to operate in certain boundaries... Now issues around the family are also important to us, on the part of the party, and that's probably one of the reasons why I'm personally involved... We would like to see for example, as an effort to build and strengthen families... some tax changes made that would take into consideration the role that women make in single income families... I suppose one of the other things people are talking about is job creation and I guess if you were to look at it philosophically, our approach to it would be dealing with it from a government creating an environment where private enterprise would basically deal with job creation. Our feeling is that confidence in the government's management skills is what really makes the economy grow.

● In terms of the deficit, do you consider it to be as serious a problem as it has been portrayed? Is the deficit problem a myth?

Right now I think we are in a very serious situation, but I suspect that there is probably still room for manoeuvring, if you want to call it that, by legislation and programs that sort of hide the effect of the deficit by stretching out some of the commitments over a number of years. But I think what will happen is that we will get to a point where we have to, we'll have no choice, all the lines of credit will be pulled in, the credit ratings for the government will be downgraded, and all those sorts of things will have an effect and then we won't have any room to manoeuvre.

● If elected, will your party be reducing spending on the social safety net, including pensions, welfare and health care? If so, how? How does that probability affect party policy and election strategy?

In terms of programs we think that are worthy for the government to continue, we believe any program is universal when it's paid for by all Canadians, and it's for the benefit of all Canadians. Under that type of definition, you would deal with a Medicare that are spent. The health care people know a lot about how to save money in their own institutions, they know a lot about the advantages of preventative care. But that may mean slightly increasing the budget in the short run so that they can make that turn-around.

If we let our infrastructure decay in the name of deficit reduction, we become less attractive as a location for investment, even for Canadian investors. That is how the job creation strategy goes. In terms of the national daycare program, we would double the number of spaces and that creates quite a number of childcare jobs as well.

We would set up a national investment fund where Canadians could invest in their own communities. I think all too often tax policies have allowed individuals to invest out of their communities and even out of their countries.

So we have to have an investment fund that says "if you invest in this Canadian investment fund, these monies will be available to small and medium sized businesses that are rooted in our community and they can create jobs for their own communities."

● What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility to education?

The Canada Student Loans Act has to have enough money committed to it to offer the financial assistance that students need.

We would increase the money that is available, we would look at the loan repayment terms, certainly reinstate a six month breathing space after graduation but then system and also deal with the national pension plan... Beyond that, I think that everything would certainly be subject to reallocation of money, everything else would have to be prioritized. So what we'd try to be doing is trying to reduce money which is allocated to individuals or special interest groups, or what we would call political agendas... That's the type of thing where we would want to target for cuts and reductions... We would certainly want to bring it in gradually, and we think that 25 per cent per year would be reasonable, and that way within a government mandate, you would achieve a balanced budget maybe in the last year of the mandate.

● What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility to education? What are your specific policies?

In terms of post-secondary, I can only feel for the people that are in that situation now because I understand that the grants have been reduced by a quite high percentage... I'm not sure where it sort of fits into the whole picture, but it would certainly be high up on the priority list.

● How will your party be able to function in a coalition government? How does that probability affect party policy and election strategy?

The best scenario we would be looking for is a case where it could be down to two to five seats that would determine the balance of power. I really think it's a positive thing this time around, to have a minority government... So with 59 candidates, we aren't expecting to form the next government, that's unrealistic. On the other hand, if we would elect enough candidates to be in a position to make a difference, to basically council, to work cooperatively, to give ideas, to give a different perspective, we think that can only benefit.

make repayment somewhat income-conditional.

We would also want to make Canada Student Loans available to students who were in part-time studies and that needs to be looked at not only on a pure pro-rata basis but meeting their true expenses.

● What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

We believe there should be aboriginal self-government. This should also be backed up with assistance in the transition. They need training dollars, they need their land claims to be settled in an expeditious way. Their agenda has been totally ignored and it is time that it was dealt with.

● Gay rights?

The human rights code and the charter of rights should be reflecting the reality that gays and lesbians are full-fledged individuals in our society and should not be discriminated against. We have to stop the government from fighting the improvements in gay rights, such as blocking same-sex benefits.

● Abortion?

We are pro-choice and opposed to any effort to re-criminalize abortion. We believe that it is a decision that should be made by a woman and her doctor and most importantly, we feel that the Canada Health Act be kept strong so that access is available in all regions of our country. Abortion needs to be defined as a medically necessary service.

● What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

We feel the greatest need is for full participatory citizenship. We want to break the cycle of dependency of our native people that we believe has robbed them of dignity and stifled their own self-reliance. So we believe that they should have some self-government, now I think probably we have in mind more of dealing with them on a municipal level, so that they would have jurisdiction in that way. We certainly want to redress any grievances from the past.

● Gay rights and the Charter?

We do not believe that any group necessarily has protection under the Charter based on behaviour. We don't equate a lifestyle choice in the same way that we would race or physical or mental capabilities. We see there is a separation. So we believe that all citizens are covered under the Charter of Rights for basic freedoms, protections on an equal basis. We don't believe there should be special recognition for a lifestyle, because then the question becomes, are they the only ones that are protected.

● Abortion?

We'd like to see a constitutional amendment which recognizes the right to life of all Canadian citizens, that there is a vested interest that the government has in the unborn, and that those rights to life certainly should play an equal basis to the right of a woman. We certainly make provision in there for the protection of the life of the woman in extreme situations where you have medical conditions where the result is an abortion must take place. But certainly not something which is premeditated in terms of inconvenience being the deciding factor.

REFORM PARTY OF CANADA

Sean McAdam

Could you prioritize the issues as you personally, and the party, see them in this election.

I have to say that I went door-to-door for about two months asking people what they think are the most important issues here, and it seems to reflect what the issues are nationally. The first issue, the biggest one, clearly, is the economy, with creating jobs and getting the economy back on track. The second one, and you don't have to scratch too far below the surface of the economy, before people start talking about how bad the criminal justice system is.

To intersect there, in the economy you would include deficit concerns?

Dhyes, definitely. The deficit, social programs, and employment all come under that category. And the criminal justice system, people, particularly here in Kingston, people are concerned by the direction in which the other parties are headed, and I find a lot of people are concerned about the Liberals' local candidate, Peter Milliken's, personal views on this subject. He seems to be rather out of sync. In fact he admits he goes contrary to what people ...

Can you tell me what that's about?

Sure. Peter Milliken has proposed amendments to the Canada Elections Act, that would allow all inmates the right to vote. In other words, this man believes that Clifford Olson should have the same democratic rights as you or me.

What policy initiatives are most important to Reform?

Number one, back to the economy, is eliminate the deficit. The other parties seem to not figure out the connection between high deficit spending and high unemployment, and high deficit spending and the lessening of social programs. Now the Reform Party thinks that it's absolutely essential that we protect those social programs which are most important to Canadians, i.e. health care, veterans' pensions, guaranteed income supplement for seniors. These things are all, you know, very much the fabric of what Canada is, and we're rather concerned by the lack of responsibility on the government's part to deal with the deficit, and to recognize, publicly, that if they don't get their spending under control, that our social programs are going to suffer. So we say we have to cut the deficit, and we have a very concrete plan to cut the deficit in three years, and balance the budget at the end of the three-year period, and by doing this it will send a message, first of all to private investors, that the government is serious about getting its financial affairs in order. It'll show some prospect of tax relief, which is the biggest impediment to creating jobs right now.

Does that program involve cutting social programs now, or trimming them down?

Some of the non-contributory programs, such as old-age security, we're saying that regardless of this concept of everyone, regardless of their income, getting certain social programs, we're saying that they should

Liberal Peter Milliken

Could you prioritize the issues that you see as important in this campaign?

The main issue is jobs. The government says it has no money for job creation, and then on the other hand it now says it's going to create jobs, but I don't know how... And we think that if we don't create jobs, we'll never solve the deficit problem, and if we spend our time trying to eliminate the deficit, we'll only worsen the recession, to everyone's detriment.

And are there any other policy initiatives that the Liberals will be pursuing?

Yes, many of them fall into the job sphere. One is a greater emphasis on research and development in Canada... by tying the universities into the national technology network that we're proposing for the benefit of small business, and increasing funding for research and development through the granting councils.

In terms of the deficit, do you consider it to be as serious a problem as it is being portrayed? Is the deficit problem a myth?

Well, sure it's serious, but you know the Conservatives argue that if we don't eliminate the deficit, we can't grow, and that's rubbish. We may not be able to expand government programs to the extent that we would like with a large deficit, but it's not a problem that is going to result in the imminent collapse of the government of Canada at this point. What I think is a fair question to ask the Conservatives and the Reform Party is "what happens when you balance the deficit: why is growth going to suddenly mushroom because you've eliminated the deficit of the government of Canada?" These people are pursuing this with a single-minded purpose that, if they have their way, will result in five years of no job creation (and indeed job loss throughout our economy)... and I think that would be a disaster for Canada... I think that Mr. Chretien's proposal to reduce the deficit to three percent of GNP by the end of our mandate, our first mandate, is a sensible and reasonable one.

If elected, will your party be reducing spending on the social safety net, including pensions, welfare and health care? Do your plans for social programs integrate with your policy on the deficit?

No, we aren't proposing to decrease spending on social programs. What we'd like to do is spend it better. I think if you look at our policy platform book you'll see that particularly in the area of health care we're proposing the establishment of a National Council on Health that would meet and discuss ways in which health care could be be targeted to the people who most need them.

So in effect, it would be an end to the principle of universality.

In certain areas, for instance, old-age security.

Would universality be specifically preserved in any areas?

Well, in health care. Our policy is simply that people who are making $150,000 a year don't need an extra little boost from the government in the form of old-age security cheques. What we do need, though, is to take care of the people who don't have the income, that don't have the means for support, and by cutting payments to people with a lot of money, we can save and increase the social programs for people.

Do you consider the deficit to be as serious a problem as the media and others have portrayed it to be?

I think that the deficit problem is in fact more serious than the media gives it credit for.

What is your party's platform in terms of underfunding and accessibility for post-secondary education?

The biggest threat to funding, to universities and to students, is the deficit and the debt. Currently 32 cents out of every tax dollar raised goes to pay the interest alone on the debt. If we get rid of this problem, or at least reduce it significantly, then we'll have much more money to spend on education.

What about the short-term?

On the issue of accessibility, we would like to see a system that treats the students more as consumers of educational services, and look at systems whereby they're issued an education voucher that they can redeem at the university of their choice.

Would those vouchers be issued based on income?

No. Instead of the government sending all administered more cheaply or more efficiently. We think there are various things that could be done in the system that would result in savings to taxpayers and avoid the massive increases that have been going through the system in the past few years.

So in terms of the relationship between social spending and the deficit...

...I think we should be looking at ways of spending our social dollars better, but maybe we also should be looking at ways of seeing that government is more cheaply administered. And I think that's one of the things that we're considering too.

What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility?

Since education is a provincial matter, I don't think we have many specific proposals in that regard. We do have the Canadian Youth Corp that we're suggesting for young persons, that is, Canadians under the age of 25 years, to do social or environmental work for a period of time if they're unable to do other work... In terms of actual funding to universities, we're not proposing any radical change. What we are prepared to do though is... sign a deal with the provinces for transfer payments, and then stick to the deal. The government has reneged on the deal, unilaterally, since Mr. Mulroney took office, and that has cost the provinces terribly.

In terms of the possibility of a coalition government, how will your party be able to function as part of a coalition? Does that probability affect the way you come up with policy and your election strategy?

I don't think there'd be a coalition, and it of the institutions money, and letting them deal with it as they see fit, we're looking at means of giving the student money, and then you choose which school you want to go to. The various institutions would have to compete for you and your money, which would mean that their level of service would remain high, because obviously competition between schools would help.

In terms of underfunding, what specific answers would you have? Would you support, for instance, the income-contingent loan repayment plan?

Yes, in fact that is another one of our policies.

How would your party be able to function in a coalition government?

If we implement the political reform we're suggesting, i.e. free votes in the House of Commons, there's no reason we wouldn't need a coalition government. In other words, MPs would be able to vote their constituents wishes without fear of undermining their own party or their own government.

Would the Reform Party be willing to participate in a coalition with another party to form a government?

No.

What's Reform policy on aboriginal rights?

Well, we don't have a policy on that. We believe they should be allowed to decide their own affairs. And we would eliminate the Department of Indian Affairs.

What about gay rights and their entrenchment in the Charter of Rights?

We believe that is a moral issue, also with other issues such as abortion, euthanasia, and should be decided by the people of Canada in a national referendum, or at least by the MP voting to accurately represent riding.

isn't affecting my strategy. Frankly I think we're going to win a majority, so I'm apprehensive at all on that subject. It wouldn't be a coalition, what there'd be would be a minority government that would govern with the majority of votes in the House of Commons.

What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

Well, that's not an issue with which I have much familiarity, because it's not an issue prominent in this community. But there are a number of proposals in the Red Book that since we supported it in the referendum, I'm quite sure we are supporting it... Yes, it says "a Liberal government will act on the premise that the inherent right of self-government of an existing aboriginal treaty right."

Gay rights?

We have never opposed the extension of rights to all Canadians in the Charter, and believe in light of the interpretation already given on the Charter and the Canadian Human Rights Code, that it's to be read as sexual orientation were to be included in it. The necessity for adding it elsewhere in the Charter has more limited. I personally would support the change, but there may be... I don't think the party's expressed a particular opinion on that.

Abortion?

I'm pro-choice. The party has no position. It's up to each member to make up his or her own mind on this issue, but the party's indicated I believe that it will not introduce a bill in the House to re-criminalize abortion, and I agree with that position.

Chris National Papadopoulos

Could you prioritize the issues as you see them in this election campaign? What policy initiatives are most important?

Most definitely it would have to be stimulation of the economy and that way we can gradually reduce the deficit and maintain our social programs...

The country is run by corporate lobbyists. Of course also, it is not the lobbyists just themselves, [it's] the powerful people that run the corporations... when it's decision making time, who gets listened to? It's not everyday Canadians, it's them. It has to be addressed and addressed openly.

The hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of billions of dollars that Canadians have in savings... we're saying don't let that money leave the country in the tens and tens of billions to produce jobs elsewhere... Government must legislate and use tax incentives to make sure that the hundreds and hundreds of billions of dollars that we have will go towards the real job producers in our country... and that is small and middle-sized Canadian owned businesses...

There are other mechanisms of tax loopholes... [including] transfer pricing. Foreign corporations charge their Canadian branch plants higher than normal prices for the goods that they're shipping over... Their profits appear lower, and if the profits appear lower, their taxes are lower in Canada. Through this clever little mechanism we are losing anywhere from five to ten billion dollars a year.

Natural Law Chris Wilson

Could you prioritize the issues as you see them in this election campaign?

The main priority as far as the Natural Law Party is concerned is twofold - and this may not necessarily fall into the priorities of some of the other parties. The main priority for us is to provide the citizens of Canada [with the ability] to strengthen themselves so they can find solutions to the needs and challenges in their own lives and also to create a situation where we can reduce social stress so that those problems which seem to be much greater than any individual can handle can be dealt with in an environment of coherence, harmony and cooperation...

What specific measures would you take toward this end?

One very specific measure is the transcendental meditation (TM) program. The TM technique... takes one's attention from the surface level of activity to the deepest level of consciousness. Their thinking becomes in tune with natural law, they begin to fulfill their own objectives in life without bringing harm or creating problems for everyone and everything around them.

The other thing is another program that we've been promoting - the A Group for A Government program, where you have large groups of people, maybe several thousand... experts in the transcendental program and yogic flying so that these groups can neutralize social stress and reestablish the link between them and nature.

What about the deficit? Do you con-

The National Party of Canada is saying don't soak anyone... Everyone pay their fair share of taxes...

Do you think the deficit is as serious a problem as it has been portrayed? Is the deficit problem a myth?

It is as serious, if the people in power place far too much emphasis on it at the expense of our social programs and job creation. If we had just had a more intelligent monetary policy, lower exchange rates and lower interest rates...

Also, if we redefine the role of the Bank of Canada and refinance our own debt loans instead of at commercial interest rates... that'll free up a lot of money...

Let me give you one other interesting point about this deficit and where perhaps the myth thing comes in. Government, unfortunately, does not do accounting with a double entry system like businesses do... Our deficit is actually inflated by billions of dollars just by very, very poor accounting measures. If they accounted better, our deficit would be lower in one sense... and a lot less panicky and we wouldn't be so quick to buy overseas.

Even by abrogating the NAFTA agreement we'll stop the bleeding. We start creating trade agreements with many countries including the States of course and Mexico... but it's based on maximizing employment sider it to be as serious a problem as it has been portrayed?

It is a very serious problem. It's gotten to the point where we're way over our head and it's going to continue to be that way until we can start reducing the demand for services. That means we keep people healthier. That means we keep people from committing crime. That means we develop the greatest natural resource in the country and that's the creativity of our 27 million citizens.

I think that the thing that the deficit brings out most is the complete failure of the government to deal with problems. The reason the deficit is high is not because we haven't been taxed enough or that the government is grossly mismanaging things - it's because the demands for the services of government are so great.

If elected, will your party be reducing spending on the social safety net, including pensions, welfare and health care?

Immediately, we will not. But immediately what we will do is put in place those programs which will create greater self-reliance, better health and inspire the economy in such a way that the demand for the social services is reduced. We want to reduce the deficit, but not by cutting services. And the only way that's possible - absolutely the only way that's possible - is to cut demand for services. Programs like the TM technique here... If we redirected investment toward small to middle-sized businesses... 100 billion dollars properly invested in this country traditionally can produce 1.7 million jobs... We're getting rid of the GST in a year... We actually have the money to reduce your personal income taxes...

If elected, will your party be reducing spending on the social safety net, including pensions, welfare and health care? If so, how?

Never. Not even no, just never.

How do your plans for social programs integrate with your policy on the deficit?

...We're concerned about the fact that what's made our country a wonderful place for so long is that we've had reasonable national standards where we even take care of the weaker, poorer provinces. And now we have the Reform Party and the Conservatives talking about two-tiered systems, health care and other services for the rich provinces and other ones for the poor provinces. That's when you get incredible poverty and ghettos and more violence and more lack of education... We say it's totally unnecessary. The National Party believes in social programs not because it gets votes, but because it's the right thing to do...

What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility to education? What are your specific policies?

First of all, we would restore funding at the very least to previous levels and gradually year by year as the economy improves, increase levels of spending as we're stimulating the economy... A lot more support for apprenticeship programs. And again, going to the people who know... We like the idea of perhaps making credits more transferrable between universities and communities colleges and of even devising something along the lines of an applied bachelors degree - two years at university and two years practical community college skills and it would make the degrees much more valuable...

We're the ones who have been saying since the beginning a zero tuition policy - not because it's a bone, but because it makes damn good sense... You pay the cost of your education over the lifetime of whatever job you have through the income tax system, whatever the tax rate is... If you graduate and become a homemaker, then you don't pay...

What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

Full support for their land claims and self-determination and again in terms of economically... give them the help that they deserve to help them get back on their feet educationally, economically and health wise.

Gay rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Based on our policy of equality for all Canadians regardless of age or gender or sexual orientation or race or ethnicity or religion, all Canadians should be treated equally and fairly. We back that up with the fact that we have no problem with gay couples in terms of immigration, or in terms of pay equity or employment equity, and receiving benefits for same sex couples.

Abortion?

Abortion on demand and actually increase access for abortion and have it as an insured medical service ultimately. ... We're definitely pro-choice.

have been scientifically demonstrated to reduce the cost of health care by 50 per cent...

What is your party's platform in terms of education issues like underfunding and accessibility to education? What are your specific policies?

Accessibility I'll start with first. We feel that it should be absolutely accessible to everyone... anyone who wants to proceed on to university education or graduate education should be able to do so. And it's only in the best interest of the country that we say this because it's an investment not only in the individual, in the student, but also it's an investment in the future of the country.

What about the underfunding crisis?

We feel that's a shame. It's a tragedy that so much of the nation's resources are now shunted off to deal with problems and cannot be invested in the future of the country, in the education of our youth. And so we feel that as we are able to reduce problems, reduce the expenditures on problems... - and we anticipate annual savings (after three years) to the federal government of $57 billion - these savings can not only be redirected towards reducing the deficit but also redirected towards investing in our future which means promoting higher quality education for everyone.

How will your party be able to function in a coalition government? How does that probability affect party policy and election strategy?

Actually, one of the fundamental planks in our platform is what we call an all-party government in which we want to take the best people [from any party] and have them involved in the executive decision-making of the government... because we feel that we can't just go along in this tradition of party government because so many people feel al-iated from that. We have a tradition of opposition that is a complete waste of time.

What are your party's policies and intentions regarding: Aboriginal self-government?

In line with what I was saying before about the Natural Law Party's policy to move toward decentralizing the national administration and giving more authority to local levels, we would support the principle of native self-government and would very much like to work with native leaders to create a situation of native self-government with them.

Gay rights?

From our perspective, people should always have the freedom to choose how they want to live their life, and we thoroughly oppose any aspect of discrimination whether it be towards gays, or towards women or towards natives or towards any particular groups in the country. The charter of rights is such that in a general sense gay rights are protected, but I think the problem these days is not so much there as how that is interpreted by employers, by the government itself as it's distributing benefits and so forth.

Abortion?

This may sound unusual, but I think that I would have to say that our policy toward abortion is that we oppose it and that we support the choice of the woman and the parents to deal with the situation in whatever way they feel is the best. I realize that it's completely contradictory, but the thing is, the problem isn't abortion, the problem is unwanted pregnancy. What we would do is try to... provide that education which will prevent that mistake from happening in the first place.

Editorials

Too bad McGill...we've got Bill

Editorial Board 93-94
 Editor-in-Chief
 Sarah MacWhirter
 Publications Manager
 David Pavao
 News Editor
 Jeff Gray
 Production Manager
 Colin Ho
 Editorial Page Editor
 Douglas MacGregor
 Entertainment Editor
 Rob Furse
 Opinions Editor
 Tara Hillis
 Sports Editor
 Joel Sutherland
 Graphics Editor
 Joey deVilla
 Richard Dubois
 Photography Editor
 Marika Glickman
 Backpage/Arts Editors
 Derek Walker
 Joey deVilla
 Literary Lapses Editor
 Megan Nichols
 Features Editor
 Alison Masemann
 Assistant News Editors
 Brock Marland
 Brad Elder
 Lori Thorlakson
 Assistant Production Manager
 Adrienne Down
 Assistant Entertainment Editors
 Ian Petric
 Ryan P. Chen
 Stan Beddoe-Stephens
 Assistant Sports Editor
 Jan Flynn
 Assistant Photography Editor
 Derek Yamell
 Assistant Literary Lapses
 Tim Mitchell

Business Staff 93-94
 Business Manager
 Chris Ritchie
 Advertising Manager
 Andrew Nielson
 Creative Staff Manager
 Alex Hamer
 Sales Representative
 Fiona Macaulay
 Asst. Sales Representative
 Stuart Kedwell
 House & Systems Manager
 Alex Bewley

The Queen's Journal was founded in 1873 and is published twice weekly by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., Kingston, Ontario.

Editorial opinions expressed are the sole responsibility of The Journal and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contributions from all members of the Queen's-Kingston community are welcome. The editor reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Contents copyright The Queen's Journal 1993-1994. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be duplicated without the prior permission of the editor.

The Queen's Journal is printed on recycled paper by Performance Printing, Ltd., Smith Falls, Ontario. Editorial & Advertising telephone: 545-2800

Fax Number: 545-6728
 Subscription rates are $55.00 per academic year (plus GST).
 Circulation - 10,000

Contributors
 Tricia Bauman, Carina Blotfield, Fitz Bourdage, Rob Camp, Jason Carrier, Frank Dixon, Megan Easton, Heather Grace, Karen Hall, Yodil Roche Johnson, James Keast, Jason Kenny, Geoff Langdon, Jonathan Leigh, Craig Marin, Dan McNair, Rob McRae, Dwen Minns, Deanna Natzke, Tricia Rickwood, Fiona Vance, Marc Walton, Paul Zimbalanti

The Newspaper of the Queen's Community

SIX CANDIDATES WERE CONSIDERED, and on Tuesday, Queen's seventeenth principal was announced.

William C. Leggett, an external candidate and scientist, was accepted into the position unanimously by the Queen's Board of Trustees.

Leggett is the first scientist and external appointment to the principalship since 1951. His appointment is considered a coup for Queen's.

Leggett graduated from Waterloo University College (now Wilfrid Laurier) with a BA in 1962. He also holds an MSc in zoology from the University of Waterloo and a PhD in zoology from McGill University.

From there, Leggett served as a research scientist and research assistant. In 1970 he was appointed assistant professor in the department of biology at McGill and was appointed a full professor in 1979. In 1982 he became department chairman, and in 1986 he became the dean of science. And then, in 1991, Leggett was appointed vice-principal (academic).

In 1993, according to student media at McGill, he was expected to become the principal. He was considered a shoe-in, they said.

And now he is here. Leggett said he was partly attracted to Queen's by his "sense as an educator."

He wants more international students at Queen's, and he wants more Queen's students overseas. Making Queen's graduates internationally competitive is one of his goals.

He wants to create an open, receptive climate on campus, and said he believes in an open style of governance.

Leggett said he did not seek any of the administrative positions he held, but accepted the offers when asked. Leggett said it was not a goal of his to become a university principal.

He said his personal satisfaction of the challenges he faces is to bring that message more firmly to the Ontario government, he said.

With respect to tuition fees, Leggett said a larger commitment from students is inevitable. However, he said the more important issue is how a system of support to students is structured.

plays in the community in which the university is situated. However, we hope that while at Queen's Leggett is open, direct and responsive to student concerns.

The biggest frustration with administration at Queen's in the past has been the lack of responsiveness and openness to issues that are relevant to students. At a university, this seems nonsensical, but such has been the case.

Leggett plans to meet with Principal Smith at least once a week to gain an understanding of Queen's. We hope that he plans to meet with the student government regularly, as well. It is imperative that a university principal be in touch with the needs, desires, frustrations, hopes and goals that the student body holds.

We hope that Leggett plays an active rather than reactive role as Queen's. We hope he will be accessible, and willing to speak freely and promptly on issues that students care most about. We hope that he will understand the relationship between students and faculty, and know that "publish or perish" does not help students in the learning process.

We hope that Leggett will become aware of and take advantage of the structures in place designed to make the student experience more rewarding. As an educator, we hope that Leggett will encourage professors to take advantage of Alma Mater Society teaching seminars.

Most of all, we hope that Leggett will provide leadership not just in administrative matters, but in matters that directly concern students as well. We welcome Leggett to Queen's, and wish him the best of luck.

CHA GHEILL TO THE CHIEF

comes from "seeing others succeed and knowing I had some small part in that." He describes himself as a direct and honest person. He said he will give answers that are required, not desired, and he said he would attempt to understand issues on a first hand basis.

Leggett said that within the Canadian system, universities in Ontario have suffered the greatest. He explained that although polls show that education is considered one of the top priorities by the public, that is not translated into funding. One

That basically sums up what we know about our new principal. Unfortunately, the student media - The Journal, CFRC and Studio Q - was given only a very short fifteen minutes to interview Leggett. That same morning, the Whig-Standard conducted a lengthy hour-and-a-half interview, and after our group interview Leggett was whisked away for a television interview, we were told.

Leggett can hardly be blamed for this. We understand the important role a university principal

Queen's students opt-out

While it would appear that many penny pinchers are callous, others are definitely desperate. Anyone who opted out this year could tell you that if they didn't need the money, they wouldn't have waited in the line.

The AMS certainly knows what it's doing. By making the opt-out process tedious, more students are likely to opt-out of opting out. Unfortunately, the convoluted nature of the process seems to encourage individuals to opt-out completely instead of partially, or donating more.

Many students feel a special attachment to some causes and not to others, but the opt-out system is not conducive to choice. Any attempt to target the $45 donation to the Queen's challenge towards a specific project is not warmly received. Those who feel strongly enough about the cause are likely to opt-out completely if they can't choose where the money goes.

They don't exactly advertise, either. Students new to Queen's have little idea what opt-out means let alone what it opt-outable.

It is understandable why it isn't publicized. Anyone that wants funding doesn't tell people how to avoid it. But it does seem reasonable to offer information regarding the opt-out process - what it means, how to do it and any options for partial or increased donations. Many students equate the addition of the $100 ancillary fee this year as contribution enough to non-academic causes. Others used the health plan as the scapegoat. It is important to realize that the health plan is automatically given to students to protect Queen's from liability for an uninsured student. However, a number of students went to recover lost funds to the health plan and discovered the numerous other sources for the recuperation of funds. The temptation to check off a few more boxes was obviously powerful.

Some would suggest that students are not the ones to be targeted for charitable donations since many are unemployed during the school year. Furthermore, the argument can be made that the more we give to charities, the expectation for the governments to provide services and support, decreases.

It would be unfair to suggest that all Queen's students are selfish. On the contrary, Queen's students have contributed significant amounts of money to worthy causes over the years. However, it is important to remember that as general economic conditions decline, the negative effect on the less fortunate is multiplied.

Regardless of the reasons behind someone's decision to opt out, it appears that the individual reward is far less than the benefits enjoyed by the receivers of the support.

Clearly, it is important for an individual to have the freedom to choose what they will and will not donate to. But if we were to opt out of all of the university interests, the optional, the flight of capital would be enormous.

Opinions

OPEN FORUM

Food thoughts

The Editor,

Tomorrow, October 16 is World Food Day. Since 1981, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations has used this day to increase global awareness of food issues. They focus on various food issues such as, Food and Nutrition, Hunger and Rural Youth, Traditional Food Plants and Food and the Environment. The FAO is striving for global food security. Food security is defined as "the guarantee that all times have access to enough good quality, safe food to lead a healthy, productive life."

I feel that October 16 is a day when all of us should think about the food that we usually take for granted. Canada, as a developed country, does not suffer the same scale of food problems as other countries, but problems definitely exist. The problem of hunger in Canadian cities and even here on campus has been receiving attention in recent years. The problem illustrates that hunger is a problem of food distribution, not food production. I feel that October 16 is an appropriate day to reflect on another food related problem unique to the developed world. Dieting and eating disorders are manifestations of problems in our society. Women are made to feel that their body size is the only area that they have control over, as a result food related problems develop.

World food day is a day to reflect upon the many forms of food problems in Canada and globally. So tomorrow as you bite into your ruffalo, chickpea curry or leftover turkey sandwich; please take some time to think about the time you are about to consume.

Here are some things that you can do:
 1) donate to the Partners in Mission Food Bank
 2) support Canadian farmers in buying Canadian
 3) Buy tropical products like coffee and tea from non-exploitive food co-operatives (ex. Bridgehead)
 4) never go on a diet again.

—Chris Lounds Arts '97

Queen's Spirit

The Editor,

Sorry Frank, but my first year at Queen's (1988) we didn't have a football game in Frosh Week, but that did not stop us from going to the first game of that season, nor any home game (and several away games) for the next three. The reason plain and simple: It was fun.

An integral part of Queen's spirit meant getting up early on Saturday, making the long walk to the beer store, and then the long walk to Richardson Stadium to watch our beloved Gaels, attired in our individualized coveralls, some face paint, and a Tricolour flag waving proudly in the breeze. In essence it was a party. Everybody likes a party.

The party has been dying ever since 1987, the year alcohol was banned from Richardson. This marked the beginning of the "new Queen's spirit." Following this were crackdowns on street parties, SAACS, STAND, Homecoming/Frosh Week Patrols (students rapping on students), the banning of flag poles from Richardson, Gael/Boss/Frec contracts, the birth of Frosh Half-Week. I certainly do not mean to criticize the new direction of Queen's spirit, nor am I trying to promote alcoholism. I am simply saying that a conscious decision has been made at this school to move away from the kind of school that filled Richardson every second Saturday, to the kind of school that fills Douglas every Saturday.

—Chris Lounds Arts '97

Tibet's troubles

The Editor,

Reading the article entitled "The tragic tale of Shangri-la" published on The Journal (Friday, Oct. 1, 1993), as a Chinese person, I felt very sad first and then somehow hurt. That article contains many inaccurate, inadequate, and even some irresponsible information and comments, which could mislead the readers of The Journal.

That article says that "the Chinese have caused immense harm to Tibet." I guess that the author is talking about the Chinese Communist Government, otherwise what he discusses in the following paragraphs may be reasonably suspected to be propaganda or intended to incite hatred between the "Tibetans" and the "Chinese" (both in the author's definitions.) The "stunning" statistics cited in that article may be true, but in every sense it is misleading, given the author's descriptions. It implies the so-called "genocide", human-rights abuses, cultural destruction, and so on, are evils that the Chinese intentionally committed against the Tibetans, like the Nazis did to the Jewish. It is absolutely not true. Firstly, it is the Chinese communist government rather than the Chinese people that did those evils. Secondly, those evils were not only done by the communist government to the Tibetans, but also to the Chinese (in that author's definition.) The horrible starvation as that author cited, I guess, occurred during the communist "Great Leap Forward" around 1960. The result of that movement was that, not only hundreds of thousands of Tibetans, but also 20 million Chinese died of starvation! The cultural destruction, on the other hand, was something that happened during the communist "Great Cultural Revolution" movement, which not only caused severe destruction of the Buddhist culture in Tibet, but also that of the Islamic culture, the Christian culture, the Confucian culture, and the Buddhist culture in other parts of contemporary China. "Forced abortion and infanticide" are also not a unique type of human-rights abuse in Tibet. Every province in China is accused of engaging in this type of abuse, as the communist government has implemented then somehow hurt. That article contains many inaccurate, inadequate, and even some irresponsible information and comments, which could mislead the readers of The Journal.

That article says that "the Chinese have caused immense harm to Tibet." I guess that the author is talking about the Chinese Communist Government, otherwise what he discusses in the following paragraphs may be reasonably suspected to be propaganda or intended to incite hatred between the "Tibetans" and the "Chinese" (both in the author's definitions.) The "stunning" statistics cited in that article may be true, but in every sense it is misleading, given the author's descriptions. It implies the so-called "genocide", human-rights abuses, cultural destruction, and so on, are evils that the Chinese intentionally committed against the Tibetans, like the Nazis did to the Jewish. It is absolutely not true. Firstly, it is the Chinese communist government rather than the Chinese people that did those evils. Secondly, those evils were not only done by the communist government to the Tibetans, but also to the Chinese (in that author's definition.) The horrible starvation as that author cited, I guess, occurred during the communist "Great Leap Forward" around 1960. The result of that movement was that, not only hundreds of thousands of Tibetans, but also 20 million Chinese died of starvation! The cultural destruction, on the other hand, was something that happened during the communist "Great Cultural Revolution" movement, which not only caused severe destruction of the Buddhist culture in Tibet, but also that of the Islamic culture, the Christian culture, the Confucian culture, and the Buddhist culture in other parts of contemporary China. "Forced abortion and infanticide" are also not a unique type of human-rights abuse in Tibet. Every province in China is accused of engaging in this type of abuse, as the communist government has implemented then somehow hurt. That article contains many inaccurate, inadequate, and even some irresponsible information and comments, which could mislead the readers of The Journal.

That article says that "the Chinese have caused immense harm to Tibet." I guess that the author is talking about the Chinese Communist Government, otherwise what he discusses in the following paragraphs may be reasonably suspected to be propaganda or intended to incite hatred between the "Tibetans" and the "Chinese" (both in the author's definitions.) The "stunning" statistics cited in that article may be true, but in every sense it is misleading, given the author's descriptions. It implies the so-called "genocide", human-rights abuses, cultural destruction, and so on, are evils that the Chinese intentionally committed against the Tibetans, like the Nazis did to the Jewish. It is absolutely not true. Firstly, it is the Chinese communist government rather than the Chinese people that did those evils. Secondly, those evils were not only done by the communist government to the Tibetans, but also to the Chinese (in that author's definition.) The horrible starvation as that author cited, I guess, occurred during the communist "Great Leap Forward" around 1960. The result of that movement was that, not only hundreds of thousands of Tibetans, but also 20 million Chinese died of starvation! The cultural destruction, on the other hand, was something that happened during the communist "Great Cultural Revolution" movement, which not only caused severe destruction of the Buddhist culture in Tibet, but also that of the Islamic culture, the Christian culture, the Confucian culture, and the Buddhist culture in other parts of contemporary China. "Forced abortion and infanticide" are also not a unique type of human-rights abuse in Tibet. Every province in China is accused of engaging in this type of abuse, as the communist government has implemented

talking heads

◀◀◀ "We'd give every baby born a chocolate éclair."

—Carol Backsted, Comm '95
 Miles Clark, Arts '95

▶▶▶ "We'd claim California as a province."

—Benedicte, Julianne Teaching Assistants
 Ness Salono, Arts '95

◀◀◀ "We'd survey Surface, give up and go to Clark."

—Wade, Monty, and Gobe
 Civil Eng. '95

▶▶▶ "Forget academics."

We'd make Queen's number one in sexual activity category in Maclean's!"

—Craig Hoxen, Sue Macdonald, Nolieta Waczko, Naladie Green, Sonia Pawlowski, Arts '96

◀◀◀ "We'd claim the new library to be the new Parliament Buildings of Canada."

—Andrea Dunnell, Arts '95
 Brian Darby, Arts '96
 Remko P. Noleboom, MSC I

Continues on page 14

OPENFORUM

Tibet, cont'd

mented a birth-control policy of "one child, one family."

The article that I am talking about also contains some other misleading, even simply false information. The article says that "no actual restoration work has been done" by the Chinese communist government to those monasteries which were destroyed in the years of "cultural revolution." This is false. The fact is that the Chinese communist government is really trying to restore those monasteries, for whatever purposes, and has already restored at least 75 of them. That article also says that "China has, over the years, adjusted its 'provincial' borders, always taking chunks of Tibet and assigning them to a different province" (emphasis original). This is also not true. At least, there is one case which is contradictory to the author's conclusion. Before the communists came to power in 1949, there was a province called 'Sikang' that lay between Tibet and its eastern neighbouring province 'Sichuan'. That province was then abolished by the communist government, and its territory was partially assigned to Sichuan and partially assigned to Tibet. That article also says that "the Chinese army holds some 300,000 troops in Tibet". This may be true but in context of the article, it seems to the readers that these troops are specifically designated to suppress the Tibetans. In fact, some unsettled border disputes between India and China are the most important reasons for China to maintain many troops in Tibet, as the latter is unfortunately located between the two countries.

-Z. G. Ren

What's the Sport of Queers?

Before I begin, I'd like to point out that The Third Text is open to anyone who is gay, lesbian or bisexual who has any comments about any issue concerning the LGB community. I've been told by some people that they like my column, but it's not MY column. It is an open forum for everyone at Queen's. Please feel free to submit something that is important to you. Now back to our regularly scheduled program.

I've just finished a book called The Dreyfus Affair (by Peter Lefcourt, published by Harper Perennial) about a Major League shortstop who falls in love with his second baseman. It was a humorous story about a man coming to terms with his sexual orientation in a very heterosexist society. There were a lot of funny scenes in the book, like Dreyfus, the shortstop, trying desperately to forget that he nearly got an erection while showering with his teammates, or the private detective his wife hires to find the woman whose handkerchief she found in her husband's laundry. None-the-less, the story is touching.

Randy Dreyfus, is very angry at the beginning of the book because of this erection he felt coming on in the showers in Cleveland. He refuses to believe that an All-American ball player like himself, who is married to a beautiful woman with two daughters, and has a shopping centre named after him could, as he put it, "be a leetic." As the book progresses, he begins to come to terms with his feelings and eventually becomes engrossed in the dilemma of what to do with his life... should he (or could he for that matter) go back to his wife and forget about all that has happened with D.J. Pickett, the second baseman, or should he start his life anew with his new lover and end his marriage? He forced to make a decision when his relationship is discovered by a security guard at a department store in Dallas. When the news of his being arrested on 'sodomy' charges hits the stands, all hell breaks loose for Randy and D.J. They are forced to make a choice. The commissioner of baseball threatens to expel them from baseball because they have committed an act that, as far as the commissioner was concerned, was 'conduct detrimental to the best interests of baseball.'

At times, while reading this book, I'd laugh. At other times, I'd get very angry. At one point, I was almost in tears because of the pain I felt for Randy and D.J. Nevertheless, there is a lot of truth to this story. There are many athletes in sports who, once they come out of the closet and disclose their true sexual identity, are chastised and forced to retire or give up their career. These athletes include Martina Navratilova or Greg Louganis.

Queers are everywhere, whether you like it or not. There are gays, lesbians and bisexuals in entertainment, law, engineering, the military, medicine and even sports. "...What's that, Biff? You don't think there's a gay man on your football team?" Well, I personally know for a fact that there are at least 5 or 6 people who have played on Queen's Varsity teams who happen to be queer. I'd love to disclose the teams that they played on, but that would violate a lot of trust that these people have instilled in me as well as placing their team status and safety on the line. I play a lot of recreational sports. I am a regular at the gym. I think the people that I play volleyball with know I'm gay but I'm never sure. The other day I had just finished working out and was brushing my teeth and wondering why the guys in the locker room were looking at me with such hostility. I realized, when I looked in the mirror, that I had forgot that I was wearing my T-shirt with the word FAG in 6 inch letters on the front.

Usual comments from people are "I don't want them showering with me!" "Why aren't there different showers for them?" "He just wants to see my dick." or "Be careful, he might jump you."

Sorry to break it to you boys, but I don't want to shower with you any more than you want to shower with me. I don't particularly like the misogynist, racist and homophobic shit that goes on in that locker room. As it stands now, there are only two locker rooms. I think it would be just a tad less acceptable for US QUEER MEN to shower with the women. I don't want to see your dick; I've seen my fair share. I've even got one of my own that I can stare at all I want. For the record, gay men are NOT attracted to every penis that walks the streets. We do have taste, in spite what some people might think.

Anyway, it is not easy being queer at this university. It is especially difficult if we don't fit the stereotypes that society places on us. Athletic queers sometimes find it more difficult because of the circumstances they are in to come to terms with their orientation.

Basil Girgrah, (Queen of the Nile)

STUDY IN SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA

Information Session on

Studying in Australia

is being conducted by

Dr. Joseph Relich

Director of Course Development

at the

UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN SYDNEY,

NEPEAN

Dr. Relich will be discussing opportunities in the Graduate Diploma of Education - Primary &

Graduate Diploma in Education - Secondary

Date: October 18, 1993, Queens University 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Stirling Hall Theatre A

Or Write: K.O.M. Consultants P.O. Box 60524, Hamilton Mountain Postal Outlet, Hamilton, ON, L9C 7N7 Tel/Fax 416 318 8200

DAILEY TRAVEL AGENCY

307 ALFRED STREET, 544-5755

READING WEEK TRIPS

Mexico

Club Maeva (all inclusive), Manzanillo.

Book now, space is limited

$955.00 2 per room

$915.00 3 per room

Tax $220.00

If booked and paid before Oct. 31, add discount of $50 per person.

Dominican Republic

Bocochica Resort (all inclusive)

$849.00 2 per room tax $193.00

Saturday Departure

$829.99 3 per room

Book now, space is limited

$819.00 4 per room

THE INDIA CANADA ASSOCIATION INSTITUTE OF WOMEN'S STUDIES THE HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE

CO-SPONSOR A LECTURE BY

SUNERA THOBANI

DIRECTOR, N.A.C. National Action Committee on the Status of Women

OCTOBER 19, 1993 At 8:00 P.M. IN GRANT HALL, QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

SPEAKING ON: "GLOBALIZATION: RACE AND GENDER IN THE 90'S"

Queen's MODEL PARLIMENT

Registration Sunday Oct. 17/93 7-9 MC D216

Sign up early to assure your spot.

The fun begins now... Come learn about politics, life & ...

Liberal

Peter Milliken Shares Yours Concerns

*Creating jobs and designing effective job training.

*Higher priority for education, research and development.

*Adequate and affordable child care.

Authorized by Michael Milligan,

Official Agent for Peter Milliken

Ring Days

ring days

October 21st, 22nd and 23rd

A representative from Jostens® Canada Ltd. will be at the Campus Bookstore for three days to take your order of a Queen's University ring. For over 20 years, Jostens® has been providing Queen's grads with lasting symbols of their time spent at one of the best known institutions in the country. Jostens®, with over 90 years of experience, can provide to you with personalized service and respected warranties. Jostens® products can be seen as the best value around. Why choose Jostens? Here is a list:

- Full lifetime warranty
- Free resizing for the lifetime of the ring
- High quality production
- Widest selection of styles including 8 different metal choices
- No jewellery store mark-ups
- Faculty crest customization available
- Delivery to any location
- Extended Service Agreement: an extra 3 years coverage should you ever lose your ring

JOSTENS CANADA LTD.

The Campus Bookstore is a non-profit business owned by Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc and is operated in the interests of the Queen's community

Clark Hall Weekdays 9 to 5 Saturday 10 to 4

Features

Well, we did it. The two women least likely to ever do something like this, and we did it. We got our bellybuttons pierced. For your information, edification, and clarification, we thought we would answer the most common questions that people ask us.

Q. Why did you do it?

Heather: It was something to do, a little act of rebellion. People think I am conservative and would never expect something like this from me. It is my way of shocking them. I figure that I will never get a tattoo or go bungee-jumping so this is my way to be a wild woman. I also had nothing better to do that

Q. How did she do it?

The woman who did the piercing, named Rebecca, invited us to her house one afternoon. It was dark, pretty clean, and full of animals - birds, cats, a dog. Her couch had a sheet draped over it and some chairs set around it. She talked to us for a minute, explained how she was going to do it, and marked where she was going to put the piercing with a felt pen.

I (Karen) went first - Heather wanted to watch before she went. I laid down on the couch, with my bellybutton exposed and ready. Rebecca wiped the whole area with Witch Hazel, and then went to wash her hands. She took a while, which gave me ample time to reconsider actually going through with it. I

navel gazing

Finally Rebecca came back, put on those latex gloves the people who make your sandwich at Mac-Corry always wear, and then pulled a really sharp, long, mean-looking needle out of a little blue case. I stopped looking at that point and it again, which stung a lot. To top it all off, I got a dinosaur band-aid to put on it. Heather didn't have much of a problem with it, except that she kept forgetting to breathe. She was really scared right before, and thought it would hurt. She kept asking herself why she was doing it, asking me why she was doing it. She just about crushed my hand holding it as the needle went through. In the end she said that it wasn't that painful at all, just uncomfortable and weird. Initially, we had some questions about the process. Heather was really concerned about the needles and disinfection and that kind of thing. Rebecca was really careful, though. She disinfected everything and wore gloves. The needles were brand-new, sharp, and sterile. Neither of us have an infection at this point, and we're sure that we didn't put ourselves at risk for anything.

"People's reactions vary. Most people think it is kind of neat or interesting, but it makes other people's skin crawl. Most guys see it and turn away wincing."

Actually, we know someone who has a genital piercing. Rebecca mentioned that yes, she does do genital piercings, and asked whether either of us wanted one. We politely declined, figuring that the bellybuttons were enough adventure for one afternoon.

Q. Didn't it hurt?

We had heard a few terrible stories that led us to believe that it would be really painful. We have one friend who used vice-grips to hold the skin together, and lost a broken needle inside his skin. It took him two hours to find it and get it out. Another friend did it herself and needed around half an hour to get the needle through her bellybutton.

But - lucky for us - it was really fast and only mildly uncomfortable. The closest thing we could think of is getting blood drawn, when the nurse has shaky hands and can't find your veins.

The weirdest thing was that after the needle was through and she turned around to get the earring, we had these needles through our bellybuttons. Putting the earring in and taking the needle out was definitely painful, but it was more just a disgusting feeling the needle slipped out and the hoop going in.

It's almost a week since we got it done, and it's a little sore and tender. We can't wear pants that rest on it, and it sometimes catches

"I laid down on the couch with my bellybutton exposed and ready."

on our shirts. It gets a little embarrassing to be playing with something under your shirt and wincing in the middle of class, or in the middle of Thanksgiving Dinner.

Q. What do people think?

People's reactions vary. Most people think it is kind of neat or interesting, but it makes other people's skin crawl. Most guys see it and turn away wincing. The most radical reaction was from one guy, who will remain nameless, who chose to bail out of a lengthy "friendship" with one of us because of our choice of bellybutton adornment.

Rebecca said that women have a higher pain tolerance than men, and the reaction of most of our guy friends would support that. They all looked queasy after seeing it.

Heather told her parents about it over Thanksgiving weekend. Her mom laughed and was happy that it wasn't a tattoo, while her dad said, "I guess there's worse places you could have gotten pierced." Karen's mom thought it was a really weird thing to do, but at least she won't actually see it until Christmas. Our housemate's parents chalked it up to peer pressure, and they're now all stressed out about her ability to keep her navel intact in the face of our very heavy "peer pressure" on her to get it done.

People seem really shocked that we got it done, like it's really strange to get our bellybuttons pierced. "It's a lot more common out West," I say. I guess we don't really seem the type to have body piercing, but that's the best thing about it. Nobody knows we had it done except for the people we told - it's our little secret. The next time you pass a "typical" Queen's girl at Mac-Corry or see one at Alfie's - remember that there may be a lot you don't know about her!

Karen and Heather are looking for men with body piercing fetishes.

cross my heart and hope to die, stick a needle through my...

Trina Bowman

afternoon. Karen: a good friend of mine did it a few weeks ago, and thought he was so tough. Keep in mind he used vice-grips [see below]. It's something I wanted to do for a long time, and I thought that if he could do it, it couldn't be that bad. Besides, it gives me something to think about other than ... all the reading I haven't done.

contemplated running out the door, as my heart rate soared to around 200. "I felt a needle prick, and then she turned around to get the jewelry, with the needle stuck through my bellybutton."

instead thought about the huge doberman right next to my head and just what he thought about this piercing thing. I felt a needle prick, and then she turned around to get the jewelry, while the needle was still stuck through my bellybutton. She put the hoop in and I could feel it scratching around inside as she pulled out the needle. It didn't hurt at all once she had the earring in. She put Witch Hazel on you are a child of the universe and we are sticking a needle through you

The Perforata

For the record, I remain among the unperforated. I've gone over the reasons many times: It's a good way to achieve true Weirdo status, it's a way to declare my independence from the lotus-eaters all around me, I've pissed off my parents lots of times - why not once more and women will chase after me like lawyers after ambulances.

Pain is the obstacle I cannot surmount, the Rubicon I cannot cross, the child-proof cap I cannot open. If only my nerves and ganglia would even let me consider the sacrament of piercing! Then I would be cool, I would command respect wherever I went, drop my keyboard and take up the guitar. And drop computer science for something macho, like meat packing - hur, hur hur! But truth be told, I'm a wimp (cue violin music, violent sobbing).

For weenies only

Ear piercing: There are three insertion areas - the lobe, the tragus (the part joining the ear to your head) or the cartilage, which is anywhere else on the ear. Low-impact, split-level subdivision fare best left to spoeking your 105-year-old great aunt.

Nose: Two options - through the side of the nose or through the septum (the wall between your nostrils). It is said to be erotic; I must say that some women look downright cute with a nose stud. It has also been condemned as cultural appropriation by some and as the "rat tails of the nineties" by others. Either way, it's a snare for boogers.

"Yeah, I'm a player"

Piercings

Eyebrow: The new number one choice of the Goth (the ones who wear all black) and Grunge (the ones who used to wear all black) crowds. Still new enough to be really daring, still far away enough from major nerve bundles to be feasible for most people.

Madonna: Done in the same location as Madonna Louise Ciccone's beauty mark, it too is a booger snare.

Labret: Through the dimple on your chin. Makes shaving difficult for men; may be irritating if you wear bicycles helmets or the like.

Serious nerve ending territory

Tongue: This piercing got major exposure through George Michael's Killer/Papa Was a Rolling Stone video. You'll talk lakb thith fuh uh mthh and kissing you will feel like smooching a combine harvester. The piercing will feel like licking a jackhammer.

Nipple: To quote Select magazine - "Breast feeding with a shower head attachment!"

Navel: Cleaning this sucker gives me a sensation that makes my toes curl, never mind running a sharp metallic object! Perhaps you could keep a spare house key on this ring...

For women who run with the wolves

Fouchette: What the Jerry Lewis addicts on the continent call a pierce through the perineum, the soft bit of skin at the base of the vagina. Sounds like it could catch on your underwear.

Labia: Inner or outer? Decisions, decisions... Clitoris: AIEEEEE!

It don't mean a thing if you ain't got that thing

Pubic Piercing: This is done at the top of the base of the penis, so you can quickly flash it to your buddies at the pool.

Foreskin: Circumcision with a punk edge, this is like a curtain ring that gathers the whole smear at the top.

Frenum: The tiny bit of skin joining the foreskin to the rest of the plumbing. You will probably have to be duct-taped down while they pierce you.

Prince Albert: Through the urethra (like those fiber-optic cameras they use on shows like The Body Human) and out from underneath. Named after Queen Victoria's ami de shagge who allegedly had one. He even tied a ribbon to it - so they say. You will urinate in two streams, which could be great for winning bets.

Ampallang: The little barbell doohickey that runs through either side of the "head". It looks Shwarzenegarian; you will probably not survive being struck by lightning (most people are hit on the zipper, since the charge actually travels from the ground up).

Hafada: This baby has another name, the Bag Pierce. Don't even breathe while getting pierced, lest the family jewels get blemished.

Guiche: Also known as the New Man's Pierce, this is on the bit of skin behind the testicles. You'll have to sell your Harley and keep your underwear free of snags, but the ultra-mode people are always willing to sacrifice comfort for style, n'est-ce pas?

There is also anal piercing, but this is regarded as infinitely more dangerous than the perforations listed here. Leave it alone.

There you have it - a compendium of the piercing styles. Pick your poison, prepare for piercing and pray it doesn't go septic. Great are the rewards given to the brave fashion pioneer. I'll just stand aside and chase the freshly pierced with my iodine squirt gun.

This catalogue was compiled by Joey DeVilla who is a rabid food fetishist and loves to play "human éclair."

AMS Assembly Grants

Applications for Assembly Grants will be ready for pick up on Monday, November 1st.

'The Deadline' for applications is 12:00pm Thursday, November 11th.

Each application must be accompanied by a short proposal explaining how the grant money will be used.

Interviews will be held November 13th & 14th.

S.T.A.R. PROUDLY PRESENTS A QUEEN'S HOMECOMING TRADITION: A.S.A.P.!

AT LAST! Back Again!

Another Student Afternoon at the Pub will give you the opportunity to go to the Quiet Pub or Alfie's to party it up with an Alumni, and we'll pay for you to buy your buddy a FREE DRINK! No this is not a dream, it's absolutely FREE!

REGISTRATION AT MAC CORRY
WED.-THURS: OCT. 13-14
MON.-WED: OCT. 18-20

ASUS

Become a Bogger!
Deliver balloon-o-grams
and raise $$$ for charity!!

Miss your grandparents?
Join Triple A and make a new old friend.

Wanna see a different sub-culture?
Join Prison Visitations!

Join Kidz 4 Kidz
Help raise money for sick kids at Hotel Dieu Hospital

Embarass your friends!
Get a balloon-o-gram delivered to their class!

call the ASUS CORE at 545-6278 for more information about any of the above committees

NOTICE

1993 ALUMNI WEEKEND FOOTBALL GAME

NOTE

For the October 23rd Alumni Weekend football game ALL students will be admitted to Richardson Stadium by ticket only.

Tickets can be picked up at NO CHARGE from Tuesday, October 19th to Thursday, October 21st between the hours of 9:00 am and 4:00 pm and Friday, October 22nd from 9:00 am to 8 pm from the Physical Education Centre Main Administration Office.

In order to pick up their game ticket, students must present their student card at the above location. There is a limit of one ticket per student card.

Tickets will be issued on a first-come first-serve basis, so be sure to pick up your ticket early, as a limited number of tickets are available.

Any student tickets not distributed after 8:00 pm on Friday on October 22nd will be available on a first-come first-serve basis commencing at 12:00 noon Saturday, October 23rd from the east side ticket kiosk at George Richardson Stadium.

PLEASE NOTE: NO ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES are permitted in Richardson Stadium. NO PERSON will be admitted to Richardson Stadium who is apparently under the influence of alcohol. Any person found in the Stadium who is apparently under the influence of alcohol will be removed from the Stadium. Persons entering the Stadium may be subject to a personal search.

Spectators entering onto the playing field, or running track area prior to, during the game, at half-time, or AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE GAME will be removed from the Stadium and charged by the University with trespass.

Alumni Weekend '93

The point is to have a good time with friends.

That's why thousands of Queen's alumni — including some who graduated in 1923 — and their families will be back on campus for Alumni Weekend '93.

Some of you will join alumni at events, some of you will do your own thing with friends — and if "your own thing" includes partying, party smart. That means having a good time and allowing the people next door to enjoy their weekend their own way.

AMS Alumni Weekend Hotline
545-6293

Campus Observation Room (Detox) Victoria Hall
545-6078

Watch next Friday's Journal for the Alumni Weekend '93 FREE FOOD GIVEAWAY!

Sports

Frank & Earnest

Magic Numbers from around the sports world

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

In baseball, a magic number indicates the sum of wins needed by a team that's leading, added to losses by the closest chasing team, that the leader needs to clinch a title. Here are a few other magic numbers, relevant to recent sports events and trends.

911 — New York Mets. The Mets, with a record of 59-103, are arguably the biggest flop in professional sports history. With a payroll of $42 million, they somehow managed to finish behind the Colorado Rockies, an expansion team with a salary budget of $11 million. Even with the expansion Florida Marlins and the fire-sale San Diego Padres also in the NL, the Mets finished with the worst record in baseball. If the Mets were an English soccer team, relegation to a lower division would be imminent. In a how-low-can-you-go insult, Riverfront Stadium in Cincinnati has been selling a special hot dog named — wait for it — MET-WURST!!

2004 — Beijing Olympic Committee. It's wait until next time for Beijing, which lost the 2000 Summer Olympics to rival Sydney, Australia. In the wake of the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre, China didn't help its cause with the IOC by threatening a boycott of the 1996 Atlanta Games if Beijing didn't win the 2000 bid. Rapid Chinese reforms aside, perhaps Beijing will get the Games when outracing tanks and performing gymnastics around Uzi bullets become sanctioned Olympic events.

4,483,350 — Colorado Rockies. That's the number of fans who attended the 81 home games of the Rockies in their inaugural season. It's not only an all-time record for baseball, breaking the Blue Jays' new AL record of 4,057,947, but the Rockies' mark is a record for any team, anywhere, in any sport. After a slow start, Colorado, spurred on by NL batting champion Andres Galarraga, also broke the NL record of 65 wins by a first-year expansion team.

100,000 — Ottawa Senators. That's as in dollars, the fine that Senators' ex-chairman Bruce Firestone had to pay after Ottawa media charged that the Senators conspired to throw their last regular-season game so they could finish last overall and draft top pick Alexandre Daigle. This fine is NOT going to help the Senators' image as they endeavor to arrange financing to build the long-delayed Palladium on land they own near Kanata. The Senators' actions are a strong argument for the NHL to adopt an NBA-style draft lottery.

26 (or is it 27, or 28?) — National Hockey League. That's the number of teams which opened play in the NHL season last week. Even rabid hockey fans are having trouble keeping pace with the league's third expansion in three seasons. The Florida Panthers and the Anaheim Lame (oops — Mighty!) Ducks played their first-ever games, while the Minnesota North Stars have moved to Dallas and become simply Stars (that's a matter of opinion).

37 and counting — York Yeomen football. That's consecutive games lost by the woeful Yeomen, who last won on Oct. 1, 1988. No player currently on the York roster has ever won while at York.

429 — Sylvie Frechette. That's the number of days this Canadian synchronized swimmer had to wait before a scoring error from the 1992 Barcelona Olympics was finally corrected. Frechette will get the gold medal that she rightfully earned, thanks to the non-stop efforts of Dick Pound, Canada's representative on the IOC, who battled and won against American sports bureaucrats.

$65 million — Orlando Magic's Anfernee Hardaway. That's the amount of money the NBA's Magic will be paying the rookie point guard in a 13-year contract. Hardaway has yet to play a minute in the NBA.

And finally, one MAGIC number that DIDN'T come up. Magic Johnson's bid to win an NBA franchise for Toronto lost out to a bid by the John Bitove group, who will bring the Toronto Towers (no, the name's not official yet) into the NBA for the 1995-96 season.

Sweet soccer surge

Gaels move to third place following win over Laurentian

BY DAN MCNAIR
The Queen's Journal

The Carleton Ravens soccer team is currently ranked second in the country. They are undefeated, hold a commanding lead in the OUA, and earlier in the season defeated Queen's 4-1 in convincing fashion. During that game it seemed that no amount of preparation could have readied the new and inexperienced Queen's rookies for Carleton's intensely physical style of play; as a result, the Gaels were overwhelmed.

Since that game, the Gaels' rookies' level of confidence and experience have increased dramatically. Last week they were eager to show the Ravens that a repeat performance would not be an easy task.

The Gaels' willingness to attack Carleton was evident from the start. Defensively, their concentration faltered and they allowed the Ravens' Mike McCaffrey and Chris Staccato to exploit the weakness and score two early goals. At half-time, the score stood at 2-0 for the Ravens.

The second half was marked by constant Queen's pressure, and their diligence was soon rewarded. Carleton was forced to concede a corner which defender Rick Boongardt converted with a powerful header.

The ferocity with which the Carleton defense has often been heralded seemed to fade rapidly, as Queen's striker Ken Butler provoked mistake after mistake. That led to some defensive confusion that provided occasion for another Queen's set play. A long throw by Dan Cheney resulted in a goal that was credited to Brendan Johnson for a challenge that elicited the defensive error. Final score: Queen's 2, Carleton 2.

The next game against Laurentian represented a must-win situation for Queen's, the Gaels could move into a third-place tie with the Vees with a victory. The complexion of the game was very similar to the teams' previous meeting, in that Queen's controlled the majority of the match. The results this time were much more positive. Queen's again looked to utilize their set plays that were so effective against Carleton. A poorly-handled corner allowed Queen's rookie Chris Turner to collect the clearance and thread a precise pass as the Laurentian defenders converged upon him. The pass was struck emphatically by Brendan Johnson giving Queen's a 1-0 lead. Striker Jonathan Soler was back in the Queen's line-up after serving his one-game suspension, and was eager to answer some questions concerning his goal-scoring prowess. Soler's response was swift — he pounced on a throughball by Dan Cheney that the Laurentian defense missed. Soler beat the keeper from 18 yards, giving Queen's a commanding 2-0 lead.

Gaels defenders Rick Boongardt, Nick Thomas, and Marc Labrom were outstanding on the day, as they nullified any Laurentian attempt to get back into the game. A penalty awarded to Laurentian late in the game proved insignificant, as the Gaels went on to win 2-1, and moved into a tie for third place.

Gaels end skid, down Ravens 26-8

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

(OTTAWA) Queen's Golden Gaels stopped a three-game losing streak in convincing fashion last Saturday, defeating the Carleton Ravens 26-8 at Raven Field in

Ottawa. The Gaels, now 2-3, forced themselves back into the OQIFC playoff race, and stand in a three-way tie for third place with the Ravens and the McGill Redmen with two games left. The top four teams make the playoffs. Queen's will

Gaels have no quitters

It would have been easy for Queen's to throw in the towel for this game. They were playing on an abysmally wet, raw and windy day, on the road, and on a slippery field. On top of this, the team was mourning the death of coaching legend Frank Tindall, who coached Queen's for 29 years. In addition, the Gaels have lost All-Canadian tailback Brad Elberg to injury the previous week; it seemed the Gaels were really up against it. But Queen's moved to salvage their season with their strongest overall 1993 performance. They held the Ravens to only 78 yards of total offense while piling up 370 yards themselves, and were in control most of the game.

Elberg, who has been walking without crutches for a week, and is working hard to rehabilitate a damaged ankle ligament in time for a possible late-season return to action, agreed that this was a critical win. "We proved that there are no quitters on this team," the 1992 Crighton nominee stated. "Everyone gave it everything they had."

Queen's started out into a 35-km/hr northwest wind which drove a chilling rain into their faces, and were unable to achieve much in the first quarter. Carleton claimed their only lead, 1-0 on a booming 68-yard downwind punt single.

Oh, brother, what a game!
But the Gaels got going when the teams changed ends, scoring 13

Gaels in action against Carleton earlier this season.

Marika Glickman

Intramurals: Flying Disks???

BY ROY CAMP
The Queen's Journal

A billion things have happened since the last article, as events have been running rapidly in the intramural department.

In the BEWIC area both the Tennis and Softball tournaments finished up on Sunday the 3rd. In the finals of the BEWIC Tennis, the team of Marc Zucker and Jacqui Wong prevailed over Michael Chan and Sandy Lip. It was a hard fought match with many lead changes before Zucker and Wong took the lead to stay.

In BEWIC Softball my prediction came true, as PHE met up with Emotional Ketchup Burst in the finals. Funny how the Education and Rehab teams who took such exception to my forecast in the paper failed to prevent its realization. In what was a close game, Emotional Ketchup Burst prevailed with one big inning and then held on despite some strong rallies by PHE. Ultimate Frisbee is also happening in the BEWIC front with clinics and pick-up games happening Tuesdays and Wednesdays at 4:00 till 5:30 on Tindall Field. These clinics will help prepare you for the big Tournament on Saturday the 16th (tomorrow).

In BEWS action both the Golf and Bewsball tournaments have been completed two weeks ago. In Golf it was Jeremy "I want my own team" Blumer of Comm'95 coming up with the low score to win the individual title while the team title was won in a close race by Comm'94. In the Bewsball Tournament, PHE did their best including stretching the eventual champions to a final deciding game but in the end Comm'95 prevailed to win.

This past week, starting immediately after Turkey Day the BEWS sport Indoor Soccer and the WIC Floor Hockey have commenced their seasons. There are several upcoming events on the intramural calendar so pay attention.

Starting Monday Oct 18th, the BEWS basketball season will begin. Check the BEWS Board for details on game times. Also beginning next week is the WIC ringette schedule. This three week tournament will be followed by an early start to WIC hockey. The WIC Board can provide all the necessary info on game times.

Also coming soon to the WIC program are WIC-athons. A WIC-athon is an individual sport divided into three separate categories of jogging, swimming, and skating. During the week of Oct 24th, every female individual who wants to tally her respective totals in each area (ie: laps in swimming, circuits in jogging and skating) can enter her results on the WIC Board. The leader in each category wins. Also unit values are tallied for team points, so feel free to participate.

Also upcoming are two co-ed tournaments. Both BEWIC curling and competitive volleyball are occurring in the near future. The curling will take place on the weekend of Nov 6th but there is a mandatory meeting on Oct 27th. So start getting your team together now (two guys and two girls). After all curling is the most fun you can legally have on a public ice surface.

The BEWIC Competitive Volleyball Tournament is the week of Oct 30th and the mandatory meeting is on Wed Oct. 20th at 6pm in room 205 in the PEC. Get your team lists and your $40 bonds for the meeting and then be prepared to spike your way to the top.

RUGBY NEWS

MURRAY FLUKOWA
The Queen's Journal

The firsts played Western, and the seconds did too! The respective scores were 19-6 and 7-6. Queen's dusted the Mustangs fairly efficiently (maybe it's their German work ethic).

York cancelled next week's game so the second team has locked up first place. When asked to comment on the game, our mystery player noted that "...our offense was good and their defense was bad."

Rugby, as mentioned elsewhere in the section, action continues tomorrow on Kingston field at 1:00pm. Forget about midterms because it is time to throw the real pigskin around.

SCORE BOARD

RUGBY/Queen's is on top of their division in Rugby with an awesome 110 pts for.

DIV 1:	W	L	F	A	TP
Queen's	4	1	110	45	8
McMaster	4	1	88	45	8
Guelph	3	2	58	68	6
Western	2	3	63	69	4
York	1	4	61	101	2
Waterloo	1	4	56	108	2

Tomorrow there is a rugby game at 1:00pm on Kingston field so have a beer and go, don't be late or the coach gets irate!

GOLF/ Gord Percy gets elected to the first team all stars in Golf. The rowing regatta this weekend was cancelled, unfortunate but everybody got to sleep in for once.

WATERPOLO/ Men's Water Polo action was quiet but noisy; the standings speak for themselves.

	W	L	F	A	TP
Toronto	3	0	45	22	6
Queen's	2	0	21	10	4
McMaster	2	1	44	31	4
Carleton	1	1	16	20	2
Western	1	2	45	41	2
Ottawa	0	2	14	21	0
York	0	3	18	58	0

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK/ This week's Athlete of the Week goes to Queen's men's rugby team captain, Garth Pettigrew. During Queen's game against the University of Western Ontario this past Friday, Pettigrew scored seven of Queen's seventeen points. With one try, one conversion, and setting up another try, this outstanding player was a major force behind Queen's victory. According to coach Dr. Alastair Ferguson, Pettigrew is probably "the leading scorer in OUA rugby."

Golfing Gaels third at OUA finals

Percy loses playoff, ends with silver

BY FRANK DIXON
The Queen's Journal

The Queen's golf team closed out a consistent 1993 season with a solid third-place finish at the two-day OUA golf championship last week at Blue Springs Golf Club in Acton.

Gaels' star Gord Percy, with rounds of 78 and 75, tied for the overall individual lead with Bill Seagris of Windsor after 36 holes of play on the challenging, water-strewn course. But in a heart-breaking sudden-death playoff with Seagris, Percy lost on the first extra hole when, hitting from a downhill lie, he bunkered his approach shot and was unable to salvage par. However, Percy was named an OUA All-Star for the second time. It was also the second time that he wound up as OUA silver medallist, repeating his 1990 achievement. Percy was trying to become the first Queen's golfer since Mark Siemonsen in 1977 to win an OUA individual title. Percy will be back next year to try one more time.

Windsor also captured team honours with a two-day score of 628 shots, counting the best four scores from five players each day. That was good for a six-stroke margin over runner-up Guelph. Queen's finished at 642, three shots ahead of fourth-place Western. Ten schools competed.

Contestants battled cold, windy weather, with 90-minute frost delays holding up the start of play on both days. Temperatures remained below 10 degrees throughout the tournament. Challenging conditions have developed into something of a tradition in this event over the years.

All Queen's players tried their best over the difficult course, and have reason to be proud of their efforts. Chris Seitz (81-79), Darrin Parker (82-83), Robin Hutchinson (85-81), and Derrick Dupuis (84-82) each turned in solid performances. This is fall golf, with cold temperatures, acrated greens and piles of leaves lying around. Shortened evenings and classwork cut practice time down almost to nothing. All Gaels normally shoot scores in the 70's during the summer months.

Queen's head coach Ed Deans noted that his team played well in each event it entered in 1993. "We had a second, two thirds and a fourth place," Deans said. "Remember, Guelph has their own golf course on campus, with unlimited free practice available to their team. Windsor travels around and plays more golf than anybody. Although each of our players felt he could do better, we have to be happy with our season."

[Eds. Note: Golf was a game invented in Scotland, so offer the team members a bottle of Scotch!]

Northwestern College of Chiropractic is now accepting applications for its next three entering classes.

(April 1994, September 1994, January 1995)

General requirements at time of entry include:

- Approx. 2-3 years of college in a life or health science degree program.
- A minimum G.P.A. of 2.5. A more competitive G.P.A. is favored.
- A personal interest in a career as a primary care physician.

Northwestern offers:

- A professional school of 500 students with student faculty ratio of 12:1.
- A well-rounded education in Basic and Clinical Sciences, Diagnosis, X-ray, and Chiropractic.
- Full accreditation by North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and the Council on Chiropractic Education.

Call: 1-800-888-4777 or Write: Director of Admissions
2501 West 84th Street, Minneapolis, MN 55431

We have something for all your special occasions
Come in and visit us first!

CAREER GIRL
542-2026 SPECIAL OCCASIONS PARTY TRENDS

Pigskin pirates

Continued from page 19

points with the wind in the second quarter. Following an interception by Queen's deep back Arron Campbell, quarterback Steve Othen connected with his brother, rookie receiver Paul Othen, on a 24-yard touchdown strike. It was the first of two Othen-to-Othen majors on the day, and was followed by a very similar play in the fourth quarter which put the game out of reach.

Steve Othen, in his strongest game yet, took advantage of the Ravens' man-to-man coverage to complete 13 of 29 passes for 251 yards and three touchdowns, and had only one interception. The Gaels' quarterback, who reclaimed the starting job he had lost the previous game, found reliable targets in veteran tight end Dan McCullough (4 catches for 52 yards), consistent veteran Ed Kidd (5 for 54) and standout All-Star slotback Paul Kozan (2 for 98, including a thrilling 63-yard third-quarter touchdown). Kozan added 41 valuable rushing yards on four carries.

Extra points
The Gaels will wear the initials "F.T." on their helmets for the rest of this season, in memory of Frank Tindall.

Head coach Doug Hargreaves will be retiring following the 1994 season, according to a story published by The Ottawa Citizen and confirmed by Queen's SID Cheryl Gross.

If you tuned in to CFRC on Saturday, expecting the Gaels' broadcast, you were disappointed. According to Gaels' announcer Mark Bischoff, the Carleton game was not broadcast because of CFRC budget cutbacks and the increased cost of setting up a telephone line. However, all remaining games will be carried by CFRC.

Carleton was unable to generate anything significant on offense, scoring their only touchdown late in the game following an interception.

With Queen's running backs Elberg, Don Rowrick and Jim Clarkin all lost to injury, and with Kozan playing mostly at slotback, the Gaels were down to the sixth back on their depth chart when they started Jonathan Taylor at tailback. Taylor saw his first sustained action and responded well, carrying 16 times for 81 yards.

Defensively, the Gaels were buoyed by the strong return of rush end Jamie Lewin, who figured in eight tackles after missing two games with a knee problem. But perhaps the best Queen's defender on the field was defensive back Mark Morrison. The crafty veteran, often underrated, not only added eight tackles of his own and helped hold Carleton to only six pass completions from three quarterbacks, but returned seven punts for 51 yards.

"The conditions today were about as tough as you'll ever see," Morrison said. "It gives you confidence when you can come through."

McCullough the Mudder
McCullough again proved to be at his best in nasty weather. Offensive coordinator Bob Howes pointed to McCullough's leadership this season. "Dan's played well all year. On a day like that, he's got those soft hands to pull in the tough catches," McCullough also got into the game as a backup snapper for a field goal attempt.

Carleton was unable to generate anything significant on offense, scoring their only touchdown late in the game following an interception.

With Queen's running backs Elberg, Don Rowrick and Jim Clarkin all lost to injury,

Attention all past users of rooms 230, 231 and 232 in the JDUC

All clubs or groups who have used rooms 230, 231 and 232 and still have items stored in those spaces ... must remove their belongings by Friday, October 29, 1993. Anything remaining in these rooms after this date will be recycled or discarded. This includes furniture, files, boxes, equipment ... in fact everything. These rooms are undergoing renovation as of November 1, 1993 and will subsequently be reallocated as shared clubs' space. Thank you for your cooperation. If you have any questions, or wish to arrange access to the rooms, please contact the clubs' managers at the Internal Affairs Office 545-2725, ext. 4815

These rooms will be open

Wednesday, October 20	2:30 - 4:30
Friday, October 22	12:30 - 2:30
Wednesday, October 27	2:30 - 4:30
Friday, October 29	10:00 - 3:00

HOCKEY POOL

This year's hockey pool is fun and exciting and costs five bucks.

THE RULES:

- 1) Pick ten players, one from each category plus a team that you think will have the lowest GGA.
- 2) Drop your selections off at the Journal House (272 Earl St.) in a box that is on the Sports desk.
- 3) Your picks must be dropped off by the Friday (22nd) before Homecoming with the Cn$5.00 entry fee.
- 4) The winner will get to choose the charity of choice that the funds will be donated to.
- 5) We will periodically update statistics.
- 6) Goals, Assists and GGA factor into your score. GGA is multiplied by one hundred and subtracted from the sum of assists and goals.
- 7) In the event of a tie, a coin toss will determine the winner.

The Queen's Journal Hockey Pool Entry Form

SUPERSTARS:

- Mario Lemieux (PIT)
- Eric Lindros (PHL)
- Wayne Gretzky (LA)
- Steve Yzerman (DET)
- Doug Gilmour (Cupbound)

ENFORCERS:

- Stu Grimson (AHM)
- Gino Odjick (VAN)
- Marty McSorley (PIT)
- Ken Baumgartner (Cupbound)
- Shaynette Corson (Habs'been)

GOOD GUYS (EXCEPT ONE):

- Sergei Federov (DET)
- Raymond Bourque (BOS)
- Al MacInnis (CAL)
- Geek Carboneau (Centre Hice)
- Luc Robitaille (LA)

SPHINCTERS:

- Esa Tikkanen (NYR)
- Ulf Samuelsson (PIT)
- Claude Lemieux (NJ)
- Rick Tocchet (PIT)
- Bob Probert (DET)

GOOD GUYS II:

- Wendel Clark (Cupbound)
- Pat Lafontaine (BUF)
- Adam Oates (BOS)
- Joe Juneau (BOS)
- Brett Hull (STL)

HARD WORKERS:

- Mark Messier (NYR)
- Dave Andreychuk (Cupbound)
- Chris Chelios (CHI)
- Dale Hawerchuck (BUF)
- Al Iafrate (Wsh)

TALENTS (EXCEPT ONE):

- Pavel Bure (VAN)
- Pierre Turgeon (NYI)
- Jeremy Roenick (CHI)
- Kevin Stevens (PIT)
- Vincent Damphousse (Traitor)

Name you would like to be called

(no more than 8 letters)

Name: _____

Address: _____

Phone number: _____

I pick the _____
to have the lowest GGA.

WHO KNOWS?:

- Teemu Selanne (WIN)
- Jaromir Jagr (PIT)
- Paul Coffey (DET)
- Kevin Dineen (PHL)
- Joe Sakic (QBC)

EXPANSION:

- Pat Falloon (SJ)
- Scott Levins (FLA)
- Denice Savard (TB)
- Terry Yake (AHM)
- Alexandre Daigle (OTT)

Longshots:

- Brent Gretzky (TB)
- Ron Hextall (QBC)
- Gary Leeman (he sux)
- Andy van Hellemond (?)
- Enrico Ciccone (WSH)

Entertainment

A life and death on the razor's edge

Stepping Razor - Red X
Directed by Nicholas Campbell
Princess Court Cinema
BY FITZ BRUNDAGE
The Queen's Journal

Outspoken, arrogant, and charismatic, Peter Tosh was reggae's "Rude Boy." Together with Bob Marley and Bunny Wailer, Tosh formed the Wailers, the most influential group in reggae history. While Bunny Wailer became reggae's griot, and Bob Marley Rastafarianism's evangelist, Tosh assumed the voice of an Old Testament prophet. Above all, he ignored the advice - Simmer Down! Until his murder in 1987, he railed against "the shitstem," "transgression," and all manner of injustice.

Canadian actor Nicholas Campbell's documentary Stepping Razor - Red X vividly captures Tosh's "rude boy" character. Tosh, while preparing to write his autobiography, recorded the rambling life-stories that serve as the film's narrative. Concert footage, interviews with Tosh and friends, and a re-enactment of Tosh's murder fill out the documentary. The film transposes Tosh's often poignant ruminations about poverty, exploitation and his own life against a backdrop of haunting scenes of Trenchtown poverty. Inevitably, the film takes on the intensity of its subject. Tosh's Pentecostal-inspired certitude in approaching End Times fused with Rastafarian mysticism, producing a white-hot spirituality. For Tosh, the forces of evil were not Biblical abstractions. He never doubted that he was a participant in a cataclysmic struggle between good and evil. His life-long militancy was his response to the seriousness of that struggle.

Tosh's militancy was never more evident than following the famed "One Love" Peace Concert held to end political violence during the 1976 elections in Jamaica. Bob Marley, Tosh's former partner, now rival and headliner at the concert, preached love and peace. He even succeeded in staging a symbolic handshake between Jamaica's contending political bosses, Michael Manley and Edward Seaga. Tosh would have nothing of it. In one of the film's highlights, Tosh later scolded the concert organizers and the audience:

Peter Tosh looking spliffy.

"This concert here is a Peace Concert. I never want to come. You know why? Cause why. Was a Peace concert. I wonder if many people realize what the word 'peace' mean. Peace is the diploma you get in the cemetery."

Beyond conveying Tosh's militancy, the film also offers a galloping history of reggae music. During his three decades as a musician, Tosh's music evolved from American R&B-inspired ska and "rude boy music" to rock steady and then reggae. Interviews and the film's soundtrack document the growing influence of Rastafarianism and indigenous Jamaican musical traditions upon Tosh.

A looming presence both in Tosh's formative years and in the film is Bob Marley. Clips of the young Wailers - clean-shaven and dreadlock-free - and footage of the early recording sessions offer fascinating glimpses into the crucible of modern reggae. The film also captures Tosh's bitterness and condescension towards Marley, who Tosh claimed "would always be my student." We learn little about the specific reasons for the Wailers' break-up, but the corrosive effects of jealousy and ambition are apparent enough.

By the 1970s, with his militant politics in place and his musical skills honed after a decade of jamming and recording with the Wailers, Tosh was poised to take his place as a reggae superstar. But, as the film explains, Tosh's personality hindered his art. Record companies shied away from him, and when he did record he produced mixed results. His best songs - "Legalize It," "Downpressor Man," and "Equal Rights" - grafted his political philosophy to the chugging, syncopated rhythms of reggae. But his shortcomings as a songsmith are evident as well. Some of his songs, for example his cover of Chuck Berry's "Johnny B. Goode" shown in the film, were laboured. His later albums suggest that he may have wandered into an artistic cul-de-sac, unable to broaden and deepen the reggae idiom (as, for example, Bunny Wailer and Burning Spear have). Even so, Tosh was foremost a prophet. However much music infused his life, it was the medium he adopted for his message rather than the message itself.

Tosh's conspiratorial rantings form a thread running through the movie's ricocheting narrative. Though almost certainly ganja-enriched, Tosh's conspiracy theories were not hallucinations. Rastafarians had endured decades of harassment at the hands of Jamaican police. Tosh himself had suffered police beatings and intimidation long before his 1987 murder. And in 1976 Bob Marley had nearly been assassinated, quite possibly because of his outspoken politics. Much of the film is devoted to recreating the context and even re-enacting his murder. The motive behind the murder remains contested, and Campbell gives free expression to competing theories about it. As Campbell conceded to Maclean's recently, "There's no way of getting to the bottom of it."

By the film's close, Campbell has skilfully sketched the nuances of Tosh's enigmatic personality. What emerges is a man of enduring compassion and tireless sanctimoniousness, of prophetic eloquence and petty egoism. Unintentionally, a Rastafarian elder in the film provides a fitting epitaph for Peter Tosh's life. "Word, sound, and power. That's what we use against Babylon. Word, sound and power."

Double Sting for Police fans

The Police
Message In A Box
A&M Records

Sting
Demolition Man
A&M Records
BY JAMES KEAST
The Queen's Journal

Two recent releases have emphasized the great contradiction in the legacy of one of the superstars of our MTV/MuchMusic generation. On one hand Sting's brilliant songwriting and hard-core musical exploration has spanned genres and smashed their assumptions, while conversely, he often indulges in rampant commercialism with a seemingly quick willingness to sell out.

A&M Records has just let loose with two releases which highlight this disparity: Message In A Box includes everything The Police ever recorded, including some brilliant songs unreleased on any of their five albums, rare live recordings, and all digitally remastered - as well as all five albums in their entirety, almost five hours of music in total. While for Demolition Man Sting has let his crasser instincts prevail, returning to the studio to update his original version of "Demolition Man" - yes, you guessed it, to serve as the title track for the Stallone/Snipes just released new movie vehicle.

Although Sting has done lots of soundtrack work before - the Police did three songs several years ago for Brimstone and Treacle, in which Sting also "acted," as well as recent compositions "It's Probably Me" and "Shape of My Heart" appearing in movies (Lethal Weapon 3, and Three of Hearts, respectively) this latest gaff seems particularly galling - I mean, he didn't even have to write a song, he just mailed in some new vocals, added huge production, a million back-up vocalists and BOOM, it's a new hit. Just wait for the Hollywood-heavy accompanying video, and backorders for Ghost in the Machine, the Police album on which the song originally appeared, will skyrocket.

An artist going for the bucks is nothing new, and Sting certainly didn't invent it. And despite being a much more widely respected artist, he's still consistently outsold by the likes of Mike Jackson, "Witless" Houston, and Kenny

Please see COMPREHENSIVE pg. 24

SPEND A YEAR IN JAPAN

About 350 Canadians will spend a year in Japan as Assistant English Teachers beginning August 1, 1994

The 1994 Japan Exchange and Teaching (JET) Programme

The JET Programme is an international youth exchange sponsored by the Government of Japan. Candidates must have a university degree by the end of June 1994, hold Canadian Citizenship and, in principle, be under 35 years of age. Participants will receive approximately CND $3,000 per month.

Please do not send resumes. For more information and an application form please contact:

Embassy of Japan
JET Office: (613) 232-7613

Application deadline is December 3, 1993.

Representatives will be on campus as part of the "Crossing Borders" International Work/Study Abroad Fair in Wallace Hall - JDUC, Thursday, October 21. A seminar will be held the same day at 10:30 a.m. in McLaughlin Room, JDUC.

The Light in the Dark

Exhibit highlights two decades of Nulf's work

Form/Informe
Frank Nulf
Agnes Elmerington Art Centre
BY MICHAEL MOSS
The Queen's Journal

Finish, good lady; the bright day is done, And we are for the dark.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

There is no denying the element of the tragic in Form/Informe, a compilation of almost two decades worth of Frank Nulf's art. His vision is despairingly dark, and his view of the human condition is bleak. Staring at one of his drawings is like looking out into the wide darkness of the night. Maybe you find it consoling, or maybe you feel a creeping fear inching up your spine. Nulf's art is as dialogical as a Dostoyevsky novel, as unsettling as a Grunewald crucifixion, as mysterious as a religion. In the utter uncertainty of the floating or writhing forms of Nulf's drawings, the existential notion of a universe with no cosmic order is clear. In drawings like Forms in an Interior, there are no refreshing answers for the individual tormented by questions of Being and the Absurd, nor are there any comforting messages being transmitted. Nulf's compositions are subject

Please see HISS pg. 25

Comprehensive yet Expensive

Continued from pg. 23

"Jazz" G. But two Police greatest hits packages in six years? I mean come on, they only put out five albums as it is.

But now comes the most interesting development for fans since they remade "Don't Stand So Close to Me" for the first greatest hits package — a collection that includes some truly remarkable gems. These opens with "Fallout," the hit that first brought the Police attention in Britain, and featured original guitarist Henri Padovani (there's a trivia question!) and also features drummer Stewart Copeland on guitar (he hasn't played on a record since Andy Summers joined the band just after that).

The Police originally gained a reputation as a punk band, an image that is not really borne out in the album material, but whose origins are much clearer in "Fallout," "Nothing Achieving," (as strong a two minutes as the Police ever recorded) and early live versions of "Next to You" as well as the obscure track "Landlord."

One of the most striking aspects of this set is the smoothness of most of the unknown material and how it fits in with albums recorded around the same time. For the most part, any one of the songs would seem in place with the albums of the same period.

Not that there aren't throw-aways as well — you can't suddenly release everything that a band has ever done, and expect it all to stand up as well as the hits that everyone loves. In some cases, there are very good reasons why songs have remained unreleased.

But the joys certainly outnumber the disappointments, and sometimes the disappointments can even provide joys as well, such as Stewart Copeland calling their afternoon toss-off B-side "Flexible Strategies" a disgrace. It is not only Copeland who comments on the material, all three members provide insights on the newly unearthed material to supplement the requisite book of photos and historical write-up of the band.

For true fanatics, the live tunes ("Next to You," "Truth Hits Everybody," "Driven to Tears," "Man In a Suitcase," "Message in a Bottle" and "Tea in the Sahara") as well as the original studio versions of "Low Life" and "I Burn For You,"

(which Sting played on the live album/movie Bring on the Night) are a worthy contribution to the Sting library. As well, for those who didn't bother buying the Singles for the one new tune, the updated version of "Don't Stand So Close to Me" is here as well.

In good conscience, I can't even recommend the new E.P. that has accompanied the soundtrack to "Demolition Man" to any but the truest fanatic (yea, that's me.) To flesh out this admittedly fun (in limited doses) remake, Sting has included five live songs recorded in Italy on his most recent tour.

Although his touring prowess has not been the same since he abandoned Branford Marsalis, Kenny Kirkland and Omar Hakim, the strength of the band on his most recent studio album would seem to bode well for these few songs.

The playing on tunes like "King of Pain," "Shape of My Heart" and "It's Probably Me" is solid enough, but the arrangements are less than challenging. Basically standard fare is certainly substandard from a musician who has been pushing the envelope for his whole career.

The true highlight of the release is an absolutely fantastic version of "Love is Stronger Than Justice," and all the credit goes to drummer Vinnie Colaiuta and keyboardist David Sancious. The time changes make it one of the most difficult tunes to do live, as anyone who saw Sting attempt it on Saturday Night Live last year can attest. (He failed that attempt miserably.)

But from the greatest heights...Sting actually does a version of "Day In The Life" — a staple from his latest tour — for the album. (Yes, the Beatles tune.) I don't want to talk about it. Let's just say that I will hesitate to shell out for the Sting box set (you know it's coming) for fear that I will own two discs that have that version on it.

Given the big investment that box sets involve, Message In A Box might not be for you, but it's certainly worth it for fanatical Police fans. And in its favour, the Demolition Man EP is cheap. No one said these choices were easy.

CFRC Radio Daze

CFRC 101.9 /90.9 Cable

Special events this coming week include:

Live coverage of Queen's Golden Gaels vs. Ottawa Gee Gees. Live Saturday 12:30 p.m.

Express yourself on CFRC Call-in show.

Mon: Bar Wars 10-11 p.m.

Tue: Campus Media

Wed: Legalization of Narcotics

Thu: Weekly Trivia Night

Mon 12 midnight: I know Casper — Exclusive interview with Thrush Hermit

Tue 12 midnight: Utopian Experience — Album spotlight Cocteau Twins

Wed 3 p.m.: Live interview with The Shuffle Demons

The hiss of a lion

Frank Nulf, Soft Form Notes, 1990.

Continued from pg. 24

completely original art. And although Nulf acknowledges his predecessors, he feels that, in terms of identifying himself with a certain school, his art "doesn't really fit into some neat category."

In Nulf's more recent works, his forms are exposed to "a faded and jaded and tired colour," a soft pink, like the skin of a newborn, which adds to their plastic dimension. In Untitled, a Warhol repetition of fetal like images, the malleability of the forms is penetrated by the geometric mass of cold blue cubes. Nulf said that his choice of colour "is a human reference," but that "colour is secondary to form and psychological impact."

Forms on a Pedestal is highly evocative of Bacon, with whom Nulf shares some likeness in that both exploit the artistic effect of flesh in a sometimes frightening manner. "They're soft, fleshy forms grown so that they are not like normal fleshy forms," said Nulf.

"I can't tolerate comfortable art," exclaimed Nulf, "I'm not interested in pretty pictures." The dully sketched Elusive Image, one of Nulf's most powerful expressions, ruthlessly throws the viewer into a dreamscape of isolation. "These are not things you can see in the world around you," said Nulf.

Nulf's chosen medium is drawing, specifically using graphite on paper, and his line is unmistakably masterful. "Drawing," he says in his essay, The Nature of Drawing, "is always an act of revelation because it is a surveillance of self." The unique creative impulse of Nulf is to fill his paper with writing, scrawling letters, personal thoughts, and characters. Then he erases it all and begins afresh. Eventually the words lose their literary sense and start "to suggest visual imagery." More like a sculptor than a painter, Nulf is entranced with negative action: taking away, destroying, reducing. Swallowing Nulf's threadbare vision definitely takes some getting used to, for the truth of the moment is not a function of daring to look at the drawings, but of listening to how the submerged slice of your self reacts to them. So beware Hamlet's words that "conscience does make cowards of us all."

Forward With Scotland's Part

At the Grand Theatre, Kingston
Thursday, November 4,
7:30 pm

Tickets available at:
Grand Theatre Box Office
530-2050
Adult $17.00, Student / Senior $14.00

PRINCESS COURT CINEMA 394 Princess St. (Just Below Division) 546-FILM

This Weekend's Films

Friday at 9:00
Saturday at 9:00
Sunday at 9:00

"ON A PAR WITH MY LIFE AS A DOG,"
"A GEM."
"A RARE SWEETNESS AND CHARM...VERY FUNNY."

Friday at 7:00
Saturday at 7:00
Sunday at 7:00

JJ's Bistro Bar
On Sept. 10/93, the Journal's Food Critic claimed that JJ's was "the most under rated off-campus restaurant!"
"Well, our 200+ regulars know the secret..."
Cool Environment + Great Food + Frugal Prices = SUCCESS!
* Catch the Blue Jays at JJ's *

THRESHOLD THEATER'S [entire] [entire] [entire] [entire] [entire] presents
THE ENTHUSIASM OF THE SPECIES written and performed by (Queen's Grad) MICHAEL McMURTRY
October 20, 21, 22 at 8 p.m.
The Baby Grand Theatre 218 Princess St.
Tickets: $8 Box Office 530-2050 or at the door
A stunning one man show...a tour-de-force! Globe & Mail "Fresh, intelligent, risky, highly entertaining" Toronto Star

THE SPORTS BAR
"KINGSTON'S ORIGINAL SPORTS BAR"
125 BROOK STREET 546-0429

Fri Oct 15	10:00 Whalers - Blackhawks (H) 7:30 Wings - Leafs 10:30 Bruins - Ducks
Sat Oct 16	Noon NCAA Football 1:30 Queen's Golden Gaels - Ottawa 3:00 Ottawa P.P. - Eskimos 8:00 WORLD SERIES I 11:00 Bruins - Sharks
Sun Oct 17	JOIN US FOR BREAKFAST! $2.99!! 100 Eggs - Giant 100 Cheesecake - Cincinnati 400 Apples - Cowboys Chick - Chargers 8:00 WORLD SERIES II
Mon Oct 18	12:00 Flames - Ducks (H) 3:00 Calgary - Aigles 7:30 Wings - Sabres 9:00 Redwings - Senators
Tues Oct 19	8:00 WORL O SERIES III
Wed Oct 20	11:00 Kings - Panthers (H) 8:00 WORL O SERIES IV
Thu Oct 21	11:00 Kings - Lightning (H) 8:00 WORLD SERIES V
Fri Oct 22	7:30 Eskimos - Ottawa R.R. 8:00 Kings - Coyots
Sat Oct 23	12:00 NCAA Football 1:30 Queen's - McGill 2:30 St. Col. Notre Dame 3:00 Stamps - Roughriders 8:00 WORLD SERIES VI or Leafs - Tampa Bay Habs - Ducks

With winter coming on, we want to give you something to think about!
Personal, quality service. Our endorsement of superior equipment. Value for your energy dollar. Our continued reputation as Kingston's oil specialists.
5 Cataragui Street Kingston 546-4242
We take your home comfort... personally!

CANADA ON SALE!

	TORONTO	MONTREAL
FROM	OW Return	OW Return
Vancouver	199 339	229 359
Calgary	169 299	189 349
Edmonton	169 299	189 349
Kingston	69 98	59 109
Saskatoon	179 299	179 329
Winnipeg	139 229	149 269
St. John	149 289	129 229
Halifax	159 269	129 209
St. John's	199 379	169 329

Low Season Midweek Fares! Restriction Apply.
ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St. 15 Montreal St.
General Travel Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3553 549-3561

Signatures
BOOK NOW! FOR YOUR FORMAL PACKAGE $45.00
FULL SERVICE SALON
544-9022
LOCATED IN THE J.D.U.C. QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY PERMANENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED - STYLING FOR OVER 13 YEARS IN THE J.D.U.C.

International Crossing Borders

Work/Study Abroad Fair

- An opening panel and discussion session will be at Grant Hall on Wednesday, October 20, at 7:00 pm, with keynote speaker Mr. Jim Fox of the Canadian Bureau for International Education.
- Booths will be set up in Wallace Hall on Thursday, October 21, from 10:30 - 3:30 pm.
- A study focus will be held at the same time on Friday, October 22. Representatives from different organizations will be available to answer questions and provide information.

Check next week's Journal for names and times of specific presentations. See you there!
For more info call AIESEC at 545-2744

Alfie's Pub presents STUDENT BAND NIGHTS

OPEN AT 8

OCTOBER 19th OCTOBER 26th

THE INBREDS & LOS SEAMONSTERS
SMARTEST MONKEYS AND FAT SPIDER

Demolition Man has no sting

Demolition Man
Directed by Marco Brambilla
Capitol Theatre
BY JASON KENNEY
The Queen's Journal

Stallone vs. Snipes. The man from First Blood, Cobra and Lock Up in a dead stare with the man from Rising Sun, Passenger 57, and New Jack City. This movie had the potential to be the best action film in years. Well, it wasn't. Instead, I found myself grinning for the better part of the film. Please, learn from my mistake; don't go to this movie with the intention of seeing action and violence comparable to Terminator 2 - you won't. It's not that there aren't any explosions, morbid deaths and simple ass-kicking, it's just that what little there is, it's screened by funny one-liners and jabs at the present and the future.

Sylvester Stallone has made some impressive action movies, but he is often criticized by the public for excessive violence. Wesley Snipes is similar to Stallone in that he has made some very successful action movies. However, the character Snipes plays in Demolition Man is harder to accept. Having played more serious roles, as he did in New Jack City, Snipes has trouble playing the villain and being funny at the same time. At the beginning of the movie, Snipes' character, Simon Phoenix, kills thirty people, but ten minutes later, the audience is laughing at him and cannot help but hope he survives long enough to kill again.

The basic plot begins with Stallone and Snipes as mortal enemies. For some reason, both are sentenced to cryogenic imprisonment. Somehow, Snipes escapes. The problem? In this future, crime has virtually been eliminated and the police are ill-prepared to capture a "real" criminal. Hence, they thaw Stallone to do it.

Where the film finds its success is in the various comparisons between the nineties and the two-thousand thirties. Basically, society has come to a higher level of existence after sinking to the depths of destruction. The language of the movie often approaches a Shakespearean play with its grammatical form and its use of words that an English major would find foreign.

Love the smell of peroxide in the morning

But that's where the fun begins. Anything that has been considered bad for humans is now illegal. The list includes smoking, alcohol, salt, chocolate, sex (diseases, kissing, and any food containing cholesterol). But this last one is strange because the only restaurants left are Taco Bells. The funniest part, however, involves swearing, but you have to see the show to really appreciate it.

Overall, this movie was a worthwhile watch, but it would have been better seen on a Tuesday or in the comfy surroundings of my living room suite. If you're looking for a good action thriller that the press poster promises, be ready for a big disappointment.

Ensemble scales the heights of baroque

L'ensemble Arion
Grant Hall
BY FIONA VANCE
The Queen's Journal

As one of the Queen's deviants who was stranded in Kingston over Thanksgiving weekend, I sought comfort in the orange, autumn concert given in Grant Hall on Sunday afternoon by the remarkable L'ensemble Arion. The baroque program of Marais, Rameau, Quantin "le jeune," and Leclair treated the ears of the sparse audience to the relaxation of a truly delightful musical cornucopia.

The popularity of the film Tous les matins du monde is evidence of recent revival of such period instrumental music. The performance on Sunday afternoon with L'ensemble Arion, which was founded in 1981, certainly provided this revival with a new burst of momentum.

The critically acclaimed L'ensemble Arion consists of members Claire Guimond, Betsy MacMillan, Chantal Remillard, and Hank Knox and their respective instruments of baroque flute, viola da gamba, baroque violin, and harpsichord. These period instruments were physically gorgeous, and unusual to the modern eye. The harpsichord was less percussive than its modern relative and the flute was

Please see TURKEY pg 27

Wise men and women answer the Cadell call

Meryn Cadell with Bob Wiseman
Dunning Auditorium
BY TIM MITCHELL
The Queen's Journal

When Bob Wiseman opened for the Barenaked Ladies, he had to work in references to the high-energy band into his act to keep the fans tuned to his more relaxed performance. Last Thursday at Dunning Auditorium, Wiseman received a more generous response when he opened for Meryn Cadell. Of course, the two are a more plausible pair. Both are humorous, wise, and occasionally eccentric performers, whose talents have brushed against the mainstream without having been fully drawn in.

Wiseman earned media attention this summer when he tried to change his name to Prince, claiming that the old owner of the name didn't seem to want it any more. Wiseman's performance on Fri-

Bob Wiseman's a prince.

Yvett Roche Johnson

